Back in the 90’s I think it was called the year of the gun was the big topic because there were gangs, Jamaican gangs, Trinidadian gangs and so on all fighting each other in Toronto for drug territory. And they were all shooting each other. There was hardly a day that went by in the paper that you didn’t hear something until the public got used to it again. But after that year they did surveys on all the populations of Toronto and after one incident where a white girl was shot, it was great publicity for them. She was shot by a Jamaican who was an illegal immigrant who had been caught three or four times and revolving-door justice and put back on the streets. They wanted this guy to do something eventually and he did. So he shot this white girl who was out, she was engaged and getting married that next week or something, beautiful story for the papers and the media and to get outrage going amongst the people and then the anti-gun campaign kicked in on the act. They said we have to ban all guns from all people, including all hunting guns, and so on, and so on, and so on. That was used, one person was killed, therefore let's ban all hunters, etcetera, and register all hunting rifles, etcetera.

So that's how they work out this thing. But they did a survey in the population and because they hyped that same story for months they found that the average person in Toronto, just from that one repetitive newscast and theme, were terrified to go out at night, even though the chances of anything happening to them were the same as it had always been, one in millions. They literally, the psychological impact of creating fear and trepidation of just walking outside your door had massively increased. And that's what they can do with the media, the way it is psychologically presented to the public, introduced to the public, and then the repetition to the public. You can actually get them to adapt to any fallacy that you want.

Neil: Yeah. I mean you've discussed it on your own broadcast before and called it learned helplessness. That's basically where people are so afraid of doing anything that they feel helpless about anything, even managing their own affairs at home.

Alan: Their own personal lives. It creates apathy.

Neil: Yeah. Well I mean apathy, we are well aware of how apathetic people have become and whether it's a combination of what you were just talking about there and the fluoride and all the rest of it. People have certainly, I'd say, given up hope. And I can't imagine being a young person these days and looking at the world and thinking I've got a great future ahead of me.

Alan: I know.

Neil: You know. And you know you drive along the road and you see all the little school children coming out of school and you look at them and you wonder what kind of future they are going to have. But then again they have been kind of stampeded down the road of technology and they've become almost addicted to it. I'd almost say I'm addicted to it. I spoke about this to Aaron Franz and somebody else the other day there about it and you know this is the big comfort now. This is all they've got to look forward to is basically playing games for the rest of their lives because there is going to be nothing for them to do. There are so many consequences. I don't see any jobs for them or any kind of long-term career they can go into which hasn't been kind of, I don't know how to describe it, infiltrated by the system if you'd like. I mean not even doctors are having to go do surgeries anymore; you can phone them up on Skype apparently and get a diagnosis. Everything has been taken down to the basest level.

Alan: Well they did studies on the future back in the days of H.G. Wells in his heyday when the big Fabian socialist society that was just a branch to run the left wing, a branch of the Royal Institute of International Affairs/CFR. They did lots of studies on the population about the creation of apathy, what we are talking about here, and what would happen if eventually we got to a generation where they say well there are too many of you, we don't need you anymore in a post-industrial society. This was all discussed way before World War I and II you know and then ongoing discussions right to the present. If they got a population to accept apathy and being ruled by experts, that was the whole push for the Fabian Socialists, rule by experts and social workers and advisors. Experts of all kinds your whole life and monitored your whole life too. Make it so unpleasant and give life less value, so you must devalue life itself, which they have done an awful good job at. And then you bring in voluntary euthanasia for the desperately ill and terminal. And then you simply up it like Holland there too, well if you are depressed why not kill yourself you know blah, blah, blah. And now they are even allowing teenagers to make that choice now.

So, this was all discussed long ago. We are just living through a script right now. That's what we are living through, a script. And every facet of society has been catered to in the script. Ongoing studies and updates on how to manipulate each group and gender and everything else and age group. And they are pretty well getting to that point there. If they make life so, look at all the Sci-Fi's they put out there about end-time catastrophes and everybody living in rubble except a small elite. At the end of those movies you go, oh, blah, it's so blah. And that's an idea of where they would like to bring your mental state, into the state of every day is the same and apathy, it's apathy, apathy, apathy.

Neil: Yeah. In terms of the techniques they use, do the exact same techniques work in every culture, or do they have to kind of doctor it a little to push certain, I'll call it, races or cultures in a certain way because the culture doesn't allow them to be kind of so easily talked into doing certain things?

Alan: What they did actually in earlier writings in fact, it's interesting to see the earlier writings, because around 1900 the big organizations that formed say the Alfred Milner Group and his group joined with the Cecile Rhodes Group which is Rothschild's Group too. And they merged together into the Royal Institute for International Affairs. But they did studies on that kind of future. And what they had found already, Britain remember was into India and Africa and all across the globe dealing with other cultures to dominate them under the pretense again of oh we're bringing in civilization to them and order, etcetera, and as they looted the countries. But what they found was if they could, the easiest thing to do they said was to look at the gender, what works with a woman in one country will work with a woman in any country. So don't just look at them as a group of people, start looking at gender and age groups, etcetera. But they also said the same thing that Marx said before that and Lenin said afterwards and even Mao Tse-tung said for China, what they said was, the only thing that could defeat this technique of gradualistic change, planned change for domination, was a religion. We forget that religion was an embodiment of the whole culture of the people. If you look at the Muslim people, the religion is their culture, you can't separate the two. It's their way of life, it keeps their order and everything else going amongst them and so on and you can't separate it.

In the West they have already destroyed most of the religion. And already the new religion is the state as you know because this is what they said, when the religion in the West dies down, dies off gradually, the state will already be accepted as the new, and science and the experts are accepted as the new bosses basically. That's harder to do in say Muslim countries because their culture is their religion. This idea of democracy is an alien concept to them. So they have to alter.

What they are trying to do across the world is use, go for the very young. That's what the United Nations and UNESCO is all about, get to the very young across the world, try and westernize them through things the young are very hyper about like sex. When their hormones are kicking in when they are really young that's all they are thinking about. So start showing them stuff they'd never see in their own country, make sure they all have the cell phones, etcetera. And make sure they can all watch music television or movies and give them lots and lots of sex. And they will turn against their parents; they will be different from their parents. That's what they hope for. And to an extent it will work with some but not perhaps all in a culture which is very bonded together with a religion which is their culture as I say. And for them it's worked for thousands of years fine.

So they had to tweak it and tweak it and tweak it. The other way is to bribe leaders and try to take over that way, straight forward bribes just like how Britain set up Saudi Arabia for folk who don't know that, Britain set it up, London did I should say. And Philby was involved in that too by the way, the double agent. But they set it up and in Saudi Arabia they made sure that those guys at the top, the Saudis, the princes and so on, would be awfully rich and they would have dynasties, and when dynasties form unfortunately they start to lose their identity with the general public. And they become an elite group and then they're your man basically for life as long as you make sure they're safe as well, they will play ball with you. So if they can't try and bribe you outrightly, if they can't bribe you, they'll try and have a coup as the CIA is in charge for doing and simply eliminate you and replace you. So that's the real world we are talking about. This is the real world.

Neil: Yeah. You were talking about dynasties, I mean it's not in just in those types of countries that those exist, I mean in Ireland particularly in my experience, you've got families there who have been in politics for centuries and they are still there. Their sons take over the seat and that's it. And the same in Britain. Well I don't know if it's to a lesser extent but a less obvious extent maybe in Britain. But in Ireland it's in your face that it's just families running the country. So and the parochialism there is incredible. You know people will, it doesn't matter what they do to you over there, the people will vote for you. You know, I don't know if it is something in the Irish psyche or whatever, they're just like very complacent, and they got away with it. And that again is a corruption of society in itself. And that it breeds that kind of corruption at lower levels.

Alan: It does. You'll emulate, you definitely emulate what you see above you, especially if you are young and you catch on quick, you can emulate what you see at the top. And they become your role models in fact. If you are a good crook you'll become one of them.

Once, remember every top family starts off, say in ancient times or even the Middle Ages, by slaughtering the folk around you to take power and then you install yourself and after a generation you're the good king or the good queen or the best queen or whatever. And it's the same thing with crooks, like the Bronfmans who ran the whiskey trade you know, the illicit whiskey trade all through Canada and the States during prohibition and made millions and millions, incredible empire. And give a generation after that, put them in the best universities, and they are respectable. The Kennedys were the same, they were involved with the Bronfmans in fact with the whiskey running, and they became respectable. So it's all to do with image making but the reality is it's all started by gangsterism and brutal force and slaughter.

Neil: Yeah. Well I suppose the Rockefellers are another example of that, the great philanthropists of modern times.

Alan: They blew up competitors' wells. They had gangs going around blowing up what they called wildcat guys who were independent. They'd blow their wells up and all the rest of it. And his idea, remember he was part of a worldwide group in his day, Rockefeller, he was put to the States for that reason, and his family was anyway. It's the same with the Bronfmans by the way, there is a great history of how they came into Canada and then they sat doggo for a long time and then were activated and poof did they take off.

But you'll find that standardization is the key. Rockefeller as he was getting rid of all the competition in oil, said we'll get the shareholders all onboard with the same one company and that's why they called it Standard Oil, to standardize prices, price fixing, and everything else. And if you didn't join him he'd put you under by every means possible and he did. Great documentaries have been put out in the past about him. And even today David Rockefeller has talked on the history of his family, he justifies it all saying well if this guy had taken our offer he would have been okay you know. He has no regrets at all.

Neil: It's almost like the Godfather movie and the horse's head in the bed, isn't it? He made them an offer they couldn't refuse.

Alan: It's exactly like that. And then you've got also, you've got the fact that it isn't just there. Rockefeller got into the standardization of the American culture. And he took over the culture industry across America and helped finance it. He created the American Medical Association, standardized the Big Pharma, he's still got five Big Pharma companies worldwide. And they run the Medical Association. They run the training for the doctors what they are going to get taught, what they are going to believe right down to the same old treatment for cancer, radiation and poison chemotherapy. They have standardized everything. You see they don't come in and say we are going to get rich, no, they came in with a mission to take everything over until they monopolize everything that you need to survive, food, water, medicine, everything, and work itself in fact, and government.

Neil: Yeah and of course that the American culture as you said was created and that's the culture that they are now trying to spread everywhere. I don't know was Japan one of the early experiments of that because they seem to get into all this Elvis Presley stuff and all the teenagers started clipping their hair and the leather jackets.

Alan: It's a fascinating story, a fascinating story with Japan. As I have mentioned before, after World War II they immediately set up because they had been planning it to set up these cultural influencers they called them across the old warring factions, or they were their enemies in fact, they were enemies. They completely rebuilt the whole culture for Germany, right down to you couldn't get taught history before 1945 you know. That's a big feat when you think about it and they called it the Denazification of Germany. Any old ideas that led to had to be completely eliminated from memory. And the youth were told a whole different, different story.

In Japan, Harry Hopkins was involved along with FDR, during the war they planned what they would do with a post-war Japan. And they said they would set up a banking system run by the U.S. but going through the government to dish out grants to the private companies that used to be part of the war machinery in Japan and they are still going today. But they would completely obliterate the warrior mentality of the culture itself. They'd use it as a big experimental basin. And they did, right to the present time they are still doing it. And they also tried to see if they could utterly destroy the sexual bonding of men and women there. The sexual deviancy in Japan, what we think of as deviancy, has been promoted from the top. You can go into restaurants and see anything you want to see and get anything you want to see. It's just incredible how they have completely destroyed a rigid strong culture and given this completely strange culture that's constantly malleable according to the direction of those who control it.

Neil: Yeah, there is a great documentary on Japan called, "Love and Hate in Japan". I don't know if you have seen that one, it's on YouTube. There's a guy there and he's living with this younger girl, and she's home to be an escort agency. They've got like two or three jobs each you know just to try to survive in this shoebox. And he was quite an activist back then in the 80's I think it was. And he had like ten thousand people in the street and they really clamped down with the kind of martial law and everything there against him. And that's well worth the watch. And it shows you where they are trying to take us. Literally these people were living in what can only be described as a cupboard you know and it was awful.

Alan: What was the title of that one?

Neil:"Love and Hate in Japan". Yeah, I mean it's very kind of frank, it kind of ends in a happy ending but yeah I mean if anybody wants to see where they are taking us with this Agenda 21 wish, here it is you know and of course Japan was the first place to come out with, I believe it was the first place to come out with these kind of horizontal cubicles you just crawled into and slept in overnight underground.

Alan: That's right. Well they were like beehives. And also getting back to the sexual thing too, they introduced there first of all the whole concept of transferring your sexual attention to very lifelike dolls, a booming trade in Japan. Until, and you know they have done documentaries on that too, and these are very wealthy folk often that have a room full of these life-sized very womanly looking dolls. Not these blow-up rubber things, I mean real professionally made. And to see if they could transfer their affections onto something which is actually inanimate and really non-human. You'll project a humanness onto them, humanity onto them, but just to see because what they can use in one country if it works, they find out the technique that led to it working, and then they could use it anywhere in the world. That goes for all their goals basically.

Neil: Yeah that's the way they are in Japan, they kind of see it as the home of robotics so I guess that's a logical step forward for them, isn't it?
Alan: It is, yeah.
Neil: More than this way. But again that's, I mean how do you persuade somebody to have affection for a machine? I suppose people like their cars. You know they don't want to get rid of that particular car because they love it or whatever or whatever it may be, their favorite piece of jewelry, or whatever. But inanimate objects. I guess in these days these things won't be inanimate, will they? But I mean how do you train the human mind to do that?
Alan: It's quite simple if you read Charles Galton Darwin, who was a physicist in the 1950's in Britain. He put out the book, it was called, "The Next Million Years", talking about the need for the elite to so distance themselves from the masses who would gradually die off and be controlled and so on. They'd have to do this; it was their duty to do this. And he said that the first thing is to break the attraction between men and women. That would depopulate naturally right away. And then too if there is no family structure, man, women, children, you won't stand up and fight for them when they are being oppressed. So you'd be stuck individually with Big Brother talking down to you just like the screen in Orwell's 1984. And government would be more effective, H.G. Wells said the same thing. But Charles Galton Darwin says, he said that gradually through techniques which they knew because they worked with Bernays by the way and he knew Bernays because Charles Galton Darwin lived in Manhattan for a while, he worked on the Manhattan Project, he was one of the scientists there. And he had lots of debates with these guys and big dos, big think tanks, how to bring the people to accept materialism and rather have materialistic things like a car instead of having a wife. And then how to get women to want cars and not have men. Then too how they could gradually introduce through the creation of movements, appearing to be social movements, that there is a lot of deviancy amongst society which was called deviancy then, homosexuality, lesbianism, and so on, and then gradually make that a normal part of society until there was no normalcy left for them at all. And if you can get it into the school system, get them trained early into this kind of thing none of them would mate up in a natural way. And they wouldn't have offspring. That was the main goal of it, not to have offspring.
You'd also masculinize the women so that they wouldn't be attractive to the men, they could be more aggressive. But he also said, it's so interesting what he said, by the use of hormones, he said, we can alter the mentality of the male, he can become more effeminate. And he says you can also make the women more aggressive. So almost a role reversal, so he is talking about bioengineering the people. And this was in the 50's and I guarantee you if that was being said in the 50's at the top think tanks they were already trying it out in different areas. And he said the same thing, we'll put it in the food and the water, etcetera.
Neil: Yeah. I mean the ultimate result of all this psychological stampeding if you want to use that term is that your 2.4 children family, your average family or whatever, they are all going in different directions. You know the woman has now become the man, the man has become the woman, and the children don't know who they are or where they are going.
Alan: The children are brought up by the state. That's what the state says. They give them their new values, it's pushed at school. It's all social indoctrination. When your schools are teaching, are sexually indoctrinating them into different techniques and so on of thinking or behaving, when they are into that kind of thing this has nothing to do with education as it used to be. This is complete social engineering.
Neil: So as I say, like your mum, dad, and the children are all at different points of the compass, all going in different directions, and there is no cohesion whatsoever and that's the ultimate goal.
Alan: And it's worked awfully well, hasn't it?
Neil: Oh yeah. Yeah, we see the results of it everywhere in the family breakdown and societal breakdown of course. Okay Alan that's our hour done. Thanks for coming on again. And we'll be on Monday again with Thomas Sheridan talking about the music industry. I know there are a lot of people that are looking forward to that one so I look forward to that one myself.
Alan: Okay.
Neil: And I'll talk to you later. Take care.
Alan: Thanks very much.
Neil: Cheers. Bye.
Alan: Bye now.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 18, 2015. You know, you've got to really admire the power that goes into managing us all, this power, this consortium let's put it that way, this consortium of internationalists with all their agencies, even our own governments of course, they're private at the top, of course, but they do own governments, they own continents, they own the economies of countries, they own the banking systems of countries, the currencies of countries, they own the military-industrial complex, and they set forth the agenda. Their thousands of think tanks work on each part of the agenda right down to the minutia to do with individuals and what groups or cluster you fit into, your friends, etc., why you do it, etc, and how they manage all of us basically. They know when they put out a new idea that’s going to rip you off or whatever it happens to be again. The public, they know how many will respond, who will to stay asleep to it, not bother, and the ones who will argue about it and complain. So everything is minutely managed and that's what happens when you live through an incredible agenda.

And we never get a break, really. When you think you're getting a break, be careful, because so much is going on behind the scenes in preparation for the next big bash on the head that we all get. And there's always many reasons, and many benefits that they get out of one, say, one particular thing for instance. As an example we can use the slump in oil prices right now. Now, it's not really a slump in oil prices as we know. There's big companies there that aren't losing a penny, I guarantee you. It will be paid by the taxpayer, any losses they say that they are incurring during this geopolitical strategy, as they lower the prices of gasoline. If you notice, oil itself in the stores, if you buy oil for your vehicles and so on, it isn't dropping it all, neither is heating oil, things like that. So this is a managed strategy that really, is very, very incredibly reminiscent, when you read the Rockefellers and so on of the oil wars back in the early 1900s, right through the 1920s and so on, as they put all competitors and what they called the wild cats under.

Everyone, for instance, goes to the bank to borrow money and to invest and to build up their companies, and they basically set their prices for selling, the old wild cat guys did, and present oilfields too, on making X amount of money, with the frackers doing it today too. And just like in the 1920s, or 1910, they're going under dramatically because they expected a certain return to pay back their debts, as they were paying it off, and eventually they had hoped to be winners of course. That's not going to happen with a lot of them because, just like the Rockefellers, they're being taken over by the big oil companies today for peanuts or bankruptcy sales basically. So you'll have one giant monopoly owning all the gas and oil, etc. down the road, not too far off actually, not just in your country but across the world. Because these oil companies are international as you know and they have the power of their bought and paid for governments behind them who all go off and conquer countries to grab the oilfields. They've done that for years and years now and we've all live through it and watched it happen. But it hasn't stopped yet. They're putting under Venezuela right now, they're having some riots in the streets to do with shortages of everything, because they also have a big debt to pay back to different bankers. They were expecting certain returns and when the bottom falls out of the market they can't get that kind of profit back to pay off the interest on the debts and so on, and down they go. That's how it works. It's very simple.

Economic war is an incredibly powerful, powerful instrument, been used many times. And during that, it's not just to do with big profit and taking over as a complete monopoly, that's part of it because they have to have total monopoly over your food, water, all energy, etc. etc. But they also want to alter the way of living, your way of living. And believe you me, when they set oil prices back to where they were, it won't be to where they were, it will be way over where they were, with a whole bunch of new laws too, social laws and tax laws, etc. to do with you, to bring you into austerity according to how much energy you're are using, just to live. It's an existence tax if you like, another existence tax, and this one is for a living tax, if you live then you give off carbon dioxide, everything is produced for you to eat, etc., it will give off a certain amount of carbon in production and on and on it goes.

You see, you're the problem, that's how you're being trained to believe, that you're the problem for weather changes and climate changes and global warming, as we freeze our butts off here in Ontario with commonly 30°, 40° below zero. And it doesn't matter, it's your fault, you see, and you're going to pay for it and pay for it. And because of that you'll be brought into this new austerity system. Austerity, remember that term austerity? Most folk have forgotten it but the big think tanks that were set up to work on it, they haven't forgotten it. And neither have all the NGOs that are all bought and paid for and set up in fact and founded and funded by the big foundations that are owned by the big corporate leaders of the world.

Because we're run, again, by systems set up under this term democracy, which include so-called minority groups that are social activists. And it's very interesting how you see them affiliated with United Nations. And the ones that they don't wants in, certainly don't get registered at the UN. But if you are for all the UN policies and agendas, which is massive big business, international big business, then you accept all of the tenants of United Nations: transsexualism, trans-humanism, all of these things all come into it and again, austerity, for everyone across the world... Except for the few that have to run the world, all the bureaucrats and so on, they'll live awfully well as we go down the tubes into austerity. It's quite interesting. And the manufacturers, at least the big corporations that own the manufacturing, the guys who own monopoly manufacturing, they will run the world's goods and services, etc. etc. It's quite fascinating to live through it and watch it all happen.

But don't fall asleep because you think that you're going to have gas prices low forever. This is a geopolitical strategy, it's a social strategy, and it's also a strategy to lull you into sleep because you're really going to get hit very shortly with things you never imagined, believe you me. And we'll touch on some of that tonight. Now, here's one example here on the presentation of the same article really, the same topic. This was from the National Post. It's by Rex Murphy, who is often on CBC television giving you his little spiels. He doesn't go into it very deeply so it's meant for the general population, this article. He says…

Rex Murphy: Plummeting gas prices are a welcome break for Canadians — until a carbon tax comes along news.nationalpost.com / Rex Murphy | January 17, 2015

(Alan: And you say, okay, he telling little bit, there's a carbon tax coming. And they've been waiting for it as you know, your governments, local governments too have signed on to this a long time ago with United Nations and the big corporation that runs the United Nations, in fact, set up the United Nations.)

Can you not, just one time, allow a little of the benefit to flow down and let those who most need and appreciate some small break have that break?

God must have loved the common man: He made so many of them. Whether that quotation can authoritatively be ascribed to Abraham Lincoln or not, it does catch the tone of the man as his persona has come to be known through history and legend. A great part of Lincoln's appeal, both to the people of his time and to the generations that followed, was his fine-tuned respect for "the common man," his experienced understanding of, and respect for, the daily life of the majority of his fellow citizens.

(A: And for Ontario, we have premieres that are like governors of states in the US.)

Premier Kathleen Wynne is leaving the door open to a new tax to combat climate change, just months after saying a carbon tax was not part of the Ontario government's plan.

(A: In other words, when the prices were up high, and the prices in Canada are generally higher than elsewhere, they couldn't really push it then, you see. So this is how politicians work, they wait until there's a slump, because they knew this was coming up, this geopolitical war to put countries out of business with their petroleum and so on.)

After winning a majority government last June, Wynne said a carbon tax was not something the Liberals planned to introduce, even though she wanted a new plan to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

The province could adopt a cap-and-trade system that lets the worst polluters buy credits from companies that burn less fossil fuels, or impose a tax on all carbon emissions, including gasoline burned by automobiles.

If I did not fear flutters in the yuppie dovecote I would say Abraham Lincoln had more than a little bit of Rob Ford in him. What I will say without perturbation is that Lincoln loved the little guy.

Despite the shower of gloom and menace that shadows each day's news, the little guy (and gal), at least on our side of the globe, has been getting a small break lately. For the first time in ages a tank of gasoline costs less per gallon than a handful of diamonds, or the cost of pimping up Neil Young's now-electric 1959 land-yacht Lincoln Continental. For the first time in ages it's possible for many people to travel to work, drive around on a weekend, (A: I wonder where they get the work, that's gone too.) take a driving holiday, hitch up the trailer, without offering up the children and the house as collateral/hostages to a bank before pulling up to the local Irving's.

Both in Canada and in the U.S., the fall in gasoline prices has worked a real miracle, done a thing neither government nor industry has had the will or means to do: It has given people who actually work for a living, those who have the low-paying jobs — the clerks and secretaries, teaching assistants, fresh graduates toiling as low- or no-wage interns, taxi drivers, maintenance men, janitors, those waiting tables or clearing snow, fishermen and farmers — a break. De facto, the decline in the price of gasoline means a little bit of real money — finally — in the pockets of those who so very rarely have it. (A: Well, it's not taking into account of the fact, through this planned devaluation of your currency since the last bank crash, everything has shot up in price too, even your vegetables, etc., everything, common staples are just out of sight. But anyway he goes on to say…)

For them, it's the equivalent of an accidental tax break. The oil crisis, whatever else it may be doing, is giving a break to the one set of people all the political parties should be most sympathetic to, and whom they laud with pieties on every occasion. So here's a time to act out the pieties, and make sure this little bonus stays with the people who need it most.

But will it? Already in Ontario we are hearing from politicians, "well, now is a great time to put on a carbon tax." I beg furiously to differ. These politicians and warmist campaigners have no soul. Can you not leave Lincoln's "common man" alone? Just once? Please? Can you not, just one time, allow a little of the benefit to flow down and let those who most need and appreciate some small break have that break? Must their one parade be rained on?

Now, this is just a little bit of it. So it's just the governments who want to put it in, or people in the government who want to put on carbon taxes, eh… That's how you read this one here. But then you go into this article here and this goes into, from CBC news and it says…

Ontario could see carbon tax: Wynne

cbc.ca / The Canadian Press / Jan 14, 2015

Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne makes an announcement during a press conference at Queen's Park in Toronto on Tuesday, Jan. 6, 2015. Wynne refused to rule out a carbon tax for Ontario on Wednesday, Jan. 14.

After winning a majority government last June, Wynne said a carbon tax was not something the Liberals planned to introduce, even though she wanted a new plan to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

The province could adopt a cap-and-trade system (A: Same kind of thing again.) that lets the worst polluters buy credits from companies that burn less fossil fuels, or impose a tax on all carbon emissions, including gasoline burned by automobiles.

When pressed today about following British Columbia's lead (A: British Columbia's like California, I mean, the people with the cash always tend to go towards the West Coast, you see, the north and south, Canada and the States. That's where all the NGO leaders love to live as well, you know, it's better climate for them all, etc. They like the warmth, as the rest of us pay the carbon taxes with heating fuels in the winters and stuff, that we're really going to get stiffed with this one.) and imposing a carbon tax, which included a seven-cent-a-liter levy on gas, Wynne refused to rule out the idea.

The premier said she wasn't prepared to say what options the province may come up with, but added Ontario must do its part as part of a national strategy on climate change. (A: Well, it's not national, it's international.)

Wynne said Ontario wants to balance its desire for economic growth with the need to lower greenhouse gas emissions.

Environment Minister Glen Murray is preparing a report on the various options to put a price on carbon emissions.

Like they haven't been all drafted up, you know, years ago and just waiting. Because it has been done, years ago, even how to introduce it and when to introduce it. Well, there's going to be a price war shortly as they put countries out of business to produce gasoline, and then once the monopolies have taking it all over they can jack it up. But in the meantime, they can slap on the carbon tax. Because the general public will say, oh what's 10 cents a liter for a tax, you see, when it's so much cheaper than it was. Then once they bring it back up to normal, plus the tax on top, then the tax will expand, what's on the books, every year, and you're screwed again. That's reality. That's reality, folks. So that's what's going on there.

Here's the thing now, there's an organization, and I've read this years ago when it set up in about 2006 and 2007 and so on.

Western Climate Initiative
wikipedia.org

(A: Now, I said so many times in the past that nongovernmental organizations are recognized as the new type of democracy, back in the early 1900s when they talked about bringing real democracy in to countries in Europe in Britain. A lot of very good minds at the time said that democracy, the way it's laid out, would only apply eventually to those with the most voice, and the most voice would be comprised of lots of citizens that would not be the general population, it would be special, nongovernmental organizations where they have the numbers, of the activists that are always pushing, and they will de facto represent the general public, because the general public say nothing, you see, they are the silent majority. That's how the Soviet Union was set up. The Soviet Union had NGOs, nongovernmental organizations, but with the government appointed leader. And we have the same thing here but they don't tell you that the leaders are appointed by the big corporate foundations who trained them and set them up to start up their organization, to give the appearance they are speaking for the people, or union, or whatever it happens to be, as it was in the Soviet Union. And there are good reasons why it's the same, because it worked in the Soviet Union.)

The Western Climate Initiative, or WCI, was started in February 2007 by the governors of five western states (AZ, CA, NM, OR, and WA) with the goal of developing a multi-sector, market-based program to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. (A: …right. And the governors certainly signed on to this, like a policy, not as a law, and it's all from the United Nations.)

The Western Climate Initiative, or WCI, was started in February 2007 by the governors of five western states (AZ, CA, NM, OR, and WA) to evaluate and implement ways to reduce their state's emissions of greenhouse gases and achieve related co-benefits. These states and future participants in the initiative (collectively know as WCI "partners") also committed to set an overall regional goal to reduce emissions (set in August 2007 as 15 percent below 2005 emission levels by 2020), participate in a cross-border greenhouse gas registry to consistently measure and track emissions, and adopt clean tailpipe standards for passenger vehicles. By July 2008, the initiative had expanded to include two more states (MT and UT) and four Canadian provinces (BC, MB, ON, and QC). Together, these WCI partners comprised 20 percent of U.S. GDP and 76 percent of Canadian GDP.

The most ambitious and controversial objective of the WCI was to develop a multi-sector, market-based program to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Detailed design recommendations for a regional cap-and-trade program to reduce greenhouse gas emissions were released by the WCI in September 2008 and July 2010. By December 2011, California and Quebec adopted regulations based on these recommendations.

(A: Now, where is it set up in anybody's charter that allows, say, a Canadian province and a state in the US to adopt policy that affects all of their citizens? And no one has stopped this or complained about it, because you see, you really don't have nations. You've got to keep thinking you do have a nation until world government is eventually announced way down the road, and it might not be that far off now, they might just do it after the next big massive crash, which is planned, to bring in the new system, a complete system of utter slavery, [Alan chuckles.], I mean, obvious slavery. Obviously a few, actually most folk won't notice it is slavery, because they will be here to save you and so on, and bring in a new system and way of living, as you are registered and monitored and guided from birth to death. That's really what it's about, folks. Now this goes on to say…)

(The WCI has no regulatory authority of its own.) Key administrative aspects of the regional cap-and-trade program are being implemented in 2012. (A: So, it's got no regulatory authority of its own, it can only put this forth as, what, a suggestion? Meanwhile they've got all the limits per year, how much to get reduce per year, way into the future. Hum? And it gets implemented, just signed into the law or something by governments? Why isn't this all over the news? All the time? In detail? Why don't they have specials on this for the people? Because they don't want the people to really understand it, that's why.) Power plants, refineries (A: Here ya go…), and other large emitters must comply with the cap in 2013. Other greenhouse gas emission sources, such as suppliers of transportation fuels, must comply with the cap beginning in 2015. (A: I mean, it's just… a coincidence, you're just into 2015 and what's getting hit, hey? Your fuel, it's going down, and that's when they were to implement the carbon tax.) Among other things, the Western Climate Initiative lays the foundation for a North American cap-and-trade program (A: That's the Al Gore projects, and the Rothschild projects and so on, where really the carbon taxes are going to get collected and go through the Rothschilds private bank in Switzerland, a part of the new economy. Of course there's the fact that these big corporations will go through Al Gore's company and other companies like that and swap all their carbon credits, etc. etc., and make profits off of it, while you pay for it all. It's quite something, isn't it? See, many of these big corporations actually have deals, they have deals with all your governments. The United Nations actually made a little loophole, as all the countries were told that the countries were to set all these national parks aside, but big corporations will have drilling rights and prospecting rights in these places. So they get given these massive tracts of land for nothing, that they can speculate on, let them sit for a while, and then put that down as a carbon sink. It cost them nothing to get it but when it comes to their tax time if they put down how much carbon is sinking, etc, and changing into oxygen and all that by the plants and the vegetation, and if they say it's more, more actually, if it's actually producing more or cleaning the air more than what it's taking in, they'll actually claim money from the government at tax time and make a profit on it. You understand, the ordinary folk never win here, it's not meant for you to win. If you think the ultra-rich are ultra-rich right now, just wait a year or two when this thing is really under full steam here. You wait and see. And you watch the rest of us all plummet down to what it's meant to be, for the managed society.),but it says the Western Climate Initiative lays the foundation for a North American cap-and-trade program not only in its design and implementation, but in its potential acceptance of greenhouse gas emissions offsets from projects across North America.

Some observers described the entire project as greenwash designed to avoid committing to the Kyoto Protocol, and cited evidence that much more drastic cuts, up to 40%, could be achieved without affecting investment yield in equities, a good indicator that such cuts would not affect economic prospects in the economy as a whole. Some watchdogs expressed concerns over why WCI was set up in the state of Delaware as an anonymous shell company that would evade public scrutiny.

The CEO of CARB James Goldstein is also listed as the Chairman of the Board of WCI Inc. (A: …naturally…) and the head of the auction oversight group. (A: And they give you a link for that too, the auctioning and trading of these carbon credits, etc.)

Several U.S. partners, although active participants in the design of the program, announced in 2010 that they would either delay or not implement the program in their jurisdictions. The partnership was therefore streamlined to include only California and the four Canadian provinces actively working to implement the program. As of January 2012, regulations have not been issued by British Columbia, Manitoba, or Ontario, although a carbon tax in British Columbia will be increasing to $30/tonne of CO2 equivalents (A: I love how they… I mean really, it's a lot of nothing, but they transpose it into something else, equivalents you see, all this nothing into nothing equivalents.) in July 2012. Several WCI partners also remain active in the International Carbon Action Partnership, an international coordinating body for several such regional carbon trading bodies.

(A: But it all comes under the United Nations. And as this expands, and once you've all accepted it, you see, and it's normalized, it's just always been there like gravity, they'll expand it to include so many other things. But it's also to include energy, the energy that was used to make that bar of chocolate, and the rapper, everything, and down to a tax on you personally as well. And your heating of course is going to just go through the roof, if you can manage to get heat at all. And of course the monopolies will say it's got to be their gas, or it's got to be their oil, or whatever, sanctioned by the governments that will approve it because they are all bought and paid for, and there will be no competition of any kind, it will be big prices and you'll be really into poverty. But the big corporations, because they can give you less and charge more, just like electricity right now, won't lose a thing, they'll profit as they actually give you less and less and less.)

Alberta and Saskatchewan object to cap-and-trade and in July 2008 called WCI's plan a "cash grab by some of Canada's resource-poor provinces." (A: No, it's not. It's a global thing, this.) However, Alberta has legislated a small restricted carbon charge of its own. The objections seem to be more related to the reporting and disclosure requirements that would be much higher for a North American project than for one based strictly in Alberta. Monitoring of the carbon-intensive Tar Sands, for instance, is inadequate according even to Alberta's own government. Industry funding to other independent monitoring was also cut.

Well, they should toss it out because this is all part of a big world agenda, that isn't just to do with profit and taking over, it's total monopoly, as they bring you into a completely new way of living and bringing you into austerity, folks. Because as I say, everything that you have to buy to live, your basics, everything, is going to have an energy/carbon tax applied to it. And it's just monstrous what is happening. This is a big social agenda for control.

Now this other article on the same thing…

Western Climate Initiative, Inc.
wci-inc.org

Western Climate Initiative, Inc. (WCI, Inc.) (A: …Inc, because it's a corporation.) is a non-profit corporation formed to provide administrative and technical services to support the implementation of state and provincial greenhouse gas emissions trading programs.

(A: So here you are, a nongovernmental sort of thing...)

The Board of Directors for WCI, Inc. includes officials from the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia (A: Now, is that why they were put in, these officials? Of course it wasn't. And should the public object? You're darn right they should object.), and the State of California. The services provided by WCI, Inc. can be expanded to support jurisdictions that join in the future.

WCI, Inc. Activities: (A: Their agenda…)
•Develop a compliance tracking system that tracks both allowances and offsets certificates
•Administer allowance auctions; and (A: …that's their carbon credits.)
•Conduct market monitoring of allowance auctions and allowance and offset certificate trading. (A: That's to do with cash for all these guys.)

The Board of Directors of Western Climate Initiative, Inc. is pleased to announce that Greg Tamblyn has been retained as the organization's Executive Director. (A: Remember, they have CEOs for these NGOs and everything, folks, like any other corporation.)

Mr. Tamblyn has over 10 years' experience developing and managing renewable energy and environmental programs.

(A: By the way I was thinking there, if you've read any of the top magnates of the world and how they got their money, they are all gangsters to start with until they became respectable in the second-generation going to the best universities, and with all of that loot they've got. You'll find that, for instance, the Rockefellers, the three brothers were into governments and private companies. They ran the military-industrial complex, a good part of it. They put their own boys from their own foundation into governments, all over the place, and all different branches, including the military operation, parts that deal with military, the State Department, all that kind of thing. They had all got their start at Rockefeller, and they were all getting retainers too, quietly issued to them, to make sure that the strategies of a private family were being carried out nationally and internationally, via the government, including wars. And when that was all getting found out they decided to start creating all the NGOs, nongovernmental organizations, to make it appear that they're not related to any of these big foundations, and really, from the general populace who are concerned… That's how they do it. It's worked awfully well. So the right wing think that all these NGOs are communists, and oh, old hippies and things, rather than the fact that it's big corporations that own them, big foundations are the fronts for the corporations, and they're really bringing in a fascist system under the guise of fighting big business. What a joke, hey! Isn't that beautiful, the strategy of it all. Isn't it? And folk fall for this. As I say, otherwise you would know, you see, all this is another Rockefeller agenda or another… name one of the big families, who run the countries. It's a great cover for them all to get what they want. Because these families, by the way, are not independent of each other. They all belong to certain, well let's just call them, clubs, put it that way.) As Executive Director, Mr. Tamblyn will be responsible for coordinating administrative and technical support for the emissions trading programs of WCI, Inc.'s participating jurisdictions.

Mr. Tamblyn comes to WCI, Inc. from the Renewable Energy Institute International (REII) where he served as Executive Director (2007 – 2014). As the Executive Director at REII, Mr. Tamblyn was responsible for managing renewable energy projects and the day-to-day operations of the organization. Prior to his appointment at REII Mr. Tamblyn worked on various environmental and renewable energy projects throughout the United States.

WCI, Inc. was formed in November 2011 as a non-profit corporation to provide coordinated administrative and technical support to state and provincial greenhouse gas emissions trading programs. (A: I mean, even that whole greenhouse gas thing... is baloney. But you see, the more they say it, and speak it into existence, the more folk think it's all real. Without the normal greenhouse gases, folks, there would be no planet at all, we'd all be dead, it protects us from ultraviolet and radiation and so on. And this CO2 they jumped on, it's one of the smallest trace gases there is in it, and it's got to be there for plants to grow. But facts don't matter. Anyway, this guy who is in charge of this nongovernmental organization, this nonprofit, is making...) The annual salary for this position is $130,000. (A: Yep, that's what he got in 2014. That's not including his massive expense accounts; I'm sure some of his dinners will be about $5-$10,000 each.)

But anyway, this is the reality, folks. We're run by what would appear to be do-gooders, you see, do-gooders, that you don't elect, we don't elect any of them and for some reason they simply just have the ear of governments. They can put things forth that are signed into law, by what you think are your governments, and I say, what you think are your governments. It's quite something. Quite something, folks. And that's how we're really run. Joe Blow, the common man, as Rex Murphy said, honestly isn't told a fraction of the information he should know, and how things actually work, and what things really are that are getting presented in the newspapers, never mentioning world agendas, or anything else, or these private corporations and private nongovernmental organizations that have their top leaders, the CEO leaders all funded and put forth by private foundations, owned by the same guys who own the military-industrial complexes, tax-free foundations by the way, who are there to help the world, you know, and poor folks across the planet, and to run the world properly, you know, manage it properly like the pharaohs managed their slaves in Egypt.

Now, it's quite interesting to see how most folk, the so-called silent majority, most folk want to follow, they will obey rules and regulations. They have lots of entertainment to escape into as things get worse and worse and worse. And down through history it has always been smaller groups, naturally, who have made changes, some for better, some for worse, it all depends on what happened and how you look upon it too. But we've had small groups really running the world for a while, of the ultra, ultra-rich, and they're getting more and more rich all the time, more and more powerful the time, and now they have these thousands across the world of nongovernmental organizations as fronts to push their agenda through, of course, and their control of everything. Because the old socialist idea was to have an expertly run society. And socialism, believe you me, was funded by the extreme right wing of the era, the real capitalists who thought if they could force people to do and buy and so on and live the way they wanted them to do, then apart from getting awfully rich, if you are supplying all the authorized materials etc., and goods, then you could also govern their whole lives into a more uniform standardized society.

Now, we're in the age of the control freak, this is what it's all coming down to of course. In some countries they monitor children two to three months after birth, like Scotland where they give you GIRFEC, a state authorized guardian you might say, because parents aren't guardians anymore. The state is supreme and that guardian will make sure that that child gets their, eventually, monthly psychological evaluations to find out their views about things and if they find out something wrong they'll either drug them or tweak them in one way or another to get them back on track into the officially approved program of thought, you see. Because thought control is a big part of it. In fact, most of it is thought control. Independent thinking is really frowned upon by those with this very old and very well organized agenda that encompasses every part of living. Believe you me, it's not just to do with pollution.

But from this article here, it's very good, a very good article, it says…

All Over America,
Government Officials Are Cracking Down On Preppers
theeconomiccollapseblog.com / Michael Snyder / January 8th, 2015

(A: Now, preppers in the States, as you know, and elsewhere, are folk who are trying to live independently. Many of them in fact started off as new agers and thought they'd get off the grid and things like that and be self-sufficient, a dream, a dream that's very, very old. Because at one time very long ago we were all individual survivalists trying to live from day to day, hunter/gatherers, etc. And it's all changing today. You cannot be independent. You must need the state, which is a front for the big corporations who rule the world, the state must tell you what to do, what to buy and how to live and all the rest of it, from birth to death. That literally is it, the planned society.)

Why would the government want to punish people that are just trying to work hard, become more self-sufficient and take care of their families? There are approximately 3 million preppers in the United States today, and often they appear to be singled out for punishment by bureaucratic control freaks (A: ...that's all the agencies we've got now.) that are horrified at the thought that there are families out there that actually want to try to become less dependent on the system. (A: Actually, they use these families, and news articles, as they attack them with SWAT teams and things like that, to terrify the rest into compliance. That's how it works, you see.) So if you use alternative methods to heat your home, or if you are not connected to the utility grid, or if you collect rainwater on your property, or if you believe that parents should have the ultimate say when it comes to health decisions for their children, you could become a target for overzealous government enforcers. Once upon a time, America was the land of the free and the home of the brave, but now we are being transformed into a socialist police state where control freak bureaucrats use millions of laws, rules and regulations to crack down on anyone that dares to think for themselves.

For example, people have been burning wood to heat their homes since this country began. And this is still very common in rural areas. But the Obama administration does not like this at all. (A: Again, forget the front man they put in, folks. This is an ongoing intergenerational agenda, you see. Politics is the farce. Do you think Obama is making decisions? I tell you, none of them can make decisions, because they are not allowed to. Their bosses above them make the decisions all for them.) The Obama bureaucrats at the EPA fear that our little wood stoves may be contributing to "global warming", so they have outlawed the production and sale of 80 percent of the wood stoves that are currently in use. The following comes from a recent Forbes article.

It seems that even wood isn't green or renewable enough anymore. The EPA has recently banned the production and sale of 80 percent of America's current wood-burning stoves, the oldest heating method known to mankind and mainstay of rural homes and many of our nation's poorest residents. The agency's stringent one-size-fits-all rules apply equally to heavily air-polluted cities and far cleaner plus typically colder off-grid wilderness areas such as large regions of Alaska and the American West. (A: So there's no exemptions no matter where you live. And again, that's to get folk to move too, because you believe you me, they've got the whole future mapped.)

While EPA's most recent regulations aren't altogether new, their impacts will nonetheless be severe. Whereas restrictions had previously banned wood-burning stoves that didn't limit fine airborne particulate emissions to 15 micrograms per cubic meter of air, the change will impose a maximum 12 microgram limit. To put this amount in context, EPA estimates that secondhand tobacco smoke in a closed car can expose a person to 3,000-4,000 micrograms of particulates per cubic meter. (A: So they want it down to 12 micrograms.)

Most wood stoves that warm cabin and home residents from coast-to-coast can't meet that standard. Older stoves that don't, cannot be traded in for updated types, but instead must be rendered inoperable, destroyed, or recycled as scrap metal. (A: And I read that about last week or the week before from a different article too, down to the 12 microgram limit, which makes it impossible, you see.)

There are other preppers that try to use very "clean" methods to power their homes, but that is still not good enough for some government control freaks.

For example, one prepper down in south Florida that had gone "off the grid" was recently ordered by a court to connect back to the grid or face eviction from his home. The following is an excerpt from a recent article by Guiles Hendrik…

Think you are still free to make choices in your life? Do you think the government will allow you to live independent of their utility monopolies? If you think so, try opting for renewable non-grid tied power and utilize environmentally friendly composting toilets and your own self-sufficient water supply. Today, those life choices could land you in jail if you live in South Florida. Take the case of Robin Speronis.

Robin Speronis has lived off the grid, independent of the city's water and electric system. A Florida court ruled this off-the-grid living illegal last week and has given Robin until March to connect her home to a municipal water line or face possible eviction. Further, officials in the city of Cape Coral have justified this by deeming Robin's home "unsanitary," citing the International Property Maintenance Code. (A: So there you go, an International Property Maintenance Code, again, the United Nations. No one gets to vote for the United Nations, but they're running your lives, as a front, again, for the big foundations, which are just the front, really, for the agendas that the big international feudal overlords of international corporations sink the tax money into. In other words, tax-free, these foundations, because they're helping you, they're making social changes, you see, so they don't get taxed for things and they sink all of their money into there.) First of all, since when did we begin to locally recognize "international codes?" Where in the US Constitution does it provide for international jurisdiction over local codes? Ironically, this "international" code mandates that homes be connected to an electricity grid and a running water source, even though most of the world lives without reliable electricity and municipal water and sewer. Further, the code is outdated and obsolete because it was written without consideration to both old and new technologies that relegate the need for grid tied power and municipal water as unnecessary and expensive; especially, in locations where it simply isn't feasible to have grid tied utilities. Nonetheless, Speronis' home does in fact have power and water through far cheaper and more environmentally friendly means — solar panels and rainwater, but that reality is ignored by the local government.

Incredibly, most Americans still seem to believe that we live in a "free country". But we don't. Our lives are very tightly constrained by literally millions of laws, rules and regulations, and more are being added every single day.

Even some of our most basic fundamental rights have been seriously eroded. One of these is the right to make basic health decisions for our own children. In New York state, children that have not received all of the designated vaccines can now be banned from attending public school, and this requirement was recently upheld by a federal appeals court…

New York State's requirement that children be vaccinated before attending public school does not violate their constitutional rights, a federal appeals court in Manhattan said on Wednesday.

In affirming the requirement's constitutionality, a three-judge panel of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals also upheld a previous ruling by a federal judge that students exempted from the requirement for religious reasons can be barred from school when another child has a disease preventable by a vaccine.

The decision was the latest to go against three parents from New York City who say their religious rights were violated when their children were kept out of school as a result of the immunization policies. The parents' lawyer, Patricia Finn, said her clients planned to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

So what are we free to do without government interference these days?

Not much.

In fact, in some states we can't even sit on our own land and collect the rain as it falls from the sky for our own personal use.

If you do this in the state of Oregon, for example, you could go to prison…

Gary Harrington, the Oregon man convicted of collecting rainwater and snow runoff on his rural property surrendered Wednesday morning to begin serving his 30-day, jail sentence in Medford, Ore.

"I'm sacrificing my liberty so we can stand up as a country and stand for our liberty," Harrington told a small crowd of people gathered outside of the Jackson County (Ore.) Jail.

Several people held signs that showed support for Harrington as he was taken inside the jail.

And of course these are just a few examples. Almost every single day there are more stories in the news about government bureaucrats cracking down on preppers. They almost seem to relish the opportunity to go after the "non-conformists". (A: Well, they do, that's what they're told to do.)

But the good news is that the number of Americans that are seeking to become less dependent on the system just continues to grow.

So what about you?

Are you a prepper? (A: …and so on and so on.)

So really folks, it's an ongoing agenda, they're never going to stop at the top. They have what they call, the force of the law. And they also, we know for a fact, that many folk, as I say, the silent majority in certain areas will simply move. They'll migrate to the thronged cities; they'll go on the city's power supply. Because they're getting taxed off the land and persecuted of course, and they can't burn their stoves, and if you can't get it way up yonder where ever they live in the rural areas, or its awfully expensive, more expensive, and move into the cities, then they're taking public transportation. So it's all been thought out years ago, how to get everyone to do what you want them to do, from the top. And that's what the think tanks work on of course. They do all these computer studies too and simulations, they can get pretty accurate accounts of how many will actually move en mass, how long it will take them, the different classes that will move first, second, third and so on and so on and so on. So you're living in a plan society already, nothing to do with democracy, nothing whatsoever to do with democracy. The appearance of democracy should not include specialized nongovernmental organizations that no one gets a chance to vote into anything, never mind make decisions for them that affects their very life, living itself, life itself. It shouldn't be allowed.

But again, your mainstream, which is all, again, part of the corporate elite, it's just the promoter for all of that kind of stuff of course, and so is the general media as well. Because they don't tell any citizen. They don't do specials on all of this. They don't give airtime for someone with a counter to the agendas, with a different viewpoint and so on. Under the fair policies act, etc. they only give it to the ones who are authorized to come out and go against you, and you can't go against them. So that's the technique that's used in this world today, and it was well thought out a long, long time ago, folks, a long time ago. As I say, the think tanks work on all these policies daily, daily, full-time, thousands of folk sometimes just in one big think tank, you know. They also use university studies and all these things, just ongoing, ongoing, ongoing, to see how the cattle are responding, and different sectors of the cattle are responding, and how to get the rest of the cattle to respond and do the right thing, which is to do what you're told.

Now, I've talked many times about the techniques that are used to take your rights away and about collective punishment, if one person does something wrong in a nation then you punish them all. But it's always for a bigger agenda that they won't tell the public. Of course, we know that the whole agenda before 9/11 happened was all written in the books and the step-by-step process of all the things they wanted to do and would need little excuses to push and push and push and take more rights from the public. And it's ongoing. With the shootings in Paris, etc., that's been a big part of it. This stuff that I'm going to read, really, has been on the books for a long time. Because I can remember before 9/11 happened when there were documentaries on Canadian television with the top security people at the time, and the agencies at the time, with some, I think they went over to Israel and they were working with the Israeli Special Forces and officials on security and coming terror and all the rest of it. And some of these guys when they were talking, these Canadian guys in charge of the agencies, you talk about fascists, I mean, they put the guys around fascist governments in the past to shame, really. But this article here is from RT and it says…

Erosion of free speech?
Cameron pledges to ban Snapchat and WhatsApp
rt.com / January 12, 2015

PM David Cameron may block encrypted messaging platforms Snapchat and WhatsApp if the Conservatives win May's general election, as part of the party's agenda to bolster surveillance powers following last week's terror attacks in Paris. (A: It doesn't matter who's in, folks; it's such a joke even having a party in Britain now because they're all the same, literally.)

During a meeting with Britain's security chiefs, the Prime Minister pledged to halt the use of communications platforms that can withstand snooping from security services who are in possession of a warrant. (A: Well, it won't matter. They've been doing it all along without warrants, as we all know, hey. We all know this.)

Such software applications focus on popular messaging and social networking apps that deploy encryption techniques to protect users data.

WhatsApp, Apple's iMessage and FaceTime, which encrypt information in this manner, could all be targeted by the Conservatives' proposed policy.

Cameron also pledged to revive the Tories' much-criticized "snoopers charter" to aid security officials in monitoring online activity.

(A: Literally, we might as well just… I wish the governments would just pay for the computers and iPhones and all the rest of it, right. But they're called 'personal' computers, making you think it's yours… it's yours. If they forced you to get it you'd be suspicious. But because it came out as a 'personal' computer, like yours, and it really pushed, oh, 'your' private information... oh, private. It was all lie from the beginning. Everything was worked out long before they decided to give you the computer.)

In April 2014, the European Court of Justice ruled against the introduction of the Snooper's Charter, warning it would culminate in privacy rights violations. The Court outlined a more moderate data retention program that would aid criminal investigations.

But in early July it emerged the government was seeking to push through emergency legislation, which would flout the Court's judgment and re-legislate for the blanket retention of data.   (A: …they've always done this though.)

The snooper's charter subsequently caused a rift in government, however, after it was blocked by Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg on the grounds it posed a risk to civil liberties.   (A: Then they go through the usual stuff.)

But the fact is, it was planned a long time ago, step-by-step. And again, you also get the same thing from RT…

'I am not bothered with civil liberties stuff for terror suspects'
– Boris Johnson
rt.com / January 12, 2015

London Mayor Boris Johnson (A: He's quite a character, and quite a family history he's got too by the way. In fact, I think it was his granddad and great granddad were members of the Milner group for, causing revolutions abroad.) said he's "not bothered" with civil liberties when it comes to terrorism suspects, while he attended a vigil in Trafalgar Square in solidarity for the 17 people that have lost their lives in terrorist attacks in Paris.

Johnson said: "I'm not particularly interested in this civil liberties stuff when it comes to these people's emails and mobile phone conversations. If they are a threat to our society then I want them properly listened to."   (A: Well, this is just to make sure we're all even more listen too, that's all, in more detail in other words.)

He argued that security services should be able to monitor the emails and phone calls of anyone who posed a threat to Britain. . . (A: Now, there's a broad term, 'a threat' to Britain… If it's a threat to the agenda it's a person with a different point of view, that's all, a point of view, as they keep expanding what they mean by it. It's like terrorism, they keep expanding the meaning of it to include so many things, especially any opposition of the mind, you see.)."

The government is pushing for the Communications Data Bill to be re-introduced, which would give the security and intelligence services greater power to monitor terrorists.

They're all getting in on the act of course, as you well know...

Surrounded by surveillance: Is everything spying on you?
Computerworld.com | Nov 22, 2011

Depending upon who you listen to, GPS tracking shouldn't be your only concern when you are out and about on the streets. The ACLU hammered license plate scanners as 'logging our every move,' a different investigative report concluded your car is spying on you, and some even claim the street lights are out to get you.

The ACLU reported on the "widespread tracking of citizen's movements" via the use of automated license plate readers (ALPRs). "It has now become clear that this technology, if we do not limit its use, will represent a significant step toward the creation of a surveillance society in the United States." (A: Well, it's already here, folks. And this is from 2011 by the way, this article here.) The ACLU does, of course, regard GPS tracking without a warrant as intrusive on privacy, but license plate reader "technology is rapidly approaching the point where it could be used to reconstruct the entire movements of any individual vehicle."

Well, we know that the little box and so on and the GPS, they've been tracking you for years actually, right down to what your speed is on the roads that you're on and so on, and they know the roads that you're on as well, things like that.

Lawmakers move to block black box recorders in cars, DVR snooping
Computerworld.com | May 1, 2012

And then it talks about what we already knew and they were using before it ever broke into the media.

IntelliStreets

Extremely smart street lamps, IntelliStreets system, are another tech coming under heavy fire as many of its critics claim it's Big Brother tracking your every move. ABC7News reported, "In each lighting fixture or each lighting pole, there is processor very much like an iPhone. And it takes inputs and outputs and talks back and forth. And the poles actually talk to each other." That's not all because when you step "into view of the street light, there is a camera that spots you... it can even take your picture. The system is also capable of recording conversations making critics cry invasion of privacy."

After lighting contractor Illuminating Concepts (A: …this is the company.) took a great deal of heat over its IntelliStreets system, it responded with Big Brother or Big Idea? "Those crying foul over our Intellistreets lighting, security and information system seem to have two consistent qualities: they know little if nothing about the overwhelming merits of our potentially life-saving technology; and, everything they ever learned they learned from the 'Big Brother' movies." The company said the grant money came from the Department of Energy, not DHS, (A: Well, the Department of Energy is also part of the military-industrial complex, that's the guys who own it.) since the IntelliStreets are energy efficient. (A: Okay so it's energy-efficient, so that makes it okay, right? Humpff. There's no argument at all.) "In its fullest form, Intellistreets also includes the collection and reporting of information immediately and completely so that first responders (police, fire and EMS) (A: …so it’s there to help you, you see. That’s why it’s there, folks, you see, they’re just thinking about you, they’re always thinking about us, the poor souls, we’re all helpless, you see.)

Yet the Center for Democracy and Technology (CDT) has long warned about the dangers lurking in digital signage, "ads with eyes" as it continues to grow smarter and more interactive. The World Privacy Forum [PDF] (A: ...included here by the way and I'll put it up tonight.) warned that "digital signage systems fitted with sensors, cameras and facial recognition systems for the delivery of targeted advertising risk creating a 'one-way-mirror society'."

There's electronic data everywhere, touching nearly every aspect of life, and digital evidence may be the star witness in a criminal case. MSNBC was talking about when it comes to your car collecting evidence via a vehicle's "event data recorder" which is like a "black box" on a plane and then witnessing against you. Yet others say "that e-evidence might just as easily create an unshakable alibi."

We've looked at war texting, an SMS attack to steal a car, at how the Nissan Leaf secretly leaks your location and your speed to websites (A: So some vehicles are way ahead of others of course, with the ability for more information that's given to whoever is collecting it at the other end.), and there are cars with an IP address, like the Chevrolet Volt, which could potentially be vulnerable to client side attacks. SNOsoft Research delved into hacking your car for fun or profit (A: …another link there.), which pointed out it's not really that difficult to program a car to kill a driver. (A: And that's very true, the intelligence services have been doing this for years.) So you see? It's all how you view things and perhaps your paranoia level.

So what you're living through, folks, is an incredible agenda which leads into social control. Incredible. And nothing has been missed in the day-to-day living of every single type, and I mean type, personality type of individual. And it's to get worse and worse and worse, until the totally controlled society, where you'll have no say in anything... If they accuse you of anything, thought crime, whatever crime it happens to be, all the new crimes they are creating, you'll have no alibi at all because in somewhere or another some camera has got a picture that could be evaluated as you doing this or doing that, or you could be putting something in the trash, who knows. But this is the life they're bringing in for you, under the guise of keeping you safe.

I mean, there's nothing government will tell you that's ever true. I really mean that. Anything they tell you, they might tell you in a roundabout way what they're going to do, they give you a totally different reason why they're going to, but they won't tell you all of it, what they're going to do in one particular area, or the real whys, and there's consequences to it all. That's what public relations are for, and every department in government has public relations and they hand out things to the press to make sure that we get the perception about whatever topic it is, that we're supposed to believe.

Every company has the public relations, whole departments of them, who sit and psychologically evaluated how to push something across to con the public. Police forces all have them too, public relations officers, people who spin truth to make it more palatable, by omission or spinning. That's the real world and that's how it really does work, folks.

I've said for so long that the groups that are out there, don't join the ready-made groups because many of them were set up by the opposition under the guise, we're here for you. And if you start one up for yourself you'd have to have a whole incredible intelligence network to make sure that no one infiltrates it, because you will get infiltrated and someone can take it over rather quite easily, especially the one that works the hardest for you, that's what they do. Read all the different techniques about infiltration of the communist system during the Cold War. In America and Britain and elsewhere there were hundreds, hundreds of front groups, front organizations that were to all lead the culture along an agenda, their thinking and so on, and in the universities, into thinking in this particular way, or that way, whatever way it happened to be. And they had Christian groups and everything conned into it because they didn't come along and say, hey we're communists and we want to change you and use you. They give them a good reason, to help something or help somebodies or groups of people, and you say, well that sounds good, I'll put money down on that and help. Nothing has changed. The ones at the top know what they're doing, who lead all these groups, they know, they're well-paid and well-funded, incredible pensions and everything else. But they love to use lots of followers…

Only by becoming an individual in the first place, understanding what's going on, can you actually achieve anything at all. And believe you me, it won't be easy. But you have to learn to speak your mind in every situation. That doesn't mean you get into an argument, you speak your mind. You have to learn to be calm. Learn it. And don't overdo something, just say what you know about something. Eventually it will come down to, literally, persecution across the board.

But since all the organized nongovernmental organizations have thousands and thousands and thousands of followers, as I say, the top branches of them are all well-funded and well-paid, full-time salaries, they even have office blocks a lot of them, pretending that they're really speaking for the people. No, they're not. We don't elect them. We don't vote them in. And most folk don't even know who they are. But their names are always in the paper, the name of the groups, NGO. Just like the United Nations itself wasn't voted in by any citizen of the general population of any country. It was set up as a front organization, by the same guys who already owned the banking world, they owned governments including Britain, especially Britain at that time, and had for a long time. They helped fund the whole setting up of the communist opposition, because it’s got into two opposing forces, to create social change and political change, and educational change. And all during that era that was opposing communism, it was being taught in universities across the States and Britain and elsewhere, quite openly, by professors brought and from the Eastern countries, and all getting funded and getting passed through immigration without a problem, right into those positions, to teach the socialist doctrines, through social sciences and things like that. All effective and it worked awfully well. Only one group runs the world, one group.

But as I say, you've got to claim your individuality. Be yourself, for goodness sake. Be yourself, that's all. And find out who you are, really who you are, not the yes men that takes the opinions that are downloaded to you, do you want this one or that one. For every topic they give you a left and right, take this opinion or that opinion. And answers are never quite that simple. And the answer you give might have nothing to do with either of the ones they offer you.

Individuality, when it goes, there's nothing left to save. Nothing left to save whatsoever. It is true, the majority will, I've always said for me personally, the main enemy I have, which is totalitarianism, and those involved in it, it's also a good part of the general population that go along with it all because they don't want to know. That's why the big boys have always decided to use this thing called democracy, the majority of the public will go along with anything they're told by the leaders. To have a quiet life – they'll think, I've got a quiet life – so they let it all go. Then eventually as the numbers increase of those who let it go, the general population, then they'll say, well why aren't you getting this license or whatever it happens to be? To drive or whatever, it doesn't make any difference. Or paying this fee or whatever, why aren't you doing it? The rest of them have accepted it. And they'll say, 70% of the public have accepted blah, blah, blah, therefore we're making it a law. And that's why democracy works for the big boys, to use it as a con game. Sad, isn't it? But we're so well understood.

And I don't give you the cheerleader rah-rah-rah thing, or a show, like a wrestling show of entertainment. I just give you the bare facts, that's all. Because I'm not selling anything, I have books there and that's about it. I'm not selling all kinds of products. This is not a business. If I wanted a big business I would have one and I'd put on the show and I'd sell you all kinds of gimmickry. My job here isn't to terrify you, is to lay it on the line, folks. Because really, personal responsibility comes into all of this. It's always personal responsibility, because what you say to others and what you say to your family members, what you say your children really does matter. And they may not agree with you now, the children especially, because they're getting a totally different indoctrination at school, and they're getting all their values from the state as Huxley and others said would happen, that was always the agenda. As they go through life and experience the difficulties of life they'll start to identify with you, and say, oh they were right after all about this and right about that. That's how it is. Because whether or not they liked it at the time, you planted a seed there of a different opinion, a different way of looking and perceiving things, that's what's important. This is long-term strategy. Because where we are today, and all the things I've talked about tonight, were planned a long, long time ago, in detail, folks, step-by-step, stage-by-stage. And no one has the right to rob us of our minds.

Neil: Welcome to Reality Bytes Radio on the 19th of January 2015. We have our guests on today, Alan Watt and Thomas Sheridan, and we are going to be discussing the Music Industry. Are you there guys?
Alan: Yep, I'm here.
Thomas: Hi Neil.
Neil: Hi Thomas. Good you are both clear. Great, okay I suppose briefly just introduce yourself and your actual experience in the music industry in about you know a couple of minutes if you can and then we will take it from there. Anybody can go first.
Alan: Yeah well I could start if you want.
Neil: Yep, sure.
Alan: Yeah, I think everyone tends to go into the music industry pretty young. And you have your basic ideas, everyone else has, of what it's all about which is generally all completely wrong. And if you are any good at all you are picked pretty quickly by the image-makers and then you get into the real inner core gradually, there are definitely different layers of it naturally depending on what your abilities are. But if you are good at songwriting and music construction, etcetera, you can get picked to go up the ladder a little bit. And again it's kind of an apprenticeship because you find out; you are told really, what they are after. Music isn't spontaneous as we are taught it is and it just comes out of nowhere by a little garage band. What's to be popular is planned in advance by a machinery. I call it a machinery of experts that run the culture business. And it really is a culture business. And make no mistake it has nothing to do with spontaneity as such. It's very well directed. They know where they want to take the culture. How they want to alter culture, that's a big, big part of it. And I guess from really from the, it's actually earlier than even the 60's, but from the 60's onwards they knew what they wanted to do with altering the western society all together, not just movies but definitely music. Music is a very, very ancient technique of changing and getting through to the youth especially, for many reasons and even for using for revolution in ancient times and even through the 17 and 1800's through opera even.
So you find, you start to catch on to what's what. And if you are cleaver enough you'll catch on not to sign your name off the bat to anything at all because you get to know the different bands especially if you are doing session work and things like that. Many of the bands actually are put together out of just a lineup of guys that are picked. The cover story that's brought in how they've known each other for years is generally very often fake, not always. And they are given lots of publicity if they want to give them a hit or two, or maybe more in fact.
But the direction of the music is always, and what's going to get bought for a song for instance, is told. You are told what they want basically right down to political correctness as they update society right down to you can't mention gender specific words in a song. And so "her" has to go and etcetera, until it couldn't be sung by anybody. This comes from the top believe you me. It's not so much what the people would like in a bar if it was all left to bar music or club music, it's what's going to be made popular and famous from the top down. And my experiences really were quite something right down to seeing at one point a panel of people at the BBC in London who picked what was going to be the number 1 for the week or the next month even. And there were a whole bunch of people around the table all about middle aged, some of them older, dressed in tweed, including the women. And you think they have nothing in common with the particular music that's getting pushed but they were the ones who were deciding what they were going to push to be number 1, 2, 3, etcetera, for the next coming week and then the month as well. And it was astonishing to get this insight into how the whole machinery actually works.

The idea is to get a lot of youthful guys especially at that time and now it is women too, young girls, to try to emulate what they see as a star. It's almost like winning the lotto. The working class people are taught that you might get up there if you are good at sports or something like that, you might get a one in a million chance of getting up there making money. But so all the youthful characters join in, it doesn't matter what kind of music is getting pushed out, and they try to emulate it thinking if they emulate it they'll simply just get up there and be stinking rich, have all the women, and all the rest of it and have a great time. And it doesn't work quite like that at all.

The guys who pick you up, the big managers at the top, the ones who work for the record companies immediately get you right down to signing on their contracts. You must produce so many albums a year, things like that. Plus they'll put you on tour and you are worked off your feet because you can hardly get any sleep because you travel, you're doing live shows to promote, and at the same time too you have to put your albums out as well. Often they can't do it so what they do instead is they'll, if they have an album due, they'll hire someone to write their music for them. You'll often sell it for peanuts by the way, it depends who comes to you and asks you, you know, for 12 to 16 songs and then it goes under the band's name of course. And in actual fact someone else, not even the person who wrote it, owns the copyright for it all. That's very, very common.

There are also places they can go to in certain countries, like France. Paris has got a place where a lot of musicians can go there and in a little club you might say and you put your songs in and someone will buy them for a big band or whatever it happens to be, or for a solo artist they are going to make popular. At the time you don't know who they are going to give it to so you don't know how much to ask for. So there is not really as much money in it as you would think. So the whole system is really rigged from the very, very top. It's a completely closed system at the top, this machinery, and that's how I found out as I went through the many, many years, that's what I found over and over again. It is nothing like it is presented to the public.

Do you have anything to add to that?

Neil: Okay. Okay. Thomas what was your start off and experience?

Thomas: Yeah I would basically concur with everything Alan said. Now my first encounter with the music industry as opposed to being a guitar player in bands of the industry now was, I was about eighteen and I was walking down the street in Dublin with a guitar case in my hand having just come back from a rehearsal with the band I was with at the time. And this well dressed quite nice guy, a guy I'd say was in his early 30's, very well spoken, obviously highly educated, a guy from money background. And this is something that when I went to New York I found the same. That the people, there is a strange aristocratic subculture in all this within management, within the music industry, in these promoters and king makers and star makers. And he was very well spoken, obviously highly educated, and he told me would you be interested in joining a band he's putting together. And I was like, yes. I mean I was very impressionable and very gullible and very young and naive back then. And I had a few talks with him over the phone and I met him for coffee a few times and he told me that, I was telling him, look I'm not that good of a guitar player. He said you don't have to worry about it. That's not important, you look good. And the first thing we'll do is we will do a photo shoot with my wife who was a photographer. And so they were putting a band together. There was no interest in really the standard of my musicianship. I was picked purely on the basis that I was young and pretty and I had a guitar. And they were putting together basically a Duran Duran, Spandau Ballet, type group to cash in, in kind of a business sense, in that way.

Now when I met them they were very, very charming and these people are actually still heavily involved in entertainment although they have moved into theater today. But they were, you know, they were part of that whole entertainment industrial complex. And they were very charming, but there were times I could see that they would switch the charm off and they would be kind of cold and hard. Like I could remember one time when they were planning the group. I left before the thing actually took off but it never went anywhere, it fell apart. But she was, his wife, was giving me basically, and this ties into what Alan was saying, she was giving me information and she said, "When we put you out there", she said, "...you just keep your f...in' mouth closed. Say nothing and only say what we tell you to say." And that was a real kind of a wake up call for me because you see before that point I thought like playing in a band or being in the music industry was like being a footballer. You know if you can play football and you were good at it you got to play for a team, you may become professional, you may become very rich, and you may be very successful. That was the beginning when I, that was the point where I realized that the music industry did not function that way. You were basically a product. And your product was placement, was putting you in the right delivery package that they were putting for the pubic. And that was a continuum, both that, the idea that a musician or singer was simply a product in a product placement package coupled with the fact that the people behind this that I've met as I progressed through it all tend to be highly educated, from top universities, Cambridge, Ivy League schools in America, and so on. And that's basically it; from that point on I realized that the whole thing was basically a theater that was designed. That fame and success and accolades was totally based on doing exactly what you were told and keeping your mouth shut and doing what they wanted from you.

Neil: Yeah I mean you...

Alan: I could add to that if I might. Yeah, I've been present in the groups they helped too some of these people for bands, etcetera. And I got to know the ones... You see there are different ranks, it's almost on a need to know basis to the different levels that you get into. And I got to know some of them and I'd seen them already pick stars, to make stars. And what they had for one guy who had a few hits, he was told where he was picked out of a lineup of guys who all had to be the same height. They wanted only guys that were a certain height and build to turn up for the auditions. And they already had all the drawings of what he was going to wear. This leather outfit, very tight fitting, diamond bracelets on his wrists and things like that. Right down to the posture he would hold the mic at. They all had to have a gimmick, a shtick you see. It's all done beforehand, before they even pick the person that is going to go out there and who is going to do the acting you might say. And eventually they picked one of them, I knew him, he was a club singer. He was pretty good at being a club singer and I met him afterwards too. And he was told he would make three hits and then he would just fade away, etcetera. The songs were already written in advance, right down to the timing of when they would be released, every six months or whatever it was and that's really how it's done.

I've been present too when they picked people for say London rock musicals, things like that. And I've been involved in writing some of that stuff. But it's nothing like the people are actually taught at the bottom level. You are kept in utter ignorance. That's the way they want it. But there is more than that to it. There is a big massive social agenda behind it. And that got me interested in finding out what is this big machinery behind it all. Why is it so intense, the control of it all? Why don't they let people at the very bottom put out their own stuff and see where it goes by itself? No, they want to lead everybody and actually what it does is it kills originality at the bottom level because everyone starts to copy you see.

Now they had already tried this. There is a whole history to it. They tried this with the folk music era. The revival of the folk music started, as you know in New York. It was heavily communistic. And they set up camps across the U.S. and Canada and Britain too where students could go and get trained and picked if they are all kind of Marxist or Trotskyist as they liked to call it back then in the early 60's and they trained them. And they also had managers who would turn up there and they would pick the ones who they were going to promote in the folk business.

And I remember there was a famous scene where they had the big folk festival with Bob Dylan. Bob Dylan was also groomed for years for his particular part in all of this to change the culture for the counterculture they called it. And everything at that time was acoustic. It was almost, it became a religion, it was acoustic. And there were some bands there with electric guitars at the time but it hadn't caught on yet because it wasn't pushed. And so during that one concert he pulled out his electric guitar and started playing for the first time. So when Bob Dylan, who they already made a star with acoustic, and I mean, made a star because a lot of his songs weren't even his. There was a shock in the whole folk music era you know like a traitor had happened. What do you do when a star is now a traitor? But in actual fact he was leading the way for them all to go into purely electronic. And some of the guys, even the guys from The Weavers, who were also part of this big communistic counterculture, and I mean communistic. They wanted a kind of communist, not quite the same as the Soviet System, they wanted this society to come in and it was getting funded by the way from the very top with professors from the university by governmental money and heavily involved was MI5 at a very high level in Britain and the CIA in the U.S. especially.

They got the idea you see from during World War II, what were they going to do with a post war Germany and a post war Japan? And they put teams of people at work to decide what kind of culture to bring in. And how is culture guided and created and so on. Well it's always music, movies, dramas and things like that. And young folk emulate it as well as what you are gong to teach them through education. And it was so successful that they thought they'd also use it on the West because the whole world was to change. You're still thinking nationalistic but the CIA and these boys were internationalists from the very beginning. It was to bring in a world culture, but a directed culture of people who would behave and do what they wanted them to do and not cause waves and just go along with the flow. That's what it was. So if they directed all culture, all thought you might say, emotion and so on, you could control a whole world this way. And so they adapted that and brought it into the States under the Communistic League. And believe you me it wasn't the Soviets that were guiding this, it was inside the U.S., very high rich people. The Rockefellers were involved heavily in fact. His different foundations, the brothers, the three brother's foundations funded an awful lot of this stuff down to the buildings they would use, where they would be taught and everything else. And their big camps for teaching students what the agenda was.

And that's what confused the people, they always thought in left verses right. They couldn't understand that above all of this is one system controlling both sides of it all. And but music was an awfully, awfully important part. And so what they did to change it over from the ones who were pushing the communistic free love and all of this kind of thing, to destroy families, etcetera, let's all be happy and one, they brought in all the electronic stuff and they created Laurel Canyon for instance in California and Frank Zappa was set up there. And Laurel Canyon, this was to guide the whole music industry for the whole of the U.S. And top established stars were brought in and other ones, people I've hardly heard of, were brought in and were made famous there. And The Mamas and The Papas went there to learn their stuff. Frank Zappa ended up kind of running the show. He was a big guru there eventually. And you'll find that the big players who were given authority by the CIA in the Pentagon to run this whole counterculture, Stewart Brand and people like that, who was into cybernetics and counterculture, etcetera, and a whole bunch of these people were pushing LSD as well. LSD was getting thrown out by the bucket loads literally on tours with the group that preceded the Grateful Dead. There is a whole history to this. Folk think it just evolved all by itself and nothing, nothing is further from the truth.

I'm sure most of the readers and listeners know that the LSD experiments were always led by the Military Industrial Complex for control purposes, to see what it did and so on. The CIA ran experiments with LSD, full time experiments, hiring prostitutes all over the U.S., having cameras in all of the prostitute's rooms and so on, houses, and they'd bring in all these johns, thousands and thousands over many years to see the effect as the prostitute would slip different drugs into their drink including LSD. I mean why so much? It was amazing and then they brought out a different guy, I think it was the guy who was involved with the previous group to the Grateful Dead, that actually pushed the LSD from a bus. And it was, The Merry Pranksters, it was called. And these professors went along with them like Stewart Brand and so on.

These guys were all top military guys, Stewart Brand, and Kesey was another guy too. He went around with him as well. He was also military. They were dishing out bucket loads of LSD and promoting this whole free culture thing, so much so that the Unabomber, if you remember the Unabomber, he knew these professors and these guys who were top authors and star makers. He knew these guys who worked in universities and so on and who were directing this. And they had experimented on him when he was a student in some experiments. And when he realized what the whole agenda was to be, was to literally bomb out a whole generation, to completely destroy all the morals, all the culture that was to bring in a new manmade planned culture for everyone, he thought it was horrific. And that's what started him off in fact when he was a professor himself. So that's why he attacked certain people. And if you look at the names of the people who he was attacking, these were the very guys who are involved with the military. They were given military hangars to experiment with the strobe lights, drugs, and so on, and then get a youth in to watch them dancing to see if they would end up losing all inhibitions and have literally orgies and things like that, to see if that would work. Then they could put it on the whole population. This was an incredible massive experiment that was going on.

But they had learned it all as I say from the guys who were put in charge of America's Cultural Cold War. That's what they called it against say Russia, but definitely against Germany. That was their big testing bed, and then Japan as well. And they said if it works there, and you can literally shape a whole culture to be obedient and so on, we can use a different method to make them obedient and so on in the West but use some of the same tactics.

So that really is how they, it's so involved actually you could write stacks of books on it. But I've seen it at work. And I've been pulled in at times as well where bands couldn't, couldn't keep up and get their albums out for their contract. If they didn't do, produce and so on, they'd get threatened with lawsuits. And what actually happened generally was they simply worked for free for the next few years to pay off what would have been supposedly the claim from the lawsuit. And they'd pull you in, or pull me in or some other guy, and you'd have to go in and write their stuff for them and arrange their music and sometimes play their tracks for them and even play most of the music for the whole so called band. And you got paid a set fee. And even then I refused to go through contract. The only thing you could do is sign a nondisclosure so you wouldn't say that you ever had anything to do with it. But you got a set fee and that was it and that suited me fine because I wasn't owned like these guys were all owned.

Neil: Thomas?
Thomas: Yeah. When pop music was really starting to mean something in people's lives. And that was when the music industry was really taking off. That's when you had the growth of things like the School of Performing Arts in New York, places like Julliard, and governments taking a strong interest in this. And they were both very heavily and still are influenced by the New School in lower Manhattan. Now the New School was basically the Frankfurt Institution or the Frankfurt School transported to the United States. The purpose of this was not to harness up and coming talent in pop music. You see we always, what Alan was saying about Laurel Canyon and that's true in the folk music. You forget that pop music has been very, very engineered too from day one, even more so. And places like the School of the Performing Arts, this was not to develop talent, this was to get people at a young age, we are talking about high school age now, who were say good singers, good songwriters, had an ability to actually reach people, they'd be spotted very, very quickly. They'd be put into these schools and they would get a highly academic education into music that really was not necessary because what they were basically doing was pop music. They were just singers and songwriters that were developing. But their main thing was to do two things, was to filter out any one of them who probably had a mind of their own and would actually probably write pop songs that could actually you know make people think for a change. And on the other hand to get the ones who would actually finish these high schools like the School of Performing Arts which we know from the TV Show and the Movie, "Fame", were to be to socially engineer them. If you watched you know to have them make sure that when they graduated as a pop singer they were actually singing about themes. Basically cultural Marxism delivered in a very kind of namby-pamby manner. And to produce songwriters who would write lyrics and themes within songs that would actually apply to the social agenda going forward. Particularly to dumb down, to take any kind of deep meaning out of lyrics or do anything like that. To reduce them down to sort of childish metaphors or kind of simplified emotionally mushy statements that have no real depth to them while wrapping it up in this idea that they're somehow, they'd be elect. They are the best of the best in America. They have been brought to Julliard, they've been brought to the New School, they've been brought to the School of Performing Arts to be the best and to be the elite. And then they would play on their narcissism and their egos, of kids at an age when you are narcissistic and highly egotistical and bring them up this way. And then if any of them had any success from these schools which in reality very few do. And the ones who did have success from these schools were people who had parents that were already famous, such as Liza Minnelli, her mother was Judy Garland. But anyone else really just ended up probably just playing guitar in an off Broadway production or they were lucky if they got into an orchestra.

And it was a way for the establishment to grab and steal and corrupt just like they have done with the visual arts. To take the ones that really have something to say and have them working for them and to also filter out anyone who could be a potential troublemaker.

From very, very early on the music industry was instantly recognized as a social engineering tool and that's why they integrated it so much into education. I mean Harvard, you know Harvard University, has a big performing arts section. And that's the same thing there, they don't want to take people that could probably be top singers and to move them into things like Broadway shows and stuff like that where they will never really say anything. Or they'll be singing Stephen Sondheim lyrics which will just promote the agenda as well. It's really; people have no idea how deep it is. It's very, very deep. There are no accidents in the pop music industry.
Alan: It's even older actually than that because Hollywood in the 30's was putting out a lot of musicals of its day and movies. And so these movies again really affected, they are aimed at the young. It's always aimed at the youth you see. And there was one, I can't remember the name of it, but it's a song and dance type musical and you see a young couple at the end of a table, a long table, and forming an arch. They are at the very end of the table forming an arch all along the table as other young dancers, stacks of them in a long row with their legs apart, and the young couple are looking through between their legs to the camera. And the song they sang was, "Stay Young and Beautiful if You Want to be Loved". The message was to separate the genders because when you are young you think that you are always going to be young. You can't relate to the older. That was the whole message because we are going to give you a new... This is your world now and you are going to lead it. That was the message. And of course they were actually led by the nose quite simply. But they didn't know it, they were egotistical, etcetera. But that was the message. And they put lots of movies out like that at that particular era. Then during World War II they really hyped it up with the kind of Jazz, kind of Jazz sound, and the kind of early swing you might call it where they could swing the girls over their back, they would wear shorter skirts and you could see everything once they went over the guys back. That was to get the sexual thing going. And the idea was that if you could destroy monogamy, a person who would just simply team up and mate and bond with the person they were going to have sex with, then they could literally control every individual as an individual instead of having to go against the whole family unit. That was always the enemy of centralized government. Families are simply a small tribe, when they go after one person the whole family can stand up. If they have a lot of culture in common then the whole community will stand up for them against the government. And that had to be destroyed. And lots of books were written in the early 1900's about this problem -- How to control all of the people and to eliminate that type of problem with families standing up with common culture? Destroy the common culture, isolate the individuals, and then it's easy to do. But always go for the youth, because the youth if you keep feeding them egotistical ideas they will believe you. Yeah, this is our time. This is, you know, talking about "My Generation", like the song goes, and things like that. These were all put out on purpose for a very, very big agenda. It's easier to lead young and egotistical and ignorant youngsters, because we are all ignorant when we are teenagers and in our early 20's. We have no wisdom. We haven't matured yet. But you think you have. You think you know it all. And it's easy to be guided by guys they put out there to be your leaders and the guys you are taught to admire that say the cool things or even obnoxious things, etcetera, to scare society. That was well understood by psychologists that were well working onboard with this big cultural agenda.

And then back in the 60's again the Royal Institute for International Affairs, which is the homeland for the Council on Foreign Relations, had an international meeting in London. And you can see the old newspapers from the day where the whole idea was who is going to guide the culture of the world, would it be Britain or London that does it through their movie studio, Pinewood, etcetera, or Hollywood? And it also included all the music industry for the future. And at the end of about a two week meeting and many, many speeches they came up with the idea that the culture industry, the government of Britain through its culture industry department and the U.S. cultural division as well from government, the federal government, and local, even state too, they also have a cultural grants hand out. They would make this happen mainly inside the U.S. and Britain would follow. But they still would have some coming from Britain to get the people onboard so they came out of course with the Beatles and the Stones and things like that.

Theo Adorno, from the Frankfurt School, remember he was heavily involved with the setting up of the Beatles' image and so on. He tried beforehand to bring atonal music in. I was amazed when I traveled across Europe to hear this old jazz stuff. And it was kind of atonal jazz. And that was from the beatnik era. They tried the beatnik era before they brought in pop music and rock music. That was the first longhaired guys, they all wore long pullovers and had sweaters on. And they were always stoned out of their skull. They lived in these dingy clubs, dark, but they were all very cool. They were all cool cats you see and played sax, etcetera. And I listened to this kind of atonal creative jazz that literally I couldn't stand for more than a minute. But it was to destroy all the culture that was before. And that was out at the same time as they were destroying art itself, you know the painters, and bringing in these, the Picasso stuff. And making a big revival of Picasso to make everything disjointed so you had nothing solid and nice to hold up your culture, to hold on to. Everything was to give you this feeling of total change or even falling, falling through time you might say, into something new, which you couldn't understand. This was a massive psychological operation. And then when you added the drugs to it, the drugs were meant literally to make them far more suggestible and incredible studies were done on them while they were under LSD just to see if they could still function. What they really wanted was some kind of drug that would make them function well with still mathematics and so on but be emotionally flat. But they couldn't get that with LSD so they tried various other drugs and concoctions too. And they are still doing it through regular pharmacy.

But it's fascinating to see the massive machinery involved in creating not just the music stars but the acting stars as they call them because the people follow the stars. It's an ancient saying. They put them up in front of you, all the youth will follow that man or that woman and you'll want to be like them, dress like them, and act like them, etcetera. They are the new role models, which supersede the family, the mother and the dad, and so on. And when they're cool and even kind of nasty, or beyond being the cheeky level, the youngsters will use those terms too and to be cool and have shock value, etcetera. Then when they came... I remember talking to Gerry Marsden. And he did "Ferry Cross the Mersey", old stuff in the early 60's and he was an old fellow when I talked to him. And he said, he watched it, I mean he was through it. He went through it and sang some good songs at the time, very popular, but they were standard songs. He was talking about his home and the ferry across the Mersey, things like that, and he said that's how it used to be in the clubs. The folk went because it was still man and woman meet up and so on and often they would end up getting married. That's how you met people, a mate to get married, he said, and it was happy youngster stuff. There was nothing nasty about it, counterculture, or anything. And it had a romance about it you see. But when they brought in this new music and eventually gone into the rock, that was out the window. The whole idea remember was to separate the bonding aspect from mating up with a partner and simply have sex for sex's sake. And once that happened enough times they wouldn't bond for life with anybody and they'd have no children basically.

So it's fascinating to see this and what happened then in the 60's was what they tried in the 1920's before by the way during the prohibition era. Before prohibition there weren't so many young people at all that went into bars. It wasn't an exciting thing to do. It's only when you make it a bad thing to do and you have to sneak in and know Joe at the door and so on and get snuck in to drink this illegal booze that it became a place that you wanted to go. You see you are bad and you are a renegade. And they also brought in the mini skirt then, in the 20's, for the Charleston dance and so on. They promoted the sex and massive drinking then, and brought coke in as well by the way at the same time in big quantities in these clubs to get them hooked on coke. It didn't work because there was so much sexual fallout from it, from unwanted children and venereal diseases and so on. They didn't have penicillin remember. They didn't have the pill. And so they had this big fallout. It just didn't take with the general population. So they simply went back to the drawing board and brought it out in a better fashion once they had the pill, they had the antibiotics. They could cure some of the diseases they'd catch, not all of them mind you, and it's been a smash hit ever since. And it's pushed from the top.

In London you think about the whole establishment of the BBC in the 60's. No one worked in the BBC without coming from Oxford from the top to the bottom. You had to be from Oxford so it was kept within the establishment you see. It was a government owned station. And yet the BBC with their Oxford accents brought out the guys at the beginning to promote pop music as they called it. And they brought guys on who were falling off their chairs that they just made a number 1 hit of because he is drugged out of his skull. And you'd see this guy with a suit and tie with an Oxford accent saying oh, aren't we naughty, tee-he-he, as the guy is falling on the floor. So this is all aimed at the youngsters for goodness sake. Why were the upper elite pushing this on the rest of the population who didn't belong to their class? They were talking to a guy from the east end of London who was dressed in some rags and stoned out of his skull who had just fallen off his chair and it's a big laugh, it's a joke, like we are really bad. We are bad by falling off the chair and being utterly stoned out of our mind. That was to make it exciting for the youth. And it worked awfully well, awfully well. There is so much to all of this you know.

Neil: Yeah. I mean that I think is the main, the Bill Grundy interview with the Sex Pistols as it were. I don't know if Thomas you were in that kind of genre of music. What would be your perception of that now considering the fact that John Lydon has admitted that he was getting into parties and houses of parliament before he was even in the Sex Pistols?

Thomas: Well I have mixed feelings about it. It's, I think watching that clip you know back then when I was a kid I thought it was funny. I mean I just thought the whole thing was funny that this member of the BBC establishment basically destroys his career live on TV. But another aspect too is that people need to watch that clip again and how that thing all really kicked off was that Siouxsie Sioux who was only about, she must have been only about seventeen at the time, sixteen maybe, from Siouxsie and the Banshees who was there with them. She said to Bill Grundy I love your show; I'm a big fan. And then he started making these kind of sexual suggestions to her like I'll see you back stage afterwards. And this is like an older guy in his fifties. She was like a kid. And how it all began was Steve Jones reacted to that by saying you dirty old bastard, this kind of thing. And so we were getting an insight into the kind of culture that spawned the likes of Jimmy Saville in that you know basically any teenager that walked in the door, the Top of the Pops, or anything like that was fair game for you know whatever you know pedophile was working there you know they'd tap into them like Saville or the rest of them.

Now so on that level I thought it was quite revealing and quite interesting. Then I found out later on about Johnny Lydon and you know the whole thing about, I just don't know what to say, yeah he probably was selected, who knows. I mean it's just, yeah, you know it's like, I used to, when I was that age I used to think that the old farts were like the Rolling Stones and the Led Zeppelin's and stuff like that. And I thought you know I was very well aware from an early age of the likes of the Stones and Led Zeppelin were very average and the only thing keeping them going was this mystique built around them. For instance like the Rolling Stones and Led Zeppelin just played basic American blues. They just, it's led belly, it's John Lee Hooker, it's classic American blues sound. But because they have this mystique surrounding them of being dark or being sinister somehow. You had the Stones with Kenneth Anger and his whole connection with Crowley and the OTO. And on the other side you had also you had Led Zeppelin with Jimmy Page and his connection to all that stuff as well. And so that was the only thing that made them interesting. Because apart from that they're just basic you know white guys copying you know old time American guitar blues. There was nothing original about it. There was nothing original about it.

Alan: There was a very good reason. There's a very good reason for that though because remember you see the U.S. tried to get when they set up all of these camps across the U.S. and so on to train the youth from top universities to become future leaders for the Marxist system and neo-Trotsky system. It was to be blended with the West basically which has happened. They, through the acoustic era, they tried, what they were hoping for inside the U.S. was to get the black population to do an uprising. And so they had to popularize what they called black music. In fact that's how they trained initially Bob Dylan, he's from New York remember. Not from New York, but he's not from the Deep South.

Thomas: Wisconsin.
Alan: Yeah and so for years and years he had to practice and practice this kind of pseudo nasal kind of back in your throat singing that was kind of what is he, is he from Mississippi or where. And they did the same thing in Britain with the Rolling Stones. I mean here is a guy again who was trained as an economist, Mick Jagger, and he was put out there with this, again his outfit, his shtick and so on, and his drugged look. And the imagers immediately put out that he's a star before anyone had heard or even listened to any of his songs. Massive machinery went into action but he had to sing again. They used to call him the Deep South Londoner you know because that's the accent they tried to give him to popularize the black music. Well when they found out in the 60's and after some riots they had in parts of New York by the blacks who were against what was happening, they were getting used, as many of the leaders caught on to by the communist party, U.S.A. Then the party changed its tactics and brought in the rock stuff and then they thought that would do and we'll sing it just like a renegade kind of white man for a change. And then they started that. And after that, I was there when they changed the image from the heavier rock bands to the new narcissistic system. The longhaired, very well groomed long hair, cleaner looking, very tight fashionable but expensive clothing you know and a bit stupid looking. Even the leotards and all that to change the whole image of the man until he became more effeminate. And that was really what the push was about. And so many of the bands that were forming at that time were actually, they actually recruited guys who were homosexual. That was well known in the industry. And you met straight guys who couldn't get in, they were excellent musicians and top guitarists and so on and keyboard players but they couldn't get in because that was the image that they wanted to push forward and so on before they came out with all the punk.

So every stage of this has been well managed. And then when you find this communist party is totally in cahoots with the powers in the West. Remember that the Reese Commission that they had in the U.S. in the 1950's to find out why the big foundations like the Rockefeller Foundation and all the other ones were funding what appeared to them, to the government, to be far left parties, communistic parties. And Norman Dodds who was sent out there from the congress, the U.S. congress, he published in his own book, he said, I met the chairman of the Ford Foundation, and he said, we take our orders right from the White House he said. He said and the goal is eventually to change, so drastically and radically change, the culture of the West to that of the Soviet Union. They'll be a merger between the two down the road. A complete different social system, a different cultural system. And remember the communist system is total central government and authoritarianism. Well that's what we have today, the appearance of a kind of freedom but it's all artificial and given to you because you are copying singers or stars or whatever it happens to be and lots of entertainment to choose from but you've actually have got a massive centralized government which is becoming more and more authoritarian all the time. It wasn't just for the U.S.; it was for Canada, Britain and the rest of Europe and so on.

So it's a long-term geopolitical strategy. And to do so you had to alter the cultures into a now unified culture, which will not stand up. Because the people cannot bond the same way they used to, they don't have the same values; they don't have even the same... Well I used to call it ancestor worship.

When you look back at your hometown before they demolished them and built skyscrapers or whatever. That was where your grandfather walked along this road here or he went down this little stream there and fished, and his great-grandfather before him. And so you had this continuity. Today the continuity had to be destroyed. So a building is up ten years sometimes and then they knock it down again so there is nothing to relate to between one generation to the next. This was all part of this massive strategy. You know thousands and thousands of think tanks working on different parts of it and millions of pages written, professional pages, for professionals to learn and how to implement this whole strategy.

But going back to even Plato's day. Plato talked about the culture industry. He called it the industry in the translation from the Greek. And that included drama, and not just the architecture too but drama, drama was licensed back then. And the traveling troops were authorized to come out and do certain authorized plays in different city-states across Ancient Greece. That's so many islands, thousands of islands. And everyone had to by law attend them, even the slaves had to go and watch them because they said that's where the youth are going to get their morals for a strong morality, a continuity of culture, and a continuity of control. They also talked about... Plato even said that musicians should be licensed because they have the ability to stir up the youth to rebellion with the emotional impact of music coupling with the right kind of words and so on and themes.

So this is a very old tradition. We are taught at school that we just evolve from generation to generation and that things just happen. That's the accidental view of history. And nothing is further from the truth. The 20th century into the 21st century were to be where all sciences over people, all sciences, were to come to the fore and rule on behalf of the dominant minority of the wealthy financial families. So scientific control is what this is all about. And you must, you must always grab culture completely and you direct it where it is to go.

Neil: Yeah. Thomas, Alan has said many times that you can't help liking the music and he just mentioned the scientific aspect of that. And you know there are bands supposedly out there telling us how it is. You know I mean Muse comes to mind although I'm not a fan of theirs at all. But I mean there are smaller ones like, Killing Joke, and even smaller, Anti-Flag, for that. I mean Thomas do you think there are any bands out there at all who are for real?

Thomas: Not famous ones I don't think. And if they are they always get corrupted. And I mean the whole punk rock thing was supposed to be about anarchy and within no time you had like the Clash Sandinista and you know wearing t-shirts with Brigate Rosa on it, you know the Italian Red Brigade, who were basically a communist group that were created by Propaganda Due, the Vatican freemasonry. You had like the red wedge things. You had someone like Paul Weller who actually didn't really come out from a political stance in the beginning ends up you know hanging out for a while with people like Neil Kinnock and Billy Bragg I mean hardcore Marxists. Although to be fair he did pull himself out and said that it was all a con that he was led into. But this whole thing of stirring up constantly, stirring into Marxism. It always has to go with Marxism. It's always some kind of Marxist end game in all this stuff whether it's pop music or visual arts or even like within alternatives to this thing we have now, you know Russell Brown steering them all back into Marxism again. It's always true, you know I've always found it interesting that there are 33 revolutions per minute for an LP, and are they telling us something there?

But it's just, now it's always frustrating to see someone that enters the music business that may have something to say and then it's gone. It's whipped off into fluff nonsense or into the Marxist thing. I mean I actually think that this stuff about live, even bands like U2, yeah they are a big corporate machine now; they are a big established machine. But I've seen interviews, if people go back and look at old interviews of the likes of Bono on early American tours; they were really, really ripping into the establishment to a surprising level. The next thing you know they are being put on their blues phase, their blues thing and then the next thing you know they are playing for presidents. It's almost like what Bill Hicks said about when somebody gets elected that they take them to the President of the United States. Then they take them into a room behind the oval office and they showed them what really happened in Dealey Plaza that day to JFK. It's the same thing with the music business. You may have integrity, you may have the right feel, the right drive in your soul but there is a certain point where you get to and it's as clear as day, and where you get, what was his name, Bob Dylan again, said it to Ed Bradley on 60 minutes, "I made a deal with the devil, the biggest, baddest guys of them all." And that's what happened. You're given, like in the mafia, like any kind of criminal cartel; you are given an offer you can't refuse.

Neil: Yeah. I've actually got...

Alan: And along with these offers too, along with these offers comes... Hello?

Neil: Carry on. Carry on Alan. Carry on.

Alan: Yeah I was going to say that along with the offers I mean it isn't just financial or doors opening for you, or things being taken care of for you like lawsuits would come your way that would get deflected away all together. Things like that. You also get superior healthcare that's not available to anybody in the general public. You can get up to the higher levels of things like that, life extension to an extent you might call it. That's why they live so long. But so there are many different things that they're given or it comes their way.

But when you go into who they put out to get this whole thing really kicked off in the 60's, this new more organized systematic technique they were using, well planned, and with the Pentagon involved and so on. If you go into, even Morrison, they always made a big deal about Morrison and the Doors and so on. When the ships in the Gulf of Tonkin in the U.S., warships, were supposedly, had possibly had torpedoes fired at them. This is the con that got the war started you see, they wanted a war. The navy admiral in charge was Admiral George Steven Morrison. That was his father. You'll find if you go through the top guys they put out to really kick this off, every one of their father's was deep into, high up in the Pentagon. Frank Zappa's dad himself was up in the top military establishment for chemical and biological warfare. They were all, even Madonna, you know that came out and said oh I turned up in New York alone or something with a pair of ballet shoes and five bucks. That's lots of rubbish because her brother came out and said no, her dad is from a long military family. That's where we all came from, high up in the Pentagon.

So this is a standard thing. So many of them are actually picked and groomed very early for their acting role as leaders of the culture industry. Because you put out the leaders there, you debase the morality even more, and all these young fans, especially women start copying Madonna and then they bring out later on Gaga and the rest of them and so on, and just push the envelope step by step. This was all planned before they even picked Madonna that you get right down to Gaga. I'm sure even the names were picked before they even picked out Gaga. This is how detailed and well-organized all of this system is.

Thomas: Yeah. It always amazed me too how it, like you said, that they are picked from the right families. In the case of Jim Morrison there is a photograph of him as a clean cut youth on the bridge of his father's battleship literally months before he ends up as this longhaired rebel. It's a very, very strange transition in such a short time. He goes from like straight-laced army brat to rock god, Dionysian sex god, overnight. That has always been a very weird one for me. And another thing too I was just going to say, if you don't come from those families they have a tendency to kill you off.

Alan: Absolutely.

Thomas: It's like they don't want genuine people with talent working, like with talent and ability, who are popular. They seem to have a very high mortality rate.

Alan: That's right, yeah. And Zappa himself too was groomed and given lots of TV spots again in a suit and tie when he was about thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, every year he was given little TV spots on silly little shows just to get him used to the audience and managing himself in front of people and so on. But suit and tie, short haircut, and the whole thing. So this is standard stuff, yeah.

Thomas: David Bowie as well. He was a regular on American shows like the Dinah Shore Show and so was Alice Cooper and they were supposed to be counter culturists. And here they were entrenched with Bing Crosby and the very heart of the American tender time of establishment.

Alan: Uh huh, yep, that's right. And even to start Bowie off. Bowie started off with a traveling road show. This thing had about six or seven tractor-trailers, these massive American type trailers, doing his tours with all the incredible... no one had that back then. The cost of it alone and the transportation of it all and the hundreds of technicians all involved that's how they launched him. And he comes on the stage dressed in a little pouch, for his you know what, and nothing else on. Dressed up with paint all over this face and he's down on his knees on stage and everybody was shocked saying what the hell is this? And who really launched him? The BBC did it again. They did massive shows on his road show all along to make sure it was launched. And to make, to launch this new, here's a new kind of male, he's not quite this and not quite that. What is he?

And going back even further to set it up again step-by-step. They started it off with Elvis Presley. And Elvis Presley was taught how to..., they called him Elvis the Pelvis. To get the pelvis going, a really disgusting thing in that era at that time. It's nothing today because we are so debased. And he was trained by the same guy, the same guy who controlled the whole group, Johnny Cash, all of them. He made them all stars this one man. And the same thing happened in Britain at the time you had Cliff Richard under the one guy. There was a guy called Brown as well, he had a few songs, and different ones. They had the same technique with a small clique in every country. All in communication with each other who knew the techniques were given a complete authority of the establishment and the governments to launch these people into the new culture.

Neil: We had Tom Jones of course in Britain who was kind of the counter to Elvis Presley for British folk I guess.

Alan: Yeah and they launched him as a descendent of a miner which was nonsense. {Laughs}

Thomas: When Elvis Presley appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show the publicity machine made an enormous deal out of the fact that the camera couldn't show below his midriff. They only showed the top. Now that was to deliberately generate this, as you were talking about earlier on, this idea of the forbidden fruit. The young people want to see the bottom half of Elvis. And it's all..., so they deliberately create the forbidden fruit in order to attract people towards it. Their very deed was what worked on psychopaths.

Alan: Absolutely. Always make it bad. You must make it naughty and bad you see. Yeah.

Neil: That's the Sex Pistols in a nutshell, isn't it? Ban them. Ban them from the public venue and then everybody wants to see them.

Alan: Yeah.

Thomas: Another one for me is the disassociation kind of thing they use. Very much in the idea of like Orwellian newspeak in these cultural memes. You have all of these Vietnam War movies that show, that were made after the war, and they always show the American troops walking in slow motion through the jungle to ironically it's always an anti-war protest song. A rock song. You know this kind of thing played by some band like Creedence Clearwater Revival.

Alan: Yeah, that's right.

Thomas: Or a Marvin Gay song. So you have this association of the anti-war kind of rock anthem being used as a promotional film to glamorize war when you have Charlie Sheen and people like that walking in slow motion through the jungle while you know they are playing something by Jefferson Airplane. You have the dichotomy of the two together that causes a kind of psychic association in people, where people who are into that music now believe that it's somehow cool because you are in the army marching to a song that's against war. It's total Frankfurt School stuff.

Alan: They've actually put out documentaries, yeah they put documentaries out now and I think they even use them in recruitments but it's from actual footage of guys inside the armored military vehicles that are really racing across the dessert and it's got this heavy metal music in the background wah-wah-wah-wah-wah. And they are all tough and you know and this is... Yeah you create what you want. It's so easy if you have the power and influence in society to create the kind of special areas like troops or whatever that you actually want. And you also have a culture within the country that will emulate that too. You see that with the rap music. You had years of the promotion by the way. Blacks didn't promote this stuff from the top. If the culture industry did not want that stuff to get pushed out there you never would have heard of it. But they pushed it from the very, very top. The whole culture industry did at the very top and then you end up with, "kill cops","kill cops", all this stuff and then you start getting this happening and you see where it is today. This is all to get the dissention, the tension built up inside the U.S. therefore they want a time when there will be definite riots combined with economic problems too, etcetera, to bring in again the next part of the new society. There is no doubt about that at all in my mind.

Thomas: One day when they stood up the African American family in the United States, they brought out songs like "Papa was a Rolling Stone"to entrench the idea that daddy will never be home. And so they grew up with this culture of listening to this song, "Papa was a rolling stone", you know that kind of thing, "...where he laid his hat was his home". And so you grow up believing that like if you are an African American in Detroit or New York or New Jersey or whatever, you actually grow up believing well daddy's not home because I'm aware of a song called, "Papa was a Rolling Stone". And then they try to make it; oh it's a statement of the times. No it's not, it is predictive programming.

Alan: Yes it is. Yep, that's cool and why get a job and try to get some self-respect, never mind other people's respect, get self-respect in a way that's not going to harm you or other people and actually benefit you and give you a bit of peace as well. Rather than get self-respect inside a kind of gang just because you are the coolest dude and baddest dude there is. But that's what's been promoted for years now and that was all deliberately. Because it wasn't white men that promoted the rap believe you me. It's not blacks that control the culture industry. But it was the white men that pushed all this, and I say white, and there are more things involved in that too that tend to lead the culture industry as well within it.

Thomas: Yeah there are {inaudible}.

Neil: In terms of like black music in general I mean if you go back to the old image of the black congregations in the churches I mean was that like a purely good thing? Was that a genuine kind of thing that went on and that had to be co-opted because it was actually the foundation of whole communities?

Alan: You are dead on.

Neil: I mean we have gone from there to gangster rap. I mean gangster rap has got to be the most promiscuous and disgusting thing.

Alan: You are dead on. Here's what they came out with, they came out with this in the 60's again from the communist party in the U.S.A., and in their own writings if you go back you will find all this stuff. And they talked about, they couldn't get the blacks to revolt because of this, how they held on strongly to this what was to them traditional Christianity and gospel music and so on. That was what was holding them back. They couldn't get them to completely revolt so they simply tried to eliminate all of that and get the young women. You see it's mainly their moms and so on who always kept that tradition of Christianity and here's how it should be, right and wrong, and so on. And so they had to get the young women to be ultra, ultra promiscuous as well. That's why you had the MTV and all that promoting, the dancers that were pretty well humping each other on stage you know in front of the camera. That's really what it was all simulating. Then get the young women into it too, bring in an atheistic culture, and then you control them completely. That's been awfully successful.

Thomas: Well what they called those gospels, they used to call them Negro spirituals. That was basically the whole song, body of songs by the likes of Pete Seeger and Peter, Paul and Mary. All they did was take those old southern church songs and put them on a real namby-pamby acoustic guitar version and suddenly in one fell swoop the whole tradition of indigenous and natural and organic Black American gospel music, bang it's gone

Alan: That's right. That's right.

Neil: Can we say the same thing about the traditional black blues musicians who were actually singing about kind of their own lives as such?

Thomas: Oh yeah it was that piss take that they made of the Beatles, the Rutles, that Eric Idol made, that "All You Need is Cash". There is a very funny but very telling scene in it. It goes, here I am in Louisiana, the home of the blues, music written by black people played almost exclusively by whites. And that was really you know it was a satirical funny way of looking at it. Absolutely all these things like Irish and Scottish and English folk music, the spirituals in America or the blues, they were all rooted in real organic musical traditions that bonded communities together that spoke of people's pain. That spoke of people's... their desires in life to transcend the situation they were in. And every single last one of them, you know you look at like Irish folk music it's ended up with Michael Flatley on a stage with about a hundred you know girls in short skirts dancing around him. You have the spiritual stuff is all, rappers now have that.

Well they are rapping about what they are going to do with the hoe and stuff like that. You have like these spirituals singing gospel in the background.

And the folk music well that was destroyed years ago. I mean even bands like the Pogues, I mean I never got the appeal of them. They just took Irish folk music and just basically played it directly as it is and added this sort of drunken element to it. To always keep this idea of the Irish man as being this hapless drunk. You know this stupid drunk. And if you look at them they were all people like Shane MacGowan. You know the leader of the Pogues was an English public schoolboy. And here he was playing the professional drunken paddy on stage.

Alan: Yeah you have to remember too that even during the 70's they were bringing guys in from wealthy families, very wealthy families, Oxford and Cambridge and so on who decided because their dads were so powerful and rich and well connected, they wanted to be rock stars. And they were teaching them how to speak in cockney, with a cockney accent, the London accent, to try to get the image. And in that they were successful with quite a few of them actually who went national with the money behind them and acting lessons and so on. Plus if you mime pretty good and get other people to sing for you and even play for you and that's happened by the way too. I've played in stuff where none of the guys in the band actually played at all but they went through all the video disks and appeared here and there and played to tape. But everything is, what you see on television is a show. It's show business. It is show business, it's not real. Even exposés on something is not real either, including how bad the band is or how drunk they got last night, or dived out of the second floor into the swimming pool. That is all staged stuff. They use stunt men, things like that and written in advance. I mean you wouldn't believe how it's all show business. All of it, yeah.

Thomas: The cockney accent thing is interesting because I've seen videos of Jimmy Page from Led Zeppelin and Mick Jagger from the Stones when they were about in secondary school and they sounded like Prince William. A few years later, "oh we were down in the east end and we were giving it up large", this is kind of like a mock-me thing going on.

Alan: That's right.

Thomas: And again there are so many examples that even the classical violinist Nigel Kennedy, who they made kind of a pop star out of back in the 80's and 90's. I've seen he does the same thing, "I'm Nigel Kennedy. I played a violin.", you know this kind of thing. There are also interviews of him when he was a kid and again he sounds like Prince Harry or Prince William.

Alan: Yeah. That's right. And I've met the Stones because they were in the same recording studio as I was at one point up in Scotland actually. David Balfe ran it and he had hits himself. I mean he came from a long lineage of cultural experts believe you me in this industry. And he had about three or four different names. And that's the first thing you learn is to use different names. But they were going in at the time and I had a chat with him and you are certainly right on how they actually speak in reality. And it's the same with most other ones as well. And I've met Jimmy Page too in his house when he got it up in Scotland. He had a big party there for different people and we all went and that was Aleister Crowley's old house in fact.

Thomas: Boleskine Manor, yeah.

Neil: I remember you mentioning Alan that you were invited to, was it a women's event like a women's lib event or something? And they approached you to do certain songs in certain ways or something.

Alan: No, it was actually just... I thought it was just a club in Toronto and I just popped in, I didn't know what it was, I thought I'd go and get a beer actually. And there were some guys singing up on the stage and so on. It was a small club, maybe a couple of hundred people, and I thought it was just a local thing. And someone said to me can you play? I said a little bit, I always say a little bit. And they said can you give us a song? So I went up there and sung some songs and so on and this women approached me and said can you sing something radical? I said what do you mean radical? What kind of radical song? And what would you say is radical? How do you define it? And it was all anti-establishment stuff. And the place was called, TheTrojan Horse. Now they had different Trojan Horses, interesting name too, all set up by the Canadian government and funded by the Canadian government for counterculture. And the people who were set up to help run it had to try and pick people to turn up at different rallies and things and do really radical anti-establishment songs paid by your government for goodness sake. And I was rather astonished at that. And when I was there I turned up a second night about a week later and there was a woman from the federal government who worked for the federal government, came in, they all knew her, she was lesbian by the way because she hugged every female there in a strange way and one of them told me that she was. And I thought what the hell is this? And the Canadian taxpayer was funding all of this. And all across Canada these kinds of clubs. Britain had the same in some areas too by the way.

I had to find out when I was really young why every government since World War II, the Soviets, France, Britain, Germany, all of the countries, the U.S., Canada, Australia, why we all had a Department of Culture. If you the people are the culture why would you need a Department of Culture? Well this was for culture guidance and creation. And they give out the grants to novelists, to film producers, film writers and musicians, songwriters. They put out the grants for guys often who couldn't get a job anywhere else because they've got a chip on their shoulder or something. But they will put them out there as long as they put these things in their novel, these topics to upgrade, update, just like a computer program the new morality of the public and put it in even cartoons.

You've got your U.S. state ones and Canadian providence provincial ones; they give the grants out too. They call them to artist grants, and so do the federal governments as well. They all do this so all of culture is actually guided, if it's to be successful that is, because you can only be allowed to be successful.

Neil: Yeah I know there's a club in London that does all this kind of thing.

Thomas: Yeah it's all been taken care of.

Neil: There is a club in London; I was going to come back to you Thomas on this one. I know there's a club in London that runs these kinds of events that have musicians or comedians or whatever, and it is run by the likes of Charlie Skelton and these kind of people who are supposedly at Bilderberg protesting you know all run to the Guardian Newspaper. But are there any such venues in Dublin or Ireland in general Thomas?

Thomas: Well it's the same as anywhere else. There is even a Rock-n-Roll high school here where kids are, the government gets, it's like a Julliard kind of thing that they you know they put them into and they teach them what they expect of them in the music business. And like nobody, nobody comes out of it famous or interesting. It's the same idea again. They are programmed to be Rock-n-Rollers as long as they are doing what the teachers, who are all like professors and very few of them have musical backgrounds, are telling them to do. It goes on everywhere. I'm aware of nothing in the music industry; it is dead now really compared to what it used to be when I was a kid. It was much more organic and natural here years ago but nowadays it's just as horrible and commercial as everywhere else. And again it's the same thing. One constant I've mentioned in the beginning there about a constant that I've encountered in this is that it's always well to do people from old families, old money families, aristocrats. And it always seems to come back to protecting them through this weird kind of dissociative idea of bringing in Marxism and so on. And yeah, it's been like that. The people who run the music business here they are all rich. They are all people with money. I've seen it all my life and that will never change. I mean even the people again; you've got a much better chance of making it in the music business if your parents are billionaires. Like Carly Simon, she came from the Simon & Schuster Publishing Family. And there is so much of this that goes on. Just like Jim Morrison because these people come from the families and it's already known what's expected of them when they get into power so they don't have to be trained. I often found it very interesting how even in the 60's in England when you had all these bands forced to make it and everyone from these small places, like the Kinks, how they all bought stately homes of the aristocrats in the countryside. Basically what they were doing was plowing that money back into the aristocrats so if they were someone from the working class, from the east end of London, say someone like Steve Marriott from the Small Faces. It was almost like they were expected to purchase with their millions a home, a stately home, a mansion in the countryside, from some lord or lady so immediately you have a transference of cash from the elite into a working class person but then they were expected to transfer that money back into the elite again. It always goes back to this kind of like aristocratic culture, sub-culture, pulling all the strings.

Neil: Alan?

Alan: Yeah, that's pretty well how it is. You'll find though that in the early 1900's, that's when the big push was on from within the U.S. to destroy all culture. It was quite open in New York. In fact you can go in and get hundreds of books published by the U.S. communist party based in New York City. They published all the books, they republished all the Lenin books and so on, Stalin and various others, right to the very end and got away with it too. No one came down on them and said you can't do this or it's going a bit too far. Supposedly advocating revolution to destroy your entire culture and way of life. That's what it was about. To destroy your culture and way of life. All culture and everything to do with culture had to be destroyed and then remade in a new image.

And so they came out with the Nuevo Art at the time, the early art which was like the Picasso stuff, you know the schizophrenic faces that were torn in half and things, an eyeball at the top and one on the chin. And they called this art. And here's a technique that they used, they already had the clique at the top of cultural leaders who owned the art industry, and once again some guy who is called an expert says oh this is a fantastic creative work of art, worth millions, you see. And it's a piece of rubbish; the king has no clothes idea. But because it's someone so wealthy and talks in his very posh accent and all that then he must be quite right. So you look at this thing upside down, you stand on your head and you try to look at it too, and you say well I guess so. "Well you're just not seeing what he's trying to portray there." and nonsense like that. Well the Guggenheim family started to buy all this stuff up to make it popular. A big, big part of the U.S. culture. And today they still fund it all too buying this rubbish and promoting this as the greatest art ever made. Everything that was dissociative, disjointed of culture, morality, even sanity itself was pushed out there as the best that we have.

All of the old paintings that gave you a nostalgic emotional feeling, or something of beauty had to be destroyed and that went along with movies now too, you see how debase they all are. You wouldn't want to live in some of these movies, the places they show you, because they are so debase and they curse and swear and it's just the F-word every second sentence, and but that's what they have been pushing, pushing. And then the music thing too, they take you right down to rap. And at the very end when you take it all down you wrap it up and that's why they called it rap.

Neil: Thomas? We've already actually gone 20 minutes over what we were supposed to do so I don't know if you guys want to carry on a bit more. I suppose the obvious question is, what's coming next? I mean where do you see the music going now, Thomas?

Thomas: Well I think the music industry is basically dead in terms of actual, anyone from the bottom trying to make a living from it, because the record companies don't put money into bands anymore. You know they deliberately create a free download thing in order to sort of take the economic power out of up and coming bands giving them an impetus to try and make it. And the only money that's in the music industry now is in the acts that are picked. It's true in the shows like American Idol and all the other rubbish and they are put out there. They are the only ones given the promotional budgets. The days of the singer who actually, or the band who kind of from the bottom got a record deal or whatever, as bad as that system was there was still a chance to actually progress somehow. That stuff doesn't exist anymore, that whole economic aspect has been taken out. The future as far as I can see is that the music has become appalling. It's unlistenable now and I know it's not my age because I've always been listening to all kinds of experimental music all my life and I'm not like close minded or locked into the one kind of sound. I'm very open-minded musically. The music that you hear on the radio these days is just bizarre. It's just repetitive sounds and tones repeated over and over again. There is often no melody or harmony. There is no hook. It purely, it sounds schizophrenic in fact it's almost like designed to create, to make people schizophrenic.

So in terms of the music industry, it's gone. It's always been a disaster but it's finished now. There will always be people who will want to create from their heart or from their soul, we'll never hear from them, they'll always do it. Hopefully that alone may continue with instruments and so on but in terms of actually a great future for some kind of big music scene or the day when true talent is allowed to shine that's never going to happen because it's more controlled than ever. They didn't have to license music as Plato wanted, all they had to do was take complete and total control over what the musical output was and filter everything. And they've been doing that for so long now that I can't see... What's next, what's next is more drivel, more trash. And hopefully as a counter-insurgency to that more young people will say it's clearly garbage, it's clearly controlled, my friends and I are going to make our own music, sing our own songs and follow our own path. So there is good and bad but in terms of the music industry I think imagine the worst. You know they are always going to push for the worst. We are on, you know as this civilization continues to deteriorate we will go the way of Rome. When Rome first began the coliseum used to host basically boxing matches and poetry recitals and plays. Towards the end they were having you know people with Downs Syndrome being torn apart by wild animals. Well I can guarantee you that's eventually where the musical industry will take it. That will be the end game. They will, it's been done before, it will go increasingly shocking and increasingly shocking to what we will look back to the days of hardcore gangster rap and we will think it's innocent and wholesome compared to what's coming down the line.

Neil: Alan?

Alan: And it's also the end product of a war. It's a war, it's an agenda. And the war was on all of society not just in one country but across an awful lot of societies. When they brought out again the Picasso type nonsense it was, the movement was to make apathy, nihilism, the yuck feeling of nothingness left in you when you looked at this rubbish. There is nothing of beauty to look at, etcetera. So the beauty that makes you human and all the emotions that go with it that also add to the culture, that gave you your culture in the past, has been pretty well annihilated until you had this lost sound and young lost voices almost whaling again narcissistically. It's not for us or we or we all share this or whatever in common, it is to do with bringing in a narcissistic I am me, exactly what Bertrand Russell and others talked about, they would bring in. They have done it awfully successfully. You are not really connected with other people right down with again, with the internet war, the texting. They would rather text each other at the table rather than talk to each other. It's all worked superbly well you know. And whatever they want in culture is promoted from the top as being you've got to do this if you want to be in the in crowd. If you don't do this you are not in the in crowd. So if you sit and still talk across the table at a restaurant or whatever you are square, you are odd, you're a weirdo. If you text each other then you're in the in crowd. It's been awfully successful unfortunately this whole war. And unfortunately when you have lost so much and folk cannot relate to anything that made you strong in the past, that gave every generation a vision of hope and prosperity or whatever it happened to be, then you are in a state of apathy like the Sci-Fi movies they started churning out about the future back in the 70's, 80's, and 90's. You are living amongst the rubble of a depressed economy, everything's gone, you are living in rubble. You have this private global army that's bashing you in the head all the time or killing you because they are the winners. You know they can always hire the hoods to be in the military in such a system. That's what they have been projecting for years and really that's what they want I think. When you look at the big think tank for NATO that did the report, and I put it up on my website at .com in the archives section. It is 90 pages; they came out with it for the NATO countries and the British Military. This is the big think tank that projects the future, what's coming down. They are going to turn the world eventually into city-states, no more countries. And these will be privately owned city states by a very rich elite run by, on behalf of the elite, you have the scientific, the expert run community society. And in the meantime you'll have what Huxley talked about in "Brave New World". You'll have the kind of barbarians living outside the gates living in the rubble of what used to be rural areas and all the rest of it but they will die off over the years until they are all gone. That's what they also portrayed in so many movies that also coincided with a kind of debased, degenerative, nihilistic music they have been throwing out there for years.

It all comes together at this time and they want the new financial system to be brought in eventually through another big crash, which is all organized of course by one group of banks that run the world. The World Bank set up by the private organization, the Royal Institute of International Affairs. They set up the IMF, they own that too. They own the world's money supply basically and the lending supply.

So they are going to bring in a new system, very degenerate because the future is for a much smaller population of those they deem fit to go through it, not all those who presently exist and have the right by being born here to have the same rights as everybody else. They don't believe in that at all. They are very eugenically oriented. And if you look at the real Trotskyist, Marxist type, they keep calling themselves now, it's the same eugenics elitist movement as the wealthy financial elite already had. It's one and the same thing. There are no sides in this. There is only one monopoly for the world monopoly.

Neil: Yeah. Well I mean I have heard quite a few lyrics over the past, well the past decade I suppose, talking about too many people and you know all this kind of stuff. I think of it like a new model army, they talk about this stuff, people starving because there are too many of them and all this garbage you know. And Thomas, the final word to yourself.

Thomas: I kind of really think I don't have much more to say. I think we covered it comprehensively. I'm just glad that, you know for me the biggest dilemma is I'm a music fan and I love music. But I also, I never, I don't buy into the pop star, rock star thing. If I hear a piece of music and I like it, I will like it. If I hear a band that I don't really care about I do not, I have always never... I've been fortunate that I have never been really influenced by the lyrics. To me it was just a nice guitar sound or a nice drum sound. That was enough for me. So I think for those of us, we should you know enjoy music if it makes you feel good. Enjoy it if you like the sound but always remember that you don't have to buy into the whole package. You can just take what you hear, what you like, and discard the rest because the rest is probably... What the good music is, is a lure and a bait to get you into the control system. And that's what they are after. Don't take the lure, don't take the bait, just enjoy it for what it is and detach. And that to me is what I would say is the best way to deal with that.

Neil: I know you are still playing Thomas. And Alan, I heard you say at Christmas that you haven't picked up a guitar for a year, so I hope you do this year sometime and we'll get a tune out of you at Christmas.

Alan: Yeah.

Thomas: Yes.

Neil: Okay.

Alan: Okay.

Neil: Okay folks. Thanks so much guys and hopefully we'll do this again sometime on a completely different topic. We'll leave it at that.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on February 1, 2015. On the night of September 11, 2001, I said on the radio that the hardest thing from now on that would happen to you, would be to hold onto your sanity as we go through massive changes. Because the changes were planned and published, often, long before the event, the changes that would follow to supposedly cope with the events and the damage control, etc. But long ago they were talking about doing all the things, of biometric scanning, the total communications over everybody's communications and copying them all, etc., and watching every single person, long before 9/11 came along. Because with every advance in technology, in fact, even the introduction of particular technologies, it's vastly changes the behavior and the way of thinking of society.

If you think about the changeover from the horse and cart to the steam engine for instance, the steam engine allowed massive freight to be carried into very remote areas, where existing villages were overwhelmed with the sudden influx of people, etc., etc, and they can also start other businesses and export stuff by train out of the area, mining stuff and so on. Other villages cropped up alongside the rail road tracks and that's all people thought about at the time was prosperity, what was opening up. And your behavior would adapt to the circumstances from an agricultural/agrarian society into a manufacturing society and so on. And those at the top with the big money and investments planned it that way with factory towns, etc. Not the cowboy era, believe you me, it was mainly factory towns that sprung up all over the place. Then you have the introduction of the automobile and the expansion of roads and the building of the roads across areas that had not existed before, except perhaps the occasional trail here and there for a cart.

With it all too comes governmental departments and bureaucracies to maintain these things through taxation and so on. So your behavior always changes and you adapt to the changes, and eventually it's normal to you. That's why some generations look back on the previous generations and see them as old-fashioned and quaint, they can really fathom how they lived. Somehow they also think they must have been awfully unhappy, stuck in rural areas and they couldn't travel very far and so on. Nothing is further from the truth. In fact, the more isolated they were often and the slower news would take even reach them, the happier they were, they couldn't get so brainwashed by a big commercialized media.

So today you have the Internet, and you've had television for years that drastically, drastically altered behavior, because all governments used it as a tool to modify behaviors, to drum up patriotism when they have future wars on the table ready to go, things like that, and then during wars they would churn out the movies, paid by your tax money often, about the military might and how it was great fun and all the rest of it fighting the bad guys. So all technology is used. It has its own particular effect on society. But it's also used by those who know how to rule over the minds of people, from the top. And we live in a very Machiavellian time, more efficient that Machiavelli could have ever dreamed upon in his age, where again, it was town crier's that went around villages with propaganda and decrees from the top, they even use the churches too to put out what they claimed was news at the time, of impending invasions and of wars and why they had to go off and fight, etc. etc.

So everything is used by existing powers, and the existing powers expand their powers and grow massively during times of conflict and change, etc. During the 50s in the 60s government was all gung ho for science to take over, to rule society in the sense, to rule society and guide society with all these miracles that would be introduced into the general population. Microwave ovens and the television, eventually color television and so on, and the space programs, then all the science fiction movies which were flooded out the public to make some think it was, oh we're going to end up in space one day, every child thought he would end up in space going out for adventures and so on. And of course nothing of the kind materialized, and it wasn't intended to either.

So fiction is heavily used by manipulators of the future. Always. Always, because we've got to remember that mythology itself is a very, very powerful tool, when it can be brought up from the darkest depth of ancient times, and back to the present, completely altered in fact. In fact, when we talk about this today in the movies they turn out using all mythological characters, the people who were alive in the day when these myths originated would not understand you at all because it would be nothing like the actual core gossip or beliefs or myths that were getting created at the time.

So we live in constant changing times and every possible thing that's worked on people in the past, and various religions too, are used over and over again. You can create religion, which is just a common belief system, pushed from the top again, in any direction you want. You can have an atheistic/atheized religion like a communist religion, the future utopia, a heaven is going to be brought on earth by everyone being monitored and training themselves, self-monitoring, very puritanical in the sense, so make sure you had no counter revolutionary thoughts and you would all work for the greater good of the state. That was a religion, the Marxian religion. So never, ever discount other people's belief systems, and never go by the mainstream media because unfortunately they are a tool of the power structure that rules the world.

You'll be amazed at the amount of wars, for instance, that Britain during its Empire days got involved in, one after the other, in far-flung places, which they really did not understand at all. They didn't understand the peoples, they didn't understand the history of the peoples that they were going to dominate. They didn't understand the way of life of the village, to the city, or whatever, in places like India, and even Afghanistan, and across Africa either. Their answer to it always was just throwing missionaries, try to, what they called, civilize, or tame them. If that didn't work they'd bring in the troops. So all techniques were used including threat of power and use of force, and then actual massive use of force to try and make it work. Trying to make square pegs fit into round holes, that's the sadness of the so-called experts' plans, they always end up with incredible consequences, and long-lasting consequences, and catastrophes.

But it's not just at home. When you get involved in war, and I've said this many times over the years, you will become in many respects what you're told your enemy is. You will become as vicious, you'll use the same techniques, which means that your moral, your initial moral authority that you had been told that you have, because you're always the good guys, when you invade somebody, that will dissipate as well until you become barbaric. In fact, you become more barbaric than your supposed enemy you're fighting. And that comes home with the troops. It also infects the culture back home through all the propaganda too, when the fallout starts to begin and they become hard and bitter and more brutal towards each other at home as well. And governments themselves grab more and more and more power to try to contain this mess that they've made, that has ripple effect across the board, not just the countries that they are in to get their oil or to get their goods, or their jewels, or their diamonds, or their gold or whatever, for their big businesses at home, the big corporate businesses, and a few private families. But it infects you back home and you have incredible fallout from it all. It really is incredible fallout.

In a system that pretends to be Democratic, and I really mean pretends, they always have these kind of problems because in the so-called democracy you have a kind of laissez-faire capitalism to an extent where they will invest in anywhere, including slave nations, if the profits are good. And then if they abolish slavery they simply give them a pitiful wage. And often they will move these people, these workers across into islands, that still goes on today, and the workers put themselves down as paying off their transport to get to this island they're going to work in, and mine or whatever it is, and of course they never pay it off. They can't pay it off so they're stuck there most of their lives digging in these rotten mines. So slavery does exist today in many forms, in one form or another.

Unfortunately the world is run by gangs. We are taught, for instance, that the countries across, say, the Middle East and Asia are primitive. And they are not primitive. They are very ancient, and have survived awfully well under the circumstances and climate, etc., and conditions. We are always taught that we are the moral authority, and troops are given the most basic indoctrination possible, so that they don't think too deeply about what they are being sent to do. They don't know the history of the peoples, the cultures of the people. They're taught to go in there and bring democracy, democracy. This thing called democracy. It's a foreign concept to people abroad, never mind increasingly to the people at home.

But as I say, in democracy how can you have big business literally running the financial system of the country that you live in, and in other countries too, and creating their own world Empire by their own means, and governments going cap-in-hand to borrow from them all the time, which gives power to the lender, always, always to the lender, and terms to the lender? And terms are not just paying it back with massive compound interest, it's also suggestions on how governments should handle their affairs, including the political affairs at home and abroad. And there you have private groups, or clubs you might say, a very powerfully wealthy people, and they have such pull and organizational abilities. They have massive bureaucracies in the corporations, and think tanks, often bigger than governments, and so much at their disposal to work their future plans in, and how to even use governments, and whole nations, for their own private businesses, including the troops and so on as well. It's a sad, sad state of affairs.

And this loose term of democracy is always elastic because it expands and contracts all the time, and gets stretched in all different directions, according to the needs of those who already rule, or any of the new groups who rule. Like the bankers when they were given total power of deregulation back in the 80s under Reagan and Thatcher at the same time, then of course when you end up with the crashes in 2007 and 2008. Then you find you have just as many gangs and criminals working inside the big massive banking system as the gang lords that they'd installed over in Afghanistan and places like this, that your own governments installed by the military. And you don't understand the people at all in the countries that you're over there fighting in. So you have a loose term called democracy. And when the bank crashes came the governments didn't know what to do about it. Rather than arrest them all, which meant the whole collapse, total collapse of the banking industry, and the economy, and your governments, they just simply threw money at them. And you have to accept that you're ruled, economically, by big powerful interrelated gangs. That doesn't give you much confidence for the future, does it? But meanwhile, so all the old myths, that why you existed as a nation, etc., the myths and the symbols have fallen flat, it doesn't work the same way anymore. It doesn't work the same way.

After World War I, for instance, it was so many millions of guys that were getting thrown over the trenches, every single day, 64,000 died in a day, more the next day and so on. Throw in another battalion, throw in another battalion, that was the mentality of the officer corps at the time, who ruled the show at the top in the HQ's. Like a scorecard, how many did we lose today? Oh, 100,000 or 200,000, you know, throw in another one. And out of that mythology that they created, they had to create it to keep it going, and win, try to win this war, the financial powers of the West had to invent these new mythologies and say, well it's for a future utopia, it's to bring in a more equitable world and more equality back home… Because we were measuring in the West from the feudalistic system, where this term democracy had never been applied to everybody at all, the majority the folk had no vote if they didn't own property and so on.

So you think you win a little bit here and win a little bit there, but the big boys already had it planned when most folk got the vote, or all got to vote, they would simply create, through their big clubs of course, like the Royal Institute of International Affairs/Council on Foreign Relations, private institutions that would then work with the governments to unite the banking systems across the world, the economies, but still own it privately. And the public wouldn't elect these different organizations, they simply put themselves in place and worked with the powerful elite, because they were the powerful elite, they were members of it already.

But I always think it's so ironic that, for instance, the US funded the initial setup of the guys who would become Al Qaeda to fight the Russians when they went into Afghanistan. Then when the US went back into Afghanistan later to fight the Afghanis, they then funded different factions, warlords in other words, and they'd overthrow what they thought were the worst warlords by replacing them with other warlords, who'd behave in the same natural historical way of warlords all down through time, in Afghanistan. And they didn't understand it at all, what they were doing. They didn't understand it at all. As I say, so they've just fed the fire which should never have been started in the first place, and kept feeding it and feeding it until now it's out of control across all of these countries. All starting with Western interference long ago, and again, the domination of who's going to own the oil of the world.

This term interdependence is quite fascinating. You see, under the big corporate big business structure that we live under they look to the future all the time. That's why they employ all these futurist think tanks to try and see what's coming up down the road. And to keep power in their hands, just like the government would do, big private corporations, private corporations make their big plans, geopolitical plans way in advance so that they will never lose power. And because they were importing so much oil for such a long, long time from the Saudi's and different countries, they wanted the monopoly of it for themselves. It was a nuisance to have the people inside those countries owning the oilfields. It was an awful nuisance, when they could have it all to themselves in the West. And through many different techniques and trial and error they've tried to do this very, very thing. As I say, since the 1980s, since the banks deregulated, the gangs inside the banks have planned all of these wars, and use the governments, and the troops, to try and grab all the oil for themselves as well. It's a sad state of affairs. So when you're interdependent, whether you like it or not, if we live in a world where you didn't need oil, as I say, every invention has its consequences, everything is going to be promoted as an invention into the general public, into society, into transportation and so on, has got massive consequences. And if it's run on oil and gasoline, petroleum derived from oil, then anything that happens across the waters which produces that oil can fluctuate and have devastating consequences back home.

So therefore, we live in a very unstable society. Governments have abdicated more and more power, long ago actually, to the big banking system, and the banking systems themselves, as I say, often have such big bureaucracies they are equal to some governments across the world, and bigger budgets too, some of them. Yet we still push this term called democracy. Even though with democracy when it was initially thrashed out in the public, and in Parliament in Britain, they came out with the idea eventually and said, well democracy can only end up having special interest groups, heavily funded by interested parties, which they now call stakeholders. So, private parties, groups, of very powerful people, fund so many of the NGOs, for instance, that demand climate change taxes, and taxes for everything and so on. This is part of the agenda for the global controllers who want total domination, not just over the Middle East and everywhere, but over the whole planet, folks, the whole planet. Not just over groups of people, but the minds of each individual across the world down the road. Actually, it's already here. Everything you think, everything you utter, every little comment or quip has to be recorded, if possible, as you are monitored from birth to death to make it safe for the Masters of the world to go on into the future with their own offspring who will inherit the power and be exempt from all this monitoring and so on.

The chaos that ensues, they say, like Rockefeller said, you can't make an omelet without breaking eggs. That's what we're going through today as they're smashing up the eggs, and a lot of mess, a lot of eggshells in amongst the omelet. And this is all accepted at the top, as we go into more intrusion into our private lives. And this is only the start of it, I'll touch on this tonight in fact, because everything has consequences, as I said. Never read the superficial lines in the news and just take it at face value and say, well they'll still be nice about things. Because you see, that's not how humanity works.

Now, here's an article that has exactly to do with what I'm talking about, to do with the consequences of things. And the consequences of what happens in one country, if they are all on board with the agendas, will be the same as another. You simply have to look at Britain to see the incredible police state that's formed in Britain. At the same time, they're still living, everyone's coming in from all the countries that are supposedly radical, supposedly radical, and using that as an excuse to watch everyone inside Britain, and they expand its powers once it's on the books. Well in Canada, here's an article about the recent debate, it was actually all drafted up long ago I'm sure, the next step of anti-terrorist legislation for Canada. I'm sure it was all done. They do it in phases, you see, so you accept one phase, well you get used to it and go back to eating the grass, you know, like cattle in the field, and then they bring in the next phase, and the next phase. It's all planned that way, because they understand how the general population tick.

B.C. citizens should be wary of new anti-terrorism laws, officials say theprovince.com / Nick Eagland / January 28, 2015

BC (Alan: British Columbia, this is the west coast of Canada.) Civil Liberties Association Policy Director Micheal Vonn, July 11th, with files of cases in the association's Vancouver office. (A: And that was when they first came out with some of this stuff.)

The federal government is expected to introduce new anti-terrorism legislation Friday (A: This was last Friday.), but experts say British Columbians should be wary of how it could affect their freedoms. (A: …well naturally.This is like a carbon copy, probably just taken off of the British paper that they put out years ago.)

The bill is expected to include provisions making it easier for police to arrest suspected radicals, a retooling of Canada's no-fly list, reduced privacy limits on passport application information and a crackdown (A: This is interesting…) on communication aimed at radicalization, according to recent comments made by Prime Minister Stephen Harper and media reports.

Micheal Vonn, policy director for the B.C. Civil Liberties Association, said while details of the bill aren't yet clear (A: …and that's what they do with these massive omnibus bills that are thousands of pages, and deliberately made that way.), she's concerned about how the introduction of "more extraordinary powers" to police and national security without "appropriate accountability and transparency" could hurt British Columbians.

"We're looking at provisions that will undoubtedly violate the rights of Canadians and not make us one bit demonstrably safer," Vonn said.

Now, that's just one little article, it goes on and on but they get the feedback from the BCC Muslim Association. But who's talking to the average person here? Why do you have to belong to any group to say, this isn't right, this isn't right? I mean, it really is ridiculous, you know. And then out comes this one.

Canada's anti-terror bill needs to balance religious expression and inciting terror, Kenney says
thestar.com / / Jan 28 2015

OTTAWA—There's a fine line between legitimate religious expression and inciting terrorism, says Conservative cabinet minister Jason Kenney. (A: Well, that's what he's paid to say.)

It's that line the government will be walking — carefully — in its new anti-terrorism bill, expected to be unveiled Friday.

The bill is the government's much-awaited legislative response to two attacks carried out on Canadian soldiers last fall by men believed to have been influenced by radical Islam — attacks the government considers acts of terrorism.

Though police already have the power to go after those suspecting of being on the verge of committing terrorist attacks, the new bill is partially aimed at stopping the seeds of those attacks from germinating altogether.

"Our objective is not to diminish legitimate expression of political or religious views, but rather incitement to terrorism — and there is a fine line there that the legislation will try to draw," Kenney said in an interview Tuesday.

"Obviously there are some malevolent religious influences that can add to the process of radicalization towards violent extremism, and we have to be extremely mindful of that."

How to effectively combat radicalization is a struggle facing governments and security agencies the world over.

The RCMP is currently rolling out its own strategy, which includes working more closely with community groups in order to identify and divert people who may be susceptible to extreme views that could eventually lead to violence.

(A: Well, they've used that in Britain now for years, so they're just copying what has been done, you see. This is the sad thing, when something goes awry and people panic, near the top, they tend to look at what's been done already elsewhere. And if it hasn't worked elsewhere it doesn't matter, they have to grab it and try and use it. And it won't work anywhere else either. And too, what it is aimed at then becomes almost watered-down, because it's expanded to include anyone with an opinion contrary to any government policy or specific government policies on anything. If they don't like you, in other words, they can go after you. That's humanity. Humans are not anything but, anything but some perfect species, believe you me.)

But the police need broader powers to deal with those doing the radicalizing, suggested Conservative MP Tim Uppal, who is also the minister of state for multiculturalism.

“If the police are doing their investigation and they come across people who are trying to radicalize others, before any type of violence . . . I think that’s somewhere where we do need some action,” Uppal told The Canadian Press recently.

The other problem facing legislators is how to handle radicalization online, which many acknowledge is the primary source of information for young men and women who later end up joining violent causes.

“We need to be able to follow up on and see how we can ensure that we are able to either stop those messages that people are getting, or at least be able to follow up on it in some way,” Uppal said.

But Liberal public safety critic Wayne Easter said he wonders why existing anti-terror laws of various kinds haven’t been put to full use.

Now, here's the reason why you haven't 'been put to full use'. When legislation is introduced it has to be pushed from the top to radicalize the police forces and all the other agencies, that are overseers you might say, of society. Because there's no doubt it radicalize them, there's no doubt whatsoever. And they introduced things piece by piece of it for years until you accept, and accept, little bits and little bit, and then they push for the big one. Because this is going to change all relationships between the public, believe you me, and police and so on who will become ultra-paranoid. It will also… Unfortunately it's going to go the way of the US with these massive internal armies and agencies, with all their SWAT teams and everything else, who just storm in and, anything that will be left alive at the end of it, they'll ask questions later. This is the way the cowboy mentality that gets pushed. Really, there's so many Canadians who really hope that it's not going to happen the same way here, and I hope it doesn't. Because if I saw the signs of that happening I would just move immediately to some other place, and anywhere at all. Because then, once that starts it's never going to stop, you understand, for your whole life long. And do you want to live in a police state your whole life? Do you want to live in a society where every little comments you've made is going to be misconstrued, by someone who has got it in for you? Or an agency, which again, just like the ticket police, has to fulfill its quotas? And that's what happens too, you know, the drug enforcement agencies do this in the States as well, they've got quotas to meet and so on and it doesn't matter if the guy is innocent or guilty, if he's left alive, you know, he'll be charged for something and put on the books and so on.

We don't want that in the rest of the world. We don't want this at all. But unfortunately the Masters who are in cahoots with each other across the world, I think they actually do. I think they actually do. Because they themselves at the very, very top never had any belief whatsoever that democracy would ever work. And there's lots of University papers and books that have been put out over many, many years on that very, very fact. The Club of Rome said the same thing in The First Global Revolution, one of the books they put out. They said that democracy would never work, there's too many conflicting parties, conflicting groups, all demanding their own particular rights, that nothing would ever get done. And at the top when you're run by big massive commerce, that runs everything, our whole way of life is based around commerce, your whole culture, everything is based around commerce. So the masters who rule commerce want more and more say in how things all work, including how you behave, and how you think, and what you think, and what you believe and everything else. They want to make sure they can create you like a robot, and that will come down the road too. So the omelettes are being created, the eggs are bring all smashed, and you're living… The generations who are living now have this for their whole life to contend with. Because the big boys never stop their plans and say, this is not working, this is not working.

The old myth that they pushed out there, and it really was a myth, that if you just simply bring people into a country they'll all adapt, for prosperity, and get along. It hasn't really worked. I think it was Angela Merkel who said the same thing in Germany a while back, it had failed. Because people tend to drift and create their own communities, they like their own kind unfortunately, and the more there are of them, because they are familiar with their own culture, naturally, they want to keep it, rather than come into this new kind of materialistic culture that's been fostered and created by Hollywood, and another group who wanted to dominate everybody else.

A lot of folk won't like what I'm saying, but this is what is. It's realistic, this is realism that I'm talking about here. Not mythologies, not idealism's, it's what IS. It's not over my head, I'm not guessing at any of this stuff. There's lots of publications from universities, as I say, and many professors and many so-called experts at the top who have published this stuff, even so many members of the Council on Foreign Relations who helped set up this structural system, including what's taught in universities and colleges and schools, which give you your idea of reality. It's not yours at all. It's not yours whatsoever.

So what's happening in Canada is not that they're really putting out new laws that they have not enforced before. It's the order to start enforcing, and that changes the mentality of the agencies that will start to enforce it all. It puts pressure on them, they must produce, they must show results of what they're up to, and that can cause absolute hell on the road to it. I read recently about, it was called the Rise of the Warrior Cop, in America, and the drug wars and all the other things that they used for the rise of this military kind of policemen. And this is what they're going to bring across the whole world. And that's not right. You cannot possibly still call yourself democracies when you have this going on. Because there's folk in the States who get killed all the time, who have nothing to do with drugs, the wrong places get raided, and whole families wiped out. It's been happening for years and years and years, and yet it goes on. It just goes on and on and on.

That's why you should always never demand anything from governments. Never demand it. The average person is taught to say, oh that's wrong they should do something about that. Who should do something about that? Because if the government gets involved you might regret it, because it always goes awry. Always. This is the history of the world, when force and government work their big ideas across nations. Now, this article goes on to say…

RCMP commissioner Bob Paulson has said Zehaf Bibeau appeared "lucid" and "purposeful" in spelling out his motives (A: This is one of the guys that did the shooting I think.), which Paulson described as being rooted in his religious beliefs and opinion of Canada's foreign policy.

Paulson initially said he wanted to see the footage released to the public, but has since signaled that may not happen.

Easter said he'd like to know if the message on the video lines up with what federal officials have said about it.

"Maybe it doesn't match with the prime minister's messaging," he said. "Now, that would be a sad commentary, if the commissioner of the RCMP is being led down that path. But we'll see."

That's one article and in this article here it says…

Canadian Government Continues to Expand State Powers While Leaving Privacy by the Wayside
eff.org / January 29, 2015 / Kimberly Carlson

The Canadian government is scheduled to release new security legislation on Friday that would grant even more power to its police and domestic security agencies. This proposal comes in response to a string of "lone wolf" shootings of soldiers in Canada last October.

This isn't the first over-broad anti-terror legislation we've seen proposed or enacted in Canada—and that's what's concerning. The country has been playing catch up post-9/11, hastily increasing state surveillance powers, particularly during this past year. Bills that grant a broad range of policing and intelligence powers to government agencies, as well as speech restrictions on ordinary citizens, have already been brought forward, but we have yet to see the implications of these laws as many of them are still navigating through the legislature or just coming into effect now. Tamir Israel, staff lawyer at the Samuelson-Glushko Canadian Internet Policy & Public Interest Clinic (CIPPIC), cautions the Canadian government in creating yet another set of new powers before the dust has even settled on the last set of expansions.

Top Canadian judges agree, saying there are laws in place, such as provisions in Canada's Anti-Terrorism Act, that were crafted for this purpose. Retired Supreme Court of Canada Justice Frank Iacobucci, cautioned about:

the "spillover effects" that any rush to expand police powers would have on freedom of religion, association and expression; the possible "tainting" of Canada's Muslim community, and the risk of "overreaching" by security intelligence agencies when sharing information in a global fight against terrorism.

To pile on more anti-terror legislation is simply reactionary and a recipe for disaster. (A: Then all the other politicians are getting in on it.) Prime Minister, Stephen Harper, however, asserts that this proposal will contain the proper tools Canadian police and security agencies need in order to keep citizens safe as new threats arise.

Why the need for more legislation if the country's state surveillance powers are already so robust? Documents released by The Intercept this week from the files leaked by Edward Snowden show that the Communications Security Establishment (CSE, formally known as Communications Security Establishment Canada or CSEC) is already using very invasive surveillance tools. The revelations that CSE tracked millions of downloads each day, all over the globe, as part of its foreign intelligence spying and Five Eyes information sharing initiative exposes an overreaching surveillance state with little to no oversight.

You understand, when you have these kind of reactions from governments and orders are issued that must be fulfilled, this part about little or no oversight will get worse and worse and worse as the various agencies are told to perform, to produce, to show how many arrests they've made or whatever. And I'll tell you another thing too, unfortunately, there's a lot of middlemen in the ways that they use, and assets that they use, that will lie their teeth off to make up the stories. We found this in the past too, tickets for convicted, that might be in the hole for years and years and years before it's admitted that the CIA asset or whoever it happened to be, whatever country that use them, this little snitch got time off himself or got paid for all the stories he made up. This is what happens when the need to produce results to show their superiors overrides factual evidence. And then you're in a sorry, sorry state, believe you me. And since government goes around corners on square wheels, to stop all this and change it can take generations, if ever again. And personally, with the Internet and so on, I don't think it ever will. I think this had to go along with this, again, the introduction of this technology into society, how we adapt and it changes us as it goes along. It changes society, your behavior, everything, and it also allows all this nonsense to continue as well. Sad, isn't it, but that's where we are with all of this stuff.

Now, you combine the last article with this article from the Globe and Mail and it says…

Canadians support increased security powers, poll suggests theglobeandmail.com / DANIEL LEBLANC / Jan. 29 2015

OTTAWA — A majority of Canadians are ready to give new powers to the government (A: …this is from a poll. And polls are a joke, as we all know.) to combat security threats, including blocking websites that promote the proliferation of terrorism, a new poll suggests.

Over all, the Globe and Mail/Nanos Research survey found the federal government has strong support to introduce legislation that would limit Charter rights such as freedom of expression (A: …so there ya go, freedom of expression…), within certain limits (A: …which is… as vague as they want it to be, because they can use it for anything…), after a series of attacks at home and abroad.

The prime minister says he is looking at strengthening powers to "survey, detain and arrest" after an attack on Parliament Hill Wednesday. Stephen Harper says Parliamentary security will work with other police agencies.

Now the thing is, the way that even this is worded, it gives them wide scope for everything really. Why aren't they just aiming it at, and be specific and say, okay for this group here because that's where it seems to be coming from? rather than putting a broad ban across the whole network with people just simply voicing opinions about other things altogether that the government is up too, and not liking that either? They have reasons for this. They're not stupid, completely, at the top. They're not stupid, it's not that. It's not that. And I know where it's all going to go too, because you understand, I don't know if people know this, but in Afghanistan and Iraq and different places where the British and US military have been for a while, when they go into villages and they make every male take biometric scanning, their irises, fingerprints, everything, DNA, you name it. And they want this globally, including at home too. And big business is always involved in this system, which we think is democracy, guiding it. They're always guiding it, you see, for their own sales, etc. And these big businesses have been supplying the militaries of the world for a long time with all the biometric scanning stuff, that's portable stuff too that they can carry into the battlefield with them. So they want to do it at home as well, for your own safety, naturally. And it's great sales. But this says…

IBIA and SIA Declare Support For New Biometric Exit Provisions
findbiometrics.com / January 21, 2015

The International Biometrics and Identification Association (IBIA), (A: Another big club, you see, a big business.) in concert with the Security Industry Association (SIA) (A: The guys that make all the war industries and so on.), has issued an open letter in support of provisions set forth in Section 13 of H.R. 399, the Secure Our Borders First Act.

The statement, addressed to Michael McCaul and Bennie Thompson – the chairman and a ranking member of the House Homeland Security Committee, respectively – comes nearly a year after the IBIA voiced its concern that the mandate for biometric exit had remained unfulfilled. (A: In other words, they have not gotten all of the orders that they wanted. [Alan chuckles.] Nothing to do with right or wrong.) The new letter makes it clear that the original vision of a comprehensive border security regime is still unfulfilled, but that the Biometric Exit Data Systems provisions contained in Section 13 of H.R. 399 are a solid first step in the right direction.

New security bill aimed at combating 'lone wolf' attacks coming this week
cbc.ca / Jan 25, 2015

Legislation will expand powers of domestic security agencies in wake of last year's attacks.

(A: So, lone wolf attacks, you see. Now, a lot of the lone wolf idea, or ideology, comes from people who are mentally unstable, which they are well aware of, often with a history of having been treated for schizophrenia and various things like that, paranoia. And if it wasn't one thing that would radicalize them, it might be something else. They're given a cause, you see… or they grab a cause. And they can be used, actually, by existing groups to commit various acts as well. This says…)

Harper said the new legislation will "contain a range of measures to ensure that our police and security agencies have the tools" necessary to combat domestic threats.

But so far they haven't got the whole bill, I guess it was passed on Friday, and we'll have to wait and see. It will be such a long thing, it will take months to go through all of it. We might not even get it all dished out to the public for a long time, it might even be a year or two before we get access to it all; we'll get some very, very basic principles and so on.

Just to change topics, you remember, everything is thought out at the top through think tanks and so on, how to use everything to their advantage, a particular thing that happens or, say, the gas prices going down. Immediately the big car or truck manufacturers get in on the act, oh we're going to go back to the 70s or 60s and time to buy a truck, not telling you that this is a temporary little geopolitical war glitch that they've got on the go to lower the prices. And also the reason a lot of the prices are lowered right now, by the way, is that, you see, this is the ideal time to put in a carbon tax on top of it, and up the price, the taxes on gasoline. Because you won't grumble, you see, if your gas goes down to about, under one dollar, you'll say oh well it's still cheaper than it was before. Believe you me, once they've got a carbon tax on it, and up the percentage of taxes on gasoline, and then the jack it up to the old price and beyond, then you'll really see it, folks. Because you are getting trained to go into austerity, remember, that's part of the world solution, they claim, is experts running your lives to make sure, because you're just too stupid to manage your life yourself, you see, and so on. But this says…

Hoping for a heist at the gas pumps
thestar.com / John Barber / Jan 25 2015

Clawing back just a few of the many cents per litre the price of gas has dropped recently would set provincial (A: … this is for Ontario.) finances on a whole new course while still allowing drivers to benefit from historically low prices, writes John Barber.

What could be dreary about a month that brings a fresh jolt of pleasure every time you pass a gas station?

(A: Then they give you the usual kind of happy, happy, happy stuff before they hit you, that it's time for government to get more money, to keep it afloat of course, so they can fix the roads and that, which never happens, etc. You all know, it's the same in the States and Britain and everywhere else across the world, the same cons are used.)

But that unexpected and unearned happiness makes this the perfect time for a significant and long-overdue hike in provincial fuel taxes. (A: Oh, it's overdue? Really?) Clawing back just a few of the many cents per litre the price of gas has dropped in recent months — even recent weeks — would set provincial finances on a whole new course while still allowing drivers to benefit from historically low prices.

(A: Whether it's local, provincial, in the US it's state, or federal taxes, but very little of any of it will ever go to the reasons that they're supposed to. That's why we're in the mess we're in. And they've always got new projects on the go all the time, and there's a lot of money, through the corruption, that just goes missing all the time too, folks. But we're always given some fairytale story, because we like fairytale stories, you see, we feel safer about it, that it's to help us all that they put more taxes on. Because I mean, government always needs more taxes, doesn't it? You know, their wages keep increasing, and they have to keep up with the cost of living, up at the top.)

Last summer we were paying $1.25 a litre or more. (A: I think it was more, way more, up here.) Today we're paying 82 cents. With a stiff new tax hike, we might be paying as much as 87 cents. (A: Up here it's about 97 cent to a dollar, where I live here, and this is still Ontario.) Could any tax grab be more painless — or potentially beneficial — than that? (A: So that's how they word it to the average Joe… Ah so, what's a few cents?)

And then again, another article from the Globe and Mail. Because this is how they use it. Remember, never let a good crisis go to waste, get your agenda through.

A provincial patchwork is the worst way to tax carbon theglobeandmail.com / DAVID MCLAUGHLIN / Jan. 27 2015

Canadian climate change policy is characterized by inadequacy at the federal level and fragmentation at the provincial level.

Now, two major recent Liberal announcements will exacerbate both these problems.

First, Ontario premier Kathleen Wynne announced her government would implement a provincial carbon pricing policy. Then, federal Liberal leader Justin Trudeau (A: He's trying to become what his dad was.) stated that it was up to provincial governments to implement carbon pricing policy, not the federal government. As prime minister, he would “co-ordinate” provincial actions rather than formulate his own.

(A: So it's not a matter of, should they even do it? It's either going to be federal OR provincial, you see. That's how they do these little fake, you know, arguments.)

The politics of this are plain. Mr. Trudeau has deftly but significantly undercut his own previous declarations on carbon pricing in an attempt to shield himself from Conservative party attacks. . . (A: Than they go into the usual nonsense about politics. This is a done deal, folks. It's been… We signed agreements year after year for donkey's years, and a donkey's life is a long time, and donkeys years are, oh, awfully long. They keep signing us deeper and deeper; we're committed to it. You never got a vote on any of it, and you never will. That's democracy, you see.)

The policy ramifications are also plain. It is the provinces that are filling the federal policy vacuum on climate change with all its attendant economic and environmental consequences. Ontario will join British Columbia, Quebec, and Alberta with some form of carbon pricing policy (likely cap-and-trade) touching an increasingly vast swath of economic activity.

It would even be your standard of living activity, right down to can heat yourself or not, and what with. So that's how they introduced this kind of nonsense, they try and make it as though, well it's just going to be the corporations that will start trading more and more carbon credits to each other, etc. etc.   And then the Guardian says…

10 signs the stars are aligning for a climate deal in Paris
theguardian.com / Adam Vaughan / 21 January 2015

Following Al Gore and Pharrell Williams’ Live Earth 2015 announcement, we round up nine other reasons to feel happy ahead of crunch climate talks in Paris in December.

So it's all, it's a done deal. It's a done deal, folks, as you’re brought into austerity. It's not just to take money off you, it's going to decide how much you're left with. And what you're going to be left with is pretty well zilch once your bare essentials are paid. That's what I'm talking about. I kept saying, you're going to get put into austerity. How do you think they're going to do it? All this was also discussed at the World Economic Forum, where it's thousands of dollars for a ticket, of course, as they keep all the general population out, because they’re so Democratic. But all the NGOs are funded, again, they're just fronts for the big international corporations that run the foundations that pay them, you see, they pay these NGOs to get their policies through, by demanding, just another lobby group really, the governments do what they're told, by the private corporations.

And then this one here [Alan chuckles.] This guy just, ha, he just can’t fad off into the sunset. It's Prince Charles of course and it says…

Prince Charles:
global pact on climate change could be Magna Carta for Earth
theguardian.com / Fiona Harvey / 26 January 2015

A new global pact on climate change, due to be signed this year in Paris, should be a “Magna Carta for the Earth” (A: See, it's not just for little old you.), Prince Charles has urged.

He said this year marked potentially the “last chance” to save the world from the perils of global warming (A: I can remember when he said we had months to do it, a few years back, it was only months then that we would all die. But here we are. You know, lies don't matter, they can always regurgitate them, especially when you're someone like Charles who has no imagination.), with the Paris conference and the United Nations’ plan to replace the millennium development goals with a new set of sustainable development targets. (A: …as they keep upping the quota.)   “We simply cannot let this opportunity go to waste.” (A: Never ever forget that term. That's from the Council on Foreign Relations, the Royal Institute of International Affairs which is their parent organization, all private clubs by the way, that help run the world, and they run the government, and they put their own members into politics all the time, and they vet anybody who runs for politics, to make sure that it's always one of their guys in, regardless of the party. And you vote because you think you're Democratic.)

He told a meeting of forestry and climate experts in London: “In the 800th anniversary year of the Magna Carta, perhaps this year’s agreement of the new sustainable development goals and a new climate agreement in Paris should be seen as a new Magna Carta for the Earth, and humanity’s relationship with it.”

But he warned of difficulties ahead as the negotiations build up: “[This is] an absolutely crucial opportunity, if not the last chance before we end up in an irreversible situation, for the international community to establish a new set of interlocking, coherent and ambitious frameworks governing human development, poverty (A: He doesn't give a damn about poverty. His folk have been living off the public for, phew, generations… hundreds of years.), disaster risk reduction, the natural environment and climate change. (A: …you know, the weather that is always changing.) We could, and should, see an agenda set for the coming decades that is capable of transforming the prospects for humanity by improving and nurturing the state of the planet upon which we all depend.”

His insistence that 2015 will be a make-or-break year for the climate, and environmental sustainability, were echoed by Mary Robinson, former president of Ireland and now the UN’s special envoy for climate change. . .

…jobs for the boys and girls, eh. They just go on and on, eh, from one little international job to the next. We’ll make you the President of Ireland, and then we'll put you up at the United Nations for the planet. And you know, that's how it goes, folks. These people are little pawns in the game, the yes men, paid awfully well to get their Master's voice put into words in bills and action and law. And that's democracy. That's democracy in action.

And you have to think about it too, that the Club of Rome writes... That's another division of the Royal Institute of International Affairs/Council on Foreign Relations, you know, a big massive think tank designed also to change the policies and cultures of the people by introducing indoctrination in different areas, into the schools, to add to all the other indoctrination's that you're given. But they did say that, there were too many conflicting sides and groups and parties. Well, they make sure of that you see, because they are all [Alan chuckles.] given all their groups are paid by big foundations, that's where they get the big massive paychecks from. So they don't believe in democracy anyway.

Everything is privately owned that rules our lives. And we have pretty well no say in it at all. None at all. The only say we'll have shortly is, how do you want to freeze to death. Because you'll say, well I've got to use wood to heat. Oh you can't anymore, it's a law. And you say, well I can afford the oil. Well it's not our fault sir, you know there are alternative fuels. And then you go back into this loop again, well I can't afford the alternative fuels. You go back into a constant loop, you see, where they're not saying you've got to die, but they know darn well you do have to die. You see, that's how it's done.

And you have been taught that humans are rational? There are so many lying deceiving humans out there. Most folk have a bit of it in them, maybe more so today than ever before. And especially folk who are paid to force it upon you, they have to lie, because they never take responsibility for what they're going to cause. And then you're in chaos, real chaos. And it's a sad state of affairs, indeed.

But I've never seen anything sent out by governments saying, would you like to go along with this agenda or that agenda or this policy, and so on?   And if not, why not? And what are your criticisms of it? Before anything goes any further and gets passed into laws. You see, that would be democracy. But they can't even risk that because their excuses for what they do are so flimsy to start with they know they couldn't succeed.

Charles Galton Darwin said in his book The Next Million Years, that slavery has always existed in one form or another, it's all to do with how you perceive it, you see, and he says, we're now in the process of creating a more sophisticated form of slavery. And that was back in the 1950s that he wrote that book. He was already part of that the global futurist organizations planning, with the big movers and shakers, the future, and the cultures, and the changes for the world, along with many other well-known figures. And they were not kidding, folks. You don't pay people millions of pounds for an individual salary to put jokes out to the public.

Well, I hope you're climate change is treating you better than mine. Mine is just, oh, as I say the Fahrenheit scale that most of the US uses, I'm hitting 30 below quite often at night here. And I check the major media for the area, including the federal weather report stations and so on, and I'm telling you, they are under-reporting every night by 10 to 16°. Every night. Because it doesn't look good when you're globally freezing, and yet they're telling you, you open the papers the next day, you're actually warming. We live in a zoo, a manufactured zoo of Machiavellian proportions and beyond. And beyond, because everything is now deception, said by very straight faces, by well-paid "experts".

I hope you hang in there and you keep your sanity. Don't fall for anything. Don't go nuts. And don't be terrified to death, just be aware of things. As I say, you've got lots to think about. And especially if you're young, it's probably time to look elsewhere in the world to live, that might have a few years left before the big boys decide they want something in that country and take it over. Snatch the few years of happiness you might be able to get.

From Hamish and myself in Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 1, 2015. The open conspiracy is all around you. Nothing's really hidden today, you know, and it hasn't been hidden for an awful long time. Throughout the 20th century many top writers, put out there by the ruling establishment themselves, and often written for each other since most of the public wouldn't read such thick dry books, spelled out the agenda and all the concerns of their period, and where they would like to take humanity, and if they did not take charge in a very deep way of humanity, on thoughts and speech and culture, where it might end up, which of course is out of their hands and they couldn't let that happen, could they. So they went to work and got all the top philosophers of their day on board with them to work with them. Psychologists, behaviorists of all kinds, now they have neuroscientists added to it and various other techniques too, in sciences, to find a way to bring in a culture where the public themselves, through incrementalism and change and planned change, and using the natural instincts of the herd as they call it, they could bring in a new system and get the culture and people to simply accept it, without them being fearful of what was actually happening.

One of them I have mentioned so many times, who was rather prolific in his writings, his copious writings actually, was Lord Bertrand Russell. He said that, and right at a time when, in the 20th century, so many big movements were under way of -isms, like socialism, communism, capitalism, all the isms of the day were on the go to establish their dominance, you see, over all the rest. And he said basically that there would be a tyranny, that was unavoidable and, for the ruling elite of the day to keep control and not let the lesser isms take over, although they could use techniques from some of the isms which had worked awfully well, like grabbing the children and giving a more scientific indoctrination as they did in the Soviet Union, that was later copied by the Nazi party in Germany, because it worked very, very well, you see. And he said, if there is to be a tyranny then he would want it to be, he personally would want it to be a scientific tyranny. And he said at the time too in his own book, and his lectures too, he said that a scientific tyranny would be brutal and merciless, even inhumane, because science has got nothing to do with human emotion or value of morality or anything else. It's just what is, is, is, is, is, is, is, etc... And by using scientific tyranny they could bring in a world order of control where they wouldn't have to worry about criminals popping up in every generation, they would be spotted so quickly and even prevented at conception from going any further, right down to the breeding programs of all the proper kinds of people to populate the world. He mused, along with others of his peer group, who were also heavily into eugenics of course, the bluebloods of his era, that they themselves had the right to impregnate women all over the world and have the right kind of population. In other words, breed out the bad genes and have the good ones growing up, you see. This was all discussed. And out of that, these comments and statements and so on and that whole theory, came different stories like The Handmaidens Tail was one book that came out too.

So you've got to understand, in all ages those in power have always spied upon their own people, more than on any opposition or any enemy or country they want to take over to increase their empire. Because if you lose it at home you have nothing, it will all fall apart abroad, all your empire will fall, they crumble if the center is gone you see. So these are not new topics at all, they're simply very old and restricted, or kept in certain classes of philosophy, etc., or social sciences. Even what they are taught in those social sciences vary according to the type of University you end up going to. More is taught after University to the select few who are let in on the inner secrets and the higher understanding of human nature, and all of the tests that have been done on large-scale populations for a long, long time... the archives, the real archives, you see.

So a scientific dictatorship would be brutal and inhumane, but it would be absolutely necessary to bring it in. And we're in it today. Most don't know it because it can be certainly very brutal, but by using incredibly good psychology and understanding human nature so perfectly they can make us walk in to our sleep chambers, you might say, through the Internet and virtual reality, or through Pharma to help you along and so on. You walk into this pleasantness as you forget that you are being manacled and shackled along the way.

Now, a scientific tyranny would not be called that by the general public. They would have many names, many faces because it's comprised of many agencies and governments, and private corporations, that are assets, and often have more power than the governmental organizations. They do a lot more, in fact, because they're not responsible if they get caught on anything to the general public, they can't be voted in or out. Therefore the CIA and MI-6 and various other organizations have many, many, many front organizations which they use, very powerful corporations too, because the military-industrial complex is all part of it too of course, all owned by the same people as far as the major shareholders are concerned.

And although you're going through a brutal phase, and it is brutal because were being taught to be naïve and think, through all the movies and so on, that somehow people who go into government are more upright and more honest, with more integrity, with a greater value system and conscience than the general population. It's a fantastic myth that's been pushed more effectively, I'd say, in the US perhaps than any other country although many other countries have emulated it too. And when you have a naïve population thinking there's good people there, there's good people there looking after me and so on, you tend to go to sleep to an extent. And that's what they want, a naïve believing population, believing in the system as being awfully good. But meanwhile always having things popping into the paper of importance, or at least people in the limelight having awful accidents and just dropping dead and things like that, all over the place. That increases as you go into tyranny and it increases more and more in an age where so much news is dumped on you and you'll miss the very important things that really matter, that might set you wondering about things like why, wow, that was a strange accident for so-and-so, who was complaining about whatever it was that government was up to just the week before, and getting publicity, you see.

And the real guys at the top in a scientific tyranny, and that includes all eavesdropping and snooping, electronic and otherwise too, it includes all of that. That comes under this because it's all scientific the way it's done today. It's monitoring everyone to see what they say and do and talk about, and to see that you're safe. If you're safe no flags come up when you name comes up. Safe means you like your little world, your bubble, you like your routine inside your bubble, and maybe your little hobbies and what you do on a Thursday or Friday or whatever it happens to be, and are quite content safely going on the Internet and looking at the funny animals page for the day, things like that, and being happy, showing that you're happy, you see. But there's no doubt about it, that anything else you look at, and they've been doing this before 9/11 happened by the way. But anything else you look at, including library books, they want to know why, more about you, why you chose certain books, that are perhaps informative to someone who's awake or waking up.

Back in the 1990s the US and Canada at the same time admitted that their security agencies were collecting lists of books, of readers, and members of libraries, to see what they were reading about, names and addresses and all the rest of it. Because you must be profiled, you see, for those in charge to have a safe feeling, so they can sleep well at night, that everyone is safe and sound and won't know too much, because you are children. Now, every tyranny in every age, including a lot of the main religions you know, the terminology is all through religions especially of the Western cultures, where you have a father God and you are the children. And the father also has prophets and so on who are the spokesman to the children, and that's how it's couched, in those words. Now, what is a child? A child is supposed to grow up, and yet the religions will keep calling you the children of God, even when you have grown up physically, you see. When do you become an adult? And generally, well, you never... You're still a child of God, you see.

In a scientific tyranny you must be treated the same way as children. And if you show that you're growing up you will have comeback upon you if you ask the wrong questions. Because you're supposed to have succumbed to your indoctrination, and the techniques they use upon you from birth, through education, and through all the stories you read from kindergarten onwards, with the special inserts on how you're supposed to behave and think about certain topics, how to speak about certain topics and all that kind of stuff, and then you are marked as safe, when you believe it all.

I've said many times, history truly is brutal, and this technique of what they call civilization and civilizing, under its glory of the past and glory of war and conquest, all this glory terminology, you find that civilization on behalf of those who talk about it at the top, how they define it, is utterly brutal, utterly brutal, as they go off to get what they want, which is generally resources and more wealth for themselves to accumulate for their own families so their own progeny can carry down through time. And that's a sad statement on humanity but that's the way it really is.

I've told people not to get angry about this, that you've been conned. And lots of folk do get awfully, awfully angry, awfully angry when you help to wake them up. Because you see, they want to have the fake world that they're standing on, the fake reality... You know, my feet are on the ground, I'm quite safe feeling and all that. They want you to replace it with something else, made-to-measure for them, ready-made, so's you pull the old reality out, you pop in this one, so they can feel grounded and safe and secure. And that's not what I do. You see, only you can find your own ground to stand on. Because it's a choice. And everyone has the choice of saying, okay I'm quite happy with my life, it's not the best, I'd like to be wealthier and better looking, whatever it happens to be, and not have financial worries, that kind of thing. But they want to be fairly secure and no one's bothering them, and no one's leaning upon them to change their ways or to threaten them with anything at all, they want that security. Because they have decided to be children, forever, you see.

And all the advertising that's pumped out at you your whole life long, what they churn out today as movies, are really things that would be designed for children at one time, it's now throughout the adult population, they watch all this stuff. And the tears come to their eyes at the right spots, and the anger will well up inside them when they see the bad person doing something wrong, as they are switched on and off, on and off, on and off, all these different neurons in the brain, so perfectly. And they are quite content being kept in an infantile stage, by people who are more professional and more well-educated, as they are told over and over and over, an expert in particular topics and subjects than they are. Therefore, you are a child when you believe that.

In some histories, in some Hollywood histories of course, where they would demonize their favorite targets, they'll show you tyrannies at work in a fictional form but they'll show you how anyone who disagrees with the status quo of a tyranny, and you voice some personal objections to certain things in the system at the time, or doesn't praise the great leader, or the very government itself, they are dealt with brutally in such movies. And we knows from wars that the Soviet system and the Nazi system, that's how it was. And they were not unique, believe you me, it goes down through history, every government has used these techniques on their people at different times in history, more overt sometimes, or more quiet and more hidden, put it that way, in other times in history. And it never changes unfortunately.

But today it's getting worse and worse. In fact, it will be an even worse of a tyranny because no government before has had such incredible powers to observe every single person in the nation at the same time, every second and minute of every day. And they make what's popular popular because they give you all the little toys and gadgets to enable them to spy on you, and to categorize you, and to personality profile you with all your hobbies and what you do on a Wednesday and all these things, and what you say in your texting and your emails and your chat rooms and so on. All managed into ‘the you’, the virtual you that they have somewhere in some other computer, where they actually run tests on the virtual you knowing how you will react in real life if they put you through the same test. It's perfect tyranny today, even more so since most folk will always be, in that time, unaware that it is a tyranny. And how beautifully it has worked because most folk don't care, you see. I'm okay, I'm doing nothing wrong… I watch the authorized things, I laugh at the little puppy dog stories in the newspapers, things like that that they put out there, you see. And they monitor all the folk who looking to these things as well, with the ‘safe’ little tick, you see.

So compliance is vital to total power. And what better way than to have voluntary compliance where the people know, even the little ideas that float around the sides of their conscious mind, the things you don't want to look at, because they've been trained in the Pavlovian style to shy away from certain topics or certain thoughts or even knowing little quips of information that has come their way, and they'll shy away from it and try to wipe it out, you know, erase it, because it makes them uncomfortable. That's the Pavlovian response. That means it's working on you, you've been well trained and indoctrinated, with such responses.

And the neuroscientists write copiously about this technique which is used to bring up what they call the great, meaning the proper, society. And most folk, as they say, are either unaware of it or the benefits, and that's how really is, the benefits of living in such a society outweigh the negatives. I'm having fun, lots of fun, as long I have fun and entertainment is supplied constantly to me, and I live in my little bubble of home to work and work to home, and the occasional little beer in between it at some bar or whatever, and to watch their favorite television shows, and to scour the Internet for basically trivia or things that fascinate them, you know, mysterious mysteries, stuff like that, then they want to be left alone and they don't want to know anything. And that's fine, that's the choice. And everyone has a choice, you see.

And unfortunately most of the opponents to what folk see as the increasing tyranny, with the use of antiterrorism as an excuse for everything, and keeping you all safe, it's all being abused. Many of them, the top ones, are actually the controlled opposition. Because those at the top never start any part of a plan without debating, like a chessboard, before the game starts, if I do this what will the reaction be from them, the populations? Oh, some will be discontent, the leaders might arise. Supply the leaders in that case, start up even organizations. And that's what you have with all these NGO organizations, so well-funded by the tax-exempt foundations, that are simply the tactical wing, by using all their think tanks and so on, for the planned social changes generation by generation until they get what they want. It's really the never-ending story.

See, most folks think there's a final goal somewhere – we're short-term thinkers, and we’re trained to be short-term thinkers – a great catastrophe, bang, that's it, the Armageddon syndrome, that type of thing. Where in reality, an elite that hold onto power does it through generations, generation after generation, after generation, and they'll plan what kind of culture and population they'll want, for each generation before they're even born. And they even have a think tanks working on the blowback from big changes, that the public might not want so much, how do you deal with this? Well, you steer them as you always steer them, you put out the leaders, who speak for you, you know. And you give your authority to that person… That person speaks for me, I agree with them. And as time goes on you'll say, well most of it, or, maybe some of it, or, until you realize the person has gone off ona different tangent. Or he's just a safety valve for you who is a couch potato.

So it's all been taken care of and thought of. And I'm not being pessimistic about it all. I'm being realistic about it. Never confuse the two. Never confuse the two. This whole push for positive thinking was part of the psychological warfare, set out years ago on behalf of the elite and funded by the elite. Disregard the negative, disregard it, always look at the positive, you see. Where an entire human, a true human being, a total human being must look at all things positive and negative to everything that they do to avoid trouble for yourself down the road. Very simple. Not to play your life away like an irresponsible child. And that was all put out there as part of the warfare, until today if you just say the plain truth it's, oh you're pessimistic. No. I'm not sunk in some depression.... saying woe is me, or, it's all over now baby blue. I'm just saying it as it is, you see. I mean, it's a fascinating time to be alive because you're seeing all the forces which are used, all down through time, which you are taught to hate as tyrannies, and every generation is taught they've got the greatest governmental system on the planet and the freest country on the planet, and they always pointed the fingers to other countries and so on. And they haven't stopped doing that and they never will stop doing that, even as you go through changes which would speak volumes to the contrary if your mind was left untampered with.

Soma doesn't have to be a drug that puts you into a happy state. Soma comes from all the positive little stories that really don't make a difference on anything in your life, that you are flooded with on a daily basis. Little ha ha things, or, did you know… that kind of stuff, or the fascinating stuff, could there be life beyond Mars, blah blah blah, you know. The stuff that grabs the imagination, it's very safe to wonder about that kind of stuff because there's no consequence, at all, to what's happening here. Everything's been thought of, you see. As I say, remember the chessboard, here are the moves we want to make, what will the repercussions be? Okay, how in advance of it all, even before the first move is made, how in advance at all do we prepare to counter this particular or that particular, or that one over there, that blowback? Set up organizations in advance, supply the leaders and they'll speak for you. And then they keep their flock, because everyone again becomes a child in a flock, you see, and they follow the leader, around in circles.

The war, and the UN has said it by the way, many times, and others have said it, is not upon the masses, it's upon the individual. Individualism has to be eradicated. That's the part that they don't like is the individual. Only, as Charles Galton Darwin said, on behalf of his own class, the elite, he was quite plain about it, very arrogant. He says, we the wild man, we're the wild men, we who rule the world, who plan the future and steer the ship of earth through its course and its destiny, we must remain wild, to make instant decisions against catastrophes and avoid them and things like that. But the population doesn't need that, they must be tamed out of their wildness, domesticated, and he mentioned different ways to do it, through food, inoculations and so on, chemicals. But we are to be tamed into docility because the state will be managing all their affairs for them, right down to social workers and so on. They won't need reasoning faculties, the state will be doing their reasoning for them. But those at the top who have all the data coming from their think tanks must make instant decisions and counter possible conflicts on the path to their wonderful future, you see. And that's how really is.

But today we are on the Internet, you see, the greatest thing ever developed for spying, and people buy everything and bring them into their homes, all the devices, knowing that they are listening to you, they're watching you, a lot of them. Yet they even admit they are watching you through their TVs and things. But the docile person is damaged, he doesn't care. Because they do know… This is the strange thing about it, they'll say that they don't know what's going on in the world. But they do know that if they just go along with the things which are permissible they'll be classified as safe and left alone. Therefore they don't mind getting watched, that's the proof that they're good. They're proving to their masters they're good. I'm good, I'm awfully good, watch me, now listen to me having a chat with my pal about the Hollywood stars, things like that. All safe topics, you see, I'm good, I'm good, I'm good, here's the proof. And that's an individual personal decision.

People fought for centuries to be treated as an alive, human, individual person to have rights. And one of the top things was the right to personal privacy. And part of it also was not to be watched by the state every darned day. And in one generation, but it took preparation from previous generations, step by step by step, they've completely turned it around. But most folk don't mind. I've always likened it to an inoculation. They'll say, well if an inoculation has worked, and it has taken, they call it 'taken' in your body, it's not being rejected if it's taken and worked, then you're safe then. That's how they phrase it. That's a whole different topic in reality of course but, it's the same if your indoctrination has worked as well. If it's taken then you're safe, but you'll still be monitored, but you won't mind, to prove that you're good.

As I've said in times gone by, major religions, which eventually become corrupt themselves, because they get bureaucracies built up internally and they alter so much to hold on to power and direct, but they can be tyrannical too down the road, eventually that falls away and some other one takes over. Today the path is being led, as we go through scientific dictatorship or tyranny, we have the state and science as the new gods, you see, and they demand instant and complete obedience and will not tolerate anything outside of that. You're a child now of science and the state and all the experts involved in it. There's always a God at the top. And many of the top atheists have talked about them bringing in the best kind of world there could be, under their control of course, and they don't have any ancient writings to go by that gives human dignity any credence whatsoever. So that's why they call it a scientific tyranny, they would be tyrannical. But they say it's all for the good, you see. But you'll have no rights whatsoever, except the right to stay in your own little bubble, produce and consume, pay your money in taxes and things, and buy things, but be good, be good, be a child of the state, and stay as a child for your whole life until you die. Because you can't and you mustn't be permitted to grow up into adulthood and be independent, especially your thoughts being independent. That is forbidden.

And hence you're being monitored all the time, whether you're being good or not. Because even if you're good who knows what might happen down the road, a stray thought might come your way and take root and you may become a problem eventually.

Every age, in other words, to summarize it all, has its deity which lays down the law, and you have the interpreters of the deity, who manage their country or the nation or the world or empire, on behalf of their deity. They manage it all down to the peons, or children, below. And now in the age of scientific tyranny, or management as they prefer to call it, or governance, you have all the scientists, authorized ones only of course, who take the big paychecks and go along with each part of their particular part of the agenda and they will say whatever is necessary to say. If you're heretic as a scientist, you're simply not heard of again. You won't get a mention in the paper or anything, you're shunned.

But we have the scientists on board and the experts to tell us what to do and think, and they give us topics and also what to believe, here's your conclusion, we'll give you the proper conclusions. And we accept them as the children do since the new state, which is really a front in itself, but the state is now God, you see. And all the ministers, which are experts and scientists, all help to manage it on behalf of the deity, the state, which is ruled by, really, a few people, very incredibly rich people, who are interlocked with other members across the world in other nations running their particular states, you see.

And they're managing it better than any religion could have managed it before. Because they've got instant access to all data. They can head every possible problem off at the pass, as they say in the old Westerns, before it becomes a nuisance. Even when they came out with the Internet, all over the newspapers they said that there would be information warfare. And they had already planned for it all, set up the organizations that would do all the different top blogging and so on, to make sure that everyone was steered off in the right direction and cause no problems. But they could be safety valves. Plus they'd find out who everybody was too and what their particular beef was with the system.

It reminds me of the Soviet system which went further than most systems because it had survived longer as opposed to, say, the Nazi system of Germany. The Soviet system, including the satellite countries in the Eastern Bloc countries, especially with the Stasi, they put a lot of information out and so on from East Germany. They talked about how citizens would be hired, shills, government shills, trained operatives, and put in factories for instance, or even stores, big stores. They would become very, very good, good little psychopaths, and be very personable, liked by everyone, would laugh and joke and seem intelligent and he would be looked up to. Then they would, once in a while, insert in a certain company something negative about the government or a particular person or a leader of the government. The trick was, here's the dilemma, they knew that those people would come to like such a person, now would go into a Pavlovian response feeling embarrassed, maybe blushing and so on, because they heard the person say this, and according to the law they should report it. Now, if they didn't report it, and eventually they all knew this because it became so widespread, if they didn't report it they would be drawn up because the shill would report to his boss, I told so-and-so and so-and-so and they didn't report it. So you would get pulled up, and for failure to obey the law and report such a person, a subversive, you see, and you became a subversive too and you were either killed or either put off to Siberia.

Today it's much, far more easy because we have instant access, as I say, with the toys they've given you. And that's why they called the computer initially the personal computer. That throws you right off doesn't it, it's mine. And they said oh, you really have so much privacy on it, and all that guff. Good word, that, it's so underused today, G-U-F-F, guff. All tricks of the trade of psychology, it's all yours, it's your personal phone too, you know. But an iPhone has a double meaning, doesn't it. It's not just meaning I, me.

Anyway, here's an article here. It's from CBC Canada. The CSE, that's the Canadian spy, NSA variation, in bed with the NSA of course, maybe even just a department of it really as far as I'm concerned today.

CSE monitors millions of Canadian emails to government
cbc.ca / Amber Hildebrandt, Michael Pereira and Dave Seglins / Feb 25, 2015

Canada's electronic spy agency collects millions of emails from Canadians and stores them for "days to months" while trying to filter out malware and other attacks on government computer networks, CBC News has learned.

(Alan: So right off the bat they give you the spin on the story rather than go into it in depth as to what else it could be, you see. So it's trying to filter out malware and other attacks on government from email that's in from people in the public, this is their excuse. Because right off the bat, on why is an open democratic society, it doesn't even touch on it, why is it storing general questions, or people going into government websites to see what's going on? See, if you're good and your indoctrination has taken, as I've mentioned before, you won't even be bothered with looking up sites and web sites and seeing what they're up to. It's not your job to know what they're up to. You'resupposed to just have things happen and laws passed, and vaguely understand little bits of them, and go along with it.)

A top-secret document written by Communications Security Establishment (CSE) analysts sheds new light on the scope of the agency's domestic email collection as part of its mandate to protect government computers. (A: So again, they're reiterating really the end of the story, at the beginning of the story, of what your opinion is going to be as to why they do this, you see. That's how simple it is, but it's all psychology. Now it goes on to talk about this it says…)

CBC analyzed the document in collaboration with U.S. news site The Intercept, (A: And the link is in this article here. I'll put it up tonight for those who want to [Alan chuckles.] step over the safe line and maybe look something up.) which obtained it from U.S. National Security Agency whistleblower Edward Snowden. (A: Who knows, maybe this guy works for them in the first place because there's nothing that he's really put out that the average person shouldn't know. You should know all this stuff. You should know it already. Do you really need someone, in a certain capacity, to tell you what you already know? Think about it.)

Canada's electronic spy agency watched visits to government websites and collected about 400,000 emails to the government every day, storing some of the data for years, according to the 2010 document. Today's volume is likely much higher given online traffic growth.

Common online activities involving the government include Canadians filing their taxes, writing to members of Parliament and applying for passports.

The program to protect government servers from hackers, criminals and enemy states is raising questions about the breadth of the collection, the length of retention and how the information could be shared with police and spy partners in other countries.

Chris Parsons, an internet security expert (A: …again, there's an expert here.) who viewed the document, said there are legitimate purposes for the agency to monitor your communications with the government.

"But you should be able to communicate with your government without the fear that what you say … could come back to haunt you in unexpected ways," says Parsons, a postdoctoral fellow at Citizen Lab, a unit at the University of Toronto's Munk School of Global Affairs.

"When we collect huge volumes, it's not just used to track bad guys. It goes into data stores for years or months at a time and then it can be used at any point in the future."

CSE says "specific communications" are examined if they are "suspected to relate to a cyberthreat that could harm government of Canada systems and networks."

That automated system sifts through them and detects about 400 potentially suspect emails each day — about 146,000 a year. That system sends alerts to CSE analysts, who then can take a closer look at the email to see if it poses any threat.

You know, it's like the Old Testament, they have all the laws written down in there, basically, of the whole judicial system, and it says, out of your own mouth, by your own words, ye are condemned. And you're talking about tyranny... actually, it's not just forming into places here, and when they start using all this stuff it will make the Soviet Union or Nazi Germany look like Boy Scouts with all the data they have on every single person. And they can take anything out of context, and vilify you for, did you say this? Exactly the same thing as the Stasi came out and admitted as to how they did it in Eastern Germany. So-and-so said this, the plant said this in front of you and you laughed and agreed or whatever it happened to be. It's the same thing, folks, but worse. Then it goes on about the whole thing about the metadata and the details, who sent it, where and when and so on and why they must keep it, etc. But really, that's the excuse, is to stop them getting hacked, supposedly, or getting malware sent to them and so on and so on. But I'll put that up tonight for those who care to even look at it.

And an article from the British system, same kind of system, and this is going back to 2014. It says…

GCHQ JTRIG Tools and Techniques for propaganda and internet deception securityaffairs.co /July 15, 2014 / Pierluigi Paganini

(A: We're overloaded with data, but this stuff has been out for a long time. And this is, again, Edward Snowden it says.)

Edward Snowden leaked a top-secret GCHQ document which details the operations and the techniques used by JTRIG unit for propaganda and internet deception.

The JTRIG unit of the British GCHQ intelligence agency has designed a collection of applications that were used to manipulate for internet deception and surveillance, including the modification of the results of the online polls. The hacking tools have the capability to disseminate fake information, for example artificially increasing the counter of visit for specific web sites, and could be also used to censor video content judged to be "extremist." The set of application remembers me in the NSA catalog published in December when the Germany's Der Spiegel has revealed another disturbing article on the NSA surveillance (A: And the links are all here, I'll put them up tonight.), the document leaked by the media agency was an internal NSA catalog that offers spies backdoors into a wide range of equipment from major vendors. (A: They are all complicit, all the vendors, folks. I mean... But so are you, aren't you.)

The existence of the tools was revealed by the last collection of documents leaked by Edward Snowden, the applications were created by GCHQ's Joint Threat Research Intelligence Group (JTRIG) and are considered one of the most advanced system for propaganda and internet deception. JTRIG is the secret unit mentioned for the first time in a collection of documents leaked by Snowden which describe the Rolling Thunder operation, the group ran DoS attack against chatrooms used by hacktivists.

"and it also used "fake victim blog posts," (A: Nothing out there is real anymore, you can't take anything at face value.) "false flag operations," "honey traps" and psychological manipulation to target online activists, monitor visitors to WikiLeaks, and spy on YouTube and Facebook users." states the blog post published on the Intercept. (A: They are all part of it anyway, all these organizations that are part of this with the intelligence network.)

The post mentions a top-secret GCHQ document called "JTRIG Tools and Techniques" which details the operations and the techniques . . . (A: …etc, etc.)

Many tools designed by JTRIG are introduced as "in development," but many of them as "fully operational, tested and reliable."

The document is reserved for internal use, querying it GCHQ agents may have an idea of surveillance and online deception activities which can be conducted by the Intelligence agency.

(A: And this goes on and on and on.)

The post provides the complete list of JTRIG capabilities:

•"Change outcome of online polls" (UNDERPASS)

•"Mass delivery of email messaging to support an Information Operations campaign" (BADGER) (A: …that's how you badger folks, they want likes and dislikes, and you take it off.) and "mass delivery of SMS messages to support an Information Operations campaign" (WARPATH)

•“Disruption of video-based websites hosting extremist content through concerted target discovery and content removal.” (SILVERLORD) (A: Mind you, above that there'll of gold and platinum, hey. [Alan chuckles.] I guess if you're on the platinum list you won't be around long.)

•“Active skype capability. Provision of real time call records (SkypeOut and SkypetoSkype) and bidirectional instant messaging. Also contact lists.” (MINIATURE HERO)

•“Find private photographs of targets on Facebook” (SPRING BISHOP)

•“A tool that will permanently disable a target’s account on their computer” (A: So your account will be disabled.) (ANGRY PIRATE)

•“Ability to artificially increase traffic to a website” (GATEWAY) and “ability to inflate page views on websites” (SLIPSTREAM)

•“Amplification of a given message, normally video, on popular multimedia websites (Youtube)” (GESTATOR)

•“Targeted Denial Of Service against Web Servers” (PREDATORS FACE) and “Distributed denial of service using P2P. Built by ICTR, deployed by JTRIG” (ROLLING THUNDER)

•“A suite of tools for monitoring target use of the UK auction site eBay (www.ebay.co.uk)” (ELATE)

•“Ability to spoof any email address and send email under that identity” (CHANGELING) (A: …then you get in trouble of course, because the folk think it’s you doing it all.)

•“For connecting two target phones together in a call” (IMPERIAL BARGE) (A: …they can barge in.)

The information provided in the presentation confirms the previous revelations on the capabilities of British Intelligence, the tools and the techniques available at of GCHQ are not different from the ones used by NSA and by its secret unit known as TAO. (A: And of course it will be the same with the Canadian one as well.)

In the past we discussed about Tempora Operation (A: That was the name of this operation, Tempora...), the massive tapping program conducted by Britain’s Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ) and revealed by The Guardian, this last revelation on JTRIG’s activities shows that British Intelligence, like US one, is working to improve its capabilities for the control of the Internet and any other channel of communication.

GCHQ refused to provide any comment on the revelation, the agency claims that it acts “in accordance with a strict legal and policy framework” and is subject to “rigorous oversight.”

And naturally they will say that because they make the laws to allow themselves to do it all. Sad, isn't it. Sad. Sad. Very, very sad. And then you can go on to this article and it's from the Guardian for 2014. Remember this one? Very important to stop people talking.

Journalists and whistleblowers will go to jail under new national security laws
theguardian.com / Paul Farrell / 25 September 2014

Journalists will be jailed. It might take a year, or two, or even longer. But journalists and whistleblowers will face prison as a result of the first tranche of national security legislation that was passed in the Senate late on Thursday.

And they laughed as they did it. As the Coalition, Labor and the Palmer United party voted in favour of this bill, which dramatically expands the powers of intelligence agencies while creating new offences for disclosing information about the operations they will undertake with these new powers, there was a jovial air in the chamber.

It’s a bill that makes many broad changes to our intelligence gathering apparatus. It introduces a class of “special intelligence operation” for Australian Security Intelligence Organisation (ASIO) missions where intelligence officers can gain immunity from using force or committing other offences. (A: So they are immune, these intelligence officers are completely immune. They can't commit offenses because they've got complete immunity, whatever they do.)

Reporting of these operations, which could foreseeably lead to situations where a public disclosure would be in the public interest, could land journalists and whistleblowers in jail. And not just journalists, but any person who shares or republishes this material. In addition, harsher penalties are put in place for intelligence whistleblowers who take documents or records and disclose them, partly as a response to the disclosures made by NSA whistleblower Edward Snowden.

So how would these laws work? We have many examples of intelligence reporting that could be caught within the scope of such an offence. Say, for instance, the bugging of East Timorese leaders during their negotiations with Australians were to happen today. If it were declared a ‘special intelligence operation’ – a process which only involves approval from the attorney general – reporting of the fact this bugging occurred, the details around it, the nature of the surveillance, could be caught within the scope of this offence. The same could equally apply for reporting the Indonesian president’s phone was targeted by Australian intelligence agencies, if it were declared a special operation. (A: …and that goes on and on and on.)

See, all the countries are on the same format, in this global system, all working together, folks. All working together. And then I'll just touch on this one. This article says…

(A: So they will adapt to it, mind you, so fast. We always adapt, little by little. Oh well, okay, you know… And then it's normalized. You see, you must normalize tyranny and give lots of excuses so that the folk themselves will never think of it as tyranny, they adapt into it.)

US citizens and other non-EU nationals who enter Europe will be asked to have their faces image-captured and fingerprints scanned upon arrival at a half-dozen major airports.

The biometric dragnet is part of a pilot test of the EU’s so-called ‘smart borders’ package.   (A: Whenever you hear ‘smart’ run away. It's better to be dumb in this instance.) Passengers can refuse to give the data for now but there are plans to eventually make it obligatory. (A: Everything always starts off, you know, as voluntary. It always does that, to get you all used to it, you know.)

So I'll put this article up too. It's a longer article as well and you can read more of it too, the countries that are taking part in the initial voluntary one that's going to be compulsory throughout the whole of Europe. I think that some places in the States have it already. It's quite something, isn't it?

And tyranny is never, ever used, it's avoided at all costs, the word tyranny. Because the people must never suspect that they are actually under it. It's always… whatever is done it's always for a good reason, to keep you safe from Martian invasions and all that nonsense, whatever it happens to be. They got to keep you safe, you know, and to show you that your tax money is well spent keeping you safe. But as I say, from the most ancient dictators and tyrannies to the present none of them had, until now, the ability of total, total, information, daily, instantly collected, on all of us, as they do today. And when they start really, really using it you might just as well say, God help us all.

From Hamish and myself from Ontario, Canada, which is still freezing of course as we warm up globally, supposedly, in this fake reality, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 8, 2015. I hope you're all hanging onto your sanity as we go through the massive changes at present, and all those you sense that coming down the pike, pretty shortly in fact, as the big planned changes are put into effect. Of course, changes on a grand scale take lots of years, many years to plan and organize and have agreements upon, and all the legal stuff put into all the different documentations for bills and so on and treaties that are signed all the time. Therefore, whatever happens this year, for instance, was planned long, long ago. It's very much like the start of the Kyoto protocols, etc. to do with climate change and global warming, blah blah blah, to get the carbon taxes all through down the pike, it took many years to get to that stage. Of course this year they'll pretty well sign the first major treaty to do with the big, big cash funding of it globally, and implement at home all the different taxes you'll have to pay for energy, carbon, etc. etc. etc. Just for surviving and living in fact, you're going to pay for it all. As I've mentioned so many times, your excess spending money, the stuff that you used to spend on all the junk that they put in the Walmarts and so on, will be spent on things that are necessities, and taxes. That's where it's all supposed to go. That also decreases your consumption, which is quite happy for those who want to have the planet to themselves, hundreds of years down the road when there's lots of resources and you're not around anymore, nor are your offspring for that matter.

The world is planned – they never change their plans – on a grand scale, a fantastic scale, all the time in fact. People think too that war is spontaneous and they happen. It isn't until you really look into all the facts and details, many of which are at least maybe 50 to 80 years later, you find out it took sometimes 50, 60 years to work up into the start of a particular war, to get everyone prepared for it, to get the groundwork laid and all the different necessities for conducting such a long, prolonged war, what it would cost, etc, and how much even inflation would be at that period down the road when you started it all and what the profit returns would be, etc. etc. Massive planning goes into all of this. Nothing in the world is spontaneous, really, nothing. The occasional accidents are, personal and otherwise, but that's about it. Everything else is planned, like a big business plan, and that's how the world is really run.

The organized planned society has to have plans all the time. I've mentioned so many times over the years, if you just go into the guys who set up the League of Nations, the private organization that set up the League of Nations, then United Nations, and then funded all the NGOs through their foundations, because these are big business leaders that were behind it all and private groups. They had all the agenda set out then and to bring in a eugenically controlled scientific society, a scientifically controlled society where gradually and gradually they'd appear to give you more rights and freedoms in certain areas, but take other real rights away from you in the process. That's where we are today. It's worked awfully well.

Those living through those generations of change never really understand that. They've never thought about it deeply because they've never been told that think about it deeply. They simply adapt and adapt to changes. So they take the Darwinian idea of adaptation and they go with it, they run with it basically. It works awfully well and everyone's adapting all the time to the changes, even to the things which are designed to do them in eventually down the road.

Now, the greatest proof that the world is always planned ahead, of events that are meant to be passed into law and so on, is the fact that it doesn't matter how much you know about the scams, of the same groups that push for this and pressurize governments in the past for their particular agenda, it doesn't matter what you know about them and what they've done before, the agenda still goes through. So all that matters really is the agenda, that's all you have to know. These agendas you will not stop because most of the public go along with the scientific advice on it all. Even if it goes against the facts that scientists shove out in your face, it doesn't go with it I should say, with what you have witnessed yourself, then you'll adapt to it and accept their opinions as your own.

And then, I've never been a fan of the big crowd, because the big crowd can argue initially on things, eventually they become the solidified crowd with the solidified thought and they've all accepted what they've been told, and if you don't join them, you see, they can see you, they can spot you, and they call you an oddball or a Luddite or something for holding on to other convictions that are now obsolete. And how can convictions be obsolete? How can something that can be right one day be wrong the next? Well, that happens all the time. Even with what you say and the terms that you use to say things, it's by my man himself, you see, those who planned society, including your vocabulary as well, and the legal system, etc. etc. So we're constantly being manipulated with our thoughts and the way we say things, that's neuroscience, psycholinguistics, etc, and we adapt into it. If you don't adapt into, the crowd itself who have adopted will turn on you. Whether it comes down to opinions or things presented as facts, or anything else, it doesn't matter. And they eventually go along with all the big agendas because they don't have enough confidence individually, amongst the crowd, in themselves. They feel confident when they are in a massive group all baaing together like sheep, you see. That's the truth of society. Always has been though.

The biggest problem that the elite groups have had in the past has been individualism. I've always said that because it's true. They actually published articles about that, on the high levels. Even United Nations said the problem really was the individual, not the mass. It's easier to control the masses because they want to all belong, and dress and look the same and say the same things. They have no individuality, you see. Therefore, it was easy to control the masses in what they call a democracy because they will follow the experts, the authorized experts that are put out for them to follow. Bertrand Russell who was a big promoter of all this whole system, and we're living in today, including the culture creation part of it and all the changes that went from his era. All through the 30s and 40s and 50s and 60s up to the present, it was all designed by elite groups by the way. I've gone through that and you'll find the articles I've read before on the air in the archive section at .com. So you can go on a big journey of all this history and the only satisfaction you have is knowing it yourself.

Because as I say, the facts don't counts when missions have been accomplished, and other ones which are under way right now will be accomplished. Because there's no input from the public, they don't want that to start with. The public too, have really given over their responsibility for their own actions, individually, to the mass, which is then put forth through the government that they think they have elected. So things work awfully, awfully well for those who plan the future, you know, the men of vision as they call themselves, amongst other terms as well.

But, we're taught to deny our own senses and experiences. For instance, I've kept my own charts of the weather this winter, as I did last year too. I've got the different stations that put out the weather reports, even from the government, and every night consistently they've underreported my area and the temperatures it went down to at night, and during the day too for that matter, but at night, by iat least 15 to 25°. Every night. And yet their newscasters will tell them on their TV, everybody watches TV, I don't, and everybody looks it up on the Internet too, and they'll tell you from about three different stations, this is what it's going to be tonight. And you know something, the next morning they never revise what it actually was. They keep it at what they predicted it was going to be from the previous evening or afternoon and that's what goes down in the books as fact, you see. So in April they'll come out and tell us, this was the warmest winter we've had for centuries, even though we thought it was colder. They can play with your head so easily today, and folk believe what they're told. But, that will come. You wait and see. You wait and see, yeah.

As I say, I keep my own temperature gauges here, my thermometers, non-electronic by the way. I have different ones outside and I measure them every night. For instance, on Friday night they said it was going to be about a minus of maybe 4°, maybe 6° maximum, Fahrenheit where I am. And all through the night and the next morning, into 8 o'clock in the morning, it was 24° below, Fahrenheit. How can you make such miscalculations? And why don't you adjust it in the morning for the official records? Well you see, you've all to be taught that the planet is warming up because of climate change. Because big, big things are planned this year. They've been years in the planning but now they must get it all signed into action, so that you pay, pay, pay, pay and change your entire way of living, folks. From everything you purchase to the energy taxes that will be on every little bar of chocolate, and what it cost to make that thing and so on, right down to your heating, cooking, everything is going to be taxed. Everything that is transported is going to be taxed into the ground basically, and I'll touch on that tonight.

But as I say, most folk will never really go along with their own experiences. Even when they're freezing to death they'll say, well they told us it was quite mild last night, it must have just been me, I had to put on about three different sweaters, you know, it must have been me. And that's how we do it, you see. That's how we do it. It's so simple, isn't it? Now, when you accept their word, on anything today, how many things are they lying to you about? Think about that. All for a particular agenda, and there's many agendas on the go at the same time for the planned society, the scientifically controlled society, by experts and social workers and psychologists and psychiatrists and neuroscientists and behaviorists, from birth to death, all coming together, all these hundreds and maybe even thousands of things worldwide coming together right now. And you're kept alive with trivia. And you're kept alive with lots of entertainment, and what the stars are doing, and who is having an affair with who and all that rubbish. Because you're being kept off of the track, the track that might take you somewhere. You're off on the way sides and that's where they want you to be, a nonparticipant, and even conscious awareness on a daily basis of how things really are where it's going and why it's all planned that way and who's behind it all.

So really, the facts don't count when you're talking to the masses as such. I mentioned the book years ago, I think it was called Straight and Crooked Thinking which went through the logic used by people themselves. It was a very old book, it was written about maybe the late 1800s, early 1900s. The author went into how if you had a tramp in Hyde Park in England, London, on a soapbox in the park spouting off his particular philosophy, most folk would ridicule him and laugh at him and all the rest of them. But if you've got the same guy and dressed him up and gave him a shave and all the rest of it, and then put out lots of propaganda to make him into a new Einstein, before you ever saw him, that's how they launched Einstein, the same way, I don't know if he was a tramp or not… But anyway, the fact is you can dress him up, dress him in good close, make him a genius before anyone has ever seen him, and then put him on some big live show, people will listen to every word he says, when he is spouting the same philosophy as he would be as a tramp in the park on a soapbox.

There's nothing they don't know about the general population, how our minds work. So when they bring out professionals, supposedly, who all have political agendas, and they know where their income is coming from too and where their careers are going if they play ball, especially today, then there's always a different agenda behind whatever they're telling you. Always, folks, that's just the way it is. But as I say, the masses will never really want to know because they have a choice then. If they know and understand things and they don't like it, it makes them uncomfortable and they will shy away from anything which is uncomfortable to them. They seek what they are told today is positive... seek the positive and don't look at the negative. In other words, it's the same old story as they have used for years but now it's under positive and negative. It's optimism. Be optimistic about things… you know, and leave things of great decisions and weighty matters to your betters, the ones who live above you, and don't use toilets like you do, etc. etc, they're way beyond that, they're so wonderful and intelligent, etc., from better bloodlines and all that stuff. That's how you are trained to see these people, and that's what you believe as well.

But they are just people with agendas. They know where their bread is buttered, all these different scientists. Scientists come out, remember, hoping, when they come out from the University and got other degrees and so on, they hope to get grants to study something, like the mating habits of the fiery ant or something. I mean, who cares what it is. They're hoping to get grants and have a long, long career living off, generally its taxpayer-funded grants and some private corporations if there's some military use to it. So when you have a climate thing on the go that's to change all of society, then all the approved scientists that they have, who are authorized to be on board, in other words, they are all the positive ones who go along with the agenda.

What's amazing too, is that from the earliest dawn of history, from the ancient times, they've talked about the effect of the sun and the heat and warmth and how it gives us life and all the rest of it and crops grow. The sun hasn't even been factored into climate change, at all. It's absent from all their climate change models on their wonderful little computers. Because there's a different agenda here. The agenda is to blame all of YOU and to get you to all believe that you are the fault of it all and what's happening. Nothing to do with weather manipulation or anything else, it's all your fault.

It's a sad thing to say about professional people, but it's all around you. There's not a doctor around, I'm sure, who hasn't seen the youngsters get their triple MMR's and so on, and X amount of them come back within a week, the child has suddenly regressed and getting more infantile rather than starting to grow up a little. But they can always placate themselves and keep themselves happy, exonerate themselves I should say, by saying, well you know, the medical book, the medical history, the experts at the top, above them, would tell us if there's new information, so therefore it couldn't have been that that caused it. Humans are wonderful at saving their own ego, and especially their paycheck and status, and that goes for any profession, including, including the whole climate scam, folks. Because so much is riding on the scientific control of the world, and the scientists all depend on their big benefactors, the money bags at the top, who really are their employer and their boss. It's a sad thing, people will compromise anything, and they very often do, bend incredible truths to suit their own personal egos and paychecks.

I have always noticed throughout my life that once big agendas are at stake then, if they can accomplish their mission, like 9/11 or whatever, even though the Project for a New American Century group published all the countries they wanted to take down back in the 90s, they published it in the 90s, and it went all forward the same way it was supposed to go after that, after 9/11. It doesn't matter, you see, as long as the mission gets accomplished, once it starts, you see, that's it. You won't stop it or change it by knowing all the facts. And all the facts you can find afterwards, won't change anything, it's already happened, it doesn't matter, the goal has been achieved, the mission is accomplished. And lies are always used to achieve great goals, by those who rule over the masses. It's always the same story down through history.

When you think of all the terms you hear, at least weekly, often daily, on the news, until you are accustomed with terms that you don't really understand. But when they bring agendas out they bring forth that part of the plan with that term in it, it seems quite natural because you've heard it said so many times. So repetition, much-speaking makes it really happen, makes it more real and more factual and true, to you, even though you have never looked into it at all. Back in the 60s and the 70s it was going to be the Ice Age, the coming Ice Age. Of course everyone gets in on the act, the professors got in on the act then too, oh there's too many folk, and my God, and blah blah blah, and most of them will perish because there's too many folk to start with, and so on. When the Ice Age didn't materialize, and it actually warmed up for a few years, then they went back to the drawing board, gave it to the Club of Rome to think up a good idea, and they said that man would be the problem, it would be global warming and so on, that would be the problem. In both cases Hollywood gets in on the act too, to terrify you with the end of the world scenarios, you're going to fry to death or you're going to freeze to death, etc. Make Room, Make Room, which was the book which they made into the movie version entitled Soylent Green. It really was make room… the whole point of it was that there's too many people, too many of YOU, who are not so important, you see.

This is what of course the climate treaty, to be signed this year, this big one, one of the grand finales you might say, on the whole path to all the other ones that will add to it down the road. But this is the big one to get all the money together and to really start changing how we live individually and collectively as well, and what we'll get taught in the schools and what you're going to get brainwashed with as well. This article here talks about the Paris climate talks....

Paris Climate Talks:
Canada's Contribution To UN Conference Dependent On Provinces
huffingtonpost.ca / Bruce Cheadle / 03/03/2015

(Alan: In Canada they have states which are called provinces. It's beautiful too, where even the United Nations years ago talked about working on your local areas, etc., for all these changes they wanted to come into effect down the road, and they started all the different NGOs which are funded by the big foundations, plus your taxpayers money, all private organizations by the way that help plan and push the future that you're going to live through and all the changes they want to bring in. So here you are, Canada's contribution to the United Nations conference depend on the provinces. This article here goes on to talk about...)

OTTAWA - Canada's contribution to a major United Nations climate change conference later this year will be heavily dependent on actions by provincial and territorial governments.

Provincial governments confirm Environment Canada has been collecting greenhouse-gas reduction measures (A: …so greenhouse-gas reduction measures, right.... What they call greenhouse gases today are natural things that save you from getting fried by radiation. Anyway…) from across the country as the federal government works toward an end-of-March deadline to ante up for the summit in Paris. (A: …later this year.)

"Canada is actively preparing its intended nationally determined contribution," a spokesman for Environment Minister Leona Aglukkaq said in a recent email.

"As this is a national contribution, the provinces and territories hold many levers for taking action on emissions, so the minister is seeking feedback from her counterparts on how initiatives in their jurisdictions will factor into Canada's overall commitment."

(A: What's the point in voting for national government, or even your local government, when they're all signed on already into a private corporation called the United Nations, and all its different departments, which are set up by the biggest corporations on the planet? You see, what's the point in it? You've got no input into it at all. All the NGOs come forward, they authorize what they call environmental groups, you know, people who care about the environment, like the rest of you don't care about the environment? Everything is a joke, but it doesn't matter, the jokes are all part of the big agenda.)

Aglukkaq would not agree to an interview on the subject over the last month and her office provided no additional details. (A: So that's how much you get in a democracy, no information at all.) Nor is it yet certain the federal government will meet the March 31 deadline set by the Paris conference organizers.

But with the Conservatives under pressure for refusing to regulate the oil and gas sector — the country's fastest-growing source of greenhouse gas emissions — federal-provincial co-operation may be Ottawa's only way to save face on the world stage. (A: So they're trying to say, well it's just the provinces and the feds, you see, it's nothing to do with you, all the effects of this, it's got nothing to do with you, when they start passing all these laws and taxes and so on.)

Countries participating in COP21, as December's UN climate conference is known, have been asked to relay their "intended nationally determined contributions" this month. (A: Did you hear anything about that? Has there been any surveys put out to the general population? You don't matter, the proles don't count, you see, in reality.) These will serve as a starting point for negotiations that are supposed to conclude with a successor to the 2009 Copenhagen Accord.

Under the Copenhagen agreement, the Harper government committed Canada to cut greenhouse gas emissions 17 per cent below 2005 levels by the year 2020 — a national target even Environment Canada has concluded won't be met.
(A: Well, they could do that if they ask half of us to just commit suicide and don't breathe anymore.)

However, some of Canada's biggest provinces are meeting or exceeding their own goals for GHG (A: …global greenhouse gases.) reductions and are increasingly taking matters into their own hands.

Quebec Premier Philippe Couillard was in France this week where French President Francois Hollande publicly stated he would "ensure that Quebec is not only present, but also that it has the opportunity to make its voice heard," at the climate conference.

There's been "a real shift in where the energy is," ever since B.C., Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec were among a group of subnational governments who met on the sidelines of a climate conference in Lima, Peru, last December, said Glen Murray, Ontario's minister of environment and climate change.

The premiers will meet next month in Quebec City at the invitation of Couillard to discuss climate change and a national energy strategy.

A wider group of sub-nationals, including California and several New England states, will meet in July in Toronto, where they hope participants from across the Americas can agree on an 80-per-cent GHG reduction target from 1990 levels by the year 2050.

"At the national level what we are hoping — and I think minister Aglukkaq has opened up the door to this now — is that those provincial priorities and plans become reflected in Canada's contribution," for Paris, Murray said in an interview.

David Heurtel, Quebec's minister for sustainable development, environment and climate change, said international climate deals can't be "coming from the top down."

"What we are hoping, and what we've demanded, is that the provincial processes already in place ... that these not only be taken into consideration by the federal government but also that we work collectively," in setting Canada's contribution for the next global climate treaty, Heurtel said in an interview Tuesday. (A: It just goes on…)

"My belief very strongly is that it will be subnational governments and corporations and the NGO community (A: …that's all these private groups, all funded by the big foundations…) that will deliver this."

2015 pivotal for finalizing universal climate change agreement,
Ban tells Member States

23 February 2015 – This year is pivotal for global action on climate change, United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said today in New York, emphasising that all the major advances of 2014 have set the stage for success in 2015.

(A: I hate reading these things, they're just basically handouts for the press, that's what they are. It doesn't go into all the different agreements they have already pre-negotiated with all your presidents and prime ministers, to do with you and your taxes. And here's how they phrase it…)

"Our challenge now is clear: to finalize a meaningful, universal agreement on climate change," (A: …Gods of the Air indeed, hey.) Mr. Ban told Member States at a briefing on relevant progress as momentum builds towards a meeting to be held in Paris this December, when leaders are expected to reach a landmark treaty.

"Addressing climate change is essential for realizing sustainable development. If we fail to adequately address climate change, we will be unable to build a world that supports a life of dignity for all," (A: …all who?) the Secretary-General warned.

Joining Mr. Ban at the briefing was President of the UN General Assembly, Sam Kutesa, as well as the Permanent Representatives of Peru and France, who organized the gathering.

Today's briefing follows the 20th Conference of the Parties (COP) (A: COP they call it, Conference of the Parties…) to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (A: …that's the 20th conference over the years.) (UNFCC), held in Lima, last December where Member States reached the "Lima Call for Climate Action", paving the way for a new, ambitious and universally-binding climate agreement to be adopted in Paris (COP21) this December.

(A: And when you go into it they talk about, they briefly touch on the cost, you see, the rest of it is just rubbish and we've heard it all before, and you get a lot more here again as they push all their stuff through, and down your throats. But they go on about the finance part of it, who's going to finance it. YOU are going to finance it all. It was always planned, this, 20 odd years ago, even before that, you are going to finance it all. Because the whole point is to change your whole way of living, and they needed an excuse to do it so this is the one that they picked. And that's what the Club of Rome went into, that was their job, to pick reasons for bringing this whole system in, of control, what would they believe, you know, what can we use? This is what they hit on. Anyway it says here…)

To that end, Mr. Ban urged all pledging countries to deliver their contributions as soon as possible. "Climate finance is critical, not only for catalyzing action, but for building the political trust needed to reach a universal agreement in Paris," he said, emphasizing that developed countries need to set out a clear trajectory for achieving the goal of mobilizing $100 billion per year by 2020. And resilience must be strengthened, especially in the small island states and least developed countries.

…no time to waste and so on, all the usual stuff they tell you, you know, time is of the urgency. This is the stuff that's going to… They're trying to keep it out of your heads altogether, the cost factor of all this stuff. In fact, most of you don't even know what it's about because you've never followed any of it, you see, and what's really behind it all. But I've done all that, again if you go into the archive section of .com, I've given lots of talks over the years on the facts that have been published on all of this, these particular topics and so on, where they wanted to take this, why, etc.

But this is the rubbish they give the public. And if you notice, there's no public input into this at all. There's no, none of you give an opinion on it, none of you get any say into all of this, you're just out of the picture altogether. So what's the point in voting local politicians into anything? when they are all on board already under different agreements and treaties to go along with all this stuff. And it's like this with a lot of the big agendas, the big global agenda, it's all worked the same way, you see.

Now what the West, West of Britain that is, has to learn, rather quickly, is that just like Britain that now has thousands of folk, and I've read the stories over the years, thousands dying off in their own homes, not homeless but in their own homes, because they don't have enough heating credits for the winter and they freeze to death. That's going to come across the world now as they cut out coal fires and everything else and so on. Eventually it will come down to so many credits under this guise of socialism for all and managing us all, so many credits to heat yourselves. Whatever method you use it's going to be restricted to a certain amount, except for depending on your status within the community. Are you essential to the community or are you not essential? That already happens in hospitals, how they label you for resuscitation, etc. So anyway, that's how it's all going to come down the pike with all of this, the different taxes, energy, carbon and so on, that you're going to have to pay, very shortly actually, and it will affect your whole way of living, and in every area. As I say, everything that transported the cost will fly up and you pay at the bottom. You pay for everything, the cost for all manufacture, all the way to delivery. You pay for it all of course.

And another technique they've used for a long, long time is creating National Forests, National Parks, etc. When you look at the UN treaties on these parks, they called them biospheres at one time, that was one of the things that they tried to popularize from the United Nations. But it's just the same old thing of putting vast areas of really great resources, rich resources, aside and if possible, if there's folk on it they want to get them off the land by different means and methods, and label it really as a preserve paradise basically, except when you go into the different treaties they sign at the United Nations for these, they have special designations for particular big massive international corporations to come in and drill and take out the resources, if need be, you see. It's just that you can't walk through it and so on. But this article is just one of many over the years and it says…

Colorado canyon latest Obama "monument" land grab cfact.org / February 24, 2015 / Bonner Cohen

Continuing its pattern of bypassing Congress and acting unilaterally through administrative fiat, the Obama White House in February designated three new areas as “National Monuments.”

While two of the designations — one in Illinois, the other in Hawaii — involve relatively small parcels of land, the designation of 21,000 acres of Brown’s Canyon in Colorado represents a significant federal lockup of land.

The move was welcomed by (A: ..again, that religious group called…) environmentalists and (A: …that other religious group called…) Democrats. Sen. Michael Bennett (D-CO) told the Washington Times (Feb. 19) that the canyon has “a rugged and unique beauty that attracts outdoor enthusiasts from around the world.” Bennett added that “Coloradans have been very clear they wanted this protection (A: So they wanted it, the people, they wanted it, you see. Sure.), along with assurances that existing uses will be protected.”

But Rep. Ken Buck (R-CO) doesn’t trust the Administration’s “assurances,” and he scolded the President for making the designation without the consent of Congress. (A: I have to laugh listening to a lot of shows when Americans talk about their rights and so on, and the checks and balances and all of that. And you watch the way it's been run, like dictatorships, for such a long time. And now they keep talking about getting America back. I always think, back to what? to when? You know. Anyway this Congressman Ken Buck says...) “He is not king. No more acting like King Barrack,” Buck told the Times. “This is not how we do things in the U.S. Actions like this lead the American people to view Mr. Obama’s presidency as an imperial presidency.” (A: Well, it doesn't really matter if nothing is done about it.)

Contrary to Buck’s assertion, this is exactly how thing are done in the U.S. Beginning with the designation of Utah’s Grand Staircase Escalante as a national monument in 1996, the Clinton and Obama Administrations have used the Antiquities Act of 1906 to create national monuments without the formal approval of state officials or members of the congressional delegation from state where designations were made. And in its eight years in office, the Bush Administration made no effort to overturn monument designation on federal land in Utah.

The Colorado Cattlemen’s Association (CAA) doesn’t put much stock in the Administration’s assurances, either. Together with the Public Lands Council (PLC), the cattleman CAA, according to fowlertribune.com (Feb. 22), wants the following points clarified in the monument designation:

(A: Then they go through it all, what they want done, the people who are going to be affected by all this.)

•Motorized access must continue to be allowed for permit administration, range improvement, and water maintenance. (A: Well, that's very important if you got livestock.)

•Explicit language must be written into the designation that allows cattle and sheep producers to trail their livestock to and from their federal grazing allotments through portions of the designated area.

And that goes on and on. But the thing is, this is that happening for... forever. You're constantly living… I keep telling you, you’re living through a script, a massive agenda, that was set in stone before you were born. And that's how things really are run, like a big long-term business goal. That's how it's done.

This article here is about... the culture falling apart, although it doesn't say that because it gives out this rah-rah type of article here.

New sex-ed curriculum gets mixed reviews from parents
thestar.com / March 12, 2015

(A: Now, the way that the culture industry has always worked, for this particular, again, the same agenda, it's had many facets, it's all-encompassing, is to push the envelope in any particular area, a bit at a time, a bit at a time, many times in each generation, and accumulatively you can’t complain about anything down the road because you've all adapted into the new normals, new normalities, new norms I call them.)

Some parents say the new curriculum introduces material at too young an age — including “sexual pictures”/sexting in Grade 4 and in Grade 7, information about sexually transmitted diseases and oral and anal sex.

(A: It gives you the usual stuff about who's complaining and so on.)

Ontario's new sex ed curriculum was unveiled Monday to mixed reviews from parents, with some lauding changes to the almost two-decade-old material as long overdue, (A: Yeah, but two decades ago they were pushing the envelope then to get the present stuff in. You understand? And it wasn't coming from the parents.) and others vowing a showdown over what they consider age-inappropriate content.

Education Minister Liz Sandals expected some parental opposition but reiterated that the materials will be implemented this fall as planned.

"I anticipate there will be members of various religions who may object to one thing or another . . . but the curriculum is the curriculum that will be taught in Ontario schools," said Sandals.

(A: It's amazing. Again too, this is the technique that they use in the Delphi technique and various other techniques. So only people who are into religions may object. I mean, you won't get other folk who classify themselves as normal in some way or another objecting either? Is that the whole idea? You see how they narrow it all down. And they've already given negative connotations to religions, you see, so you don't want to get lumped in with them do you?)

On Monday, the Liberals unveiled the first update to the province's health curriculum since 1998. So antiquated was the existing syllabus that it did not even reflect the legalization of same-sex marriage in Canada more than a decade ago. The update also covers cyber safety, including sexting, as well as consent, and puts the curriculum in line with what's being taught in other provinces. (A: So if it's being taught in other provinces it's okay here. Is that the idea? They use the same technique and excuse when they do it nationally and say, well this country is doing it, you know. Well, that makes it all right. Whatever it is… whatever the topic... These are all techniques, you see. It's like movies, I've mentioned how formulas are used in movies, to write the movies, it's always the same stories rehashed and you must go through the formula. It's the same thing with the big agendas, they have formulas, you see, and they use them over and over again.)

Toronto mom Stephanie Baptist, a counsellor with Toronto Public Health, said it's important to talk to kids about things like sexting in Grade 4 because even though they likely don't have a cellphone, they do have access to devices "early, and often" — and often without supervision.

Parents, she added, will always play a role no matter what schools teach. (A: Really?!? Now, Bertrand Russell who helped design the whole system of this type of indoctrination where the state would give the new moralities to the children, he experimented in his experimental schools in the 20s and 30s, with permission of the crown, ha, he got a charter to try that because otherwise it would be illegal, the things that he wanted to push in his little schools. He said at the time, with the proper socialist type of indoctrination, a scientific indoctrination, when the children go back to their parents in the evening or afternoon, whatever input that comes from their parents will be totally ignored and the state will give them their new morality. So again, everything is the same formula, same big agendas.)

"Curriculum comes from the province — but the values always come from the family," (A: What a joke.) she said.

However, as many as 2,000 parents plan to protest outside Queen's Park on Tuesday, upset at what they feel is too much information at too young an age, as well as a lack of meaningful parental consultation.

(A: Then they give you more about who is complaining and so on and so on, different individual stories. But what they did say here is, some of the people who complained said...)

In a telephone interview, Sandals said the curriculum underwent significant consultation with many groups over the years, (A: What groups? What groups are they talking about?) and Premier Kathleen Wynne told reporters Monday the government is "very committed to this."

Sandals said she has not labelled parents who object as zealots — that characterization has come from the media. (A: See, they all work together.)

“We understand that parents are concerned and they want to know what their kids are learning,” she said, adding materials were created by experts (A: ...again, experts, it's okay then.) and based on evidence.

The curriculum that will be in use in schools by this September is largely the same as what was proposed five years ago, then scrapped by then-premier Dalton McGuinty due to an outcry by a vocal minority of social conservatives. (A: …a minority… and these conservatives, they’re bad, like religious folk, you see. Everything you read has got the psycholinguistics in it. And other folk are complaining about it too, another guy…)

Farina Siddiqui, co-ordinator of the Greater Toronto group Coalition of Concerned Parents, will take part in Tuesday’s protest and said it includes parents “of faith, of no faith — from every walk of life.”

“The ministry is calling us a fringe group. We are parents; we are the most important stakeholders in our children’s lives.” (A: Again, they'll be called Luddites and all the rest of it, you see.)

Wynne, who has long championed a revised curriculum, told reporters everything in the update is “age appropriate” and “it’s done in a way (A: …children. I always use the word children instead of using this term kids. A kid is young goat, remember.) [children]can understand,” adding it’s important for [children] as young as Grade 1 to learn about “different lifestyles and different family configurations.”

(A: You see what I'm saying? See, indoctrination must always start very young. And they always make sure they update it according to their big plans for the future, what they want to change down the road, prepare those children who are going to have the big, big changes, you see, for what they are going to experience in life. We all had indoctrination's if you went to school. And what they're going to say here, and in their talks and so on, in their lectures is...)

Proper names for body parts and genitals will be taught in Grade 1 — something child-abuse investigators have long urged. (A: But they'll also use a lot of slang too, I'm sure. And they already do the slang stuff, in their lectures.)

The first mention of the concept of same-sex relationships will be introduced to Grade 3 students. (A: So when they are about the age of 8 they'll be taught about same-sex relationships.)

Grade 4 students will learn about online safety, text messaging and “sexual pictures,” as well as puberty.

Grade 6 students will be taught what masturbation is and will learn about healthy relationships and consent. (A: Well again, everything is a healthy relationship now, according to this curriculum, isn't it?)

Grade 7 students will be warned about the risks of “sexting” as well as informed about sexually transmitted diseases and oral and anal sex. (A: But along with that of course will be all the pleasures of it, at the same time, I'm sure of that, because that's really what all these big agendas are for. And if you go into the history of all this kind of stuff to do with sex, it's very, very old, with their big agendas.)

This is an interesting article here because you see, this is a guy who's been implicated in helping design this, even though the present group dealing with it say he didn't have a hand in designing this. This man is called Ben Levin and it says…

Ben Levin case casts shadow over new sex ed curriculum
torontosun.com / Christina Blizzard / February 18, 2015

Her crackdown on the mischief at the Toronto District School Board is bold and long overdue.

Her grasp of education is a result of her many years as a trustee with the Ontario Public School Boards Association.

That said, I don’t envy her the task ahead of bringing in the new sex ed curriculum.

The Liberals botched their previous attempt in 2010 to re-vamp the curriculum.

It was flawed, poorly thought out and wildly age-inappropriate. (A: I guess it’s all appropriate now though.)

It was seen as being a way of using the school curriculum to promote a social agenda. (A: My goodness, it was that blatant, that folk actually said this is a social agenda here.)

Now we find out that the deputy minister of education at that time, Ben Levin, is preparing to plead guilty to child porn charges. (A: This is the guy who helped set it up.)

According to my Toronto Sun colleague, Joe Warmington, Levin’s made a plea arrangement with the Crown and will formally acknowledge his guilt to three of seven charges when he goes to court March 3.

He’s seeking character references to support him with the hope of getting a lenient sentence.

The timing couldn’t be worse for Wynne, Sandals, et al.

Just as they’re rolling out the new sex ed curriculum, we’re reminded that the person at the helm of the ministry the last time around is facing serious sex charges relating to children.

In his column Wednesday, Warmington reports one of the charges is counselling a sexual assault.

Levin advises prospective character witnesses to say: “I am aware that during these chats he counselled an undercover police officer posing as the mother of a child to sexually assault a child for him,” in his letter to his would-be supporters.

This casts the whole sex ed curriculum in a new light.

While Sandals said she believes Levin had, “very little” to do with the development of the new program, it’s impossible to believe he didn’t have input. (A : He was the deputy minister.at the time.)

Thousands of ordinary parents — not “homophobic bigots,” as some would have you believe — raised concerns that the curriculum was age inappropriate. It introduced sexual concepts, such as anal and oral intercourse at too early an age. It was outrage over those kinds of missteps that forced former Premier Dalton McGuinty to scrap the curriculum.

Few parents argue sex ed should not be taught in schools.

They just want it to be done in a sensitive way and at an age when children have started to ask questions about it.

Late Wednesday, a spokesman for Sandals put out an e-mail to “clarify,” Sandals’, comments.

“Ben Levin had no involvement in the development of the content of the curriculum. Curriculum is developed by subject experts (A: [Alan chuckles.] …subject experts…) and is based on research in addition to consultations with a wide array of people, including teachers, parents, and students,” said Nilani Logeswaran.

Yep, but he was still the deputy minister. (A: [Alan laughing.] That’s in reply to what she said.)

So it doesn't really matter. I mean, the parents themselves have been contaminated with years of indoctrination through their movies and what they're watching, until it each envelope is pushed. They don't really object to it because they're watching such... stuff that was banned years ago, in their general homes across the country. Because that was the big agenda, you see. I've done many talks on this before. So it doesn't really matter, does it? It's going to go ahead regardless. Then this article here says…

Former deputy education minister
Benjamin Levin pleads guilty to child porn charges
thestar.com / March 12, 2015

Former Ontario deputy education minister Benjamin Levin has pleaded guilty to three child pornography-related charges in a Toronto court.

Levin, who was also a University of Toronto professor, entered a guilty plea for making written child pornography, counselling a person to commit a sexual assault, and possession of child pornography.

He was originally charged with seven child-pornography-related offences.

The investigation that led to Levin's July 2013 arrest began in mid-2012 after officials in Toronto were contacted by authorities in New Zealand and later police in London, Ontario.

From late 2004 to early 2007, Levin held the post of deputy education minister, and was on Premier Kathleen Wynne's transition team as she took office.

He also served as Manitoba's deputy minister of advanced education and deputy minister of education, training and youth between 1999 and 2002.

Levin has been back in the spotlight in recent days as Ontario released an updated sex-education curriculum.

It goes on and on, but this is nothing unusual, because that's generally the one who leads the charges, who are actually selected by their bosses, high above them, to lead these particular charges, to promote certain things in society. It's quite amusing to me because there's nothing new in it at all. I've watched this my whole life long, as they push the envelope and push the envelope. And I've read all the so-called experts at the time who said how they would have to do it and how they would have to push it in certain ways and so on and what the real objectives were. I mean, Russell himself said, if they can promote prepubertal sex, hypersensitize folk to have sexual activity and make it really addictive, almost like an addictive thing, then the people would not get married down the road and they would not have children. That was part of the big eugenics program at the time.

Now, whenever you see a name in the paper of the social advocate for something, a guy who has really been promoted at the top and universities and political departments too for your government, you have to really delve into their record. Because they are not just local, you see, or even national. They're international, and what they do nationally for their different agendas is done internationally at the same time. Now, this particular guy I was talking about is actually promoted by Harvard Education Publishing Group. One of the books this particular guy, who is now charged with this pedophilia and so on, child porn, etc., he's Harvard. It says…

How to Change 5000 Schools
A Practical and Positive Approach for Leading Change at Every Level
hepg.org [Harvard Education Publishing Group]

(A: A very interesting title actually. Because you see, these are all 'in' words for the pervs that push everything. And the whole of society is changing, including all the green movements and the climate change movements. Change. Remember Obama's election run?... Change is good. And the schmucks didn't even know what he meant by it, you know. These are all the in terms that are used for pushing, oh, big agendas, the global agendas through. So this book that Ben Levin wrote, this professor/political minister and advisor and educational advisor, isn't just used in Canada, this stuff that he's put out there, here is the Harvard publishing group promoting all his stuff.)

How to Change 5000 Schools
A Practical and Positive Approach for Leading Change at Every Level
Ben Levin

In How to Change 5000 Schools, Ben Levin, former deputy minister of education for the province of Ontario, draws on his experience overseeing major systemwide education reforms in Canada and England (A: So he's involved with the English stuff.) to set forth a refreshingly positive, pragmatic, and optimistic approach to leading educational change at all levels.

(A: Then they go on to praise it.)

Praise

This book provides a powerfully optimistic view of what can happen when policy makers, system leaders (A: You should look into these terms, folks. Things that you think you know are, really, you've got the wrong impression of.) system leaders, and educators operate around common point of view about student learning and school improvement.

And so on and so on. So it's all testimonials from different professors across the States, Harvard and different places and so on, and Canada, the different university professors praising this guy's work, you see, this guy who is accused of various, a kind of perversion at the moment. Mind you, pedophilia and child sex won't be bad connotations in the future because they'll do away with it altogether when it becomes normalized. It will be a normal thing, and they're actually pushing for that normalization… Well, if the child consented it's okay… I don't know how you can consent when you two or three years old, but there you go.

That's the real world we live in, it's pretty disgusting. But you know, you can do anything with the general population if you understand the psychology and behavioristic techniques to use on them, psycho-neurology, psycho-linguistics, all of that kind of stuff, Pavlovian training. It's so easy to do. And as I say, you just incrementally do it to each generation, and within each generation you keep pushing the envelope, in a whole bunch of different areas, whether you want them all to live in little 10' x 10' homes in the future, get them used to the idea by promoting it as a great way to save us all, or, freezing to death to save the world. You can promote it, push, push, push, you see, that's how it's done. Big agendas, all from the same sources by the way, all of them. Any particular agenda that has gone off on a different track wouldn't even get past the gates if it wasn't authorized from the top.

And as we go down the tubes and they've got all the bail-ins approved and signed into law and in effect, they can use them. Because they knew all this when they signed the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs (GATT) by the World Trade Organization and so on, all private organizations belonging to the same group that set up the United Nations. But when they passed all that and had this free trade agreement, where really the first world countries had to pay all the taxes for exports and everything, but the countries that are up-and-coming as they call them – they still call China a developing country, even though it's got the biggest manufacturing, is THE manufacturer for the world, they have to pay hardly any taxes because they got all these benefits and so on. That's why they can also keep their emissions pretty high and poison us because they are given so many exceptions, but you in the first would countries are not allowed that anymore. They knew that we would get to this stage today where we're going to be broke in the West as all your jobs go over to China. They knew that before they signed all these agreements. It was decided and talked about and debated long before you heard of GATT, NAFTA, free trade, a World Trade Organization, or anything else. They knew what they were going to bring the Western world into because service economies can only float for a little while, when you're actually producing nothing, you're just buying things in and reselling them down to the bottom.

So the countries now are, because governments never have enough money, they've never balanced any budget, and there's no intention to ever balance any budget, never was, never ever was. But here is from the Chronicle Herald. It says Ottawa's, (A: Ottawa is Canada's capital, or government.)

Ottowa's GM shares could help balance budget
thechronicleherald.ca / ANDY BLATCHFORD THE CANADIAN PRESS / February 22, 2015

OTTAWA (CP) — The Harper government's push to deliver a balanced budget (A: You hear that your whole lifelong but they never balance anything.) despite the burden of low oil prices has attracted fresh attention to a potential stockpile of federal cash: a multi-billion-dollar taxpayer stake in the auto business. (A: Most folk don't even know that your money was put into the auto business to bail them out. Just like the banks. Even in Canada, especially in Canada, they kept it quiet that they bailed out a whole bunch of banks in Canada.)

The government's remaining 73.4 million shares in General Motors are now worth more than $3.4 billion in total, thanks to the combined effect of a solid stock price and a weakened Canadian dollar. (A: See how they work everything in to get the right prices and everything else, including devaluing your dollar, for the right things they want to do, for the big boys who own the country.)

In fact, once the Canadian exchange rate is factored in on the U.S.-priced stock, its per-share value is higher than it has been in more than five years. (A: Isn't that just a wonderful coincidence?)

The government needs to make $4 billion in proceeds from its remaining shares to break even on its initial investment (A: I love how they call it, when they bail them all out, hey, it was a government investment.), which would leave it only $600 million short if it sold the stock at current values. (A: So they're selling it off and they'll still have $600 million to pay, to break even, which of course comes from you again.)

Earlier this month, Ottawa became the only North American government still holding stock acquired as part of the 2009 effort to bail out the then-sputtering automaker.

Ontario's recent sale of its last GM holdings may add to the federal government's temptation to offload some, or all, of its own stock.

The U.S. government sold the last of its stake in December 2013.

So, these are what are called assets, where the taxpayers money is used on any big project they call that the assets, and its national assets, etc. Sometimes they'll say essential assets, like roads and things like that, which they have been selling off for years, especially in the States and now Britain. You know, the taxpayer pays for all the construction and then they hand it all over for a penny, ha, to their pals to buy off and make it private, then the public keep paying the upkeep of it, maintenance and so on, and the boys who now own it get all the profits. That's what they call public/private partnerships.

Then this article here from the Toronto Star says:

Selling off assets a bad bargain for city: Hume
thestar.com / March 12, 2015 / Christopher Hume

From Mayor John Tory on down, Torontonians nod approvingly whenever the suggestion is made to sell public assets to pay for public debt.

At first glance this makes sense, especially to those who want government finances run like those of the mythical hard-working Canadian family — one envelope for cash in, a second for cash out — that never spends more than it makes.

Despite the fact that this is delusional — personal debt in Canada has never been so high — it is the starting point for any number of political pronouncements and the reason so many seem based on fantasy.

But now the public sector isn't just open for business, it's up for sale. Faced with growing deficits and shrinking taxes — taxes are bad, bad, bad — governments are seeing what they have might fetch a buck. Ontario is mulling unloading that perennial cash cow, the LCBO (A: That's the liquor Canadian board organization. It's a Crown corporation they call it, a public asset.), to raise revenues that would help in the short run, that cost ever more.

The CBC is considering selling the Broadcast Centre, (A: That's the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.) its massive facility just north of the CN Tower, to make up for the massive cuts instituted by Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

The Toronto and District School Board is drawing up a list of buildings it can sell to cover its fiscal shortfall.

Toronto sidewalks have been rented to advertisers through a trumped up street-furniture program that delivers little more than constant commercials.

Subway stations as well as the sides of TTC rolling stock — buses, streetcars and subway — are now available to the highest bidder. A couple of years ago, the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation turned Union Station into a temporary likeness of a gambling casino.

Toronto even has an agency called Build Toronto, whose task is to find buyers for various city-owned properties. It lost money last year, of course, even though the local real-estate market is among the hottest in the world.

Ironically, perhaps, we could well come to thank Build Toronto one day for its incompetence; instead of selling land, the city should be buying it.

And this goes on into different things that have happened and what's happening as they sell off of these different things, which really belong supposedly to the general public for all the taxes you've been paying all along, you see.

And again, this article is really amazing too. When the housing bubble happened in the States, as they call it, the housing bubble, and they're selling all these subprime mortgages at vastly inflated prices, the factual prices of the homes, it's never really stopped Canada, you see, from doing the same thing. In Toronto it says...

The real cost of a $1 million home:
Toronto buyers resort to sub-prime loans as prices soar business.financialpost.com / Garry Marr / March 4, 2015

They've been warning them for the last three years that it’s way too overpriced, all their real estate. But there's too many dogs in the fight with this one, making high profits off it all to ever change it. But little shacks basically in Toronto can be worth $1 million now. They've been through this bubble before and it has busted before, but the same characters, the same dogs in the fight keep coming back with the same cons and get it going. It's quite something.

And I’d just like to, to end at all, I'll mention this article…

The terrifying “smart” city of the future
salon.com / Feb 28, 2015 / Allegra Kirkland, AlterNet

(A: This is from the magazine Salon, which is generally very left wing, it doesn't matter, the story is pretty good. It's a warning about what the smart city really means. It gives you an idea of how they are promoting at all.)

Imagine a world without waste, where the train always comes on time, where snow is plowed before it even stops falling and watchful surveillance cameras have sent rates of petty crime plunging.

And so on and so on, that's how it's being sold. But then it goes into how it's really taking away all your rights, and how really you have to have ID which is recognized in the main computers to allow you into buildings, and maybe stores down the road to even by what you need to live and so on. Nevermind all the multitude of cameras, absolutely everywhere, for constant surveillance. Constants, constant surveillance. Remember too, a smart city also means in-the-house surveillance as well.

See, tyrants at the top can never relax until they know what you've been doing every second of every day. That's what they really want, constant, constant surveillance. It's all pretty well here. It's going to be a lot worse, actually. But folk will adapt into it and it will be hell on earth. That's the big plan, you see, when all of you are monitored all the time, and the elite of course, the elite themselves are exempt from all of that. They have their places across the world in the country, they fly from one small airport to the other on private jets. They don't travel in the same systems that you travel in, or even the same roads in fact, some of them.

But this is... The future is planned. You're living through script. And people don't participate in designing their own future, their own future, their personal future, therefore others will do it for you. And they have done. That's why they like the mass man, that's why they promote this thing called democracy, and that's why they want you all to believe that you belong to the big group. You know, you dress the same, you have the same ideas, you have adopted the same views on everything, even the updates on them, and you’re politically correct, you see, you are the ideal citizen. It shows you how science can create it. It's done a fantastic job on most folk, who will actually blush if certain topics come into the conversation, just the names of things. Because they have been Pavlovian indoctrinated into responses that Pavlov would admire, they work awfully well. You can go back to your default position as other ones in the neuroscience field have talked about. You’re set with default positions so it stops you from going any further on a particular topic, or even thinking about it, or even inquiring about it. Beautiful isn't it, for those that rule that is.

From Hamish and myself from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I am Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 15, 2015. I'll bet many of you today are getting a bit happier that some of the snow around you is dissipating, in some regions. Where I am here it's been a few days, interspersed, at least a few days with partial melts and just above the freezing mark. But unfortunately the months and months of accumulated snow, with all of its accumulated geo-engineering material from the chem sprays that go on, and that will evaporate into the air, very concentrated stuff. Everyone's got coughs and hacks and odd sneezes or bronchial problems. And it's not bacterial or viral caused as far as I can tell, although that can set in certainly afterwards if the linings of your lungs or your trachea get raw. But at the moment it seems to be basically just the irritation on the linings from all the packed condensed alchemists' brew that's sitting there called snow today. But that's how it goes, isn't it, the new normal.

Everything is the new normal, you see. Unfortunately most folk adapt to it and think, well, it can't really be happening because they would tell us... You know, the media would tell us. They think the media's there to do their thinking and reasoning for them, because they've been trained to do so, just like Brzezinski said in the 1970s in his book Between Two Ages. Before that folk used to be kind of paranoid and suspicious about media, knowing they were owned by big corporations of course, big media moguls that were part of the establishment and they worked hand-in-glove with government agencies and so on to make sure we learn and believe the proper things to learn and believe, that are authorized by your own masters.

You'll find today there's no real opinion pieces anymore, no true opinion pieces I should say, by journalists, etc. because all of the laws have been changed too. We forget the Levinson inquiry and the laws that came out of that for journalists in Britain, the same across Australia and different places, Canada will be no different of course. Everything is a security matter today, you see, national security and so they can't tell you anything. But unfortunately so many of them, the journalists are quite happy to take their big paychecks and write, or just write and rewrite handouts given to them by the proper authorities.

Now, many years I've been talking either on the radio or doing blurbs or both. I've gone through the techniques used on conditioning you all along this gradual path; it's gradualism, you see. You're updated with the PC stuff, all their politically correct stuff of the particular week or year your living in today, and most folk adapt into it thinking it's all quite normal. They've been trained to think it's all normal. Many folk freak out, who haven't been conditioned and who think it's rather tragic what's been going on without their permission and things that are done to the people themselves. And yet the people themselves, the bulk of the population don't seem to care. They can't care because they were trained to think it's all natural somehow, and that superior people are managing our lives for us, what do we know, we're at the bottom, and they have adapted and accepted their updates without question. And to them they don't see what the fuss is if you bring facts and data to them, they don't want to hear it. They really can't understand what the fuss is about, they kind of look upon you as though you're kind of a curio and why are you upset about it, they've all accepted everything that's going on. And that's really how it is.

So don't tear your hair out if you can't get through to people because it's going to get harder and harder to find people who will listen. I've always said that the ones who receive information are the ones who have been open and looking for it, maybe their whole lives. Not in a desperate frantic search perhaps but they've been looking for the reasons, they just know that things are wrong. Intuition, things are just not matching up with what we're told. And when you give them information they're happy recipients, generally, to know why things are the way they are. And that's what I go about doing really, is simply informing those that want to be informed, and to stop folk too from starting to drink lots of alcohol or take lots of drugs to escape the torment inside their own minds.

Because, especially the youth who are very... When you're a young person you have a tremendous ego and you don't want to be told what to do or what to think. But at the same time the few that really think and know something is wrong can turn against themselves to try to shut their brains down to an extent when things don't match up and they can't get the answers to what's really going on around them and why things are simply the way they are, and ALL things for that matter. Therefore you can avoid a lot of pain and agony, and self-destruction at times by, here's the information, this is why things are the way they are. It also helps them go on from there. It doesn't give them all the answers as to what you do about it but at least they don't have to blame themselves, why they can't really fit in to a happy bliss. This happy bliss is promoted everywhere you look… Always look on the bright side of things, be optimistic about everything, for your gross well-being, etc, don't look at the negative things which can make you unhappy. That's what they're taught. That's what the whole society has been taught and been trained in this actually, deliberately so that they don't know it themselves.

Therefore they seek those things which make them happy, even if it's just watching hours and hours of videos, anything at all that keeps their mind off reality. Or television for instance, which of course is the biggest tool, has been for a long time. In fact, some top producers, even Spielberg said, TV was the greatest… Or the film,the film media was the greatest weapon ever invented. Because they can really change your mind about things through the emotive content and the way it's put across during the actual movie, the fantasy. They can make black white, white black, they can change any mood to be the opposite way around. You see, the technique, the technique is, don't look at things this way, why don't you look upon this thing from this perspective, which is a form of escapism you see. And they can also make right wrong and wrong right by doing what they want you to do. And your mind can get warped in many directions and accept things you should never accept through emotive scenes, carefully, carefully produced and written and so on into the scripts for movies, etc.

I remember many years ago when a now deceased preacher, an old preacher said that, Lucifer, or Satan - which are really two different things but they're brought into the same context for Christians - he said that, he couldn't take over the world without the computer, the computer was an essential element for global domination. But when you look at all the articles about your lack of security, getting less security, you're going to get less security and so on, and no privacy whatsoever, no personal security, no privacy, then you can't argue with that statement… where the state becomes God when all the other gods are kicked out of the way by science. And the state itself, politics, or really, technocrats that run the whole system because that's really how it is run. The politicians come and go, they're they are front people to keep you voting, and keep you arguing amongst yourselves, of who to vote for next because you are so sick of the ones you voted in.

And the technocrats themselves in the bureaucracies know all their agendas. They have their own departments that have teams that go abroad into other bureaucratic departments, they bypass all the other levels of government, and they meet their equivalents in other countries and the United Nations, and help drive this whole agenda. And it's been going on all this way since the beginning of the United Nations, for those who don't know that. And even before the United Nations the League of Nations had the same technique put in place, for the technocrats and the bureaucrats to send teams to each other's countries to work together towards this common global agenda.

Now, behind many good agendas, because many, many people after World War I and after World War II, normal ordinary people were so sick of war, constant wars, one after the other, all through the last centuries and so on. They were so sick of it all that they welcomed something that they were taught, they were taught of course, wrongly, this would bring peace, world peace. And even the war colleges today still teach that for, really, their ultimate goal for the military is to bring in a peaceful world, a global system, a peaceful world. Meaning, you couldn't have countries or national governments anymore in the long run, and they have been working towards that for a long, long time. So it's always what's given as a good reason, because wars today are so expensive.

Once again, it's amazing how Britain, for instance, keeps telling you that they've just finished paying off the debt for World War I. I read an article a few years back on the air when they first declared that back in the late 90s I think it was, and now they have rereleased it again, the same statement, saying they have just paid it now. So they've recycled a bit of news, or else they had a bit of more interest to pay because it's all compound interest. But they're still paying off the debt for World War II, the Korean War and all the other wars ongoing since. Wars today are awfully, awfully expensive. When you see the price of one aircraft, for instance, the high-tech aircraft, and then all the backup services and systems, then all your spying gear and NSA and so on. It's just so incredibly… It will bankrupt you in the long run.

The leaders of the world, those who run the world, and own the world technically, are not stupid people. They have different systems to come in, each one with a phase, each one is a phase.... A system is a phase to the next step, to the next step, to the next step. So they know where they're taking us all, you see, and where they want to take us all. They're not stupid. Never think they're stupid. And they have lots and lots and lots of think tanks working on every possible outcome, every possible thing that could go wrong and how to avoid it. They have them working all the time on every social aspect as well. So nothing has been left to chance, you see, although it's always presented to you, like the last bank crash, as something that was unforeseen and it was just a bunch of greedy guys that did it and so on. When in fact they knew this was coming for about 20 odd years, they planned it that way. They allowed the thieving to go on right to the end with the overinflated prices and so on. And of course they knew that the governments would bailed us out, that was the idea at the time.

Because remember too, they want to bring you into a new system of austerity and vast, rather quick population reduction. And it's speeding up all the time, the population reduction, not just through abortion but through fewer people being born, and also disease too, which is creeping back big time because we're being exposed to so many things, often under the guise of doing good. So we have many things working against us as people but never ever think that anything that happens on any large-scale is some surprise. Because that's how it's presented to you. Most folk still think that the whole war in the Middle East started with 9/11. And it did not. We forget there was the Gulf War One before that, and we forget all the other incursions into the entire Middle Eastern countries over the last, more than 100 years, by the West, to do with oil production, etc. And the geopolitics involved of setting up the regimes in various countries, which the West wanted to be set up, to work on their behalf, for the oil industries etc. So there's many, many factors involved. And in the planning for the second invasion of Iraq and the invasion of Afghanistan took years in the planning. The project for a new American Century, which was the group that put the Bush regime in, Bush Junior's regime in, published the countries they wanted taken out back then in the 90s in fact. So never think something is a big surprise that breaks out in the general population across the world. It doesn't happen that way. Everything takes years in the planning, don't forget that.

Now, the media, as I have mentioned, is meant to keep you living in an in-between land basically. And they do a good job at it too. For instance, even look at the names of some newspapers and so on. The Financial Post, oh they know all about finances, but they'll never mention the con of all finances and the racket of money itself and the way it's all set up.

But this article says…

Why Canadians should stop stressing about an economy that is stuck in second gear business.financialpost.com / Gordon Isfeld / March 10, 2015

OTTAWA — Get ready for Canada's "new normal" (Alan: That's a phrase I coined a long time ago, years ago.) economy, one categorized by a long period of weak post-recession growth and slower pace of job creation. (A: So there's your conclusion given at the beginning; that's standard now.)

Many forecasters, both private and institutional, have been downgrading expectations for the Canadian economy, which — like many major industrialized countries — is still struggling to shake off the lingering impact of the 2008-09 recession and, to a lesser degree, the financial crisis that preceded it. (A: Now, you could tear this to pieces actually, because… And there's another reason for it all too but you can shred this to pieces.)

Many forecasters, both private and institutional, have been downgrading expectations for the Canadian economy, which — like many major industrialized countries (A: We're not industrialized countries now. The whole idea of NAFTA and GATT, which allowed all your big factories to get put over to China, which makes pretty well… they're the manufacturer for the whole planet today, was planned a long, long, long time ago. And those who planned it all intended to deindustrialize the so-called industrial nations. It has happened, folks. They still call us industrialized nations even though all your factories are gone, maybe a few left, small things, and a few car ones perhaps, everything else is gone. So they try to say that...)— is still struggling to shake off the lingering impact of the 2008-09 recession and, to a lesser degree, the financial crisis that preceded it.

(A: So you take the whole thing in context, so what they're saying here is that it's all to do with the 2008 to 2009 recession. And it's not. When they were shipping all the factories over to China, and at the time to the Mexican corridor, that was another one they were sending them off to. The factories were disappearing like crazy across Canada in the 90s, not 2008 to 2009. So the joblessness was going up and up and up and folk were having to literally queue up to get jobs at McDonald's. So it says,

In fact, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development . . .
(A: This is, again, an agency set up in every so-called developed nation, by the International Monetary Fund through the United Nations, and every government in the Western world has a Department for Economic Cooperation and Development, where they take your tax money, they decide where it's going to go, through the World Bank and the IMF, and your country then borrows money, puts you down as the guarantors to pay off the debt, this debt, this borrowing money, that's going to be given to some third world country. But it's not just handed to a Third World country for them to deal with that as they want to. It's to go into building factories in those countries and industry using your tax money back home. And what they do through it and with it is to loan it again to that country, even though the guarantors in the domestic country like Canada is already a guarantor if the loan falls through - which it always does, it's meant to - and they give it to big international corporations to set up in thosee Third World countries where they can get cheap labor. And again, once they default on their loans then the banks, the private lenders that the countries borrowed from, like Canada or the US, has to pay off that. They will rescind the loan to the Third World country and we were put down as the guarantors, and it's now you that have to start paying for it through your taxes, for big private corporations to have brand-new factories in Third World countries with cheap labor. And this racket has been going on I think since about the end of World War II. Anyway:

The OECD's reading — with 100 as the long-term average — put Canada at 99.9 in January, down from 100 the previous month, while the United States was unchanged at 100.2.

(A: So they love giving you percentages, etc., which actually really mean nothing to the average person. Now, the whole system supposedly, as they tell you, is based on the premise that there's always going to be job growth and industry growth. Well, the industry is gone, as I say. And in a service economy, which Canada now is, and the US to great extent now as well, and most of the European countries, that were designed to go into a service economy after deindustrialization. They buy all the things in through different middleman and eventually it's passed down to the stores and then the consumer, who all take their cuts. And that doesn't generate the kind of taxation, even though it's passing through all those hands, that the actual initial manufacturing of goods would have, you see, from the raw ore into the processed material that then goes to the factory to be used like steel or whatever else. It doesn't have that. So it's a temporary thing until they bring in the next system, you understand, which is austerity. And you can't have job growth and gross domestic product growth every year, it's impossible in a system, as they will tell you - it's doublethink in economics - because eventually you'll have a glut in the market, a glut of produce and the people can't buy it because they're too broke to start with, or they are up to their eyes in debt, or they simply don't need it. Overproduction, you see. So you can't always have this upward curve into what they call a healthy economy. Anyway, they give you the little graphs and the usual rubbish and tell you why, you know, the nonsense as to why things are the way they are.)

Consumer confidence in Canada’s outlook is also wavering, along with the economy.

In particular, consumers are having second thoughts about buying big-ticket items, according the Conference Board of Canada’s February survey, and many believe employment opportunities are fading. (A: What do you mean believe? They ARE fading. It's not a belief system, the facts are the facts.)

“The results showed Canadians’ deteriorating confidence about their current and future financial situations (A: Because the prices are going up and up and up with inflation you see, but your wages are not…), their willingness to make a major purchase, and . . . about future job prospects in their region.”

But the “new normal” for the Canadian economy may not be new at all, according to a study by the Fraser Institute, published Tuesday.

In fact, Canadians have lived through different versions of “normal” after previous (A: They call it downturns now and then recessions, rather than depressions, you know. It's like downsizing, it's not laying off, it's downsizing. It sounds… These are user-friendly words, they are more pro-happy and pro-active words, as they call it in all their new-speak, you see.) downturns, and we have often come out the other side in pretty good shape.

The Vancouver-based think-tank says “slow growth in a recovery is not unprecedented and does not augur that means weak growth will continue.”

“There is reason to believe that pessimism about growth will prove to be an over-reaction to the current environment . . . (A: Well, they always give you this rubbish. And they're even comparing it with...) just as happened in the 1930s and 1970s.” (A: We got out of the 1930s depression, at the last of it and we went right into World War II, and it was the world war that got us out of it, with the massive borrowing and production of tanks, machineries and so on for the war. That's the fact, folks. That's the facts. And the 1970s, in the 60s and so on, the US got out of it to an extent by mass production of, again, military-industrial complex stuff for the Vietnam war and all the other little wars they had across Latin America. But anyway it says:

“Canada is particularly well positioned to take advantage (A: They always tell you how to take advantage of, you know, opportunities, and disasters.) of an upturn in the U.S. economy, since the lasting impact of the recession upon [our] financial sector and labour markets has been much less pronounced than in the United States.

So what they have done is devalue the dollar in Canada to make it supposedly more appealing to foreign investors and so on. But the thing is, the prices go up and up and up inside of Canada faster and faster because the dollar is worth less. All this… It's nothing to do with market forces and supply and demand. It's to do with the market forces that run the market, which is not a little corner store, it's the big boys at the top of the whole system. And believe you me, the banking system, and I'm talking about the real banks, the international lenders, control the entire system we live in, and the politics and everything else. So this prattles on about all the different statistics and all the rest of it. But they're trying to tell you that this is all quite normal, quite normal, as you go down into poverty.

Now, people have forgotten already about the program that came out of the United Nations called austerity... linked with Agenda 21, the agenda for the 21st century, and how they would have to change the consumer society, completely, and life in general, completely, for every individual who signed on to that agreement. And every country signed on to it. They have different names for it, the Millennium Project and so on, so much so that when Agenda 21 got spoken about, by guys like myself on the radio, then the United Nations put up for their own people, they put up a page telling them other terms to use so's the public wouldn't catch on. They didn't want any blowback, you see.

And Agenda 21 has been being implemented gradually across the whole board of your countries for years. Even the school systems where they first indoctrinate the youth who grow up thinking it's all quite natural, what they're told about saving water in places like Ontario, and where I am for instance that get monsoons now, we don't get rains now we get monsoons often all summer and we get, I don't know how many, 20 to 30 to 40 feet of snow in the winter and subzero temperatures, etc. But you're supposed to save water and things like that in places where you don't really have to. But reality's got nothing to do with it. See, the facts don't count with agendas. Agendas are never done for the reasons they'll tell the general population. It's generally to your detriment. And austerity has to be brought in, where you're postconsumer as the United Nations calls it, and you're spending money for purchasing things and so on, as that article was saying here, folk are thinking twice about buying different things. Your spending money for that will not going to buying things. It will go to bare essentials... taxes, permits, licensing and the goods you need for basic survival, food, your bills are going up with all your energy and so on and everything.

So that's where all your money is to go in the future, as you live in your new normal community areas. And for over 30 years now in fact you've had the propaganda push, from across the whole Western world and other countries too like Australia and New Zealand, into your community, you're part of your community. And communitarianism is the message there, you're part of the community. And you've got to be proactive in your community, and all these nonsensical terms. And pro-social by the way, which is the opposite of antisocial, you see. If you like to keep yourself to yourself and you like to have privacy, then you're antisocial. So if you're prosocial you're wide-open and everyone knows your business, and you're involved as an active member in your community by simply agreeing to everything that goes along and comes down the pike from your community leaders. It's well underway, folks.

And remember, you can look up Agenda 21 yourself, the agenda for the 21st century, and you can see all the masses of changes they have to implement and bring in until they get you off the road and all the rest of it too. And hence the eco-nonsense as well they are using about vehicles. All the techniques are being used... Oh, you can’t drive anymore. In fact, you're to have no private vehicles in your sustainable communities in the pretty near future. Essential vehicles only, it says.

But anyway, as I say, these financial breakdowns, according to the status quo, and the authorized system of the con of money, and economics, the way it's run, doesn't give you any real truths on things. Then you go into this article here and it says:

Canadian household debt burden hits record 163%.
theglobeandmail.com / DAVID PARKINSON / Mar. 12 2015

Debt imbalances are measured chiefly by the ratio of total household credit-market debt (mortgages, other loans and credit cards) to disposable income, and that ratio hit 163.3 per cent in the fourth quarter of last year, up slightly from the previous record 162.7 per cent in the third quarter, Statistics Canada reported Thursday.

Credit-market debt growth actually moderated in the quarter to 1.1 per cent, its slowest pace since the first quarter. But the bigger issue was on the other side of the equation – disposable income, which grew a thin 0.5 per cent, matching its slowest pace in the past six quarters. It was the third straight quarter that disposable-income growth has lagged debt growth. (A: So austerity is gradually coming into work, you see. Your disposable income is going to more and more essentials, but they won't say that in the article, naturally.)

The debt to disposable income ratio is a key measure watched by many analysts, including the Bank of Canada to (A: ...gouge, gouge is the right word.) to gauge the country's consumer debt burden. The persistent historically high level has been an ongoing concern for the central bank which has long flagged it as a source of potential risk to the country's economic and financial stability. (A: Then they go into this…)

However, economists point out that other key measures of the debt burden looked less onerous in the fourth quarter.

The ratio of household credit-market debt to net worth held steady at 21.9 per cent, near a six-year low, as the national net worth rose 2.6 per cent in the quarter, to a record $8.27-trillion. The ratio of debt to total assets was also steady at 18.2 per cent, also near a six-year low.

It would be premature to cite deterioration in the financial position of Canadian households, as evidenced by the above household debt metrics, as cause for concern that the risks posed by household imbalances are intensifying, said the Royal Bank of Canada economist Laura Cooper. The debt-to-income measure is not our preferred metric for examining the financial position of Canadian households.

So more and more folk are going into debt, in other words. And no wonder too, because again too, the dollar is worth less and less and everything is going up and up and up. But they won't mention that here. So everything is manipulated according to a big agenda. For those who haven't quite grasped it yet, it's an agenda, you see. Forget all this stuff, it's an agenda. When you’re deindustrialized, you're importing everything into the country, and you're in a service economy, and your money is being devalued, and prices are going up and up and up, of course folk are borrowing more and more to even get by.

And then the so-called recessions, this word recession... What is it, recess? What do you mean a recession? Meaning is going to jump back into normality again? No, it's not. It's not meant to. And it can't, the way is designed, you see. Your industry is gone, folks. It's a slow decline and it's meant to be. And you're not going to go back to an era of the 60s or 70s, they are long gone, where most folk had a very decent income, the dollar was worth a lot more in the US and Canada in the purchasing power that is, real purchasing power, and they had lots and lots of work. It's gone.

Food Stamp Beneficiaries Exceed 46,000,000 for 40 Straight Months cnsnews.com / March 11, 2015

But the idea too is to make you think the problem here, it's not the governments' debt, it's the household debt. See, you're the problem. You're always the problem. It's always you. Government never balances any budget. Government's never been out of debt since they basically privatize the Bank of Canada, for Canada that is. And we can't get out of debt in the present system. But they're not blaming government for constantly never having enough. They are blaming you, you see, it's your problem with your household debt, you see. And that again always ties in with the agenda, you're the problem. Just like your so-called man-made global warming, you're the problem with it all, even though we don't have the warming in most places across the globe, just the opposite in fact. But facts don't matter when you have a big agenda.

Then we have, again, as I said earlier, the old preacher that said that, Satan couldn't basically bring in his world dominion without the computer, that snoops on everyone and keeps everything tied together, and everyone runs on it, and all your government agencies run on it too, more so than you do actually because they need to see what you are all up to. But you get these articles constantly coming out, which relate to me, in my mind all they do is confirm what you already know. And it never tells you what to do about it or what to complain about or anything else, if you want to complain. Most folk won't complain because they think it's all quite normal and as long as you're good, and don't stick your head up, and you're a good communitarian, and a good member of your community, meaning talk about sports and TV and things like that, then it doesn't matter that they know all about you and what you’re doing because you're making sure that you don't say anything that says, I wonder why... And that little red flag will go up when you email and say, I wonder why this is happening. They don't want to be known that they might be a thinker. Hhhhaaa, I got one. See, there's a flag, this person is a thinker, watch them. And I'm not kidding about that.

George Orwell's 1984 is well and truly here. And Brave New World is here from Huxley. It's here. But anyway this article says:

Internet carriers may be breaching Canadian privacy laws
cbc.ca / Emily Chung, CBC News / Mar 12, 2015

The study looked at the information provided publicly by internet carriers in Canada about how they protect customers' privacy and ranked them based on 10 criteria.

Is your internet provider handing your personal information to U.S. and Canadian authorities or companies without your knowledge? (A: Well of course they are.)

A new report looks at the stated privacy practices of 43 Canadian internet service providers and finds that most of them tell very little about what they do with your information. (A: Really? We've known for years through different laws that have been passed and so on, and they pass it all along.)

In fact, "it appears that many Canadian internet carriers are in violation of their legal responsibilities" under Canadian privacy laws, says the report entitled "Keeping Internet Users in the Know or in the Dark" released today by Toronto-area researchers. (A: I'll put that study up for you too, the link to it, the PDF.)

The study was conducted by information policy researchers Andrew Clement at the University of Toronto and Jonathan Obar at the University of Ontario Institute of Technology, in collaboration with the Centre for Innovation Law and Policy.

¦Read the full report [PDF]

It looks at the information provided publicly by internet service providers in Canada about how they protect customers' privacy and ranked them based on the 1 to10 criteria, including whether:

¦They inform customers when third parties request their personal information. (A: Well, they don’t.)

¦They tell customers the circumstances under which they agree to those requests and provide customers' information to third parties. (A: So they don’t tell you that either.)

¦They tell customers where their personal information is stored and processed. (A: Well, they don’t.)

¦They try to avoid routing customers' personal information outside Canada, where it could be intercepted by U.S. authorities, and they give you for examples.

"Generally speaking, most carriers in Canada … score quite poorly in terms of privacy transparency — an average of two out of 10 stars, which is fairly low," said Obar, an assistant professor in the Faculty of Social Sciences and Humanities at UOIT in an interview with CBC News.

Among the retail ISPs that most Canadians buy their internet service from directly, the top scorer was Teksavvy, with six stars, followed by Telus with five. Rogers and Bell had middling scores of 4 and 3 respectively, while Shaw and Videotron were at the bottom, with 2 stars each.

Many smaller ISPs scored even lower — Acanac received 0 stars and Storm Internet got just half a star.

"We hope that consumers will use the star table to determine which carriers are trustworthy," Obar said.

(A: Well, since none of them are up to the 10 mark, how can you trust them to inform you at all? And it doesn't stop them from passing on the data when it's demanded from them, you see.)

The researchers also hope the report will:

¦Push carriers to be more transparent. (A: Well, good luck.)

¦Encourage the government to strengthen Canadian privacy laws.

(A: Well, It's the Canadian government that's at the top of all of this open grabbing of information, and the carriers themselves have to comply, because it's a law, whatever the government wants. They are licensed by the government to exist and therefore their license can get pulled, you see.)

ISPs' lack of transparency about their privacy protection is a problem, Obar said, because it makes it very hard for Canadians to know who might be handing over their data to organizations such as the U.S. National Security Agency or Canadian government agencies and take steps to protect their privacy.

(A: What steps can you take when it's a law that they must hand stuff over? What steps can you take when they've already admitted that the agencies like the NSA are grabbing stuff out of the air and they're tapped into everything? Regardless of even if the servers even know it or not.)

A recent poll commissioned by the Office of the Privacy Commissioner of Canada shows that Canadians are increasingly concerned about their privacy, especially how personal information about them ends up online might be used in government surveillance.

(A: Well, it's ALL used in government surveillance. I've given so many talks over the years where they've got personality profiles on all of us, and yet it's updated daily by your help in putting stuff out with your texting and your various stuff that you use on the Internet and your cell phone and so on. It's all grabbed and used and added, you see. Remember that every, any system that eventually goes into a complete totalitarian system must know everything that every person is doing at all times, to feel safe.)

The poll found most respondents are not comfortable with government departments and agencies requesting personal information from telecommunications companies without a warrant. Last year, the interim privacy commissioner showed that nine telecommunications companies received over a million requests from government departments and agencies for data about their customers.

However, the study found that no Canadian carrier has publicly committed to inform customers of all third-party data requests.

Well, we are more advanced as a democracy, they don't have to tell us anything [Alan chuckles.] because most folk don't really request our care about it. I have to tell the truth, you know, they're not involved in what's happening in their lives, they just accept that bigger minds or better minds are dealing with all the big problems in the world above themselves, and they're told to just work and play, you know. That's how it's done. As I say, I'll put up the links to the whole reports tonight on all of this to show you, if you're really interested, if it matters in fact, as to where it's all supposedly going.

I'll also put up this article too which is again blaming the consumer. The title is… How the world became addicted to debt. You see, it's all your fault. It's not the government's fault, it's your fault. It's your fault the dollar gets devalued, or the pound in Britain. It's always your fault, you see, all that rubbish. But it says…

How the world became addicted to debt telegraph.co.uk / Mehreen Khan / 09 Mar 2015

$27 trillion. That's the amount global public debt has grown by since the financial crisis gripped the world eight years ago, according to the McKinsey Global Institute.

The map above shows the current state of government indebtedness across the globe.

By and large, the story of the world economy has been one in which emerging markets have loaded on debt (A: ...because it's forced upon them, that's part of the deal, by the first world countries.), while the developed world has struggled to reduce the burdens it amassed in the wake of banking bail-outs and years of stagnant economic growth.
(A: So the developed world, but what they don't say here is that you also have all the debts to pay off for those countries where you have forgiven the debt from the loans that you borrowed to give to them. And the taxpayer at home has to pay it off.)

Government debt in G7 countries has grown by 40 percentage points to 120pc of GDP since 2007, according to the Bank of International Settlements. (A: Who help run the world, a privately owned organization, mind you, along with the IMF, privately owned, and the World Bank, set up by again a private organization, whose membership is the Who's Who membership basically of anybody who's anybody at all.)

The Royal Institute of International Affairs with its counterparts, it's cousins, called the Council on Foreign Relations for America and other parts of the world, set up the system a long time ago to bring in this global system, where their boys will make sure they can run the world, bypass all politics, in fact they run politics, they put in the politicians to do their squabbling and their bidding, and they run the whole financial systems of the entire world, you see. That's it. But it's all your fault because there's just all this debt here, you see. It's your fault.

Another article tonight too is called:

Anti-terror bill powers 'excessive,' Canada's Privacy Commissioner says
theglobeandmail.com /March 6, 2015 / DANIEL LEBLANC

(A: Now, in British Commonwealth countries and in Britain you have Privacy Commissioners. That's someone appointed to the task in every government, even in the provincial governments too I think there's one, and one for the federal government. The Privacy Commissioner is supposed to warn the general population about something that's going to interfere with their privacy, and they are allowed to do that. But they can't, they have no say in what to do about it, and they have no force to pass anything themselves in law or even into bills in parliaments or governments. So this says the anti-terror bill powers are excessive.)

The government's anti-terrorism bill provides excessive powers to federal agencies to monitor and profile ordinary Canadians as part of the war on terror (A: See, so national security, you see.), the Privacy Commissioner is arguing.

"All Canadians – not only terrorism suspects – will be caught in this web," (A: Well, we're all caught in it. It's not will be, we are.) Daniel Therrien said in an open-letter published in The Globe and Mail. "Bill C-51 opens the door to collecting, analyzing and potentially keeping forever the personal information of all Canadians in order to find the virtual needle in the haystack. To my mind, that goes too far." (A: It's not terrorists they're looking for, folks, you know.)

(A: It shows you the different intelligence service buildings in Ottawa and stuff like that, etc. It talks about the legislation, it will give Canada spy agency more power. It says Stephen Harper says the rights of Canadians would still be protected if the bill passes, but one of the other parties, the NDP is skeptical, etc, the usual political nonsense.)

The government's hand-picked watchdog has put together a full critique of the legislation, which he will release Friday morning and discuss in front of the committee that will start studying the legislation next week.

"While the potential to know virtually everything about everyone may well identify some new threats, the loss of privacy is clearly excessive," Mr. Therrien said.

He added that Canadians have an expectation of privacy when they provide information to the government, and that the legislation fails to strike an appropriate balance between safety and privacy.

"The end result is that national security agencies would potentially be aware of all interactions that all Canadians have with their government. That would include, for example, a person's tax information and details about a person's business and vacation travel," Mr. Therrien said.

Bill C-51 would beef up the powers of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, criminalize the promotion of terrorism and provide the RCMP with new powers of preventative arrest. (A: That's like Minority Report, the movie… preventative arrest. If they suspect… Well, you might commit a crime down the road.) But the Privacy Commissioner is decrying the fact that 14 of the 17 federal agencies that are receiving "limitless" powers under C-51 are "not subject to independent oversight."

This is the ultimate wet dream of the Stasi that they had in East Germany under communism. They could never have this kind of... oh, they would lust for this kind of stuff. And here we are, we call ourselves democracies and say we're free. Doublethink, hey. I'll put this article up tonight as well because it's worth reading. But as I say, the Privacy Commissioner has no ability to force protection for the public's benefits, at all. So I really don't know why we have them. I mean, why do we have them? [Alan laughing.] Huh?

Now, I'll also put another link up tonight from Pan Am post and it says:

Canada’s Terrifying Anti-Terror Bill
panampost.com / PanAm Post Staff / March 3, 2015

Spooks Need a Tighter Leash, Not C-51's Fresh Powers

In war, as the aphorism goes, truth is the first casualty. But the latest phase in Canada’s war on terror targets a different victim: any sense of irony.

This became apparent on February 23, when Prime Minister Stephen Harper’s government — backing a sweeping anti-terrorism bill to expand state surveillance powers and criminalize speech deemed to potentially “advocate” terrorism — closed down debate on the same bill after only three days of discussion.

Bill C-51 — drafted in response to two recent lone-wolf attacks, including one that ended in a shootout in the Ottawa House of Commons — broadens the scope of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), including allowing it to intercept private communications with closed-door judicial authorization.

Such a strategy is already ongoing, albeit under a different agency and on more-than-dubious legal footing. Documents leaked by Edward Snowden on January 28 show that Canada’s Communications Security Establishment (CSE) has already been monitoring the online downloads of millions of internet users. (A: They’ve been doing it for years. And did we really need Snowden to tell us this?) This followed news in April 2014 that the authorities were effectively copying themselves into Canadians’ emails, and monitoring thousands of texts and phone calls without a warrant.

(A: How can you possibly say they're there to protect you, when they're not protecting you because they themselves are showing massive invasion of privacy? Without privacy you have no security.)

Apparently emulating the United States by ramping up state powers and surveillance in the name of security is not enough. Canadian officials routinely hand over CSE data to their counterparts south of the border, and they have already agreed to share citizens’ biographic data with the US Border Patrol. Ontario police have even gone one step further and given confidential medical information to US officials, leading to Canadians being denied entry simply for having suffered a previous episode of mental illness.

Such tag-team abuses have a long history. In 2003, US officials intercepted and deported Canadian citizen Maher Arar to Syria from JFK Airport in New York, where he was awaiting a connection flight back from a family vacation in Tunisia. Canadian intelligence saw him held and tortured for a year, only to be found completely innocent.

Well that doesn't… you know, the proles don't count, hey. Sad isn't it? But it's all here, folks, you know. When you have all this here there's only one thing you can really know for sure, it's going to get worse. I'm not kidding you, it's going to get a lot worse. And personally I don't think you can change it. I don't think there's enough motivation from the public, again, who have accepted the premise that if we are good nobody's going to bother us, so I'll be good, I'll say all the right things to say, I'll accept my PC updates and new normals, and that will be my new opinions and everything, the new normals, I'll be good, I'll be left alone. And it's working awfully well. I concluded that that would happen a long, long time ago.

And this article here from the BBC's says:

bbc.com / 4 March 2015

MSPs have voted for full parliamentary scrutiny of plans to allow more than 100 public bodies to access personal data through an individual's NHS (A: National Health Service.) number. (A: That's going to be used with Obama Care too. It's not Obama of course that's behind it all. It was all set up long before, to get implemented long before he came along, it was just time to do it. You see, we're run according to a big business plan and they actually have the year stamp when they're going to introduce different things, it doesn't matter who's in power.)

The proposals would see organisations such as HMRC being able to see certain data on the NHS Central Register (NHSCR).

Opponents said the move amounted to identity cards "by the back door". (A: It doesn't matter what cards you have, it's all ID, and they're into everything.)

The Scottish government insisted privacy would be protected. (A: Oohhhhhh, good God hey.)

MSPs voted 65 to 60 in favour of a motion by Scottish Liberal Democrat leader Willie Rennie, as amended by the government.

It was one of the closest votes at Holryood for some time.

Everyone born in Scotland or registered with a GP (A: …a general practitioner.) north of the border has a Unique Citizen Reference Number (UCRN) held in the NHSCR.

[Alan chuckles.] Why do people ever, ever believe what any politician or bureaucrat, whose the public relations spokesperson who knows how to bend… they're taught how to bend facts and rules and that to make it more citizen-friendly, so you don't get upset when they tell you something. Why you believe anything they tell you? Huh? When will we all grow up? Well, that won't happen, folks, not all of us can grow up.

Another article too and it says:

Snowden files: Inside Waihopai's domes stuff.co.nz / NICKY HAGER AND RYAN GALLAGHER / March 8 2015

The Waihopai intelligence base looks oddly alien and out of place: huge white "golf ball" radomes like a moon station and silent buildings within two fences of razor wire, all dropped in the midst of vineyards and dry hills in New Zealand's Marlborough landscape.

(A: Now, I think I mentioned this years ago when Canada came out with… Whenever they come out and tell you something that' you're obviously going to see, these big massive... literally they're like huge, I don't know how many stories high they are, golf balls just sitting ominously there. They said it was for the occasional radar use, which of course was the cover story. They also said it would... And a lot of them were also put on areas where the government already had for weather collection data, different instruments that have been set up. But then they put big fences around the weather collection data places, very high-security type things, and said no one is to be allowed on it. Because they were also, ha, they were also going to get photons coming in from outer space and they could detect them landing on the planet, so it had to be awfully sensitive, any footsteps from the public going across that land was going to interfere with all their data. And it had nothing to do with what they were telling us. It was all to do with the NSA and the Five Eyes, and I mentioned that years ago, it just made perfect sense, and here it is out now. And across New Zealand, Australia and different places, and different places in Canada we have these big massive golf balls, and they have them in the States as well.)

Documents about the Waihopai station leaked by US National Security Agency (NSA) whistleblower Edward Snowden show that the facility is as alien as is seems.

Everything inside the top secret station except the staff is foreign.

The electronic eavesdropping systems, the computer programmes that automatically index and search the captured communications, and the databases where details of a whole region's communications are stored: they are all standardised parts of the global surveillance system run by the NSA.

The Waihopai base functions as a cog in that spying machine, the alliance's main eye on the South Pacific region.

The Sunday Star-Times analysed the documents in collaboration with US news website The Intercept, which obtained them from Snowden. The leaked files reveal in unprecedented detail the New Zealand-based station's targets, inner workings and links to the international network of spy facilities run by the Five Eyes.

READ THE FILES IN FULL:
(A: It's got all the different fancy names, James Bondish type names for the different things that are for the different areas which they look into of course. It all sounds very, oh James Bondish, etc, etc.)

Altogether, these bases can snoop on the entire world, friend as well as foe. (A: And they do it all without any... never mind the Privacy Commissioner or permission and so on, it does it without any permission at all. They've been doing it for years.)

The leaked documents do not talk about "Waihopai". They use the station's secret Five Eyes code name Ironsand ("IS"). It's not clear why Waihopai is Ironsand.

The Five Eye spy bases around the world. (A: These are the five main countries involved.)

An NSA map shows it is one of a global network of oddly-named satellite interception stations. These stations are the eyes of the Five Eyes alliance.

Australia has a base near Geraldton, a small port city on the west coast of Australia. Its codename is Stellar.

(A: And it goes into all the different codenames and all the rest of it, which are all very, oh, that's the Stellar base, oooooh. Britain has one in Kenya called Scalpel, ooooooh, it cuts into things, cuts through all this data and grabs what they want.)

The British station in Oman has the codename Snick. Britain's Kenya base is known as Scapel. Britain also spies on satellites from Carboy, a station in Cornwall, and from a base in Cyprus called Sounder.

(A: It gives you the American equivalent bases too.)
The American equivalents of Waihopai are Jackknife in Washington State on the Pacific coast, Timberline in West Virginia and Coraline in Puerto Rico in the Caribbean. The biggest of these is the Moonpenny base in Harrogate, Yorkshire. (A: …and so on and so on.)

Well, this stuff is… What do you expect? What you expect with the system we're in? Remember, according to the Club of Rome, a big think tanks that works for the United Nations and for all the big boys, they were given the task of finding ways to change your whole way of living back in the 70s. They were given the task of finding how to take all the rights away from the public. And they actually said, they stated, so we hit upon the idea of global warming, famine, drought and the like, that would fit the bill. Man-made global warming, that would fit the bill, folks.

Because you see, we have to go into a post-Democratic world down the road. You might think it's democracy as long as you can vote local people in, and they'll all be strangers of course that you don't know anyway because that's how it's always been. But as long as you can vote you'll still call it Democratic to an extent. But the old idea of what a democracy was is all getting brushed under the carpet, and eventually one day it will be swept out of the house altogether. And as we accept the new normal. And people will adapt to the new normals all the time.

You have no privacy whatsoever. And it's to get worse and worse and worse because they must know everything about you every minute of the day. And they must know even what little organizations you belong to, even poetry clubs, everything. What kind of poetry do you read? Is it subversive poetry? Is it opera that you're into? And some of the operatics of course in the last few centuries were actually for revolution purposes, for instance. You're not safe in anything at all. And you just might like the actual songs themselves, not the content, or the reasons that they were put out. So really, there's no safe thing anywhere. And if you have your own opinions about things, well, you're definitely not safe at all. If you're a thinker you're flagged already. They all have every thinker flagged, folks, it's not a matter of being good.

You know, in the Soviet system I've mentioned how they would set people up, ordinary individuals up, ordinary citizens, working-class, it didn't make any difference, where you would witness what would be one of the mandates of a crime under the system, it would be labeled as a crime. For instance, just to speak out and call the damn system we're living under as nasty or whatever, that was a crime; that was antigovernment, they called it. And you might agree with them and say nothing, but if you didn't report it then you'd be put off yourself to be tortured and questioned and to see why. Even if it was a set up to see who would report it and who wouldn't, and they would put a lot of spies out to do just that very thing. No one can be safe in such a system.

And the sad truth is there's never, ever, ever, in history, the lack of the enablers to tyrants, the people who carry the spears. Today it's carrying the guns and the weaponry and handcuffs and everything. There's no lack of people who'll make it all happen, as it gets worse and worse and worse. It's a sad comment on humanity, isn't it? Sad, sad comment. And everybody will say as they've always said down through history, right up to the Nuremberg trial, we're just following orders.

From Hamish and myself from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 22, 2015. I'm sure all those south of the border there are getting happier and happier by the day as spring seems to be coming into view. And up here where I am it's still darned cold and lots of snow, and it snowed again last night just to prove the point. But at least it's getting a bit milder at night, it's still going to hit into the sub zeros tomorrow and the next day or so. But who knows, over the next week or two it should start to improve. And there's actually some very hazy chem-sprayed sunlight coming through now so it cheers up the situation a little bit for a lot of people up this way.

But you know, I've talked for years and years about the big agenda and to show you that you're living through planned script basically, an agenda. I've gone through the documentation of world planners, the big groups involved, the private clubs in fact, who also have many members within parliaments and congresses across the world, and they have members all through the bureaucracies too. That's very important, bureaucracies, to make sure that they are given their agendas too. They all must work independently of politicians to an extent in specialist departments because the heads of those departments are well schooled in what their big agenda is for their working lifetime. They hire and work and retire, and higher and work and retire, for generations.

And that's how foundations also work, the big private foundations that were put up by the big banks, private bankers and corporations who decided to use our tax money, the tax-free money that is because they have an exemption as a charitable system basically, to create nongovernmental organizations which they can then use to push, from the public's perspective it seems to come from the grassroots, and they push and demand from government to have certain laws passed, that simply coincides with the big agenda of course. The Greening agenda, the global warming agenda, the climate change agenda, and all these different agendas, and Agenda 21, are all under the umbrella of the United Nations, which was set up, remember, by a private organization of the extremely rich people of their day.

Now, these big foundations do the same thing. They hire, they work a life's career within these foundations, many of the people, and they retire. Hire, work and retire. So they can set an agenda 100, 200 years ago and continue the same policy and goals down through centuries until they achieve the goals. Different from, say, the art of politics, as far as the public perceive it, where parties are simply voted in and out, and in and out and so on, never even knowing that the leaders of the parties all belong to the same private club. So everything is managed, naturally, if you want to bring in your particular view of the world, under control from birth to death for every citizen, with eugenics systems on the go and big plans with who breeds with whom, if they can breed at all, and give licenses to do so, all these plans, etc., and eventually creating humanoids, cyborg types, and then into the full genetic creations of the new kind of Superman, for the upper elite that is, then you must control every facet of society and culture. And culture of course is very important. The culture industry updates your culture and you copy it. You copy the words, the terms that are put out there within the movies, never realizing you're being conditioned to accept things that if you were really, really thinking about it and rational about it and reasoned through it all, you wouldn't simply accept them. You’re preprogrammed to accept what comes down the pike in reality.

Also tonight I'm going to touch on another topic that I talked about years ago. I mentioned I think back in 2005 or 2006 I'd never touched a computer in my life. I had been on the radio long before but I had never touched a computer. Because I knew the goal of the computer, it was eventually to monitor every single person, all their email and what they're chatting about and so on, and also that governments would use supercomputers, which they boasted about back in the 90s, the big Cray computers, to gather all data and information about every single individual in real time. So I knew it was for the agenda's sake and not for our sake. Their little window of opportunity, as it's called, where people could chat back and forth, has been carefully monitored and scrutinize from the very, very beginning, laws or no laws, I don't care what they say actually.

You'll find that one or two years ago Brzezinski, at one of the CFR meetings, the Council on Foreign Relations, said that the people were becoming politicized, in other words they were becoming aware, consciously aware of the big geopolitical programs that were going on and agendas put out by, worked in fact, by many members of the Council on Foreign Relations/ Trilateral Commission and so on. That got out a cry at the time for one of the Rockefellers who wanted a bill to get through to censor the Internet. Now, these boys don't put ideas forward and then forget them because they're going to get backlash. They simply go back to the drawing table and find other ways to bring it in. And under the guise of antiterrorism they have changed the whole system. And you can't argue with it because it's to keep you safe, that's the excuse. And that's the plausible excuse. Remember, for everything that happens in politics there's a good reason, and then there's a real reason. You're always given the good reason but you're never given the real reason. And the same thing goes on here.

Obviously information has always been controlled. That's why folk were kept in absolute illiteracy for centuries, in fact, in many countries because knowledge is power. And the communication from old books and so on, ideas from even ancient Greece for instance, could be used to radicalize people, at least that's what was thought at the time by those in control, and bring their systems down. So they wanted the people to be illiterate, especially the ones who were at the bottom of the ladder, who had very little and worked the hardest of course.

Because everything in our system, like Marx said, which was one of the… Don't ever throw things out the window, even Marx said a lot of truths; they had to have self-evident truths to get people on board, and that's what they always use, different groups. Marx said that, all wealth comes from the workers, the people's labor, from labor itself, and it simply goes up the ladder and gets sold many times and so on, to the finished produce, and then it's taxed, and then the worker is taxed again too now. So, we are the business. I've always said that, we are the business, the public are the business.

So anyway, I always knew that the Internet would come to an end through the guises it's going through, and I'll be touching on that tonight too because it's all very real, all the laws are being passed. And laws or no laws, they've already been doing it regardless. This metadata stuff is utter rubbish, always was rubbish. Which means… Well, they're collecting the metadata but it's only on who you contact, when you contacted them, and so on, who contacted you. Which is rubbish. They've been collecting the contents, the entire contents of telephone calls and emails and texting, all along… all along. Naturally, they would never ever forego the opportunity to know everything about you, and they certainly do.

And now an old... a technique is coming in, and it works awfully, awfully well. It's been in place for a while but it can be used across the board, and it's definitely going to be used on the Internet now, where you self-police yourself. When you put a camera up in the streets, for instance, they know this from many, many, many repeated experiments. Your behavior, if you are on camera your behavior will change when you know you're on camera. You will behave less spontaneously, you are aware you're being watched and you self-police yourself. It's a term used at the United Nations, they even used it that the League of Nations before it became the United Nations, of that's how they would train the public, constant, lifelong education also includes self-policing. The other part of that starts in youth where they use cognitive and neuroscience, behaviorism to condition the children into Pavlovian responses to certain topics and so on, so they simply get set back to what is called their default position, they won't even look into something. Even if they feel uncomfortable with it, whatever that something happens to be, they feel more uncomfortable going against their indoctrination. So never ignore these sciences and think that it doesn't affect you. It affects everybody, believe you me.

Now, the old group that was behind so much of what happened in the 1800s through the 1900s, into the 20th century, in the early 20th century it was called the Lord Alfred Milner group. They had different names of course, they didn't want their name to be known to the general public and they had what is called Roundtable societies, which they would bring in future leaders in all different areas of commerce and even local governments, up to the federal government positions, in different countries. They eventually became the Royal Institute of International Affairs, another private group made up of elitists' sons and top bankers of the day, international lenders that lent to whole nations. Their idea was to take over the wealth of all countries and bring in a world system under their control. They set up the Council on Foreign Relations for the US, the same organization actually as the Royal Institute of International Affairs. And they set up the League of Nations and the United Nations too, to do their bidding basically, where they could bring people in for conferences and gradually, through treaties, merge them together into trading blocs, and then into a global world system, with a Parliament which, again, would be under the control of themselves and the magnates, the power magnets and financiers of their time, right down to the present day.

It hasn't stopped. It has almost achieved its goal. They would use war and catastrophes and so on to their advantage. That's where the phrase comes from, how can we use this catastrophe or crisis to our advantage? And they certainly understand the science of doing this because they've done it all along. In their own private documentation, their own private archives for history, because they have a different version of history, because they know what was behind different things like the Boer war and World War I and so on. Professor Carroll Quigley was given access to them as their historian, for a while. He wrote in his own books, which were published, that this group had existed for an awful long time, every president and prime minister really since the late 1800s belong to this private organization, of all parties, it doesn't matter what party you vote in.And he said that, their goals were, he believed in their goals, Quigley himself believed in their goals, he just disagreed with some of the means by which they achieve their goals. Now, he also said in The Anglo-American Establishment, that they had been responsible for the Boer war, getting that all kicked off to take over all the land, that became Rhodesia, South Africa, and the gold and diamonds and so on, resources, wealth and power, because wealth to them is power you see. It hasn't stopped today, now it's oil and everything else, all the minerals, etc.

So it's a very old agenda, run by a private organization at the top. It runs both the left wing, the Fabian Society groups, and the right wing groups. That way when you want to try to oppose something... Most folk will join a group that exists to oppose them, and they are ready made for you like a tailor-made suit, you just slip it on and become one of the group, you see, not realizing that the one at the top has a different agenda from all the followers. That's standard procedure, standard. Even Lenin said the same thing for the Soviet system, the Bolshevik system, how to defuse all other conflicting parties, or similar parties, when they first got in and they're coming into office as the Bolshevik party. He said, what we do is supply the leaders and create the parties. Or, if they don't exist create them and put your leaders in. If they already exist simply get your own guys in at the top, and then you can lead them wherever you want to. And that's all happened, you see. Old techniques, very old, much older than Lenin, of course. Machiavelli basically did it awfully, awfully well, as a study course on how, a how-to for tyrants basically, [Alan chuckles.], and for those that want to secretively take over systems, and whole peoples, and their rights in fact taken away from them too, under very good sounding guises at times.

Therefore the world is living in an agenda. A crisis or the threat of crisis has to exist. If there's no real facts for the threat you create bogus stuff for the facts, and you get lots of scientists on board who all agree on it. And you can't argue with science, right, that's what you're taught, and therefore you go along with whatever they say, to get a whole agenda through. Now, long ago, back in the days when HG Wells and George Bernard Shaw and others belonged to the Fabian Society, the left-wing party for the Royal Institute of International Affairs, they also set up the world Parliament Association, world parliamentarians. You can even find it in much older poetry in fact by top poets about the world parliamentarians, the Parliament of the World. They believed that they could, again, achieve this goal of controlling the whole planet, and its wealth, and all of its people's, by creating a world Parliament. Another branch of it was called the Federalist Society. They are both on the go today, still. Many associations, well-financed, they're always working quietly, day and night, generation after generation, to achieve their objectives. Then they have sub parties underneath it, subgroups that deal... big ones too mind you. They deal with the unification of the Americas, the Council of America's for instance. And of course they had the ones for Europe, the total integration of Europe. All created by a group at the top a long time ago, the Lord Alfred Milner group that became the Royal Institute of International Affairs. Now, tonight I'm going to put up links, for instance, to different articles. The first one is this one here and it says:

unpacampaign.org/news/759.php

(Alan: And this is from the United Nations, and the campaign for a United Nations.)

Citizens in over forty locations around the world celebrate second Global Week of Action for a World Parliament

Between the 17th and 26th of October, the call for the establishment of a democratically elected global parliament took center stage again at events and actions around the world held on the occasion of the second Global Week of Action for a World Parliament. The week of action's announcement declares that people across the world feel to be voiceless in global decision-making. It says that "world's citizens (A: ...like the world citizens Association…) have little influence on decisions taken at institutions such as the UN, the IMF, the WTO, the World Bank, the G20 or the G8." (A: Actually, you have no say in the UN, or the IMF, a private organization, the WTO, a private organization. All of the world groups, the World Bank and so on, the G20 and the G8, were set up and all their outlines for their existence chartered and drawn up by the CFR, the American branch, or the Canadian branch, or the Australian branch, or whatever, or the British branch, of the Royal Institute of International Affairs.) Further it states that the governments represented in these bodies are "often being influenced heavily by the lobbyists of global corporations." (A: See, the people are aware of that, again, they have become politically awakened, you see. So here's their way to get around that, but making you think they're doing something about it.) An elected world parliament, by contrast, "would be an instrument to find and implement solutions that are democratic, accountable and serve the best interest of humanity." (A: Well, who decides what the best interests of humanity is? They're all on board with the idea of science running the whole show, folks. All of them, it doesn't matter what side or wing you take it from, it's always the same agenda, and always lovely sounding things, you know.)

To underpin this message, citizens came together in over forty locations around the world and displayed banners with the week's slogan "World Parliament Now!". Panel discussions on the subject were held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Berlin, Germany, Rajkot, India, Verona, Italy, Kigali, Rwanda, and Gothenburg, Sweden. At the event in Berlin, the global coordinator of the international campaign for a UN Parliamentary Assembly, Andreas Bummel, said that it was high time to recognize that "global governance isn't working". (A: …meaning, the way it is right now.) "It is not working because it is not delivering the results quickly enough to ensure a decent life for every human being and for a transition to a sustainable global civilization. (A: So you're back to the sustainable part too. You have the usual, the age in transition, this is the transitory age, you see, as they push through their whole century of change agenda, which again, came out of the top boys, the same group at the top.) At the same time, the system is deeply undemocratic. Both of these problems are interlinked," he stated.

"It has been a successful action week with significant events and powerful photos from around the world. Step by step our message is gaining ground. And next year even more people will join us in our call for global democracy and universal peace and justice," the week's coordinator Petter Ölmunger concluded.

So I'll put this link up tonight for those who care it all to look into it. Most folk today don't want to look into things because they think anything… They've been trained, actually, as Brzezinski said in the 1970s, that their reasoning will be done by the media. In other words, you look to the media to do your thinking and reasoning for you, and most folk do. They prattle on one day what they've heard on the news the previous day. And if the media tells you to worry about prostitutes or young girls being turned to prostitution in Nigeria or somewhere, it's on the lips of everyone the next day. But anything that really matters to you, or your purse, or livelihood or anything, the media won't mention it. So if they don't mention it, you see, you won't worry about it. The media has to say, be concerned, be very very concerned. If they don't say that most folk will think, well if it's really dangerous to me or my way of living they would tell me. That's how the people think, that the media is there to do their reasoning for them.

Now, this article here talks about:

'Freedom in jeopardy':
Thousands rally across Canada against new anti-terror law (A: ...because now it's time to rope in the Internet, obviously.)
rt.com / March 15, 2015

Thousands of demonstrators have united across Canada to take action against proposed anti-terrorism legislation known as Bill C-51, which would expand the powers of police and the nation’s spy agency, especially when it comes to detaining terror suspects.

Organizers of the 'Day of Action' said that “over 70 communities” across Canada were planning to participate on Saturday, according to StopC51.ca. (A: Now, on this particular article too, which I'll put up the link tonight, you'll get other links within the actual article itself.)

The biggest gatherings were reported in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Ottawa and Halifax.

“I’m really worried about democracy, this country is going in a really bad direction, [Prime Minister Stephen] Harper is taking it in a really bad direction,” protester Stuart Basden from Toronto, the Canadian city which saw hundreds of people come out, told The Star.

“Freedom to speak out against the government is probably in jeopardy...even if you’re just posting stuff online you could be targeted, so it’s a really terrifying bill,” Basden added.

The ruling Conservative government tabled the legislation back in January, arguing that the new law would improve the safety of Canadians.

Anti terror bill is labeled as being ‘too vague’

Demonstrators across the nation held signs and chanted against the bill, which they believe violates Canadian civil liberties and online privacy rights. (A: I really don't think you have any privacy rights at all, as it is, and as it has been from the beginning.)

Protester Holley Kofluk told CBC News that the legislation “lacked specificity...it’s just so much ambiguity, it leaves people open and vulnerable.”

One of the protest organizers in Collingwood, Jim Pinkerton, shared with QMI Agency that he would like to see the Canadian government “start over with Bill C-51 with proper safeguards and real oversight.”

“We need CSIS to be accountable. (A: That's the security intelligence agency.) It’s not OK for CSIS to act as the police, which is what’s indicated in Bill C-51. We need accountability and Canadians deserve that,” Pinkerton said.

The Day of Action is being backed by more than 30 civil liberties groups, including Amnesty International Canada, LeadNow, OpenMedia, Canadian Journalists for Free Expression, the Council for Canadians, and others.

One of the biggest concerns the new legislation raises is the additional powers it grants to police and Canada's spy agency – the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) – by increasing information sharing and allowing detention on mere suspicion.

"This bill disproportionately targets indigenous communities, environmental activists, dissidents, and Muslims, many of whom are already subjected to questionable and overreaching powers by security officials, and will make it easier and ostensibly lawful for government to continue infringing upon the rights of peaceful people," StopC51.ca said.

The government 'rejects the argument'

A spokesman for Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney, Jeremy Laurin, spoke in support of the bill on Saturday, telling CBC News that the government "rejects the argument that every time we talk about security, our freedoms are threatened." (A: What an awful thing to say, that, or a statement like that, if you understand history at all.)

"Canadians understand that their freedom and security go hand in hand and expect us to protect both, and there are safeguards in this legislation to do exactly that," Laurin said.

Blaney's parliamentary secretary, Roxanne James, also issued comments of support, saying she was happy to answer any questions or concerns about the proposed law.

"Most people across Canada believe that if one branch of government comes across information pertinent to the national security of this country and the safety and security of our citizens, then that branch of government should be able to relay that information to our national security agencies," James said. "That is precisely what Bill C-51 would do, and I was pleased to be able to answer those concerns."

So, it's all coming down, obviously. But if you look at the old ideas, that I mentioned at the beginning, of the Alfred Milner group which became the Royal Institute of International Affairs/Council on Foreign Relations/Trilateral commission and so on, they themselves already had information to an extent sewn up back in their day. Quigley even admits that too in his books, because the members of it were all the media moguls too and they were always putting false information into the newspapers for their own particular purposes and to sway the opinion of the general population. So naturally when you go into the age of television and the Internet it's the same bunch who still control it. Separate information from a big power would be very, very dangerous to anyone's particular agenda. So it's quite natural that they simply keep at it and at it, and make sure that whatever information is out there to the public is what they desire to be out there. Generally it's never complete information of course, and also a lot of it is simply omitted, the rest of the story is simply omitted which leads you to the wrong conclusion, which to them is the right conclusion that they want you to have. It's quite easy, isn't it?

This other article here from the Toronto Star says the Canadian Security Intelligence Service:

CSIS highlights white supremacist threat ahead of radical Islam
thestar.com / Alex Boutilier Staff Reporter / Mar 15 2015

(A: …AHEAD of radical Islam . This is amazing. But again, getting back to the Royal Institute of International Affairs, they created the term 'the British Commonwealth', 'the Commonwealth of Nations'. It sounded better than 'the Empire' or 'Dominion'. So they created that term, and they still have that organization on the go today. Because this organization at the top has members throughout all of the political establishment and the commercial elitist establishment of the Commonwealth Nations. Whenever they passed one thing in one country you'll see it's being passed in another, under a different name, but it's the same thing. And they are doing it all over the British Commonwealth system. So here you have, this stuff getting thrown in here too.)

Political ideas behind lone wolf attacks "run the gamut," say internal CSIS documents, but they're likelier found in the radical right-wing than in radical Islam.

Ziyaad Mia, of the Canadian Muslim Lawyers Association, says anti-Muslim sentiment in Canada is a growing concern and "some of this xenophobia is being stoked by political leaders."

OTTAWA—“Lone wolf” attacks more often come from white supremacists and extreme right-wing ideologies than from Islamic radicalism, internal CSIS documents say.

Citing recent academic research, the unclassified documents note extreme right-wing and white supremacist ideology has been the “main ideological source” for 17 per cent of so-called lone wolf attacks worldwide.

Islamic extremism accounted for 15 per cent of such attacks, the document noted, while left-wing extremism and “black power” groups followed with 13 per cent. Anti-abortion activism (8 per cent) and nationalism/separatism (7 per cent) rounded out the list, while in 40 per cent of cases there was no clear ideological motivation.

“Lone actors tend to create their own ideologies that combine personal frustrations and grievances, with wider political, social, or religious issues,” note the documents prepared for Michael Peirce, assistant director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service.

“This study confirms that the lone actor terrorism runs the gamut of ideological persuasions.”

The documents, obtained by the Star under access to information law, were prepared for Peirce’s appearance before a Senate committee on national security in October. His testimony came five days after Michael Zehaf-Bibeau fatally shot Cpl. Nathan Cirillo at the National War Memorial.

In a video recorded minutes before the shooting, Zehaf-Bibeau claimed his actions were in retaliation for Canada’s combat missions in Afghanistan and, more recently, in Iraq.

Zehaf-Bibeau’s attack came days after Martin Couture-Rouleau ran down Warrant Officer Patrice Vincent in St-Jean-sur-Richelieu. Authorities said Couture-Rouleau was frustrated after he was refused a passport, allegedly to travel to Syria and fight for the Islamic State.

These two attacks have focused the Canadian conversation about domestic terrorism on radical Islam to the exclusion of other potential threats. The Conservative government has repeatedly referred to the attacks to sell its new anti-terror legislation, which would give Canada’s spies police-like powers to “disrupt” threats.

Other Canadian lone wolf attacks, such as Justin Bourque’s shooting rampage in Moncton last June that left three RCMP officers dead, were not automatically branded as terrorism.

After three people were arrested last month in an alleged plot to open fire in the Halifax Shopping Centre, Justice Minister Peter MacKay called them “murderous misfits” — not terrorists — because their attacks were not “culturally motivated.” When reporters later asked MacKay to explain what he considers terrorism, he encouraged them to “look it up” in the Criminal Code.

But Prime Minister Stephen Harper has often referred to the threat of Islamic extremism in the House of Commons, and once mentioned the “jihadist monster” whose “tentacles” reached the Parliament buildings. (A: They actually have links to his different statements and so on in the Toronto Star.)

The CSIS documents explicitly warn that the notion the Western world is at war with Islam plays into terrorist recruitment strategies.

“International terrorist groups place a high priority on radicalizing Westerners who can be used to carry out terrorist acts in their home countries,” the documents read. “The narrative that the West is at war with Islam continues to exert a very powerful influence in radicalizing individuals and spreads quickly through social media and online fora.”

Other CSIS documents, obtained by The Canadian Press, warned the Conservatives last September that there is an emerging anti-Islam movement in Canada, similar to movements in Europe.

And it goes on and on talking about this particular problem. But this is the story that they're giving you in The Star, which always goes left wing and so on. That's its job, because they always give you a Star and a Sun, which goes the other way. Or Mercury, you see. So they have different papers that give you different ideologies because everything is catered to. Every group you could possibly believe you belong to is catered to by a particular newspaper, that's how it's run. Even the magazines too, Harper’s magazine, for instance, was put out and why it was put out and what target group they were putting it out to inform, misinform, whatever it happened to be. That's how information is always used of course.

Now, this article is very good, well written. This article is by Clayton Ruby who is a top lawyer for Canada, for top cases. I think this is his partner too in the business, Nader R. Hasan. And this is put out by Global Research, which if you go into their history is also a left-wing group, Global Research. I think one of the leaders of it actually attends and talks to the world's Marxist associations whenever they have their international meetings, things like that. But the article itself is excellent, by Clayton Ruby, the lawyer. I'll read some of this and it says:

Canada’s “AntiTerrorism” Bill C-51: A Legal Primer, Expands the Powers of Canada’s Spy Agency, Allows Arrest on Mere Suspicion globalresearch.ca / March 15, 2015 / Clayton Ruby and Nader R. Hasan

Six Muslim young adults stand in front of a mosque late at night in heated discussion in some foreign language. They may be debating the merits of a new Drake album. They may be talking about video games, or sports, or girls, or advocating the overthrow of the Harper government. Who knows? There is no evidence one way or the other. Just stereotypes. But the new standard for arrest and detention—reason to suspect that they may commit an act—is so low that an officer may be inclined to arrest and detain them in order to investigate further. And now, officers will no longer need to ask themselves whether the arrest is necessary. They could act on mere suspicion that an arrest is likely to prevent any terrorist activity. Yesterday, the Muslim men were freely exercising constitutional rights to freedom of expression and assembly. Today they are to be arrested.

Overview: The Anti-Terrorism Act

Bill C-51, the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015, would expand the powers of Canada’s spy agency, allow Canadians to be arrested on mere suspicion of future criminal activity, (A: It’s like Minority Report, the movie, isn't it?) allow the Minister of Public Safety to add Canadians to a “no-fly list” with illusory rights of judicial review, (A: In other words, there's no real judicial review.) and, perhaps most alarmingly, create a new speech-related criminal offence of “promoting” or “advocating” terrorism. These proposed laws are misguided, and many of them are likely also unconstitutional. The bill ought to be rejected as a whole. Repair is impossible.

(A: And I think he's right on that, you would have to reject the whole thing. Because generally they bring out this same tactic over and over. It's like the gas prices, they say, oh gas prices are going to jump by $.40 or $.50. and everybody mumbles and grumbles, oh my God and so on. And they give it a week or two. The first statement is a trial balloon to see your reaction, and according to your reaction on the Internet and so on and yapping amongst yourselves, which they have all the data of, instant surveys are done with percentages of who is against it and who is going to be ticked off and so on, then they lower it proportionately according to what you will accept. So when they put it up only $.15, you say, oh thank God for that. Well, it's the same with these bills too. They often give you the whole shebang to start with, which are terrifying in their completeness actually, and they'll bring it back with certain, again, very, ha, I almost call it mystical wording, which allows them to still go ahead with the same things they wanted to do from the very beginning. It's all done in courts, isn't it, what they say and the words that they use and how they are going to reinterpret it over and over. Like the American Constitution is always getting reinterpreted by lawyers.)

The bill ought to be rejected as a whole. (A: That's the only way you can do that. They can't accept it or have some compromise.)

New offence of promoting terrorism

Bill C-51 creates a new criminal offence that likely violates s. 2(b) of the Charter. (A: That's your charter of rights for Canadians.) Newly proposed s. 83.221 of the Criminal Code provides as follows:

Every person who, by communication statements (A: ...now, how vague is that…), knowingly advocates or promotes the commission of terrorism offences in general (A: Now, terrorism itself is very vague because that can be expanded, and it is being expanded, to include anything at all. Words you use, terms you use, all these things which are outlawed in Canada you can't use. It's been that way for a long time. Again, you go back to self-policing and you get trained and trained and trained throughout your life.)—other than an offence under this section—while knowing that any of those offences will be committed or being reckless as to whether any of those offences may be committed, (A: [Alan laughing.] How vague can you get…) as a result of such communication, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term of not more than five years.

The new offence will bring within its ambit all kinds of innocent speech, some of which no doubt lies at the core of freedom of expression values that the Charter was meant to protect. As Professors Kent Roach and Craig Forcese point out, the new offence would sweep within its net the following scenario:

Take just one hypothetical: An academic or foreign affairs columnists opines “we should provide resources to Ukrainian insurgencies who are targeting Russian oil infrastructure, in an effort to increase the political cost of Russian intervention in Ukraine.” The speaker says this knowing that her audience includes support groups who may be sending money to those opposing Russian intervention.

Providing resources to a group, one of whose purposes is a “terrorist activity,” is a terrorism offence. And causing substantial property damage or serious interference with an essential service or system for a political reason and in a way that endangers life, to compel a government to do something, is a “terrorist activity.” This is so even if it takes place abroad. So a criminal prosecution of the columnist in the hypothetical situation described above is a real possibility under the new law. It is constitutionally unacceptable and dangerous.

The new offence is broader than existing terrorism offences in the Criminal Code in that it does not require an actual terrorist purpose. So someone can be guilty of this offence—like the columnist—despite completely innocent purposes, such as attempting to provoke democratic debate (A: …that may be your intention…), or proposing a solution to an intractable international conflict. The speaker’s purpose does not matter; they are liable if they are reckless as to the risk that a listener “may” thereafter commit an unspecified terrorism offence.

Criminal culpability would extend beyond the speaker of the impugned words. Like all criminal offences, a person can be guilty if they aid or abet the individual who actually commits the offence. Not only the columnist, but also their editors, publishers and research assistants become criminals.

It should be noted that there are other “promoting” and “advocating” offences in the Criminal Code. The Code contains a prohibition on willful promotion of hatred. It also contains a prohibition on advocating sexual activity with underage children. But hate propaganda and sexual activity with underage children are much narrower than the vague reference to “terrorism offences in general.” In addition, unlike willful promotion of hatred, which contains an express exception for communications made in private, the proposed new offence can be applied to statements made in private. (A: That also means your phone calls, folks, and everything else.) This is all the more concerning given the Canadian Security Intelligence Service’s (CSIS) expansive anti-terror wiretap and surveillance powers.

Another truly bizarre aspect of the new offence is the use of the term “terrorism offences in general—other than an offence under this section.” The Criminal Code already contains 14 broadly worded terrorism-related offences. “Terrorism activity” is a defined term under s. 83.01 of the Criminal Code, but this is broader. It applies to more speech than speech advocating or promoting terrorist activity, or the 14 terrorism offences in the Criminal Code. The new offence is meant to include speech promoting and advocating “terrorism in general,” a deliberately opaque and unknowable term. (A: And that's why it is that way, it's because they can reinterpret it depending on if they want to get a person in the slammer or not.)

Even if the government exercises restraint in laying charges and arresting people, the result is an inevitable chill on speech. Students will think twice before posting an article on Facebook questioning military action against insurgents overseas. Journalists will be wary of questioning government decisions to add groups to Canada's list of terrorist entities.

(A: In other words, you're getting back to self-policing. And just like being on camera changes your behavior, now once you know this and they get a few suspects to start with, as warnings to everybody else, and that is to make you self-police yourself. This is how these things work out. These are all thought out in think tanks long before they put it all down in words.)

New CSIS powers

CSIS was created in 1984 by an Act of Parliament. To that point, security intelligence in Canada was the purview of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) Security Service. However, in the 1970s there were allegations that the RCMP Security Service had been involved in numerous illegal activities. In 1977, as a result of these allegations, Justice David McDonald was appointed to investigate. The McDonald Commission published its final report in 1981, with its main recommendation being that security intelligence work should be separated from policing, and that a civilian intelligence agency should be created to take over from the RCMP Security Service. CSIS was created to be that civilian intelligence agency. At the time of its creation, CSIS was subject to general oversight review by a new body, the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC), which has been starved of resources, as well as by the Office of the Inspector General, which was abolished and disbanded in 2012.

The idea behind CSIS was that abuses of power were less likely to occur if intelligence gathering was separated from law enforcement. (A: It's awfully important, that, too.) Bill C-51 erodes the distinction between CSIS's traditional intelligence gathering role by giving it broad new powers to engage in law enforcement–type activities. Under Bill C-51, CSIS would be able to take "measures" to reduce threats to the security of Canada. For example, s. 12.1(1) of the proposed act states,

If there are reasonable grounds to believe that a particular activity constitutes a threat to the security of Canada, the Service may take measures, within or outside Canada, to reduce the threat.

The power under s. 12.1 is broadly defined, giving CSIS virtually unfettered authority to conduct any operation it thinks is in the interest of Canadian security. The definitions are so broad that they could apply to almost anything, including measures to disrupt or interfere with non-violent civil disobedience. Only the following activities are explicitly excluded from these new powers, as per s. 12.2(1) of the act:

In taking measures to reduce a threat to the security of Canada, the Service shall not

(a) cause, intentionally or by criminal negligence, death or bodily harm to an individual;

(b) willfully attempt in any manner to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice; or

(c) violate the sexual integrity of an individual.

These limited exclusions leave CSIS with incredibly expansive powers, including water boarding, inflicting pain (torture) or causing psychological harm to an individual. (A: They can use drugs on you and things like that.) The government has pointed out that in order for CSIS to take measures under s. 12.1, CSIS must first apply for a warrant. Under the warrant provision, a judge may issue a warrant if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to justify the belief that the requested measures are required to enable CSIS "to reduce a threat to the security of Canada," and are "reasonable and proportionate."

This is an odd standard, which judges will find difficult, if not impossible, to apply. (A: Well, they're not going to go into the fact that there's an old-school-tie thing at work here too, because you'll find there's always crossovers within circles, between security systems, even police, and their circle of judges and so on, and they have their own little codes too they go by, by the way, and things get done which perhaps shouldn't be done.) The ordinary standard for issuance of a warrant is based on reasonable grounds to believe that a criminal offence has been committed (in the case of a warrant to arrest) or reasonable grounds to believe that the search of a place will afford evidence of an offence (in the case of a search pursuant to judicial warrant). These are determinations that can be made objectively, based on the evidence, by an impartial judicial officer. By contrast, whether a given measure would proportionately “reduce the threat to the security of Canada” is not like these other tests. It amounts to asking judges to look into a crystal ball to determine if Canada will be safer in the future if a CSIS officer takes some measures. This is not a determination that judges are equipped to make. The limits will vary with the judges chosen by CSIS, not with the evidence. (A: And there will be select ones chosen by CSIS.)

The expansion of CSIS’s powers is troubling given the RCMP’s notorious history of commingling intelligence gathering and law enforcement. It is also troubling for the additional reason that there is very little oversight of CSIS activities. At present, CSIS is accountable only to the SIRC. CSIS has a budget of over $500 million annually. SIRC (A: …the oversight one…) has an annual budget of $3 million and is staffed by four part-time committee members. It no longer has a director general who watches the watchers. By contrast, spy agencies in other countries are supervised by powerful parliamentary or congressional committees. The sweeping new powers, coupled with the woeful lack of oversight, risks turning CSIS into a dangerous “secret police force.”

(A: For the hard of thinking I'll mention that again.)
The sweeping new powers, coupled with the woeful lack of oversight, risks turning CSIS into a dangerous “secret police force.”

Preventive arrest powers

The current anti-terrorism sections of the Criminal Code already contain provisions for preventive arrest, preventive detention and preventive restraints on liberty. Preventive detention is at odds with our legal tradition of only prosecuting and punishing crimes that have been committed already, and only after those offences have been proved by the prosecution beyond a reasonable doubt. Preventive detention—i.e., detention on the suspicion that someone may or will commit a crime at some point in the future—is the opposite of that legal tradition and is inconsistent with the constitutionally protected right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Prior to the enactment of the 2001 anti-terrorism provisions, the only other preventive detention scheme in the Criminal Code was the dangerous offender regime. But to be found a dangerous offender or a long-term offender under Part XXIV of the Criminal Code, an offender must have been already convicted of a serious personal injury offence, and there must be evidence that the individual constitutes a threat to the life, safety, or physical and mental well-being of other persons based on evidence of repetitive or persistent serious criminal behaviour. By contrast, the anti-terrorism Criminal Code provisions permit the arrest and detention of individuals, who have not been convicted or even charged with any offence, based on what they might do. (A: I mean, that's really something, hey.)

The current preventive detention scheme is already constitutionally suspect. The proposed amendments in Bill C-51 will further lower the threshold for preventive arrest and detention, increasing the risk that entirely innocent people will be swept up on mere suspicion. (A: And so will nuisance people, just nuisances.) Under the current s. 83.3(2) of the Criminal Code, a peace officer is empowered to lay an information and bring an individual before a provincial court judge if the officer:

(a) believes on reasonable grounds that a terrorist activity will be carried out; and

(b) suspects on reasonable grounds that the imposition of a recognizance with conditions on a person, or the arrest of a person, is necessary to prevent the carrying out of the terrorist activity.

Where exigent circumstances exist, or where laying the information would be impractical, the individual may be arrested without a warrant.

The new measures would allow law enforcement agencies to arrest somebody if they suspect that a terrorist act “may be carried out," instead of the current standard of "will be carried out." Bill C-51 also substitutes "likely" for "necessary" such that s. 83.3(2) would now enable a peace officer to lay an information or effect a warrantless arrest if the officer:

(a) believes on reasonable grounds that a terrorist activity may be carried out; and

(b) suspects on reasonable grounds that the imposition of a recognizance with conditions on a person, or the arrest of a person, is likely to prevent the carrying out of the terrorist activity.

Both changes result in a significant lowering of the standard for arrest and detention.

The changes to the law are significant in two respects. The substitution of "may" where it currently says "will" is a significant watering down of the standard. "Will," when coupled with "reasonable grounds to believe," denotes evidence-based probability, whereas "may" denotes mere possibility.

The shift from "necessary" to "likely" is equally important. Necessity in this context suggests that the police officer suspects that no measure other than arrest will prevent a terrorist act. Likelihood is not necessity. Under the new provision, the police officer need only suspect that the arrest is more likely than not to prevent terrorist activity.

Canadians do not want government to arrest individuals based on religious and ethnic stereotypes. But under the new standard, it will be nearly impossible to challenge their decisions.

No-fly list powers

Bill C-51 codifies the Minister of Public Safety's power to put Canadians on a so-called no-fly list, which prevents them from getting on an airplane. The minister can add anyone to the no-fly list on mere suspicion that he or she will engage in an act that would threaten transportation security or travel by air for the purpose of committing an act of terrorism.

Putting someone on the no-fly list is a significant restraint on liberty. And once on the no-fly list, the procedure to have one's name removed from the list is complex and difficult. Someone on the no-fly list has the right to appeal the minister's decision to a judge of the Federal Court, but it is a very narrow and futile appeal. It is not nearly enough for the individual to show that the minister was wrong to put them on the no-fly list; they must also show that the minister had acted unreasonably.

Moreover, the review procedures in Bill C-51 for challenging the no-fly list designation incorporates the procedure from the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act's byzantian security certificate regime. This means the minister can ask the Court to hold part of the hearing in secret—the individual challenging his or her no-fly list designation, their lawyer and the public are excluded from the courtroom when the government presents its case. The judge hearing the appeal can base his or her entire decision on evidence that was presented during the secret portion of the hearing.

In 2007, the Supreme Court held that this procedure was unconstitutional under s. 7 of the Charter when applied to the judicial review of the detention of a non-citizen detained pursuant to a security certificate. Although being put on the no-fly list is a less serious restraint on liberty than being subject to a security certificate, s. 7 of the Charter is still triggered, and thus the core protections of s. 7, such as the right to know the case to meet, should apply. The currently proposed procedure unequivocally violates that right.

So it's all coming down, folks. And it's no surprise to me. It's no shock. Because I knew at the beginning that since ARPA, then DARPA, was in control of the Internet, long before you got ahold of it, and before they gave it to you, they wanted you all on it for their own particular reasons, including definitely surveillance, complete, and personality profiling and so on. And I knew too, as they say, from different leaks that have come out over many years, from different people, that they would have erode it away until… Don't worry though, they'll leave you with your, you know, the things that you love to do, video games and stuff and cartoons. Pornography of course, they'll make sure that keeps going, that's how they got so many folk on it in the first place, they made sure everyone knew there was lots of pornography on it. And you will play yourself too and stay on safe topics, the New Age for instance, and reincarnation, and Bigfoot and all these things that keep you harmless to the government. That's what they want you to be involved in, things which are utterly harmless and irrelevant to life in general. That's how bad it is.

So, it's all coming down the pike. And your self-policing, if you're not self-policing you should be in your private phone calls because folk can try and trip you up, maybe, you know, you don't know when you're getting set up, you never do, by anybody. Don't ever be fooled. Even if you think you know the person, because you have spoken to them before or they have emailed you before, anything like that, be very, very careful. Because it will be used against you, as I have been saying for years. Every word that you utter will be used against you. Even jokes, jokes are not safe at all. Because if you were to hear, for instance, in court, not that you will under all the new laws, part of a recording being played, it's completely different than having a lawyer or a prosecutor read it in a flat tone, that there's no inflections there, there's no humor there, there's no joking mood involved. So whatever you say can be used. Did you really say this? Well… That's it, you see.

And the Stasi really is all there. And with the ongoing anti-terrorism, which is going to go on way past your lives and the next generation's lives, because this is the one they hit on to get the whole agenda through, to keep you safe of course – again, the good reason but not the real reason – then it's all a done deal as far as I'm concerned. So be careful. That's all you can do now is be careful. Be very, very careful because it's not safe to give your opinions on things, no matter how innocent the topic of the conversation, or even private conversations. As I've said for years to people when they've phoned me up, be careful, there is a third ear on every call. But they forget, most of them.

Well, from Hamish and myself from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 29, 2015. As always I hope, I really do hope that you're pulling through into the spring, which appears in the occasional place south of the border, more than where I am here up in Canada. Last night in fact it hit on the centigrade scale about -25, or 25 below. Hopefully I'm going get some spring eventually too but we're pretty well going into April and it's not really on the horizon that much at the moment. Well, we're going through global warming, right, that's the reason we're so cold up here.

Now, we're living, as I've mentioned so many times, in such a massively planned psychological muddle basically, by the big forces above us that have trained us since child birth, that they have influenced us in so many ways that most folk are completely unaware of in fact, primarily through, part of your initial indoctrination and education, apart from that it's taken up by media and also by entertainment, which is the greatest way to alter behavior of all. In fact, we mimic what we see. We even mimic the attitudes of the actors we like, or who are portrayed as likable in special movies and so on. We copy in other words, we're very much into mimicking. Children are more apt and you'll see it more openly in children with the language and everything else they pick up on television, a lot of it which you don't like in fact. But all of this is understood by those who put it out in the first place because the culture industry calls themselves just that, amongst themselves, the culture industry, not the entertainment industry.

At the very top you have the economic system and those who run at the top the economic system. There are people, a few individual families in fact that slush billions every day into the world economy. They slush these funds around all over the place and everyone else follows suit, because they read the newspapers, who's investing in what and so on. And the little guys, again, always emulate what they see, even though it's very misleading because it's a game too where those at the top always get out in time and divest the money and put it into another option before they crash a certain market and so on.

But that's the name of the game in this system. There's nothing fair about it. It's not designed to be fair. Those at the top will actually... really, put out the old idea of social Darwinism and survival of the fittest, that developed out of that Darwinistic theory, and they believe that they have the right to use cunning and so on. They say that all is fair in love and war, but it's also all is fair in economic business as well. And business is not a very nice thing because behind all the smiles of the business suits when they meet together to drink their brandy and so on and sip wine, there's always this competition amongst themselves. Vast egos. Many of them actually are psychopathic, there's no doubt about it at all. Look at some of the statements that some of the top of them, CEOs and so on come out with.

And the reason they get to the top is that they know how to play the game. They know what the game is. They can emulate emotion, affection and so on, and fire you just in the same breath actually or a second later. They don't really have emotions as we think of it. They have the emotion of great happiness when they win something personally, and they have that high they get when they succeed in putting other competition under. That's real business and that's just the way it really is. Competition is taught. It used to be more blatant in the schooling system where they would grade you in classes in fact and then you'd compete and compete within the classes for the little gold stars that you'd get on your little cardboard form or booklet or whatever or on the wall. And that's the system, you're trained at an early age to compete. Athletics is just another part of it, to compete, compete, compete, and so were the school exams as well.

So we live in a competitive society. Is it natural? Well, some parts of it may kind of natural because I think young guys in a primitive society, as they call natural societies, primitive, and tribal societies, which compete to an extent. But they would also form their natural pecking orders where one person who might be the best hunter or the best runner or whatever would have compassion and feel part of the rest of the group. If he didn't and he tried to take over as leader of the tribe or whatever there was enough people to depose him. When he gets an army behind him, through taxation than he can pay an army money, then you're really in trouble because then he can stay in power, then intermarry with some other psychopathic leader’s daughter of another tribe. That's how history has been made in fact, unfortunately.

Now, I've mentioned before that when you have psychopaths in a system of psychopathic control, which is never humane, sometimes there's a spill over and more wealth allowed to the people at the bottom in so-called prosperous times, or when they have big plans afoot that may be a few years hence they'll bring on a war, and folk are happier prior to the war and tend to go into the Army, the Air Force, the Navy and so on to keep what they think it's theirs, their right to have a good prosperous life. Once they are running out of wars of course they take all the goodies away from you, and they don't really need you to be happy anymore, because they can use you in other ways.

Today we're in a scientifically controlled society and they don't have to keep you happy at all for that matter. In fact, they have found in their neuroscience and so on, if they keep you on edge all the time they can condition you all the faster. Because you can't grasp hold of something for long enough, that you call normalicy, to hang onto. And normalicy develops over time, it becomes the culture and so on. If they can keep them in a stampede they can shape and direct the direction of the stampede according to their planning quite easily. And that's where we are today under the anti-terrorism and so on, global economics, bank failures are threatened all the time. We have bank bail-ins planned because all of the countries, all of the first world countries have signed on to the IMF and the World Bank with their directions to, have treaties on all this, that they'll all do bank bail-ins where they will literally take all the deposits out of the savers' accounts and so on.

So we're living in a very crisis ridden society, and then they have the threat of terrorism constantly on the go, which can only end up, with the aid of technology as we have it today, into a worse system than you had in the East Germany's Stasi police. And the Stasi police, they put a lot of good documentaries out on it and some good movies that were based on fact, written by participants in fact, or victims of the Stasi, both actually took part in making some of them. They show you how innocent people, lots of them, thousands of them, every year, had their homes bugged. They could bug a home entirely by going in and within 10 minutes they had many, many bugs put all over the place. They could record everything that happened; they had little fisheye cameras and so on. Today they don't need that because you buy all the equipment that surveillance needs. You buy it thinking it's of a benefit to yourself, it's much, much easier. I'll be touching on some of that tonight. That's the way it is.

Now, I'm going to mention right off the bat here too that at this time of year, and all through the winter, I always get lots of people emailing me with problems and depressions and so on. And these are from people who have a higher understanding of what's happening in the world and why things are happening and as always they find no solution out of it. And you can't simply give simple solutions to a system which is total. That's why I liken it to The Matrix in fact because it's very, very much like the matrix system portrayed in the movies as far as realities go, and with their false endings, even within the movie. You think you have arrived, that the person is going to give you the answer, you've arrived at the right place only to find out there's another compartment or level above you or beneath you or to the side of you and so on. That's how the system is. It's a very complex system.

And people get depressed in the winter, especially when it's a bad winter like we have now, and the last few years in fact. There are fewer jobs as well, people are being laid off and unemployed or working so many part-time jobs they are burned out. Many folk are lonely of course, naturally, because if you are into trying to understand what's happening in the world, you're getting the patterns, you see how it fits together, it's very difficult to talk to people who are in their programming. They have been well programed from childhood onwards in fact and they have really, they take the world as it is presented to them and everything in the world and all aspects of it, the way the media, the television and so on presents it to them. They take it that way. They think, well naturally, it's a natural way to take it. That's why it works so well for those who run the world. Why would you think that you're being deceived? Why would you think that? In a natural society why would you think you were born into a form of deception? And being trained not to see what's there? So it's a natural thing for them to cling onto that, I must be right, and all authorities must be right, all authority figures must be right, because they all say they are. You see. And all their friends do too, who are also under the influence of the world being presented to them and they have taken it as the presentation is given.

That's the hard part for people. And I tell them, when you're really getting depressed about it all, pull back. Pull back. Don't overwhelm yourself with what seems to be negativity because negativity will destroy you and put you into a massive depression. You can't allow that to happen to yourselves. Pull back from listening to the bad news. Even the show that I do, pull back from it. And relax, allow your mind to relax. Concentrate on the things you must get done to survive and get through day to day, and do the essential things. But pull away from things that just spouts out, there's a lot of shows out there that spout fear every day, which seems to be overwhelming. It is overwhelming in fact, and they use a shotgun approach to things. They tell you 50 bad things that are scary things that are being considered by governments around the world, all at the same time, within an hour or two, and then you're left shattered afterwards, in a frenzy. That's the shotgun approach, scattergun approach were all these problems are whacked at you and not a single solution is given in the presentations. Which makes you wonder why they're doing it in the first place. [Alan scoffs.] But again, you've got to remember that a lot of what’s called the patriot business is a business for those people. Don't forget that. Without what's happening in the world they would have no business, and that's how they do it.

Now, you must always pace yourself according to the news that's been given out there and don't become incredibly overwhelmed by it and put down by it until, as many people find, they can't communicate. I mean, it's very difficult to communicate to those around you, who are living in their day-to-day television series and the dramas and so on and their news. And you know why things are happening on the news even, of why it's being presented, something is being presented in some certain way, but you can't convey it to them. Just bite your tongue at times. It's not their fault. It's not their fault. Many folks' conditioning is so perfect, it has taken so well in them they can't understand what you're talking about. It terrifies them if you try and explain to them something that's happening. They always say, choose your battles. It's the same when you're choosing your talks for conversation, choose them, know when to talk and when to listen. And you know, you don't have to get into some butting of heads like a couple of goats, you don't have to do that. It doesn't get them anywhere because they've already made their mind up, they're not going to… they can't believe you. If they did believe you they would crack up, you see. It fills them full of fear. Someone who's been brought up to think that, why would anybody, why would a system lie to me about so much? It fills them full of fear. It terrifies them.

So you have to choose your talks to people and conversations and know when to live inside your head. I’ve told so many folk to do that. But when it becomes overwhelming, pull back, you've got plenty inside your mind to think about. You don't have to listen every day, and this is part of the technique too of fear. There are those who put out fear, fear, fear, fear everyday... because it becomes addictive. I've mentioned this so many times before and folk should really use the archive section of .com where I explain the techniques of horror movies and psychology. Even in the worst B-movie horror movie people will watch the beginning and say, oh God no. But the hook it's in you see, what's going to happen to so-and-so? And you project yourself as so-and-so the hero, or the victim, and as a girl, that's got to be the heroine or the victim. And the primitive part of your brain kicks in because the horror movies are about impending danger, life extinction, all that kind of thing. And you don't want to turn away because it works, a horror movie, it works just like a dream, that's how it works and is assessed, with you being chased or whatever and if you turn away or don't tune in you might miss something that's going to save your life. So you listen to the shows that spout bad, bad, bad, terrifying news, very scary, with all the music behind it… Whenever you hear music dramatizing someone's words, and it's going bang-bang-bang-bang, whatever the noise they're making at the time, these are psychological techniques to intensify fear. I hope you understand all that. And you've got to pull back, you see, switch the darned thing off. You find out no monster is going to get you at the end of the movie, because you're not going to watch it. And it's the same thing when you're hearing, tuning into shows every day that are petrifying you, don't do it. It will kill you. It will destroy you.

So that's a bit of advice for everybody. Because in this world today you have enough, enough natural bad stuff going on. A lot of you are struggling, we are all struggling actually financially. The economies are going down the tubes. China was made and set up to be, not by China but by the Western countries and their governments in collusion with the World Bank and the Bank for International Settlements, the World Trade Organization, all private institutions, and the GATT treaty and so on for trade and tariffs. We set up China as the commercial manufacturer of most things for the whole planet. In fact, we funded it through our tax money and so on, unbeknownst to the people themselves we funded it all. And they knew the impact of impoverishment and job losses of nonproducing countries, they knew that would happen. And they knew there would be depressions, economic depressions and mass unemployment and so on. That was all decided by our betters who often pretend they are elected by you and that they are there to serve you, which of course is never, in my life for sure, ever been the actual truth at all. That's the way it is. I'm not saying it's fair. It's unfair, of course it is. But there's nothing fair in this massive system of economics. There's nothing fair, never will be in an economic system set up the way it is and the way that we have experienced it for so long. It can't be fair. It's not designed to be. It doesn't want to be.

So when you're getting overwhelmed with things, pull back, switch off all the terrifying news, in fact all news for that matter. And get the things done that you must do. If you're unemployed try and get something to tide you over. It's imperative that you try. You don't have to like the job, just do it. Earn enough money and when it gives you time to look around for something else and so on that's a little bit better, and not so soul destroying as I call some jobs because a lot of them are definitely soul destroying, if they are repetitive especially. And take care of yourself. Get the imperative things taken care of first of all. And when you go back into it, looking out for what's happening in the world, you'll find that if you had some peace in you, you must have some peace there, then you can handle it much, much better. And don't go right back into the same routine of getting terrified every day, hour after hour, listening to certain things. Pull back, get the important things that are going on, and keep the basic view of what's going on, the basic view. You have to forget all of the rest of the extraneous stuff, get the basic view and that's all you need to know.

I've gone over the whole big world agenda for so long from documents put out by members of big organizations involved in globalism, and the boys involved in the culture industry who meet at global meetings as well on how to make sure, along with the educational systems and so on, they make sure they're bringing up the right kind of society to be manipulated by the system, which is going to get more and more intensive. These things have all been going on for well over 100 years now. And I've also gone through all the different organizations that work for the big changes that help the big international corporations continue. The big international corporations you'll find are sponsors of all the supposed civil liberty groups and so on out there and the big cultural change groups that are out there, and so on and so on.

So be very careful what you listen to. You don't have to listen to their whole spiel, you know what it's going to be and you know what spin they're going to take on before you start listening, and once you understand it, switch it off and start thinking for yourself. Because you must get through life. You must get through life yourself. It's imperative you take care of yourself.

Now, I've mentioned Bill C-51 in Canada, this Anti-Terrorism Act 2015 quite a few times and I'll just touch on this tonight to start off. I warned about it last time, what this could turn into. It's inevitable, in fact, that if it gets passed it will turn into, I think even if they don't pass it this time, we're already doing most of it anyway, it just gives them more right to do further things openly, I think. But anyway this says:

Bill C-51: What it is and controversy behind it
torontosun.com / Julia Alexander / March 18, 2015

What is Bill C-51?

According to the Government of Canada, Bill C-51, also known as the Anti-terrorism Act, 2015, was designed to, “encourage and facilitate information sharing between Government of Canada institutions in order to protect Canada against activities that undermine the security of Canada.”

The Conservative Party introduced the idea of increasing security provisions after the Parliament Hill shooting in October, but didn’t formally introduce the act until January.

Simply put, the Stephen Harper government wants to allocate more power to police services and security institutions like the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) to keep a closer eye on potentially dangerous terrorism situations and prevent future attacks.

Why does the Harper government insist we need it? (Alan:And this is from the Toronto Sun.)

According to the act’s official summary, Bill C-51 would ensure safer transportation services for Canadians, allow law enforcement to step in and arrest, without question, a person they suspect is about to carry out a terrorist attack, and it would increase the protection of witnesses who come forward with information on a potential terrorist attack.

(A: Now, you often find witnesses who come forward, or witnesses they've already grabbed, you see, who are already in jail awaiting some sentence, for maybe their part in something or knowing someone or whatever and being involved in something. And it's well known in this whole judicial system that we live in that they tend to, they can make things up to get out and get other people incriminated who have nothing to do with them whatsoever. That's fairly common in the criminal justice system and we hear about it all the time. And it would simply increase. Because every other country that was totalitarian have used the same techniques in the past, this is what happens, no one becomes safe at all, even folks they don't like, they will rat on them, and once you're on a list, you know, you can't really prove your innocence. Once you're on a list government does not, as people who are in government have told me, work very fast to correct mistakes, they don't do that. They're so slow, they go around corners on four square wheels. They lumber in other words. And once you're on a list your life can become absolute hell, absolute hell. Can you imagine each trip you would take in a vehicle, they would have your license plate, you have the automatic scanners now as you drive by and they pull you over just to harass you and question you and so on. Because the police themselves have already judged you as you're being… The judgment has been made for them that you are suspicious, you see, if you're on a list. And that's the sad truth of so-called civilization.)

Essentially, the government would increase its role in national security to keep a constant watchful eye on potentially harmful situations and end them before anyone is hurt or killed.

Why is it so controversial?

Civil liberty groups and other critics have claimed the bill stretches the definition of security to potentially include peaceful protests, further restricts freedom of expression, and raises privacy concerns, since the act would allow federal institutions such as Health Canada and Revenue Canada to share private information with the RCMP.

Critics have also expressed grave concerns that it fails to define terrorism clearly, (A: And you can't because they're already broadening it to include many other things that are not what you would call terrorist related at all. And that's inevitable as well.) and in attempting to remove all terrorist propaganda from the Internet will effectively try to censor freedom of expression on the Internet, violating a handful of online civil liberties. (A: It will be more than a handful of civil liberties. Personal conversations on the phone or whatever, little comments you make, even jokes you make, it will all be taken awfully, awfully seriously. And it becomes a nightmare. That's the problem with this kind of system.)

Where is Bill C-51 at?

Bill C-51 was formally introduced on Jan. 30, and since then has been rapidly pushed through Parliament.

On Feb. 23, the bill was passed and read a second time before being referred to the Standing Committee.

(A: I think it's got one more go then it will be into law.)

So as I say, these are like bad dreams because you know the history of other countries that have used techniques like this before in the past, and they are horrific. The stories that come out are horrific, how so many lives were utterly destroyed, destroyed by this kind of system that comes in when you have suspicion, suspicion.

Why I Am Fighting Bill C-51
huffingtonpost.ca / 03/20/2015 / ELIZABETH MAY

The reaction to Bill C-51 has been widespread and the opposition is growing. While its short title is the "Anti-Terrorism Act," it is both more and less than that.

It is less than "anti-terrorism" because it is likely to make us less safe. The act gives new powers to CSIS to act in Canada and overseas to "reduce threats," with virtually no limits. CSIS is specifically not allowed to cause death or bodily harm or "violate the sexual integrity" of anyone. The range of potential activities -- from break and enter, search and seizure, infiltration, monkey-wrenching, include powers to offer witnesses immunity from prosecution or from ever having to testify. (A: So some obscure witness can just say something about you, and that's you.)

There is no requirement that CSIS tell the RCMP what it is up to (A: That's the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.), and it is the RCMP that has been successfully countering plots and arresting suspects. Just imagine when the RCMP finds key witnesses have a "get out of jail free" card from CSIS. (A: That's the Canadian Security Intelligence Service.) That and other sections run a high degree of probability of gumming up the works. Security experts, especially those with experience in the Air India inquiry, remind us that it is critical that security agencies not develop silos. C-51 takes a system that is currently working quite well and threatens to turn it into a three ring circus, without benefit of a ring-master.

It is also less than Canadians would expect, as there is nothing in C-51 to work against radicalization. No outreach efforts, nothing for the prison system or the schools as the U.K. government established in its new law passed in December 2014.

It is more than anti-terrorism, as the range of activities covered by a new and sweeping definition of "threats to the security of Canada" in the information sharing section of the bill covers far more than terrorism. It could plausibly cover just about anything, and certainly would cover those opposing pipelines and tankers. (A: That's the enviro-groups and so on.)

It is actually five bills rolled into one. Each part contains provisions I can only describe as dangerous. For example, part 5, amendments to the Immigration and Refugee Act, appear to allow the use of evidence obtained by torture. Part 3, ostensibly about getting terrorist propaganda off the Internet, uses a set of new concepts that would criminalize private conversations (A: I mean, that's terrible, that.) -- and not just about terrorism. (A: Humph.) The propaganda section does not require knowing you are spreading propaganda, and "terrorist propaganda" itself has a definition so broad as to include a visual representation promoting a new concept called "terrorism in general." Experts are now referring to this as "thought chill." (A: ...thought chill.. Actually, it will be thought kill because it will kill… you'd better kill off any ability to think at all, I think.)

As the first MP to oppose C-51, I now have a lot of company: four former prime ministers, six former Supreme Court justices, over 100 legal experts, Conrad Black, Rex Murphy, Tom Mulcair and the NDP, the editorial positions of the Globe and Mail, National Post and Toronto Star. The Assembly of First Nations has called for it to be withdrawn. I hope you agree as well. (A: And that's in the Huffington Post.)

But we're going down the route, the inevitable route, actually, of what happens when countries become more tyrannical and obsessional in a particular ideology of some kind. Today it's the need for antiterrorism and everyone is suspicious. Anyone who is a bit different at all will be put down as suspicious and possibly dangerous. Because if they don't know much about you then yeah, you could be dangerous, or you could be quite simply happy and not dangerous at all. It doesn't matter. See, facts don't matter anymore. And if you disagree with various things in government just by your opinions on things, that's maybe enough to get you into hot water, by having an opinion on something or an observation.

It's… Well, I've always said that something wicked this way comes, and this is repeated down through history as I've said before. And with today's technologies it makes it all the more easier to carry it all out. It's rather sad. It's rather, rather sad. But you know, I've mentioned different talks that I've given in the past about how science itself impacts society. Very important thing to understand because people don't… People really don't… I think Jacques Ellul said, the people learn by osmosis. It's that they don't really reason or think things through from information from outside that comes to you. It just comes, it just sort of sinks in there and you don't question it or reason through it, or agree or disagree with a lot of it. And to do with technology, that's part of it because we've got to understand that a long time ago, not so long ago actually, really, most folk had to travel by horse or horse and cart. That's the ones that could afford the horses, lots of folk couldn't. Then for a long time, for instance, in the 20th century public transportation was the only way that a good part of the British people could move around, trains or mainly buses actually, to get to their work and all the rest of it.

Everything is geared towards an economic system. There's no way out of that allowed in the system, it doesn't allow that. Because you must earn money even to pay taxes. At one time people would become hobos and take to the road, and take their chances and maybe die, you know, in the winter and so on. But even that was a form of freedom and the right to choose that. But that's all been taken away too as they grabbed them off the streets on the various acts, vagrancy acts or mental health acts or whatever. And you can't even get that loophole out, to just escaped now and walk off and say I've given up on society. So you must earn money to buy the things, because in the system everything is based on money. You must buy things to feed yourself, clothe yourself, warmth, heat, shelter, clothing and so on, and pay taxes.

The whole system is a complete system and you are there to serve the system in actual fact. And that's how you're described in economic schools and so on, you're collateral, you see. You are a worker. You are a resource, a human resource. And they work out from statistics on your health and so on, and your past health, how long you might get in a working situation, a particular job, and contribute to society as they call it. That means, by the definition at the United Nations, you're a good consumer, so you've got the money to buy things, and you're a good producer. When you become just a consumer, when you retire, then you're really a bad citizen. And if you become unemployed, then you're bad, you're not contributing, you're not contributing taxes and so on and so on. Because government is so huge today, it's massive, and many of the big foundations out there also get tax money for all their nongovernmental organizations, which are funded by the foundations, they get tax money added to it. Because everything is shaped and geared to take you along a particular avenue of believing in the system and why they are doing things, environmentally or any other way, and it's all for your good, etc. etc.

So we're not just simply… I've always said that culture just doesn't develop anymore. It's always planned and shaped and controlled. And that's what it's all about, is massive control, right down to thought control, obviously. But when you introduce technology of any kind into society you're not riding around in the horse and cart anymore, or Shank's pony which is your legs of course, you're not walking. And you're into getting a vehicle, etc., and all that goes with it, your insurances, taxes, road taxes and so on, in order to get to and from work and all the rest of it. So that changed massively society, and it allowed folk for the first time to get out of these crammed cities into outer areas and travel into work as well and get a bit of freedom and peace from the crowded, crowded cities. That's all to change because the whole agenda for the 21st century, they want you back in these crowded cities, for you lot. But they have a tiered system for those who are middle wealthy and very wealthy and so on, little perks along the way. Everything is based with economics on awards for those beneath.

So again, technology changes it all. So the vehicle itself changed society massively and eventually they want to take it all away from you again. And what they've replaced a lot of it with is something that helps all of the institutions, set up by governments and working with governments, and working with the economic system, to monitor you all and manage you even better, of course that's the Electronic Revolution that they had. Many years ago I read on the air articles about the big military industrial complex and how they were putting articles out in the papers and magazines, years ago, about if they come to the end of wars – they were already preparing as they were doing this, the big global wars for instance – they were going into security, domestic security systems, cameras, microphones and so on, and the computer and all the rest of it, even before they gave us the computer. And it's all come to pass. And of course there always lobbying government. Remember what the definition of lobbying and lobbyist happens to be. Because lobbying government, if you lobby government you're trying, a special interest group is trying to influence the decisions of government policy. And those decisions then are passed on, which alter your behavior, beneath the government of course, if they mandate you must have this, they mandate you must have that. And your police forces, everything that they mandate that they must have, are getting all these camera systems that are everywhere, tied into your computerized system in the cars and so on and so on. It's all interconnected. So technology itself alters your behavior.

When something is placed in your environment it alters your behavior. They knew that with the radio. When the radio came out the BBC used it immediately and it sprung up immediately to use it for propaganda. They used it widely for World War I. They found out they could alter people's behavior, by ensuring the radios were cheap enough to buy, and they could put them in workplaces, even in factories at times, and you would listen to the shows. And they gave you, they found that cliffhanger dramas, you were left with the cliffhanger at the end, welltune in tomorrow for the serial to find out what happens to the hero as she is hanging off the cliff, will he or won't he die? Folk would rush to their homes after work to hear the next episode. So it would alter human behavior. They knew it altered behavior with the use of advertising too, by promoting certain things people would change their dress codes, things like that, their hairdos, all of these things. Then when television came in, bang, that was really off to a big, big thing. Cinema was also used as well. There was tremendous war propaganda documentaries about how to get the people happy, happy, happy, the young folk who don't know any better to join up and go off to war. It was all put across very happy with lots of dancing and so on, and we are the youth and we're going to do it all. An actor dressed up in the uniforms, who were never in the military, telling them why they have to go off and fight, even though these actors were not going off to fight themselves.

This is management of the mind, you understand. So technology can massively, and always does, alter human behavior. By behavior too I also mean your thought, what you think about, how you think about things, why you think about things, and opinions you're led to conclude and they become your opinions. That's why there are so many neuroscientists and psychologists and behaviorists involved with all these big companies that present movies, television, dramas, documentaries, things for government, documentaries and so on, right down to the management of the Internet, on behalf of the authorities. So everybody buys their personal computer, oh, privacy is yours, and all that nonsense, when they had no intention of that. It was for their benefit to categorize you with your personality style and so on. They said it was, first, for advertisers so that they would really find out how you tick and promote things to you. But of course it was really for all of those involved in it including government agencies and security agencies to personality profile you.

And they're constantly doing studies. They hand a lot of this data over, in fact, they give access to streams on the Internet to a lot of universities, like MIT and so on, to profile groups of people and find clusters of people, why you are in this little cluster, what you all have in common, what other things do you have in common, why is this? Massive psychological manipulation will be used on all of the people according to what they observe, you see, that's how precise and how deep all this goes and it works awfully, awfully well for them.

So this whole idea with Bill C-51 for Canada, and all the British Commonwealth countries have the same kind of bills, it's inevitable. They planned this years ago. They knew, before they gave you the Internet they would bring out all these different bills under different guises at the right times and so on, to manage. Because the first thing the government must do, the first job that it has, is to preserve itself. And itself means also the whole institution, not just the government but the system of economics that you're born into. So be very careful when you're thinking about getting this and getting that because it's, oh it's so convenient. It will be used on you, that's the prime purpose of it. The second purpose is to condition you as well and bring you to the correct opinions and observations and all the rest of it. And also to make you think that privacy is a quaint old-fashioned idea. Many folk already do. And you don't understand that people fought for centuries over things such as privacy, to have privacy in the first place. When you lose that you have no security. And when you have no privacy of your mind it's all over, it's finished, forget it, throw in the towel.

So I tell people try and reclaim your mind, if you want to. Many folk don't want to. They're happy. I've read articles by the big global planners before where they have said that many people will love their servitude. And they do. If they're doing okay financially and so on and they are young enough to feel healthy and they can party and all the rest of it, they love it, they love the system. They're okay. I'm okay, Jack. You know, I'm all right Jack, as they say. So that's the way it is. Everyone has been divided into different categories. So don't expect, you know. Don't expect other people to simply jump on board and start questioning things. And don't get angry with them when they can't or won't. You can't get angry and ostracize yourself completely. You got to live amongst the world of people, and it takes all kinds of people, you see. And the conflict doesn't help, at all.

Now, talking about how technology changes our whole way of behavior. I've mentioned so many times about the fact that they've known for an awful long time, even from World War I when they took photographs of the troops in the trenches, the troops would behave differently. They would walk differently, their stances would be different when they knew they were being filmed. You might have experienced that yourself when someone's taking a photograph of you, you don't stand normally or relax or whatever. You'll stand in a different pose or whatever because you're being filmed.

Well, they also know that when you're being filmed in the streets by CCTV cameras then your behavior is changed too. The spontaneity of how you would joke with your pals, it goes, it disappears. Because you're being watched. So you learn to self-police yourself, that becomes second nature. Wherever you go you're being watched and you become more, apparently more into yourself, introverted, you see, and they know this at the top. They want to encourage people to self-police themselves, the way that George Orwell's 1984 portrayed Winston with that bland expression of his, because an expression could give you away as being a subversive, or a thoughtful person, which is the same thing.

Think about this. Here's an article here, right along this inevitable path as I say. It says:

‘CCTV in all homes’:
Police chief’s domestic security call attacked by privacy groups
rt.com / March 09, 2015 / Reuters/Soeren Stache

(A: Now, they've already tried this in Britain, I know that, in certain areas. In fact, they used it for people who were suspected, supposedly, years ago, of abnormal behavior in the home. They might be kind of loud with each other, whatever it was, someone would report them. In would come the authorities and the social workers and so on and then they put cameras up and watched them. It says here:)

Britain’s most senior police officer has urged families and business owners to install hidden eye-level CCTV cameras to make it easier to identify burglars. (A: Right.) Privacy rights groups say it will make the public “an extension of the police.”

Metropolitan Police Commissioner Sir Bernard Hogan-Howe (A: They love these hyphens, eh; there’s a story behind that too but that’s a different story.) encouraged property owners to make a “stronger effort” to help with criminal investigations.

(A: Now, I wonder who's been lobbying him as to… You don't think that the guys at the top of these things... Yeah, they'll get lobbyists, you know, and the lobbyists always help them on their career path and they also help them with funding and so on, things that they're never going to admit to. It's always been that way.)

Families and business owners should plant two CCTV cameras in their homes, Howe says, ideally one high camera to capture the full crime scene and another eye-level camera to capture clear images of criminals’ faces. (A: Well remember, everyone under the modern law system, then the training of the police, puts everyone down as a potential criminal. That's you, too, that are sitting in your own home.)

Those who are only able to install one camera must ensure it is at eye-level. Howe claims this is the “most important angle.” He said this strategy would make it easier for police to identify criminals.

However, privacy campaigners have condemned the strategy, claiming it will turn the public into “an extension of the police.” (A: Well that's… It's beyond just that, folks. I love how they give you these, these little canards... an extension of the police. It's beyond that. It will alter your complete behavior if there's cameras in the home. You won't be spontaneous. You won’t be so happy and joking and all that. Jokes can be dangerous now, you know.)

Few British households already have CCTV cameras installed, and the minority that do “position them too high.” (A: [Alan laughing.])

“Over the last year as facial recognition software has got better, we can apply the software to the images of burglaries or robberies and we can compare those images with the images we take when we arrest people,” Howe told LBC radio. (A: And it goes on and on and on.)

But I mean, these are the little articles here meant to make you, and a lot of folk will, who are conditioned, well we should do that, yeah, yeah, yeah. And this is how… They don't question all the dangers to it all, at all, it doesn't enter their heads.

Many of the talks I’ve given in the past I've gone through a lot of the history of this, and even the history of the Psychiatric Association, that is not just involved in psychiatry, believe it or not. There was a big political push at the beginning to create a psychiatric professional movement, with the intention eventually of running the world. Science, that's themselves at the top basically, they would determine who should be in power; a good idea actually but for the wrong reasons. They wanted to test all politicians or people who ran for politics and so on to see if they were sane enough to do it. Now, if any group had that particular power then they would of course abuse it right away. Because what is their definition of someone who is sane enough to use it? If you didn't have the same attitudes as the psychiatric majority, who would have their own votes on particular topics, then you wouldn't get in. On the other hand, I personally do believe that anyone with any kind of power over the public, right down to the policeman, should be tested for psychopathy. I really believe that. I really, really do believe that. And that goes for any government worker who's involved in your taxation and all the other things that they do, and anybody who's in charge of housing and so many different fields, should be tested for psychopathy. In this system it's mainly psychopaths who get up in charge of things, because they’re very aggressive, they take the risks, the chances, incredibly manipulative, and they can dispose of all competition as they claw their way up too, without a thought, because they have no conscience.

But here's where they're going to go, according to the last article for instance, where the police just want you to have cameras, to catch burglars, it says. Well, here's the other part of it, which falls in naturally. It says:

ACLU Lawsuit Seeks Data on
TSA's Creepy "Behavior Detection" Program
motherjones.com / Allie Gross / Mar. 23, 2015

(A: Now, that's the transportation safety agency. This is the one that's the big one in the States that they created, which is crazy, there's so many agencies tripping over each other. But this says:)

Airport security basically sucks: Being herded through a Tensabarrier maze alongside a bunch of strangers is vexing enough. Then throw in the bag searches, the bomb-swabs, the mandatory doffing and donning of footwear and accessories, the "complimentary" pat down—it's hardly surprising that some people will come through the experience looking less than cheerful.

Nowadays, though, your very reasonable travel emotions (anxiety, stress, fear, despondency) can earn you even more face time with the Transportation Security Administration. Since 2003 TSA has toyed with the idea of placing "behavior detection officers" in airports across America (A: They're not toying with it, they've put them in already, I’ve read the articles in the past.) —part of a $1 billion counter-terrorism measure known as SPOT (Screening Passengers by Observation Techniques), which officially launched in 2007. (A: And they have computer programs too, that were invented by other psychopaths, who would immediately dive into where they see their prospects of advancements and in their paychecks and so on.)

"Our request and the lawsuit is to determine if TSA can adequately defend SPOT."

The behavior detection officer's job is to scan travelers' faces for micro-expressions—facial movements that come and go in the blink of an eye and are said to convey a person's true emotions. When one of these airport mentalists (A: ...and that's really what it's down to, isn't it?) spots a potentially shifty character, he can take it to the next level by striking up a casual conversation—the idea being that brief encounters may suggest whether a person poses a threat.

Signs of "anti-social" behavior (see emotions above) may result in a traveler being flagged for additional security measures. Between 2004 and 2008, as my former colleague Ben Buchwalter has reported, 152,000 people were flagged but fewer than 1,110 were arrested. Most of the arrestees "were undocumented aliens, had outstanding warrants, or were carrying fake documents or drugs."   (A: So other reasons caught them, you see. So out of the 152,000 people, really, that were flagged for facial expressions, all they got were folk who gave themselves away by fake documents or they had drugs on them or something else or warrants.)

Meanwhile, the SPOT program, which relies heavily on officers' subjective observations, has been compared to the "stop-and-frisk" police tactics that have resulted—at least in New York City—in a disproportionate number of stops of blacks and Latinos. In an anonymous complaint obtained by the New York Times, one Boston TSA officer wrote that "the behavior detection program is no longer a behavior-based program, but it is a racial profiling program." The Times interviewed other TSA officers who corroborated the claim.

All you would have to do is take the same program, and they're already doing this by the way, and putting facial expressions into your homes, like the article we just talked about, CCTV cameras in all of your homes. And then of course, why were you irritated Mr. so-and-so when you were watching TV, and this is being presented, why were you, you had a frowned expression on your face? Will they take you in for reconditioning and reeducation? Like, a camp there that they'll take you into? This is all inevitable, folks. And all the programs that are out there, and again, through lobbyists companies and so on to push all this on government, it's fascist. When governments and lobbyists work together, that technically is fascist, big corporations involved, for financial gain, to get their products put through lawfully, into law, to be used in homes and things like that, then that's it, it's over.

Then this article here, it says:

Are smartphones making our children mentally ill?
telegraph.co.uk / Peter Stanford / 21 Mar 2015

(A: [Alan scoffs.] There's a form of doublespeak in the article, it says:)

Julie Lynn Evans has been a child psychotherapist for 25 years, working in hospitals, schools and with families, (A: … blah, blah, blah.) and she says she has never been so busy.

“In the 1990s, I would have had one or two attempted suicides a year – mainly teenaged girls taking overdoses, the things that don’t get reported. Now, I could have as many as four a month.”

Now, what she's mainly saying is, their cell phones. In fact, they can look into all kinds of things without parental consent, that are causing the problem. Society today is broken. Families are broken. There's been a war on the family structure for an awful long time to break it up. And the fallout is phenomenal, it's not just the phones, folks. And the push in this article, really, when it gets down to it, is for putting more resources into mental health services, which is a big United Nations mandate, has been for many years, to get every child from birth right through into adulthood checked constantly for mental health. And that includes having the right attitudes, that are pushed out by the top, that you must accept and must parrot. If you don't parrot it you’re mentally ill.

So you'd better be careful the things you actually watch and read yourselves. You must always dissect everything and look at it from different sides, different angles. So as I said, remember, very early psychiatry's objective was to evaluate everyone in society eventually and help run society, including the politics and everything else. That hasn't stopped. So when you see articles like that be very, very careful, it's still the same mandate that's on the go. Rather than look at all the things, all the factors that go into destroying all of society, pushed steadily since at least the 60s, actually before that but steadily since the 60s, until you have dysfunctional everything, how many folk are really functional in any direction at all these days? Be very, very careful. But they don't go into checking themselves, who's watching the watchers? Who's doing the diagnosis on the psychiatrist? Many of them, too, are psychopathic by the way.

Now, here's an article here that ties in with, again, how technology changes society, not just those who use them but those who see the potential for using it on you. And there have been many articles out before about schools using apps and putting them into the different...again, mandating you buy their computer or whatever or even giving you them from the school, and they can then tap in any time they want, any teacher can, and watch what you're doing, and actually watch and hear what you're doing as well. And even seeing you undressing in your bedroom, a lot of these scandals are dying down by now, because folk are being acclimatized to those as though it's all quite normal. But this article here says:

Behavioral Observation of Students in Schools (BOSS)
pearsonclinical.com / Edward S. Shapiro, PhD

The time-tested BOSS direct observation program is now available as a smart phone application, making it easier than ever for you (A: …this is for teachers.) to monitor students' behavior. Backed by extensive research, the BOSS system provides reliable and valid data on specific problem areas—so that you can determine appropriate remediations to help students succeed. (A: So it's all to help students succeed, by you observing them and sneaking and watching them.)

Features & Benefits

Take advantage of this new app to help easily pinpoint areas for behavior remediation. Use this intuitive tool (A: …it's intuitive, right…)with grades pre-K through 12 to assist you in:
•Recording and tracking frequency of targeted positive and negative behaviors. (A: Again, these are all value judgments by the teacher, who might not like the student.)
•Documenting a student's active or passive engagement in activities.
•Tabulating data and emailing it to you for future use to help support a disability diagnoses. (A: Who's doing the diagnosing here?)

(A: And it tells you how to order this BOSS program, BOSS app and so on.)
To download the BOSS app, visit the Apple® or Android™ app store

(A: Then it's got training, they have all these different training tools, products.))

Conducting Systematic Behavioral Observations in Schools: Using BOSS App for iPhone and Android Webinar Recording

A brief discussion of the basic concepts of systematic direct observation will first be presented. A full explanation of the BOSS code, its categories and methods of data collection will be provided with an emphasis highlighting the use of the BOSS App available for iPhone and Android.

Orwellian nightmare unleashed on schoolkids
Teachers now thought police with extreme new spy 'tools'
mobile.wnd.com / 03/15/2015 / Leo Hohmann

(A: Remember, this fits in with the GIRFEC in Britain and everything else; there's many ways to monitor you and guide you from birth to death now. With the GIRFEC in Scotland they put a government-sponsored person, an agent really, who must come into your home, you must let them in, from about the age of two months onwards. And they get into all your business, the parental business, everything else, and to make sure that that child is getting the right kind of indoctrination, it doesn't have any particular dislikes of any people or anything else and so on and so on, so they can always adjust you as you grow up.)

Technology is increasingly being used by schools to gather data on students, testing not just their knowledge of subjects like reading, math and science but subjective "social skills." (A: Social skills.)

Parents and students have been “opting out” of high-stakes testing in record numbers over the past year, saying the standardized tests waste valuable instruction time, cause undue stress and often measure “skills” that have nothing to do with academic knowledge.

Rather than merely asking for a right or wrong answer to a math, history or science question, (A: Oh, that’s old fashioned stuff now, that’s passé.) the new assessment industry is capable of boring into a child’s attitudes, values, opinions and beliefs, all of which parents and privacy advocates say is no business of the government’s. (A: And that’s absolutely true. All of the things that they're going to pry into make you you, and it's your right to be you.)

The pushback has led some state education systems to recommend a reduction in the amount of high-stakes testing in public schools.

But, parents beware, the sudden realization that maybe too much testing is going on is not going to lead to less data being collected. Quite the opposite.

In fact, traditional testing may no longer be needed. Schools have found they have better, more efficient ways to collect even more data on your child, without resorting to paper and sharpened No. 2 pencils.

Oregon’s Gov. John Kitzhaber, for instance, assigned a task force to this problem recently and after a year of private meetings, the group is ready to unveil its recommendations which are expected to include replacing standardized tests with high-tech “observation” tools. (A: And I'll put all these links up, remember, tonight at .com. And the link is in here for all that, the high tech observation tools.)

Fewer tests might sound like a relief to stressed-out students and wary parents.

But what if your child’s teacher could have access to a software application that allows her to collect data on your child in real time, without ever being rolled out in a test?

Enter the BOSS app. It is just one of countless new data-collection products available to school systems looking to collect data on the sneak.

BOSS stands for Behavioral Observation of Students in Schools. (A: You can do it out of school too, though.) The app was designed to “enable psychologists to observe” patients but is now being marketed to schools interesting in tracking students’ behavioral patterns.

Created by the British-based textbook giant Pearson, the BOSS app can be loaded onto a smartphone and used to secretly monitor every move of targeted students in the classroom. (A: What about out of the classroom?)

Does little Johnny fidget in his seat a bit too much? Does he socialize with the students around him in an appropriate manner? Does he tend to stare aimlessly out the window when he should be paying attention to the teacher?

All of this information can be pulled in and stored in an individual dossier for later analyzing and assigned an intervention and remediation that will deal with Johnny's shortcomings, whether they be laziness, lack of assertiveness, over-aggressiveness or whatever psychological problem the app may discover. (A: Of course, they will all be infallible, right? [Alan chuckles.])

BOSS app can be downloaded from iTunes for $29.99 and comes in age-appropriate versions from pre-K through 12th grade. (A: So this app, really, it's quite something. It's beyond many of the other ones that are already out there. But again, it's not the only one out there too.)

The BOSS app is not the only new technology percolating in the education industry that has the ability to invisibly assess students in real time without their knowledge, or the knowledge of their parents. (A: Because parents don't matter anymore. The state owns the children; they own us actually.)

Below is a small sampling of other apps being marketed to educators:

(A: And here's the info and it says:)

You Can Handle Them All app• "You Can Handle Them All": This app, produced by Master Teacher (A: That's another one.,), describes 124 behaviors that teachers may encounter in their students and identifies the primary cause of each. (A: Oh, like they just know now it, hey. There could be many factors involved.) A teacher using this app places each student into a category, with options that include "The Blabbermouth," "The Blurter," "The Boss," "The Bully," "The Complainer," "The Disengaged" and "The Class Clown." (A: How about "The Labeler"? That's for the teacher.) It then prompts the teacher with suggestions on how to remedy each unwanted behavior.

• "Pearson Dash": Another product by Pearson, Dash, according to the iTunes product description, enables teachers to "Organize and track your students" according to classroom seating charts, to "record, edit, and e-mail observational notes on your students," to "View student performance and mastery of skills with SuccessTracker data."

• "What Would You Do at School If": This app focuses squarely on social skills. Put out by Super Duper Publications, it seeks to elicit answers to sensitive, revealing questions that help schools develop a psychological profile on each student. Instead of a test, this app is presented to a young child as a fun "game" (A: That's much the same as how it's presented to adults, they don't even know they're being monitored and checked and so on. It's fun, isn't it?) while collecting data on the child's parental upbringing and personality.

(A: So it's an invasion into privacy, of many areas too, but they won't push that so much.)

what would you do in school if "Select the cards you want students to see, and have them work on solving problems and practicing good social skills (A: Now, who has said what good social skills happen to be? It changes according to the Masters of the era.) as they discuss situations in and around school," the product description says. "The prompts include questions like, 'What would you do if … you forgot your homework?' and, 'What would you do if … your classmate teased you about the new shirt you wore?'"

Students are then graded based on how many "right" answers (A: Now, what's a right answer?) they give in what is clearly a test of one's attitudes, behaviors, values and beliefs. (A: Well, that's why they designed it that way, you're not allowed certain attitudes, behaviors and values and beliefs anymore. Birth to death, reconditioning, reconditioning, reeducation, way beyond the old Soviet reeducation camps.) The problem with such questions, say privacy experts, is that the "right" answer is clearly subjective and has nothing to do with a student's ability to acquire and retain objective academic knowledge. (A: But most schooling has nothing to do with academic knowledge anymore, it's social engineering.)

For instance, a parent may teach a boy to defend a weaker boy or a girl who is getting beat up by a bully. But what if the "right" answer in the role playing game is to go and tell a teacher or principal? Will the child get marked down if he answers that he would intervene and physically stop the bully's attack? What will the remediation for this "wrong" behavioral skill be? (A: What will the remediation be? Another thing you might say too, supposing that little boy that's being attacked is beat up or killed, when he's off reporting it to the teacher. It would be another case to see, well should he have gone and helped break it up first, because that would apply to a human adult.)

According to promotional details on iTunes, the "What Would You Do at School If" app lets teachers:

- Track correct and incorrect responses for an unlimited number of players.

- Receive feedback for incorrect and/or correct responses

- View results in a graph and see which questions a player missed during a session.

- Print, E-mail and share your results. (A: With whom? Mental health authorities, agencies, whatever.)

The same vendor, Super Duper Publications, puts out a separate app called "Super Duper Data Tracker" that allows teachers to "increase the accuracy and efficiency of your data collection" on each individual student.

There are literally dozens of these apps out there being downloaded by teachers, often at the behest of administrators, (A: Well, they're all getting lobbied, right, and there's money that changes hands, believe you me.) and many of them come tailored to the Common Core national education standards. (A: That's just coincidence, right?)

One teacher who reviewed the Super Duper Data Tracker on iTunes said he liked it but wished the data came with increased portability and could be more easily integrated into other platforms.

"It would also be great if this was tied to a website where teachers had an account and could input large amounts of data on something other than the small screen or tempermental (sic) keyboard of an iPad/iPhone," the teacher said. "Then everything would be backed up, we could share data with other team members (especially in situations where many people see one student!). It is a great app, I just think in the day of icloud and spreadsheets it is begging for a big overhaul."

Well, that will come regardless because eventually their opinions will overcome any other reason of course, because it's already happening. And little Johnny will be reconditioned his whole life long into being the proper kind of citizen that's been designed by the state.

Now, I've given talks in the past. As I've said, they're all in the archives section of .com. You can find talks on the big world players who helped create this presents culture, many of whom are long dead, because culture is always created, the future is always planned, folks, and who worked at the United Nations and with United Nations, with the big psychological associations, psychiatric Association so on. I've given you all the different statements, even the books they put out, they're all in there, where they said that they would bring the situation in where you would get trained from birth to death. So all this isn't just happening spontaneously because of technology. It's time for it to get put forth. And many of them, and Bertrand Russell said it too, governments would be unable to resist the temptation to use all these methods to bring up a kind of society that the government itself desires. And it can be any kind of government.

Now, as I've said before, that's just the way it is, folks, and to get back to what I said earlier in the talk, you must proof your mind. You must proof it yourself, and guard your mind because you are you. Everything in you, your opinions and so on, all these different composites of you, that makes you you. That's the natural person. We don't want to go into stereotypes, like bricks in the wall on a conveyor belt getting stamped in the same shape and so on. But the big boys at the top don't want you to have different viewpoints and so on which are contrary, and are sometimes a nuisance to different government agendas. And then you do become an enemy of the state. And at the very least you become, get put into a label, pigeonholed, and they have many definitions and terms that they use for categories of humans in society. We're all monitored, believe you me. It doesn't matter if you're doing radio shows or not, or blogs or anything else, it doesn't matter, you're all getting monitored.

The folk who don't like what's happening are already called, and don't belong to any clubs or agencies or groups that are protesting. They're called unaffiliated subversives on the grounds that they don't like certain things that are happening in society today. They're not politically correct. They don't adopt the updates you're given on what you should believe in, what you should think of certain things and topics and so on.

But anyway, don't let this destroy you or flatten you. Don't let it happen, folks, because when that happens and you all just cave-in, you're as well as just saying, here's my brain do what you want with it. And that's not what life is all about, is it?

The ones at the top have their own definition of progress. But true progress has been freeing up people, from all kinds of slavery, by bullies and authorities of all kinds down through the ages. And we have the brief little piece of it where we have certain rights and so on, and now it's all to be taken away, again. And you can't let that happen for any reason given to you by government. You can't go backwards.

And for those, as I say, who are being overwhelmed by information, switch off for a while. You don't have to tune into the horror story to see how it ends, you're not going to die tomorrow, whether you tune in or not. You must survive. You must look after your own mind. It's all you have. And I've often said, the mind has no firewall, be careful what you let in there. Even that which seems to expose stuff, don't let it destroy you. And question the things that you think are destroying you. Be very, very careful. Because you do matter. You all matter.

From Hamish and myself from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 29, 2015. As always I hope, I really do hope that you're pulling through into the spring, which appears in the occasional place south of the border, more than where I am here up in Canada. Last night in fact it hit on the centigrade scale about -25, or 25 below. Hopefully I'm going get some spring eventually too but we're pretty well going into April and it's not really on the horizon that much at the moment. Well, we're going through global warming, right, that's the reason we're so cold up here.

Now, we're living, as I've mentioned so many times, in such a massively planned psychological muddle basically, by the big forces above us that have trained us since child birth, that they have influenced us in so many ways that most folk are completely unaware of in fact, primarily through, part of your initial indoctrination and education, apart from that it's taken up by media and also by entertainment, which is the greatest way to alter behavior of all. In fact, we mimic what we see. We even mimic the attitudes of the actors we like, or who are portrayed as likable in special movies and so on. We copy in other words, we're very much into mimicking. Children are more apt and you'll see it more openly in children with the language and everything else they pick up on television, a lot of it which you don't like in fact. But all of this is understood by those who put it out in the first place because the culture industry calls themselves just that, amongst themselves, the culture industry, not the entertainment industry.

At the very top you have the economic system and those who run at the top the economic system. There are people, a few individual families in fact that slush billions every day into the world economy. They slush these funds around all over the place and everyone else follows suit, because they read the newspapers, who's investing in what and so on. And the little guys, again, always emulate what they see, even though it's very misleading because it's a game too where those at the top always get out in time and divest the money and put it into another option before they crash a certain market and so on.

But that's the name of the game in this system. There's nothing fair about it. It's not designed to be fair. Those at the top will actually... really, put out the old idea of social Darwinism and survival of the fittest, that developed out of that Darwinistic theory, and they believe that they have the right to use cunning and so on. They say that all is fair in love and war, but it's also all is fair in economic business as well. And business is not a very nice thing because behind all the smiles of the business suits when they meet together to drink their brandy and so on and sip wine, there's always this competition amongst themselves. Vast egos. Many of them actually are psychopathic, there's no doubt about it at all. Look at some of the statements that some of the top of them, CEOs and so on come out with.

And the reason they get to the top is that they know how to play the game. They know what the game is. They can emulate emotion, affection and so on, and fire you just in the same breath actually or a second later. They don't really have emotions as we think of it. They have the emotion of great happiness when they win something personally, and they have that high they get when they succeed in putting other competition under. That's real business and that's just the way it really is. Competition is taught. It used to be more blatant in the schooling system where they would grade you in classes in fact and then you'd compete and compete within the classes for the little gold stars that you'd get on your little cardboard form or booklet or whatever or on the wall. And that's the system, you're trained at an early age to compete. Athletics is just another part of it, to compete, compete, compete, and so were the school exams as well.

So we live in a competitive society. Is it natural? Well, some parts of it may kind of natural because I think young guys in a primitive society, as they call natural societies, primitive, and tribal societies, which compete to an extent. But they would also form their natural pecking orders where one person who might be the best hunter or the best runner or whatever would have compassion and feel part of the rest of the group. If he didn't and he tried to take over as leader of the tribe or whatever there was enough people to depose him. When he gets an army behind him, through taxation than he can pay an army money, then you're really in trouble because then he can stay in power, then intermarry with some other psychopathic leader’s daughter of another tribe. That's how history has been made in fact, unfortunately.

Now, I've mentioned before that when you have psychopaths in a system of psychopathic control, which is never humane, sometimes there's a spill over and more wealth allowed to the people at the bottom in so-called prosperous times, or when they have big plans afoot that may be a few years hence they'll bring on a war, and folk are happier prior to the war and tend to go into the Army, the Air Force, the Navy and so on to keep what they think it's theirs, their right to have a good prosperous life. Once they are running out of wars of course they take all the goodies away from you, and they don't really need you to be happy anymore, because they can use you in other ways.

Today we're in a scientifically controlled society and they don't have to keep you happy at all for that matter. In fact, they have found in their neuroscience and so on, if they keep you on edge all the time they can condition you all the faster. Because you can't grasp hold of something for long enough, that you call normalicy, to hang onto. And normalicy develops over time, it becomes the culture and so on. If they can keep them in a stampede they can shape and direct the direction of the stampede according to their planning quite easily. And that's where we are today under the anti-terrorism and so on, global economics, bank failures are threatened all the time. We have bank bail-ins planned because all of the countries, all of the first world countries have signed on to the IMF and the World Bank with their directions to, have treaties on all this, that they'll all do bank bail-ins where they will literally take all the deposits out of the savers' accounts and so on.

So we're living in a very crisis ridden society, and then they have the threat of terrorism constantly on the go, which can only end up, with the aid of technology as we have it today, into a worse system than you had in the East Germany's Stasi police. And the Stasi police, they put a lot of good documentaries out on it and some good movies that were based on fact, written by participants in fact, or victims of the Stasi, both actually took part in making some of them. They show you how innocent people, lots of them, thousands of them, every year, had their homes bugged. They could bug a home entirely by going in and within 10 minutes they had many, many bugs put all over the place. They could record everything that happened; they had little fisheye cameras and so on. Today they don't need that because you buy all the equipment that surveillance needs. You buy it thinking it's of a benefit to yourself, it's much, much easier. I'll be touching on some of that tonight. That's the way it is.

Now, I'm going to mention right off the bat here too that at this time of year, and all through the winter, I always get lots of people emailing me with problems and depressions and so on. And these are from people who have a higher understanding of what's happening in the world and why things are happening and as always they find no solution out of it. And you can't simply give simple solutions to a system which is total. That's why I liken it to The Matrix in fact because it's very, very much like the matrix system portrayed in the movies as far as realities go, and with their false endings, even within the movie. You think you have arrived, that the person is going to give you the answer, you've arrived at the right place only to find out there's another compartment or level above you or beneath you or to the side of you and so on. That's how the system is. It's a very complex system.

And people get depressed in the winter, especially when it's a bad winter like we have now, and the last few years in fact. There are fewer jobs as well, people are being laid off and unemployed or working so many part-time jobs they are burned out. Many folk are lonely of course, naturally, because if you are into trying to understand what's happening in the world, you're getting the patterns, you see how it fits together, it's very difficult to talk to people who are in their programming. They have been well programed from childhood onwards in fact and they have really, they take the world as it is presented to them and everything in the world and all aspects of it, the way the media, the television and so on presents it to them. They take it that way. They think, well naturally, it's a natural way to take it. That's why it works so well for those who run the world. Why would you think that you're being deceived? Why would you think that? In a natural society why would you think you were born into a form of deception? And being trained not to see what's there? So it's a natural thing for them to cling onto that, I must be right, and all authorities must be right, all authority figures must be right, because they all say they are. You see. And all their friends do too, who are also under the influence of the world being presented to them and they have taken it as the presentation is given.

That's the hard part for people. And I tell them, when you're really getting depressed about it all, pull back. Pull back. Don't overwhelm yourself with what seems to be negativity because negativity will destroy you and put you into a massive depression. You can't allow that to happen to yourselves. Pull back from listening to the bad news. Even the show that I do, pull back from it. And relax, allow your mind to relax. Concentrate on the things you must get done to survive and get through day to day, and do the essential things. But pull away from things that just spouts out, there's a lot of shows out there that spout fear every day, which seems to be overwhelming. It is overwhelming in fact, and they use a shotgun approach to things. They tell you 50 bad things that are scary things that are being considered by governments around the world, all at the same time, within an hour or two, and then you're left shattered afterwards, in a frenzy. That's the shotgun approach, scattergun approach were all these problems are whacked at you and not a single solution is given in the presentations. Which makes you wonder why they're doing it in the first place. [Alan scoffs.] But again, you've got to remember that a lot of what’s called the patriot business is a business for those people. Don't forget that. Without what's happening in the world they would have no business, and that's how they do it.

Now, you must always pace yourself according to the news that's been given out there and don't become incredibly overwhelmed by it and put down by it until, as many people find, they can't communicate. I mean, it's very difficult to communicate to those around you, who are living in their day-to-day television series and the dramas and so on and their news. And you know why things are happening on the news even, of why it's being presented, something is being presented in some certain way, but you can't convey it to them. Just bite your tongue at times. It's not their fault. It's not their fault. Many folks' conditioning is so perfect, it has taken so well in them they can't understand what you're talking about. It terrifies them if you try and explain to them something that's happening. They always say, choose your battles. It's the same when you're choosing your talks for conversation, choose them, know when to talk and when to listen. And you know, you don't have to get into some butting of heads like a couple of goats, you don't have to do that. It doesn't get them anywhere because they've already made their mind up, they're not going to… they can't believe you. If they did believe you they would crack up, you see. It fills them full of fear. Someone who's been brought up to think that, why would anybody, why would a system lie to me about so much? It fills them full of fear. It terrifies them.

So you have to choose your talks to people and conversations and know when to live inside your head. I’ve told so many folk to do that. But when it becomes overwhelming, pull back, you've got plenty inside your mind to think about. You don't have to listen every day, and this is part of the technique too of fear. There are those who put out fear, fear, fear, fear everyday... because it becomes addictive. I've mentioned this so many times before and folk should really use the archive section of .com where I explain the techniques of horror movies and psychology. Even in the worst B-movie horror movie people will watch the beginning and say, oh God no. But the hook it's in you see, what's going to happen to so-and-so? And you project yourself as so-and-so the hero, or the victim, and as a girl, that's got to be the heroine or the victim. And the primitive part of your brain kicks in because the horror movies are about impending danger, life extinction, all that kind of thing. And you don't want to turn away because it works, a horror movie, it works just like a dream, that's how it works and is assessed, with you being chased or whatever and if you turn away or don't tune in you might miss something that's going to save your life. So you listen to the shows that spout bad, bad, bad, terrifying news, very scary, with all the music behind it… Whenever you hear music dramatizing someone's words, and it's going bang-bang-bang-bang, whatever the noise they're making at the time, these are psychological techniques to intensify fear. I hope you understand all that. And you've got to pull back, you see, switch the darned thing off. You find out no monster is going to get you at the end of the movie, because you're not going to watch it. And it's the same thing when you're hearing, tuning into shows every day that are petrifying you, don't do it. It will kill you. It will destroy you.

So that's a bit of advice for everybody. Because in this world today you have enough, enough natural bad stuff going on. A lot of you are struggling, we are all struggling actually financially. The economies are going down the tubes. China was made and set up to be, not by China but by the Western countries and their governments in collusion with the World Bank and the Bank for International Settlements, the World Trade Organization, all private institutions, and the GATT treaty and so on for trade and tariffs. We set up China as the commercial manufacturer of most things for the whole planet. In fact, we funded it through our tax money and so on, unbeknownst to the people themselves we funded it all. And they knew the impact of impoverishment and job losses of nonproducing countries, they knew that would happen. And they knew there would be depressions, economic depressions and mass unemployment and so on. That was all decided by our betters who often pretend they are elected by you and that they are there to serve you, which of course is never, in my life for sure, ever been the actual truth at all. That's the way it is. I'm not saying it's fair. It's unfair, of course it is. But there's nothing fair in this massive system of economics. There's nothing fair, never will be in an economic system set up the way it is and the way that we have experienced it for so long. It can't be fair. It's not designed to be. It doesn't want to be.

So when you're getting overwhelmed with things, pull back, switch off all the terrifying news, in fact all news for that matter. And get the things done that you must do. If you're unemployed try and get something to tide you over. It's imperative that you try. You don't have to like the job, just do it. Earn enough money and when it gives you time to look around for something else and so on that's a little bit better, and not so soul destroying as I call some jobs because a lot of them are definitely soul destroying, if they are repetitive especially. And take care of yourself. Get the imperative things taken care of first of all. And when you go back into it, looking out for what's happening in the world, you'll find that if you had some peace in you, you must have some peace there, then you can handle it much, much better. And don't go right back into the same routine of getting terrified every day, hour after hour, listening to certain things. Pull back, get the important things that are going on, and keep the basic view of what's going on, the basic view. You have to forget all of the rest of the extraneous stuff, get the basic view and that's all you need to know.

I've gone over the whole big world agenda for so long from documents put out by members of big organizations involved in globalism, and the boys involved in the culture industry who meet at global meetings as well on how to make sure, along with the educational systems and so on, they make sure they're bringing up the right kind of society to be manipulated by the system, which is going to get more and more intensive. These things have all been going on for well over 100 years now. And I've also gone through all the different organizations that work for the big changes that help the big international corporations continue. The big international corporations you'll find are sponsors of all the supposed civil liberty groups and so on out there and the big cultural change groups that are out there, and so on and so on.

So be very careful what you listen to. You don't have to listen to their whole spiel, you know what it's going to be and you know what spin they're going to take on before you start listening, and once you understand it, switch it off and start thinking for yourself. Because you must get through life. You must get through life yourself. It's imperative you take care of yourself.

Now, I've mentioned Bill C-51 in Canada, this Anti-Terrorism Act 2015 quite a few times and I'll just touch on this tonight to start off. I warned about it last time, what this could turn into. It's inevitable, in fact, that if it gets passed it will turn into, I think even if they don't pass it this time, we're already doing most of it anyway, it just gives them more right to do further things openly, I think. But anyway this says:

Bill C-51: What it is and controversy behind it
torontosun.com / Julia Alexander / March 18, 2015

What is Bill C-51?

According to the Government of Canada, Bill C-51, also known as the Anti-terrorism Act, 2015, was designed to, “encourage and facilitate information sharing between Government of Canada institutions in order to protect Canada against activities that undermine the security of Canada.”

The Conservative Party introduced the idea of increasing security provisions after the Parliament Hill shooting in October, but didn’t formally introduce the act until January.

Simply put, the Stephen Harper government wants to allocate more power to police services and security institutions like the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) to keep a closer eye on potentially dangerous terrorism situations and prevent future attacks.

Why does the Harper government insist we need it? (Alan:And this is from the Toronto Sun.)

According to the act’s official summary, Bill C-51 would ensure safer transportation services for Canadians, allow law enforcement to step in and arrest, without question, a person they suspect is about to carry out a terrorist attack, and it would increase the protection of witnesses who come forward with information on a potential terrorist attack.

(A: Now, you often find witnesses who come forward, or witnesses they've already grabbed, you see, who are already in jail awaiting some sentence, for maybe their part in something or knowing someone or whatever and being involved in something. And it's well known in this whole judicial system that we live in that they tend to, they can make things up to get out and get other people incriminated who have nothing to do with them whatsoever. That's fairly common in the criminal justice system and we hear about it all the time. And it would simply increase. Because every other country that was totalitarian have used the same techniques in the past, this is what happens, no one becomes safe at all, even folks they don't like, they will rat on them, and once you're on a list, you know, you can't really prove your innocence. Once you're on a list government does not, as people who are in government have told me, work very fast to correct mistakes, they don't do that. They're so slow, they go around corners on four square wheels. They lumber in other words. And once you're on a list your life can become absolute hell, absolute hell. Can you imagine each trip you would take in a vehicle, they would have your license plate, you have the automatic scanners now as you drive by and they pull you over just to harass you and question you and so on. Because the police themselves have already judged you as you're being… The judgment has been made for them that you are suspicious, you see, if you're on a list. And that's the sad truth of so-called civilization.)

Essentially, the government would increase its role in national security to keep a constant watchful eye on potentially harmful situations and end them before anyone is hurt or killed.

Why is it so controversial?

Civil liberty groups and other critics have claimed the bill stretches the definition of security to potentially include peaceful protests, further restricts freedom of expression, and raises privacy concerns, since the act would allow federal institutions such as Health Canada and Revenue Canada to share private information with the RCMP.

Critics have also expressed grave concerns that it fails to define terrorism clearly, (A: And you can't because they're already broadening it to include many other things that are not what you would call terrorist related at all. And that's inevitable as well.) and in attempting to remove all terrorist propaganda from the Internet will effectively try to censor freedom of expression on the Internet, violating a handful of online civil liberties. (A: It will be more than a handful of civil liberties. Personal conversations on the phone or whatever, little comments you make, even jokes you make, it will all be taken awfully, awfully seriously. And it becomes a nightmare. That's the problem with this kind of system.)

Where is Bill C-51 at?

Bill C-51 was formally introduced on Jan. 30, and since then has been rapidly pushed through Parliament.

On Feb. 23, the bill was passed and read a second time before being referred to the Standing Committee.

(A: I think it's got one more go then it will be into law.)

So as I say, these are like bad dreams because you know the history of other countries that have used techniques like this before in the past, and they are horrific. The stories that come out are horrific, how so many lives were utterly destroyed, destroyed by this kind of system that comes in when you have suspicion, suspicion.

Why I Am Fighting Bill C-51
huffingtonpost.ca / 03/20/2015 / ELIZABETH MAY

The reaction to Bill C-51 has been widespread and the opposition is growing. While its short title is the "Anti-Terrorism Act," it is both more and less than that.

It is less than "anti-terrorism" because it is likely to make us less safe. The act gives new powers to CSIS to act in Canada and overseas to "reduce threats," with virtually no limits. CSIS is specifically not allowed to cause death or bodily harm or "violate the sexual integrity" of anyone. The range of potential activities -- from break and enter, search and seizure, infiltration, monkey-wrenching, include powers to offer witnesses immunity from prosecution or from ever having to testify. (A: So some obscure witness can just say something about you, and that's you.)

There is no requirement that CSIS tell the RCMP what it is up to (A: That's the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.), and it is the RCMP that has been successfully countering plots and arresting suspects. Just imagine when the RCMP finds key witnesses have a "get out of jail free" card from CSIS. (A: That's the Canadian Security Intelligence Service.) That and other sections run a high degree of probability of gumming up the works. Security experts, especially those with experience in the Air India inquiry, remind us that it is critical that security agencies not develop silos. C-51 takes a system that is currently working quite well and threatens to turn it into a three ring circus, without benefit of a ring-master.

It is also less than Canadians would expect, as there is nothing in C-51 to work against radicalization. No outreach efforts, nothing for the prison system or the schools as the U.K. government established in its new law passed in December 2014.

It is more than anti-terrorism, as the range of activities covered by a new and sweeping definition of "threats to the security of Canada" in the information sharing section of the bill covers far more than terrorism. It could plausibly cover just about anything, and certainly would cover those opposing pipelines and tankers. (A: That's the enviro-groups and so on.)

It is actually five bills rolled into one. Each part contains provisions I can only describe as dangerous. For example, part 5, amendments to the Immigration and Refugee Act, appear to allow the use of evidence obtained by torture. Part 3, ostensibly about getting terrorist propaganda off the Internet, uses a set of new concepts that would criminalize private conversations (A: I mean, that's terrible, that.) -- and not just about terrorism. (A: Humph.) The propaganda section does not require knowing you are spreading propaganda, and "terrorist propaganda" itself has a definition so broad as to include a visual representation promoting a new concept called "terrorism in general." Experts are now referring to this as "thought chill." (A: ...thought chill.. Actually, it will be thought kill because it will kill… you'd better kill off any ability to think at all, I think.)

As the first MP to oppose C-51, I now have a lot of company: four former prime ministers, six former Supreme Court justices, over 100 legal experts, Conrad Black, Rex Murphy, Tom Mulcair and the NDP, the editorial positions of the Globe and Mail, National Post and Toronto Star. The Assembly of First Nations has called for it to be withdrawn. I hope you agree as well. (A: And that's in the Huffington Post.)

But we're going down the route, the inevitable route, actually, of what happens when countries become more tyrannical and obsessional in a particular ideology of some kind. Today it's the need for antiterrorism and everyone is suspicious. Anyone who is a bit different at all will be put down as suspicious and possibly dangerous. Because if they don't know much about you then yeah, you could be dangerous, or you could be quite simply happy and not dangerous at all. It doesn't matter. See, facts don't matter anymore. And if you disagree with various things in government just by your opinions on things, that's maybe enough to get you into hot water, by having an opinion on something or an observation.

It's… Well, I've always said that something wicked this way comes, and this is repeated down through history as I've said before. And with today's technologies it makes it all the more easier to carry it all out. It's rather sad. It's rather, rather sad. But you know, I've mentioned different talks that I've given in the past about how science itself impacts society. Very important thing to understand because people don't… People really don't… I think Jacques Ellul said, the people learn by osmosis. It's that they don't really reason or think things through from information from outside that comes to you. It just comes, it just sort of sinks in there and you don't question it or reason through it, or agree or disagree with a lot of it. And to do with technology, that's part of it because we've got to understand that a long time ago, not so long ago actually, really, most folk had to travel by horse or horse and cart. That's the ones that could afford the horses, lots of folk couldn't. Then for a long time, for instance, in the 20th century public transportation was the only way that a good part of the British people could move around, trains or mainly buses actually, to get to their work and all the rest of it.

Everything is geared towards an economic system. There's no way out of that allowed in the system, it doesn't allow that. Because you must earn money even to pay taxes. At one time people would become hobos and take to the road, and take their chances and maybe die, you know, in the winter and so on. But even that was a form of freedom and the right to choose that. But that's all been taken away too as they grabbed them off the streets on the various acts, vagrancy acts or mental health acts or whatever. And you can't even get that loophole out, to just escaped now and walk off and say I've given up on society. So you must earn money to buy the things, because in the system everything is based on money. You must buy things to feed yourself, clothe yourself, warmth, heat, shelter, clothing and so on, and pay taxes.

The whole system is a complete system and you are there to serve the system in actual fact. And that's how you're described in economic schools and so on, you're collateral, you see. You are a worker. You are a resource, a human resource. And they work out from statistics on your health and so on, and your past health, how long you might get in a working situation, a particular job, and contribute to society as they call it. That means, by the definition at the United Nations, you're a good consumer, so you've got the money to buy things, and you're a good producer. When you become just a consumer, when you retire, then you're really a bad citizen. And if you become unemployed, then you're bad, you're not contributing, you're not contributing taxes and so on and so on. Because government is so huge today, it's massive, and many of the big foundations out there also get tax money for all their nongovernmental organizations, which are funded by the foundations, they get tax money added to it. Because everything is shaped and geared to take you along a particular avenue of believing in the system and why they are doing things, environmentally or any other way, and it's all for your good, etc. etc.

So we're not just simply… I've always said that culture just doesn't develop anymore. It's always planned and shaped and controlled. And that's what it's all about, is massive control, right down to thought control, obviously. But when you introduce technology of any kind into society you're not riding around in the horse and cart anymore, or Shank's pony which is your legs of course, you're not walking. And you're into getting a vehicle, etc., and all that goes with it, your insurances, taxes, road taxes and so on, in order to get to and from work and all the rest of it. So that changed massively society, and it allowed folk for the first time to get out of these crammed cities into outer areas and travel into work as well and get a bit of freedom and peace from the crowded, crowded cities. That's all to change because the whole agenda for the 21st century, they want you back in these crowded cities, for you lot. But they have a tiered system for those who are middle wealthy and very wealthy and so on, little perks along the way. Everything is based with economics on awards for those beneath.

So again, technology changes it all. So the vehicle itself changed society massively and eventually they want to take it all away from you again. And what they've replaced a lot of it with is something that helps all of the institutions, set up by governments and working with governments, and working with the economic system, to monitor you all and manage you even better, of course that's the Electronic Revolution that they had. Many years ago I read on the air articles about the big military industrial complex and how they were putting articles out in the papers and magazines, years ago, about if they come to the end of wars – they were already preparing as they were doing this, the big global wars for instance – they were going into security, domestic security systems, cameras, microphones and so on, and the computer and all the rest of it, even before they gave us the computer. And it's all come to pass. And of course there always lobbying government. Remember what the definition of lobbying and lobbyist happens to be. Because lobbying government, if you lobby government you're trying, a special interest group is trying to influence the decisions of government policy. And those decisions then are passed on, which alter your behavior, beneath the government of course, if they mandate you must have this, they mandate you must have that. And your police forces, everything that they mandate that they must have, are getting all these camera systems that are everywhere, tied into your computerized system in the cars and so on and so on. It's all interconnected. So technology itself alters your behavior.

When something is placed in your environment it alters your behavior. They knew that with the radio. When the radio came out the BBC used it immediately and it sprung up immediately to use it for propaganda. They used it widely for World War I. They found out they could alter people's behavior, by ensuring the radios were cheap enough to buy, and they could put them in workplaces, even in factories at times, and you would listen to the shows. And they gave you, they found that cliffhanger dramas, you were left with the cliffhanger at the end, welltune in tomorrow for the serial to find out what happens to the hero as she is hanging off the cliff, will he or won't he die? Folk would rush to their homes after work to hear the next episode. So it would alter human behavior. They knew it altered behavior with the use of advertising too, by promoting certain things people would change their dress codes, things like that, their hairdos, all of these things. Then when television came in, bang, that was really off to a big, big thing. Cinema was also used as well. There was tremendous war propaganda documentaries about how to get the people happy, happy, happy, the young folk who don't know any better to join up and go off to war. It was all put across very happy with lots of dancing and so on, and we are the youth and we're going to do it all. An actor dressed up in the uniforms, who were never in the military, telling them why they have to go off and fight, even though these actors were not going off to fight themselves.

This is management of the mind, you understand. So technology can massively, and always does, alter human behavior. By behavior too I also mean your thought, what you think about, how you think about things, why you think about things, and opinions you're led to conclude and they become your opinions. That's why there are so many neuroscientists and psychologists and behaviorists involved with all these big companies that present movies, television, dramas, documentaries, things for government, documentaries and so on, right down to the management of the Internet, on behalf of the authorities. So everybody buys their personal computer, oh, privacy is yours, and all that nonsense, when they had no intention of that. It was for their benefit to categorize you with your personality style and so on. They said it was, first, for advertisers so that they would really find out how you tick and promote things to you. But of course it was really for all of those involved in it including government agencies and security agencies to personality profile you.

And they're constantly doing studies. They hand a lot of this data over, in fact, they give access to streams on the Internet to a lot of universities, like MIT and so on, to profile groups of people and find clusters of people, why you are in this little cluster, what you all have in common, what other things do you have in common, why is this? Massive psychological manipulation will be used on all of the people according to what they observe, you see, that's how precise and how deep all this goes and it works awfully, awfully well for them.

So this whole idea with Bill C-51 for Canada, and all the British Commonwealth countries have the same kind of bills, it's inevitable. They planned this years ago. They knew, before they gave you the Internet they would bring out all these different bills under different guises at the right times and so on, to manage. Because the first thing the government must do, the first job that it has, is to preserve itself. And itself means also the whole institution, not just the government but the system of economics that you're born into. So be very careful when you're thinking about getting this and getting that because it's, oh it's so convenient. It will be used on you, that's the prime purpose of it. The second purpose is to condition you as well and bring you to the correct opinions and observations and all the rest of it. And also to make you think that privacy is a quaint old-fashioned idea. Many folk already do. And you don't understand that people fought for centuries over things such as privacy, to have privacy in the first place. When you lose that you have no security. And when you have no privacy of your mind it's all over, it's finished, forget it, throw in the towel.

So I tell people try and reclaim your mind, if you want to. Many folk don't want to. They're happy. I've read articles by the big global planners before where they have said that many people will love their servitude. And they do. If they're doing okay financially and so on and they are young enough to feel healthy and they can party and all the rest of it, they love it, they love the system. They're okay. I'm okay, Jack. You know, I'm all right Jack, as they say. So that's the way it is. Everyone has been divided into different categories. So don't expect, you know. Don't expect other people to simply jump on board and start questioning things. And don't get angry with them when they can't or won't. You can't get angry and ostracize yourself completely. You got to live amongst the world of people, and it takes all kinds of people, you see. And the conflict doesn't help, at all.

Now, talking about how technology changes our whole way of behavior. I've mentioned so many times about the fact that they've known for an awful long time, even from World War I when they took photographs of the troops in the trenches, the troops would behave differently. They would walk differently, their stances would be different when they knew they were being filmed. You might have experienced that yourself when someone's taking a photograph of you, you don't stand normally or relax or whatever. You'll stand in a different pose or whatever because you're being filmed.

Well, they also know that when you're being filmed in the streets by CCTV cameras then your behavior is changed too. The spontaneity of how you would joke with your pals, it goes, it disappears. Because you're being watched. So you learn to self-police yourself, that becomes second nature. Wherever you go you're being watched and you become more, apparently more into yourself, introverted, you see, and they know this at the top. They want to encourage people to self-police themselves, the way that George Orwell's 1984 portrayed Winston with that bland expression of his, because an expression could give you away as being a subversive, or a thoughtful person, which is the same thing.

Think about this. Here's an article here, right along this inevitable path as I say. It says:

‘CCTV in all homes’:
Police chief’s domestic security call attacked by privacy groups
rt.com / March 09, 2015 / Reuters/Soeren Stache

(A: Now, they've already tried this in Britain, I know that, in certain areas. In fact, they used it for people who were suspected, supposedly, years ago, of abnormal behavior in the home. They might be kind of loud with each other, whatever it was, someone would report them. In would come the authorities and the social workers and so on and then they put cameras up and watched them. It says here:)

Britain’s most senior police officer has urged families and business owners to install hidden eye-level CCTV cameras to make it easier to identify burglars. (A: Right.) Privacy rights groups say it will make the public “an extension of the police.”

Metropolitan Police Commissioner Sir Bernard Hogan-Howe (A: They love these hyphens, eh; there’s a story behind that too but that’s a different story.) encouraged property owners to make a “stronger effort” to help with criminal investigations.

(A: Now, I wonder who's been lobbying him as to… You don't think that the guys at the top of these things... Yeah, they'll get lobbyists, you know, and the lobbyists always help them on their career path and they also help them with funding and so on, things that they're never going to admit to. It's always been that way.)

Families and business owners should plant two CCTV cameras in their homes, Howe says, ideally one high camera to capture the full crime scene and another eye-level camera to capture clear images of criminals’ faces. (A: Well remember, everyone under the modern law system, then the training of the police, puts everyone down as a potential criminal. That's you, too, that are sitting in your own home.)

Those who are only able to install one camera must ensure it is at eye-level. Howe claims this is the “most important angle.” He said this strategy would make it easier for police to identify criminals.

However, privacy campaigners have condemned the strategy, claiming it will turn the public into “an extension of the police.”   (A: Well that's… It's beyond just that, folks. I love how they give you these, these little canards... an extension of the police. It's beyond that. It will alter your complete behavior if there's cameras in the home. You won't be spontaneous. You won’t be so happy and joking and all that. Jokes can be dangerous now, you know.)

Few British households already have CCTV cameras installed, and the minority that do “position them too high.”   (A: [Alan laughing.])

“Over the last year as facial recognition software has got better, we can apply the software to the images of burglaries or robberies and we can compare those images with the images we take when we arrest people,” Howe told LBC radio. (A: And it goes on and on and on.)

But I mean, these are the little articles here meant to make you, and a lot of folk will, who are conditioned, well we should do that, yeah, yeah, yeah. And this is how… They don't question all the dangers to it all, at all, it doesn't enter their heads.

Many of the talks I’ve given in the past I've gone through a lot of the history of this, and even the history of the Psychiatric Association, that is not just involved in psychiatry, believe it or not. There was a big political push at the beginning to create a psychiatric professional movement, with the intention eventually of running the world. Science, that's themselves at the top basically, they would determine who should be in power; a good idea actually but for the wrong reasons. They wanted to test all politicians or people who ran for politics and so on to see if they were sane enough to do it. Now, if any group had that particular power then they would of course abuse it right away. Because what is their definition of someone who is sane enough to use it? If you didn't have the same attitudes as the psychiatric majority, who would have their own votes on particular topics, then you wouldn't get in. On the other hand, I personally do believe that anyone with any kind of power over the public, right down to the policeman, should be tested for psychopathy. I really believe that. I really, really do believe that. And that goes for any government worker who's involved in your taxation and all the other things that they do, and anybody who's in charge of housing and so many different fields, should be tested for psychopathy. In this system it's mainly psychopaths who get up in charge of things, because they’re very aggressive, they take the risks, the chances, incredibly manipulative, and they can dispose of all competition as they claw their way up too, without a thought, because they have no conscience.

But here's where they're going to go, according to the last article for instance, where the police just want you to have cameras, to catch burglars, it says. Well, here's the other part of it, which falls in naturally. It says:

ACLU Lawsuit Seeks Data on
TSA's Creepy "Behavior Detection" Program
motherjones.com / Allie Gross / Mar. 23, 2015

(A: Now, that's the transportation safety agency. This is the one that's the big one in the States that they created, which is crazy, there's so many agencies tripping over each other. But this says:)

Airport security basically sucks: Being herded through a Tensabarrier maze alongside a bunch of strangers is vexing enough. Then throw in the bag searches, the bomb-swabs, the mandatory doffing and donning of footwear and accessories, the "complimentary" pat down—it's hardly surprising that some people will come through the experience looking less than cheerful.

Nowadays, though, your very reasonable travel emotions (anxiety, stress, fear, despondency) can earn you even more face time with the Transportation Security Administration. Since 2003 TSA has toyed with the idea of placing "behavior detection officers" in airports across America (A: They're not toying with it, they've put them in already, I’ve read the articles in the past.) —part of a $1 billion counter-terrorism measure known as SPOT (Screening Passengers by Observation Techniques), which officially launched in 2007. (A: And they have computer programs too, that were invented by other psychopaths, who would immediately dive into where they see their prospects of advancements and in their paychecks and so on.)

"Our request and the lawsuit is to determine if TSA can adequately defend SPOT."

The behavior detection officer's job is to scan travelers' faces for micro-expressions—facial movements that come and go in the blink of an eye and are said to convey a person's true emotions. When one of these airport mentalists (A: ...and that's really what it's down to, isn't it?) spots a potentially shifty character, he can take it to the next level by striking up a casual conversation—the idea being that brief encounters may suggest whether a person poses a threat.

Signs of "anti-social" behavior (see emotions above) may result in a traveler being flagged for additional security measures. Between 2004 and 2008, as my former colleague Ben Buchwalter has reported, 152,000 people were flagged but fewer than 1,110 were arrested. Most of the arrestees "were undocumented aliens, had outstanding warrants, or were carrying fake documents or drugs."   (A: So other reasons caught them, you see. So out of the 152,000 people, really, that were flagged for facial expressions, all they got were folk who gave themselves away by fake documents or they had drugs on them or something else or warrants.)

Meanwhile, the SPOT program, which relies heavily on officers' subjective observations, has been compared to the "stop-and-frisk" police tactics that have resulted—at least in New York City—in a disproportionate number of stops of blacks and Latinos. In an anonymous complaint obtained by the New York Times, one Boston TSA officer wrote that "the behavior detection program is no longer a behavior-based program, but it is a racial profiling program." The Times interviewed other TSA officers who corroborated the claim.

All you would have to do is take the same program, and they're already doing this by the way, and putting facial expressions into your homes, like the article we just talked about, CCTV cameras in all of your homes. And then of course, why were you irritated Mr. so-and-so when you were watching TV, and this is being presented, why were you, you had a frowned expression on your face? Will they take you in for reconditioning and reeducation? Like, a camp there that they'll take you into? This is all inevitable, folks. And all the programs that are out there, and again, through lobbyists companies and so on to push all this on government, it's fascist. When governments and lobbyists work together, that technically is fascist, big corporations involved, for financial gain, to get their products put through lawfully, into law, to be used in homes and things like that, then that's it, it's over.

Then this article here, it says:

Are smartphones making our children mentally ill?
telegraph.co.uk / Peter Stanford / 21 Mar 2015

(A: [Alan scoffs.] There's a form of doublespeak in the article, it says:)

Julie Lynn Evans has been a child psychotherapist for 25 years, working in hospitals, schools and with families, (A: … blah, blah, blah.) and she says she has never been so busy.

“In the 1990s, I would have had one or two attempted suicides a year – mainly teenaged girls taking overdoses, the things that don’t get reported. Now, I could have as many as four a month.”

Now, what she's mainly saying is, their cell phones. In fact, they can look into all kinds of things without parental consent, that are causing the problem. Society today is broken. Families are broken. There's been a war on the family structure for an awful long time to break it up. And the fallout is phenomenal, it's not just the phones, folks. And the push in this article, really, when it gets down to it, is for putting more resources into mental health services, which is a big United Nations mandate, has been for many years, to get every child from birth right through into adulthood checked constantly for mental health. And that includes having the right attitudes, that are pushed out by the top, that you must accept and must parrot. If you don't parrot it you’re mentally ill.

So you'd better be careful the things you actually watch and read yourselves. You must always dissect everything and look at it from different sides, different angles. So as I said, remember, very early psychiatry's objective was to evaluate everyone in society eventually and help run society, including the politics and everything else. That hasn't stopped. So when you see articles like that be very, very careful, it's still the same mandate that's on the go. Rather than look at all the things, all the factors that go into destroying all of society, pushed steadily since at least the 60s, actually before that but steadily since the 60s, until you have dysfunctional everything, how many folk are really functional in any direction at all these days? Be very, very careful. But they don't go into checking themselves, who's watching the watchers? Who's doing the diagnosis on the psychiatrist? Many of them, too, are psychopathic by the way.

Now, here's an article here that ties in with, again, how technology changes society, not just those who use them but those who see the potential for using it on you. And there have been many articles out before about schools using apps and putting them into the different...again, mandating you buy their computer or whatever or even giving you them from the school, and they can then tap in any time they want, any teacher can, and watch what you're doing, and actually watch and hear what you’re doing as well. And even seeing you undressing in your bedroom, a lot of these scandals are dying down by now, because folk are being acclimatized to those as though it's all quite normal. But this article here says:

Behavioral Observation of Students in Schools (BOSS)
pearsonclinical.com / Edward S. Shapiro, PhD

The time-tested BOSS direct observation program is now available as a smart phone application, making it easier than ever for you (A: …this is for teachers.) to monitor students’ behavior. Backed by extensive research, the BOSS system provides reliable and valid data on specific problem areas—so that you can determine appropriate remediations to help students succeed. (A: So it's all to help students succeed, by you observing them and sneaking and watching them.)

Features & Benefits

Take advantage of this new app to help easily pinpoint areas for behavior remediation. Use this intuitive tool (A: …it’s intuitive, right…)with grades pre-K through 12 to assist you in:
•Recording and tracking frequency of targeted positive and negative behaviors. (A: Again, these are all value judgments by the teacher, who might not like the student.)
•Documenting a student’s active or passive engagement in activities.
•Tabulating data and emailing it to you for future use to help support a disability diagnoses. (A: Who's doing the diagnosing here?)

(A: And it tells you how to order this BOSS program, BOSS app and so on.)
To download the BOSS app, visit the Apple® or Android™ app store

(A: Then it's got training, they have all these different training tools, products.))

Conducting Systematic Behavioral Observations in Schools: Using BOSS App for iPhone and Android Webinar Recording

A brief discussion of the basic concepts of systematic direct observation will first be presented. A full explanation of the BOSS code, its categories and methods of data collection will be provided with an emphasis highlighting the use of the BOSS App available for iPhone and Android.

(A: Social skills, is that what schools are there for, to teach you different social skills? Well, they're always upgrading the politically correct social skills, right, and so on, so that's really an order one. But here's an article here and it says:)

Orwellian nightmare unleashed on schoolkids
Teachers now thought police with extreme new spy 'tools'
mobile.wnd.com / 03/15/2015 / Leo Hohmann

(A: Remember, this fits in with the GIRFEC in Britain and everything else; there's many ways to monitor you and guide you from birth to death now. With the GIRFEC in Scotland they put a government-sponsored person, an agent really, who must come into your home, you must let them in, from about the age of two months onwards. And they get into all your business, the parental business, everything else, and to make sure that that child is getting the right kind of indoctrination, it doesn't have any particular dislikes of any people or anything else and so on and so on, so they can always adjust you as you grow up.)

Technology is increasingly being used by schools to gather data on students, testing not just their knowledge of subjects like reading, math and science but subjective "social skills." (A: Social skills.)

Parents and students have been “opting out” of high-stakes testing in record numbers over the past year, saying the standardized tests waste valuable instruction time, cause undue stress and often measure “skills” that have nothing to do with academic knowledge.

Rather than merely asking for a right or wrong answer to a math, history or science question, (A: Oh, that’s old fashioned stuff now, that’s passé.) the new assessment industry is capable of boring into a child’s attitudes, values, opinions and beliefs, all of which parents and privacy advocates say is no business of the government’s. (A: And that’s absolutely true. All of the things that they're going to pry into make you you, and it's your right to be you.)

The pushback has led some state education systems to recommend a reduction in the amount of high-stakes testing in public schools.

But, parents beware, the sudden realization that maybe too much testing is going on is not going to lead to less data being collected. Quite the opposite.

In fact, traditional testing may no longer be needed. Schools have found they have better, more efficient ways to collect even more data on your child, without resorting to paper and sharpened No. 2 pencils.

Oregon’s Gov. John Kitzhaber, for instance, assigned a task force to this problem recently and after a year of private meetings, the group is ready to unveil its recommendations which are expected to include replacing standardized tests with high-tech “observation” tools. (A: And I'll put all these links up, remember, tonight at .com. And the link is in here for all that, the high tech observation tools.)

Fewer tests might sound like a relief to stressed-out students and wary parents.

But what if your child’s teacher could have access to a software application that allows her to collect data on your child in real time, without ever being rolled out in a test?

Enter the BOSS app. It is just one of countless new data-collection products available to school systems looking to collect data on the sneak.

BOSS stands for Behavioral Observation of Students in Schools. (A: You can do it out of school too, though.) The app was designed to “enable psychologists to observe” patients but is now being marketed to schools interesting in tracking students’ behavioral patterns.

Created by the British-based textbook giant Pearson, the BOSS app can be loaded onto a smartphone and used to secretly monitor every move of targeted students in the classroom. (A: What about out of the classroom?)

Does little Johnny fidget in his seat a bit too much? Does he socialize with the students around him in an appropriate manner? Does he tend to stare aimlessly out the window when he should be paying attention to the teacher?

All of this information can be pulled in and stored in an individual dossier for later analyzing and assigned an intervention and remediation that will deal with Johnny's shortcomings, whether they be laziness, lack of assertiveness, over-aggressiveness or whatever psychological problem the app may discover. (A: Of course, they will all be infallible, right? [Alan chuckles.])

BOSS app can be downloaded from iTunes for $29.99 and comes in age-appropriate versions from pre-K through 12th grade. (A: So this app, really, it's quite something. It's beyond many of the other ones that are already out there. But again, it's not the only one out there too.)

The BOSS app is not the only new technology percolating in the education industry that has the ability to invisibly assess students in real time without their knowledge, or the knowledge of their parents. (A: Because parents don't matter anymore. The state owns the children; they own us actually.)

Below is a small sampling of other apps being marketed to educators:

(A: And here's the info and it says:)

You Can Handle Them All app• "You Can Handle Them All": This app, produced by Master Teacher (A: That's another one.,), describes 124 behaviors that teachers may encounter in their students and identifies the primary cause of each. (A: Oh, like they just know now it, hey. There could be many factors involved.) A teacher using this app places each student into a category, with options that include "The Blabbermouth," "The Blurter," "The Boss," "The Bully," "The Complainer," "The Disengaged" and "The Class Clown." (A: How about "The Labeler"? That's for the teacher.) It then prompts the teacher with suggestions on how to remedy each unwanted behavior.

• "Pearson Dash": Another product by Pearson, Dash, according to the iTunes product description, enables teachers to "Organize and track your students" according to classroom seating charts, to "record, edit, and e-mail observational notes on your students," to "View student performance and mastery of skills with SuccessTracker data."

• "What Would You Do at School If": This app focuses squarely on social skills. Put out by Super Duper Publications, it seeks to elicit answers to sensitive, revealing questions that help schools develop a psychological profile on each student. Instead of a test, this app is presented to a young child as a fun "game" (A: That's much the same as how it's presented to adults, they don't even know they're being monitored and checked and so on. It's fun, isn't it?) while collecting data on the child's parental upbringing and personality.

(A: So it's an invasion into privacy, of many areas too, but they won't push that so much.)

what would you do in school if "Select the cards you want students to see, and have them work on solving problems and practicing good social skills (A: Now, who has said what good social skills happen to be? It changes according to the Masters of the era.) as they discuss situations in and around school," the product description says. "The prompts include questions like, 'What would you do if … you forgot your homework?' and, 'What would you do if … your classmate teased you about the new shirt you wore?'"

Students are then graded based on how many "right" answers (A: Now, what's a right answer?) they give in what is clearly a test of one's attitudes, behaviors, values and beliefs. (A: Well, that's why they designed it that way, you're not allowed certain attitudes, behaviors and values and beliefs anymore. Birth to death, reconditioning, reconditioning, reeducation, way beyond the old Soviet reeducation camps.) The problem with such questions, say privacy experts, is that the "right" answer is clearly subjective and has nothing to do with a student's ability to acquire and retain objective academic knowledge. (A: But most schooling has nothing to do with academic knowledge anymore, it's social engineering.)

For instance, a parent may teach a boy to defend a weaker boy or a girl who is getting beat up by a bully. But what if the “right” answer in the role playing game is to go and tell a teacher or principal? Will the child get marked down if he answers that he would intervene and physically stop the bully’s attack? What will the remediation for this “wrong” behavioral skill be? (A: What will the remediation be? Another thing you might say too, supposing that little boy that's being attacked is beat up or killed, when he's off reporting it to the teacher. It would be another case to see, well should he have gone and helped break it up first, because that would apply to a human adult.)

According to promotional details on iTunes, the “What Would You Do at School If” app lets teachers:

- Track correct and incorrect responses for an unlimited number of players.

- Receive feedback for incorrect and/or correct responses

- View results in a graph and see which questions a player missed during a session.

- Print, E-mail and share your results. (A: With whom? Mental health authorities, agencies, whatever.)

The same vendor, Super Duper Publications, puts out a separate app called “Super Duper Data Tracker” that allows teachers to “increase the accuracy and efficiency of your data collection” on each individual student.

There are literally dozens of these apps out there being downloaded by teachers, often at the behest of administrators, (A: Well, they're all getting lobbied, right, and there's money that changes hands, believe you me.) and many of them come tailored to the Common Core national education standards. (A: That’s just coincidence, right?)

One teacher who reviewed the Super Duper Data Tracker on iTunes said he liked it but wished the data came with increased portability and could be more easily integrated into other platforms.

“It would also be great if this was tied to a website where teachers had an account and could input large amounts of data on something other than the small screen or tempermental (sic) keyboard of an iPad/iPhone,” the teacher said. “Then everything would be backed up, we could share data with other team members (especially in situations where many people see one student!). It is a great app, I just think in the day of icloud and spreadsheets it is begging for a big overhaul.”

Well, that will come regardless because eventually their opinions will overcome any other reason of course, because it's already happening. And little Johnny will be reconditioned his whole life long into being the proper kind of citizen that's been designed by the state.

Now, I've given talks in the past. As I’ve said, they're all in the archives section of .com. You can find talks on the big world players who helped create this presents culture, many of whom are long dead, because culture is always created, the future is always planned, folks, and who worked at the United Nations and with United Nations, with the big psychological associations, psychiatric Association so on. I've given you all the different statements, even the books they put out, they're all in there, where they said that they would bring the situation in where you would get trained from birth to death. So all this isn’t just happening spontaneously because of technology. It's time for it to get put forth. And many of them, and Bertrand Russell said it too, governments would be unable to resist the temptation to use all these methods to bring up a kind of society that the government itself desires. And it can be any kind of government.

Now, as I’ve said before, that's just the way it is, folks, and to get back to what I said earlier in the talk, you must proof your mind. You must proof it yourself, and guard your mind because you are you. Everything in you, your opinions and so on, all these different composites of you, that makes you you. That's the natural person. We don't want to go into stereotypes, like bricks in the wall on a conveyor belt getting stamped in the same shape and so on. But the big boys at the top don't want you to have different viewpoints and so on which are contrary, and are sometimes a nuisance to different government agendas. And then you do become an enemy of the state. And at the very least you become, get put into a label, pigeonholed, and they have many definitions and terms that they use for categories of humans in society. We're all monitored, believe you me. It doesn't matter if you’re doing radio shows or not, or blogs or anything else, it doesn't matter, you're all getting monitored.

The folk who don't like what's happening are already called, and don't belong to any clubs or agencies or groups that are protesting. They're called unaffiliated subversives on the grounds that they don't like certain things that are happening in society today. They're not politically correct. They don't adopt the updates you’re given on what you should believe in, what you should think of certain things and topics and so on.

But anyway, don't let this destroy you or flatten you. Don't let it happen, folks, because when that happens and you all just cave-in, you’re as well as just saying, here's my brain do what you want with it. And that's not what life is all about, is it?

The ones at the top have their own definition of progress. But true progress has been freeing up people, from all kinds of slavery, by bullies and authorities of all kinds down through the ages. And we have the brief little piece of it where we have certain rights and so on, and now it's all to be taken away, again. And you can't let that happen for any reason given to you by government. You can't go backwards.

And for those, as I say, who are being overwhelmed by information, switch off for a while. You don't have to tune into the horror story to see how it ends, you're not going to die tomorrow, whether you tune in or not. You must survive. You must look after your own mind. It's all you have. And I've often said, the mind has no firewall, be careful what you let in there. Even that which seems to expose stuff, don’t let it destroy you. And question the things that you think are destroying you. Be very, very careful. Because you do matter. You all matter.

From Hamish and myself from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on April 5, 2015. Now, last week I mentioned that if you think life is becoming just too overwhelming with the daily feed of what's given to you as news, and all the horrors of what could be happening or what might happen, all the catastrophes that could happen and so on, switch off for a while and don't worry about it. Because if you were to go through all the different agencies that give you all the fear factors you'll find it's been happening your whole darn life, and to your parents as well. Because that's what control is, is by keeping you in fear. And as I have mentioned so many times, someone who is abused will turn to the abuser for protection to quell all their fears when it's just too overwhelming.

So understand, you're not the first generation to go through all of this. Those who think they've woken up really haven't, that's for the majority of those. They're following certain agencies that give them all their information and they're given various spins and so on, but they're never given all the facts involved and the agencies involved behind it all and the techniques as to how it works so well.

From ancient times to the present we always looked towards the strong man, who is generally the psychopath, to protect us, you see. Now we have agencies and governments full of them, because that's who gets to the top in a psychopathic system, especially when money is the key factor for controlling everything. Everyone is dependent upon it, you're given no choice whatsoever. And psychopaths go to where the power is, and when power comes through money, that's where they head for, you see. They claw their way up. They're vicious. There also clever, if they come from the right, they always say, social classes and so on, or strata, social strata. But what they really mean is a class system of course. Because they're protected more if they are in the upper middle-class families or above. Because anything they do in their teenage years which are psychopathic, is covered over as simply juvenile or teenage, you know, energy, super energy, that kind of thing, so they get off with it. And since daddy and mommy generally can pull strings to get them off, then that's what happens, they're shielded from the problems of the lower-class psychopaths.

So remember, you get them in all strata. If you're born into a higher, well off system and parents and so on, you'll find that, you'll learn the cultural norms, even if you don't understand them because you don't actually feel the emotions of them, but you know it works on everyone else, and you become a better psychopath, you see. You're put into the better schools where you can't fail either; that's a fact as well, folks, it happens in all, again, social strata of universities. You can't fail depending on daddy and mommy and all the rest of it, and who knows the dean, and who gives the grants to the universities.

So, it's a psychopathic system that runs us and it really has been for an awful, awful long time. Once we left the old tribal system, and introduced money at the same time, the head chief could then keep his family line going, and employ as many mercenaries as he wants, even under, oh, it's really a government army, it doesn't matter what they call it, and quell any people who tried to throw them over and put him out of the tribe. And it's been that way ever since.

With the advent of all the sciences, and all your tax money that's actually going into all the studies, that are done on you, [Alan chuckles.] so they can understand your behavior better and manipulate it all, it's been on the go for such a long time, the scientific indoctrination we get and scientific observation. Now it's complete, really, with the Internet, cell phones and all the rest of it. So everyone is profiled and they enable themselves to be profiled by thinking that somehow they're so smart that nothing will ever be used against them down the road. And nothing is further from the truth.

Therefore, understand what's happening. If you understand what's happening and realize that you're not the first generation to understand what's happening, then it makes it much easier. Other folk in previous generations, there was always a few who understood from childhood, who...many simply rebel. They don't understand why it's all wrong. They rebel. They sometimes turn anger inwards, they drink themselves to death or drug themselves to death. If they had information provided when they were young they would understand why things are happening, why the system is the way it is, why the culture is the way it is too.

Because every culture is planned for every generation. It's planned culture. There's no separate culture industry and separate governments and so on. Everyone is a product to an extent of the culture industry, which is essential for psychopaths at the top to control societies. It's more evident in the US where, with incredible indoctrination to the flags and symbols and so on, they can convince the public of anything and look at all the Pentagon sponsored movies that are out there on war and all the rest of it. It's just quite fascinating to see how well it works.

Remember, that worked on ancient Rome too with the culture. If you were a man you had to join the Legion and he had to go off and fight the wars. And he had little trade-offs in those days because you could steal and have some booty as they called it, plunder, that you could keep for yourself now and then. But essentially that is what a man was supposed to be, always fighting expansionist wars for your masters. And the Roman system went in and expanded its empire, introducedthe money system to the countries that didn't have it, then taxed it from them, and made sure they all had to use the monetary system, they couldn't just barter anymore and be self-sufficient. That's the first thing that must go is self-sufficiency. Therefore, you have to earn money to pay the taxes or else, and in the Roman days they would just simply cut your throat. Today it's more sophisticated of course but it's the same technique. Because the Roman system itself eventually went under because eventually with all the massive taxes from all their Empire flooding in to keep a tiny elite in the middle of Rome living in prosperity, incredible prosperity, they still ran out of taxes. It's always the same story. Because even the Roman elite, you know, borrowed from private bankers, and they have many names of who they were and where they came from and often it wasn't Rome itself.

So the system of money sponsoring psychopathic ambitions is very, very, very old. Because they go together. One goes with the other, always. It's never, ever separate. And right to the present day it's the same thing. Britain when under too because it's spent so many centuries borrowing money from private moneylenders, for their wars, putting the populations down as the guarantors to pay off the debts by taxation and taxing them, and eventually it ran out of steam. It's like someone who ends up with emphysema and they can't even get a breath in or breath out properly, that's what happens in expansionist psychopathic systems. And nothing's changed. Nothing has changed regardless of who apparently is the dominant character playing the game in your nation, or your Empire, or the opponent's Empire, it's all the same system.

Now, back in the 90s I came out and said that people should stop beating themselves on the head with anxiety and anger and frustration, not knowing why this goes on and on and on. And I said, I didn't come out to be a cheerleader for the masses. Most of the people in the mass will go along with any system they are given. They're the followers of the psychopathic system. In fact, they're happy to try and emulate, however futilely, the ones at the top, regardless of, again, their social strata or class that they happen to belong to. Because you want to be a winner, that's always put out, you're a winner, you're awfully successful, it's better than being a loser, and you despise those down beneath you. That's always the psychopathic system. You'll see it in tyrannies of even the 20th century where generals are always, who are psychopathic themselves, clustered around the top psychopath. And the psychopath can only admire a more cunning and vicious psychopath, they literally grovel to them. And they want that position too but they never try and get it and grab it themselves, but they will obediently serve the master, and they will beat the rank beneath them all the way down. That's how it works in a psychopathic system.

When they don't use overt tyranny they use the capitalist system, which is all the same thing by the way, fascist/capitalist/communist. It's all the same honchos that get to the top. All based on materialism. And in the capitalist system it's Empire restructuring under the guise of peacekeeping. It's beautiful isn't it, how it can be disguised by the use of terminology. They learned that a long time ago too, how you could literally alter terminology, that's what law is all about, altering the meaning of terminology to make something more acceptable to the populace. And it works awfully, awfully well. We don't send soldiers anywhere, we send peacekeepers to go off and expand the empires. Again, there's always a good reason they give you, you see, but it's never the real reason. There's always a good reason for the people, and a real reason. And the real reason of course is expansionist capitalism where people who run your countries, the top corporate groups, bankers, corporations and everything else, that are all tied together by the way at the top, often intermarried, they expand all their enterprises under the guise of, going over there to preserve peace, in one country or another. And they run the media therefore they can always tell you the propaganda at home is to, well here's the reason were going over there, they're fighting each other, it's to stop them, or, to bring civilization to them, etc. etc. They have used every excuse under the sun. Today it's more sophisticated of course because most folk do believe what authorities tell them. And that's the key, too, in behavioral sciences, and the nudge programs, and the neuroscientist involved in all these things, masses of them today, massive profession, well-paid of course because they work for governments and so on to make sure that they train an update the population, almost instantaneously, when the new agenda comes forth.

You see, you're taught, here's the politically correct way, the authoritarian way to say something to them. They will obey the authoritarian voice, the familiar face on television giving them the news, and they will believe it, you see, they won't question it. That's what most people go by. That's always been that way. That's why they keep anchors, well-known anchor people on television, and actually make them star profiles by lots of propaganda and interviews and so on, to make them into what you think in your mind is a star, and a kind of daddy figure who would never lie to you. And they keep them until they're tottering off their seats because they're so darned old, because you have grown up with them and that's awfully important, you see.

We follow what's called the stars. It's an old occultic term too, following the stars. You're taught to follow the stars, so they create stars. Creating a star could take anybody, give them a little bit of acting lessons, deportment and so on, and train them to the authoritarian way that they put things over, they're confident, assertive and so on, and then give them a massive buildup in the press, get lots of publicity everywhere, until in your mind they become a star. It's not different from creating an actor for entertainment, or indeed, the new musician or artiste in music or whatever it happens to be, and the heartthrob, the male heartthrob for the females, and the extroverted young slut, that is the in-thing today, for the females. It's all controlled, and discussed at the top, not just by the culture industry because guys who also own governments own them both you see, and they must approve or disapprove, yeah, this is the way to go. And the myriads of, again, behavioral scientists, psychologists, neuroscientists, all involved in keeping the system going, and directing the future at all times.

People follow the stars, they emulate the stars, regardless of, again, their social strata or class. And they emulate the behaviors, which they put across as being, oh, you know, exhibitionist or the in-thing, the trendy, popular, the popular… don't you want to be the popular person at school, college and so on. The popular ...they tell you what it's supposed to be. And unfortunately the mass of people, the bulk of them, will emulate that, and be totally blackmailable throughout their whole lives, forever now with the social media. That's part of the intention of it of course too.

So there's always a war going on and it's not the ones that are across the seas that bother you. It's the ones internally because it's always upon you, to do with your behavioral updates, your conditioning, the monitoring of you, whether you know it or not, or even care or not, and to make sure that you're the product. See, you are the product. Not the iPhone, not the Internet, YOU are the product that all these things enable you to be, and you are designed that way. Some folk, the few, as I say, who understand very early on when they're young, depending on their temperament as well, they can understand it and not cave in and collapse under the fear of it all. But they understand it. If you understand things, as I say, it should not cripple you. You shouldn't let anything cripple you mentally. Because remember too, since it's a war, they want the casualties. The casualties they want are the ones who could be people who are thinkers, and speakers, of facts down the road. They don't want that. They'd rather those ones when they're young literally whack their brain on drugs and booze and all the rest of it. Then they are out of the picture, they're no problem, they're disabled. So for those who are young, and I said back in the 90s, I'm only looking for the ones, the few, who are turning in on themselves rather than looking, getting the facts, understanding the facts, so they don't punish themselves or destroy themselves in the process. That's more important.

You can stop the general TV population, the ones who are always viewing and soaking everything up that's put out for them, which they think is entertainment, they think they are in charge of it. They think they are in charge of their own minds. But that's not the purpose of entertainment. It's a very... [Alan chuckles.] it's completely weaponized. Completely. It doesn't matter what the story line is, the hook to get you in to watch the rest of it, it's all the messages you get along the way that's so important. Understand why it works, how it works, you're not the first generation it's worked on, and you won't punish yourself the same way. You become much, much stronger, more self-confident and self-assured. A few of them of course, the psychopathic ones will catch on quickly, the streetwise ones, and they will want to get up there themselves, that happens too, you see.

So I don't speak to the… I speak to the ones who are trying to punish themselves because everything is just, as they see it, wrong. They are suffering from the fallout of the destruction of the family unit, that was all intentional. What is a family today? It's portrayed through Hollywood in certain movies, especially the new ones, more and more so they show you that they're all dysfunctional. No one is talking to anybody. The guy is a wimp. The mother is going off and having affairs. And everybody's chatting on the Internet to look for affairs. And their children are all putting out the little porn things across the net as well. That's all intentional. Everybody must be an open book and if you're not an open book they want to destroy you by other methods, preferably having you destroy yourself. Don't do that.

Keep the information in your mind and don't be hysterical about it. Be calm about it. It's your life – and an old saying too which goes through a lot of occultic themes and all the rest of it, it doesn't matter where it came from, but the fact is, it's true. You are only in charge of yourself. The only person you can be certain of influencing and in control of, as much as possible in this system, is yourself. Don't think it's a personal challenge that your ego must take on everybody else's ego and defeat them until they are a clone of you. That's called tyranny. That's how tyrants acts and work, you see. And you destroy yourself in the process, because you've got to accept the fact that it's not your job to make, you can't make people change. You have enough work to do on yourself, believe you me. And if you meet people along the way who are asking questions, then you answer them as carefully, and I mean as carefully as possible. Not like some mad nutter that lives 24 hours a day listening to various shows that terrify you, terrify you, terrify you, it sounds like a raving nutcase with pressure of speech, the way they deliver it and so on, and hysteria. That's not how you put things across. To teach anyone you must be patient, considerate, and careful, and don't give them a whole library of information, which seems disjointed and unrelated the way it's put across, deliberately I believe, by many of the things they listen to. You've got to go through things in a careful order because you're showing someone. It's like any kind of teaching, it's the same way, you must stay on the same topic for a while, the same particular topic for a while. And you'll be surprised to find that the person, when they hear and start to understand that topic will start thinking on other things for themselves for the first time.

I'm going to touch on some stories now which are important, to show you the techniques as well. There's no point just throwing out stories. You've got to understand how it's done, why it's done, and the techniques used behind them all, and their goals and so on. There's nothing in mainstream that isn't carefully selected, worked over, in order to put it across to you, to make sure that you get what the authority says is the right understanding, the authorized understanding of the topic.

And this one is, again, to do with the bill C-51, it's called in Canada, which is much the same as the British bill. We're having the same bills across the Five Eyes countries and so on, the ones that are all part of, and have been since at least World War II, the Empire system of pushing for global empire and domination, etc. to keep the peace, and so that...again too, they even teach in the wars schools the British Empire system, which it is still an empire by the way and it's not British. But regardless, it does matter. This whole idea of Empire, they said that, again, they get taught in officers' training that war can only be eradicated when there are no more nations, nations must be eradicated, and have global government. Now they call it governance, because many agencies are involved in governance, private ones too, to make sure that there will be no, that we'll have eternal peace, you won't have this friction, you see. This is the excuse and con of it all. And it's nothing to do with the truth because the truth is, when psychopaths rule at the top anyway they must always turn, then, on those internally. You're seeing a bit of that with different bills that get passed through all, from Britain and different countries and so on. It's, again, to take away freedoms from people, to give the rulers the supposed open right of spying on everyone, to keep you all safe. You see, that's how it's done.

Now, here's one here and it's called:

Diane Ablonczy (Alan: …in Canada.) Uses Air Quotes (A: That's for quotation marks, they put their fingers up and so on.) While Discussing
'Rule Of Law,' Bill C-51
huffingtonpost.ca / Jesse Ferreras / 04/02/2015

(A: It's coming to Canada, you see. I think it's pretty well a done deal.)

Diane Ablonczy has an interesting way of talking about the "rule of law" and "fundamental justice."

The Conservative MP was taking part in a review of Bill C-51, her party's controversial anti-terror legislation, in a meeting of the Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security on Tuesday.

She addressed an amendment to the bill, proposed by the Green party, (A: You know, they're all… I don't believe in any of the parties to be honest with you.) that took inspiration from recommendations by the Canadian Bar Association (CBA). (A: And I'm sure the Canadian Bar Association is part of the British Bar Association and all the other ones and so on.)

Here are some of the remarks:

"... the Green Party wants to throw some other things into the mix ... Now the judge has to also consider, in addition to the Charter and the CSIS Act, they have to consider something like, 'rule of law.' They have to consider things like 'principles of fundamental justice,' whatever that is."

Ablonczy used air quotes with her fingers when she mentioned "rule of law" and "principles of fundamental justice." (A: Because understand, going back to the days of Plato, Plato said there is no justice, but for the people's sake there must be the appearance, only the appearance of justice. A: It's never changed.)

We can't help but wonder where we've seen that gesture before...

Ablonczy may not have been trying to be dismissive of the concepts of "rule of law" and "fundamental justice." She is a former lawyer herself. (A: Well naturally. We're run by lawyers, armies of them.)

But she nevertheless objected to them being used as additional barriers that judges have to bypass when authorizing the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) to violate Charter rights in the name of reducing security threats.

Sections 12.1(3) and 21.1 of the bill prevent Canada's spy agency from doing so unless they've obtained a warrant.

The CBA recommended that the bill be changed so that those sections conformed with the "fundamental role of Canada's judiciary in upholding the Rule of Law and Canada's constitutional guarantees."

"This aspect of the proposed Bill is at odds with the role of the courts and the judiciary system," the association wrote in a submission.

"Canada's judges are charged with upholding the Rule of Law and Canada's Constitution against unlawful state action. They should not be conscripted by the state to limit Charter rights."

But Ablonczy disagreed with the CBA, saying that such an amendment would put action "pretty much at a stalemate."

It was struck down at committee.

Now, you know, many Canadians won't even be thinking about this, this kind of thing. They don't, most folk don't reason through what's happening, or even think it affects them in any way. That's the perfectly conditioned citizen, the television viewer who believes in the mainstream professional news announcers, again, that they've grown up with and has been there for years, and it never dawns on them that they could be lied to, very cleverly too and using a lot of sophistication. It never occurs to them at all. After all, I mean, when you're born in naïveté why would you ever think that they're out to get you, in some way or another, and nasty things are happening. Why would you? Are you taught that at school? No.

And then you have this article about the same thing:

Elizabeth May, Greens Say Bill C-51 Still Dangerous Despite Tory (A: …conservative.) Amendments huffingtonpost.ca / Jim Bronskill / 03/30/2015

OTTAWA - A Conservative plan to amend the federal anti-terrorism bill hasn't squelched opposition to the sweeping security legislation.

A handful of proposed government amendments, to be presented Tuesday, haven't alleviated Green party Leader Elizabeth May's concerns about what she calls a dangerous and undemocratic bill.

May said she plans to present five dozen amendments when the House of Commons public safety committee begins examining the 62-page bill clause-by-clause.

Seven leading human rights groups, including Amnesty International Canada and the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, issued a joint statement Monday calling on the government to withdraw the legislation.

(A: Now, this is what was discussed back in the early 1900s, of what democracy would be legislated as, with the rulers of the Empire system of its day, the empires. That eventually it will be parties that are authorized by those who own the system. And you would also have on behalf of the public the appearance of people who would speak for you. And so you have Amnesty International Canada authorized, and by the United Nations, which the rulers of London and the Royal Institute of International Affairs, a private organization, the CFR, created. That was the whole idea. They created the IMF, the Bank for International Settlements, for the global society, the central banking system that must be put in, even one for Europe, and their members, their private members all drafted the bills for NAFTA and for the European Union. So here they have the ones for the public, supposedly, run by this authorized, again, by the same group, to speak on behalf of you, you know, the silent majority, because most of the silent majority are watching porn or something else, you see, or 50 Shades of Gray which is the next best thing. You don't vote for these groups either, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, made up of more lawyers and so on, and Amnesty International Canada, which is awfully selective in who it decries, and they have turned a blind eye many times to countries where, your countries are involved in torture abroad in different places. So they are very controlled group themselves. So you really have no one to stand up for you. You see, that's what I've been saying all along. You have to stand up for yourself. That's all you can do.)

The NDP and Liberals have also called for changes to protect civil liberties and improve oversight of security agencies.

However, Conservative ministers appearing before a Senate committee Monday made it clear the government has no plans to create a full-fledged national security committee of parliamentarians like the ones in Britain and the United States. (A: Well, they don't have to because they have them, quietly, you see.)

The government bill, drafted in response to the murders of two Canadian soldiers last October, would give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service more power to thwart suspected terrorist plots — not just gather information about them.

(A: It's not just to do with terror. It's total. It's giving themselves what they already have the right to do, to spy on everybody, and they do it all the time. We've had many, many whistleblowers over the years come out and tell you all this stuff and lots of information about it. But this is to give them the legal right to do it, which sounds better, again, for the silent majority… Oh, well, it's a legal thing, you know, it's legally authorized. It's a psychological trick.)

It would allow CSIS to violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms with a judge's permission, expand the sharing of federal security information (A: To whom?), broaden no-fly list powers and create a new criminal offence of encouraging someone to carry out a terrorism attack.

(A: Now, we've had instances in Britain, the States and Canada of secret agencies, your internal secret agencies attempts in the past to create radicals, put out their own spies to encourage the radicals, even give them explosives even though they are generally dummy. In other words, sting operations, they create the thing and then they come in and arrest them and they say, hey we caught a bunch. Would these young guys have even gotten together if they had not had someone trained in psychology, with an outgoing personality, very confident, and generally of their own race because you generally hire ones from these particular ethnic communities and put them into your own security agencies, to create stings. So here you have this thing… . . . create a new criminal offence of encouraging someone to carry out a terrorism attack. Well, shouldn't you arrest those who create the groups in the first place? And, of encouraging someone to carry out a terrorism attack . . . Doesn't that apply to the ones that carry out the stings? It doesn't take much to pick it apart, does it, or to use some logic here. So it's nothing to do with that, obviously, it's got something to do with what they're already doing on you, and to expand their powers, and ACT on their powers, of knowing all about you, and nothing to do with terrorism.)

In addition, the bill would make it easier for the RCMP to obtain a peace bond to restrict the movements of suspects and extend the amount of time they can be kept in preventative detention.

(A: That's the name now for throwing the key away and no court case comes to light. Again, the use of terminology, something that used to be thought of as a horrific thing that kings and queens did in the past across Europe where they would throw folk in the slammer forever, they didn't see a magistrate or a judge or anybody because they had no power at all. Power is the system, if it slams you inside the hole, never to see the light of day again, often, then that's what they did. Now it's called preventative detention, it doesn't sound so terrible does it? Just put you inside a dungeon with no lighting generally or maybe 4 inches of light, and the water coming through the walls and everything else. I keep saying that nothing has changed, in a psychopathic system, down through the ages, just their terminology, which is more, you know, it's more user-friendly, the terminology.)

Sources have told The Canadian Press the government plans to introduce four changes to clarify or curtail elements of the bill, including an assurance the information-sharing powers do not apply to protesters who demonstrate outside the letter of the law. (A: In other words, they want to make sure that their authorized protesters, the different parties I mentioned earlier, the NGOs, who are authorized, because they're always pushing for cultural changes, to make things worse, you know. So they need them, so they gotta make sure that they put something in there so that they can't be arrested and put in the slammer forever, because they are a tool.)

But the amendments do not remedy several key concerns of opposition MPs (A: Members of Parliament.) and rights advocates.

"The reality is this bill will make us less safe," May told a news conference.

She denounced the legislation as vague, badly drafted and, ultimately, "dangerous garbage."

The NDP (A: National Democratic Party.) and Greens plan to vote against it, while the Liberals intend to support the bill despite their desire to see changes. (A: And so on and so on it goes. They're also talking here about, it says:)

Liberal Sen. Colin Kenny reminded MacKay that he once supported the idea of a committee of security-cleared parliamentarians, who would be entrusted with secret material, as a means of better monitoring spies.

MacKay said his thinking had evolved on the issue, particularly with regard to the danger of leaks.

(A: Now, here's a little thing that ties in with this. You see, Britain had that all through the Cold War, of selected parliamentarians, in generally the House of Lords and I guess in other countries it will be the Senate, that supposedly were given all this data, the secret data. And it was so blatant as to what they really did, these particular individuals, during the Cold War. Because they all got the first dibs because they understand where the government was going to invest money to do with the war, the Cold War, and the missile industry and so on, that they had massive shares in and some of them even owned them. So much so that even documentaries, or even dramas that came out afterwards, they actually showed you the scams that they did. Oh, the Russians of got a better missile, we're all in danger. And this person gets first dibs information in the private secret hearings and he would be off to his company and you know, oh yeah, here’s how to put it across, this will be a faster and better antimissile/missile, that will defeat that one, we'll get them to push that and lobby for that. And so on and so on. Nothing changes. Today it's all the guys who are involved in the secret things for governments, have the massive shares or they're corporate owners too of all the security equipment that spy on you and everything else. Massive money. Anyway this says:)

"For matters of national security, I am concerned about the handling of sensitive information that could literally put a person's life at risk."

MacKay and Blaney praised the Security Intelligence Review Committee, a civilian body that reports to Parliament on CSIS's activities. (A: And so on and so on.)

So it's a done deal. And regardless of what they'll tell you they're simply legitimizing all the things they've been doing all along the way without telling you. But they like things themselves to be, you know, officially legal, so they simply pass a law and make it legal, you see. Remember, before, kidnapping was illegal, but now when they want to kidnap someone, whisk them off to another country and torture them, or even within your own country, it's called extraordinary rendition. Again, this kind of confusing user-friendly, marketing PR that they use, so's that the folk don't get the same terrible connotations of torture and fear and horror, you know. It works awfully well.

And then a little article too, to show you that Canada is the same as every other country, because we're all on the same bus in other words, every country is on the same bus, on the same road, with the same systems. Because it is the same system, with the same bankers lending to governments and so on, and corporate CEOs and that who are all just simply, again, members of the same big banking corporations, regardless of the corporation that they are put in charge of.

huffingtonpost.ca / 03/30/2015

(A: Now, they've been saying this for years. They're only about 30 years behind Britain I think. Because it was never intended that all this money that was to get put in this vast, in a pool of money, by law that you must pay, for the right to work, you know, you must pay, that they're going to use, someone uses you see, and it's all private corporations now that use it, massive money of yours that's now a massive fund and they invest it, and they skim off the gold at the top and you're given the dross at the bottom. Everything has got a real reason and for you they give the good reason. Oh that's good enough for you to believe, here's the real reason. So this article goes on about:)

Lester Pearson was a remarkable Canadian. We first came to know him as a proficient global statesman, skilled in the diplomacy of multilateralism. He assisted at the birth of the United Nations, invented the concept of peace-keeping (A: Again, terminology changes...), and won the Nobel Peace Prize. (A: Well, so did a whole bunch of people who were involved in slaughter across the planet.) In 1963, he became Prime Minister of Canada.

(A: Now, what they're not telling you here is that Lester Pearson was also a member of the big Royal Institute of International Affairs, the Canadian branch of foreign affairs which is the Royal Institute of International Affairs, for globalism, run by top bankers and everything, who pushed communism. And Lester Pearson with some other diplomats from Canada, especially Ontario, were quite honest about their ambition. They said when they were setting up the United Nations, and they worked with Alger Hiss who became a convicted communist eventually. But they were pushing all the communists' globalist agenda. And communism has nothing to do with what you are taught it is, believe you me. Even the followers are conned silly. It was never the intention for the workers to be equal, never ever the intention. It was always for the scientific, an elite intellectually to rule the world, properly, you see, properly. And it has never changed. The techniques are still used although they don't call them communism today. But anyway Lester Pearson was quite blatant about the fact that they were creating the beginnings of the system to create global government, you see. Technically they were traitors of their day, [Alan chuckles.] when you had fought supposed massive enemies and I mean a massive war, World War II and before that World War I, to keep your nation and your culture and your way of life, which is an awful joke, that's what they push in times of war. Look at Britain now. And look at Canada, it's the same thing, we've got masses of debt and all the rest of it. So he's given all these accolades, this Lester Pearson, and this says:)

Five years in that job, Mr. Pearson never once had a majority in Parliament (A: And that shows you who put him in.), but still he led one of the most productive governments in Canadian history.

This past February, we celebrated the 50th anniversary of Canada's Red Maple Leaf Flag -- one of Mr. Pearson's proudest accomplishments. Next year, we'll mark the 50th anniversary of national medicare, another Pearsonian legacy.

And this week, the legislation that originally created the Canada Pension Plan (CPP) will turn 50 years old. It passed the House of Commons on March 29, 1965, was approved in the Senate on April 1 and received Royal Assent on April 3. (A: And that's your April fool's joke, hey, approved in the Senate on April 1st.) The CPP and its Quebec counterpart came into effect on January 1, 1966.

(A: Now, what they'll tell you is an excuse for all things going wrong, but not in this article. But generally what they'll tell you is, well we based all this on the prospect after World War II that gross national product would always go up and up and up and up, you see. And so there would always be lots of money, a massive taxation base with larger wages and larger taxes, to pay for the pensions, to pay those folk who are retiring and whose pensions themselves are going into a big slush fund, that was then privately funded across the world and into investments, you see, with the same idea that every country it was invested in would be on a win-win situation for ever and ever and ever, with this gross national product always going up and up and up and up, something that at no time in history has ever been true for any length or period. So this is the story here, as they applaud all this.)

And this week, the legislation that originally created the Canada Pension Plan (CPP) will turn 50 years old. It passed the House of Commons on March 29, 1965, was approved in the Senate on April 1 and received Royal Assent on April 3. The CPP and its Quebec counterpart came into effect on January 1, 1966.

The stated purpose of the Canada Pension Plan was to ensure all working Canadians have an opportunity to retire in dignity. It builds on basic Old Age Security to achieve greater social justice linked to progress in the economy.

(A: As you know, since that time the dollar has been devalued hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of times, so the purchasing power is nowhere near what that dollar invested 50 years ago is, and it was spent long ago by the way. The big returns come into the corporations that run the slush funds and so on, and a little bit trickles back into where it's supposed to go.)

Established by federal-provincial agreement, the CPP is a mandatory contributory plan into which all employees and employers pay regular premiums. (A: A mandatory contribution plan, you're not allowed to...in other words, don't you worry about it, we'll take the money off you, by law, and you better pay it, if you want to work, or you can't work. And we'll take that money and when you retire you can live in dignity. This says:) That money is invested to generate the returns necessary to cover the plan's benefits. (A: And that was the con.) As such, CPP contributions are essential long-term investments in portable retirement incomes for a large portion of Canadians, supporting their future living standards.

That sounds like common sense today (A: And they go into the reasons why blah blah blah they put it through. And it says:) . . .

The CPP was an historic accomplishment!

But by the 1990s (A: It was before this actually.)-- with longer life expectancies (A: So they're blaming you for it… you see. [Alan chuckles.]), aging demographics and escalating unfunded liabilities -- doubts had arisen about the future soundness of the Canada Pension Plan. Would it run out of money? Was the investment strategy getting adequate returns? Were the benefits supportable? Was the administration strong, efficient and independent? The plan clearly required major renovations to save it, and that would take federal-provincial consensus, which is always hard to get.

As part of a multi-pronged effort to restore fiscal integrity to the Government of Canada, then-federal Finance Minister Paul Martin Jr. decided to tackle the CPP challenge. He found a key ally in the Provincial Treasurer of Alberta, Jim Dinning. Ontario Finance Minister Ernie Eves was also helpful. Together, they built the business case, the social consensus and the national momentum to rejuvenate the CPP.

It's an interesting historical footnote that saving the plan earned strong support across Canada -- except for provincial NDP governments in British Columbia and Saskatchewan, and Stephen Harper and his Reform (now Conservative) Party.

Today, the CPP ranks as one of only a handful of successful public pension plans worldwide. Its administration is competent and cost-effective. It's a distinct fund, independently managed (A: By whom, hey?) according to investment policies that are free from political interference. It has a proven track-record as an international leader in the pension industry, generating world-class rates of return. (A: Well if they get world-class… what are world-class rates of return? Are they talking about part of the world, you know, India? You know, where? It doesn't tell you. I mean, this money that you pay in, is lent out, lent out, lent out, that's what investments are. And massive returns on very high interest lending to other countries and so on and different corporations down through the years, it does generate a lot of money, it is reinvested over and over and over again, and lent out and lent out and lent out. But you who pay it in get very little at the end of it all, the cream always goes off the top.) External actuaries have recently judged the CPP to be sound and secure for another 75 years (the maximum actuaries will go). (A: No, that's a joke, that one.)

Because it's been neglected for the past nine years, the CPP is labouring under one major limitation. The maximum regular benefit a contributor can receive is just over $12,000 per year. (A: Well, that was not bad 50 years ago, right. But were talking about the present day, $12,000 a year.) The average is just more than half that. (A: $6,000 a year.) Those amounts are far from sufficient to ensure retirees can maintain their (A: Here's the purpose:) quality of life, without other significant savings.

But the typical 35-year-old today is saving less than half of what their parents did at that age. (A: That's because the spending power of their bucks, and, [Alan chuckles.] opportunities to work now, with globalization, all the rest of it and deindustrialization, are gone. And yet your dollar is worth darned all.   How many cups of coffee could you buy 50 years ago, huh, for a dollar? How many would you get for a dollar 50 years ago? How many? You can't get any today up here in Canada.) Three-quarters of those working in the private sector don't have access to an employer-sponsored pension plan. (A: That's because they've done away with all their industry and everything else that used to sponsor, again, a pension plan.) And of those who are within 10 years of retirement, fewer than one-third have $100,000 or more set aside to sustain themselves. Another third have no retirement savings at all.

Is this a big shock, for all the experts? Is it really? Oh, come on. This article is a joke! Because as I say, in Britain 30 years ago they were saying these pension plans and all that are a big, big racket for those who do all the investing and lending out and then they get the returns and so much back, very little back. It was never intended to… Everything, again, has, you know, a good reason and then it has, for the insiders, the real reason. But there's just an article there just to show you the cons that go on. And then within Canada, where it's going to tell you that, you know, you'll be getting about $6000 a year, after paying into this pension plan for 40 years or more. And they've got the age moved up on the old-age, retirement age and everything else, right, because they would rather you die before you claim it. Argh.

Anyway:

Canada to launch airstrikes against ISIS in Syria 'within days'
torontosun.com / April 02, 2015

Canada will begin launching airstrikes against ISIS (A: That's just Al Qaeda that was funded by the West to overthrow all the countries in the Middle East.) in Syria "within days," the commander of Joint Task Force Iraq says.

Brig.-Gen. Daniel Constable declined to give a specific date, but said the final details are being put into place before the Canadian military begins expanding its operation from Iraq into Syria.

"I think we're going to be good to go in reasonable short order," (A: Well, that's very reassuring, that should be in a movie, that.) Constable told a media briefing Thursday morning.

"The allies are excited about us getting into Syria as well because of our capabilities." (A: I love these terms they use. It's like saying this country is going to invade. Did you give authorization? No, no. You [Alan chuckles.] get no authorization for anything, but you are put down as responsible for it too.)

On Monday, the House of Commons passed the Conservatives' motion to extend Canada's six-month mission against ISIS in Iraq for a year and expand operations to neighbouring Syria.

Now, we've got to go back a little bit here. If you remember 2001, and before 2001, the group that became the politicians during that era belonged also to the private group called the Project for a New American Century. George Bush and all the rest of them, Rumsfeld, Cheney, etc. etc., they all belong to this group, that listed in the 1990s the countries they wanted to take out across the Middle East. They were called neocons, because they were in league with Israel. And Israel came out with the same list. They wanted Iraq taken out. They wanted Libya taken out. They wanted Iran taken out, Syria taken out. They wanted all those countries taken out. Then General Wesley Clark came out and said the same thing on a live interview on television, it's probably up on YouTube somewhere. So they were trying to use their Al Qaeda bunch to do it, you see. But because enough people who watched this understood that Al Qaeda was being armed, through Qatar, now they call it Cutter for some reason but it was called Qatar, and that was the base that all the money and the arms to arm them all were coming into from the West. And because they were complaining about that, oh a breakaway group, which no, it's the same group and now they're called ISIS. Which by the way, the groups themselves don't call themselves ISIS, it's for your benefit to believe it is so.

And they initially started attacking Syria, because the human cry from the West at that time, in Israel and the States and Britain, everywhere, we've got to get rid of Assad. But they got bogged down, they couldn't take Syria and get rid of Assad. So than the US is going to get more involved with troops and all the rest of it, and then Putin of Russia stepped in as the spokesman for, again, the world community and says, hey, this is the old colonial empiricism going on here, expansion. And that didn't sound good, and the whole world went kind of, you know, one of these quiet guilty, you know, moods, and stepped back. So rather than us getting involved physically with troops they created the ISIS to attack instead, you see, and it got bogged down. But now that ISIS couldn't get rid of Assad they're back to the same rhetoric, we've got to get rid of Assad.

Because everybody on that list has to be taken out. It's very simple. They never change their tunes. Never, never. And so really, from Gulf War One the same agenda has been going on. Because this group, created privately a long time ago in London, England, that puts its members into parliaments and many have been prime ministers and so on, and in the States they are the same group that puts the members in to become presidents, for generations, have their world agenda there, and they own the media, and they are still on the go to do the same old things. So whenever they have a plan they never back out of the plan. You might think they'll delay it for a while or change it. No, no, they go back to it, always get back to it. You see.

So anyway, Canada is involved too, so there's going to be more blowback from this. And again too, they know darn well once they start bombing in Syria, and they're hoping for it by the way. I'm sure agencies do this, they'll hope for it, blowback, because then it can then further the agenda against them… Syria is the enemy. And there will be folk from Syria living in Canada perhaps, or elsewhere around the world, that will get really ticked off. That's the human response if your old homeland is attacked, you get ticked off. This is how they… This is why they created multiculturalism. They flooded Britain with immigration from the 60s in some places then, and in the 70s it was stepped up, and in the 80s again, whoof. So you had all the folk inside of your country from the countries that you were going to attack down the road in the future. That way you can create martial law across all the countries, and the general population, even the traditional population, say, of Britain would also have to go under the scrutiny, you couldn't make exceptions and say, well you're, you know, British, blah, blah, blah, for many generations. So that's how you bring in martial law across everywhere. If you didn't have them all in the country, people who could stand up and say, hey that's our old homeland you're attacking, you couldn't pass totalitarian laws across the whole nation. You couldn't do it. It's a chessboard, you see.

So anyway, it's all part of the art of war, you see, and the techniques involved for long-term agendas, that the public are never ever given access to. An article tonight too is about you. You. Because they're always going to modify your behavior. You are the product of the culture industry. Your education, which is in bed by the way with the culture industry, everything must all work together to create the you that they want, with the behavior that they want, and the opinions that they want, for the era that you're in and so on. But there's an article here to do with behavioral Nudge Squad from the White House.

Here Comes the White House's Behavioral 'Nudge Squad' theblaze.com / Jul. 30, 2013 / Becket Adams

(A: Now, this is what they have in Britain already, they've had it for years. It's behavioral scientists that work with the culture industry to give you almost subconscious nudges on what to do, what to think, how to behave, and what to believe. You are the ultimate creation of what they give you, what they feed you. It says here that:)

The U.S. government is looking to recruit members for what some are calling a "Behavioral Insights Team," a panel of experts (A: And you have been trained that experts must be always right, and real and, you know, expert at what they do. That's why they're called experts, right?) that will study human behavior so as to "design public policies that work better (A: Now, this is through public relations companies, this is what they'll tell you. Now remember, public relations is propaganda agencies, that's where 'public relations' came from. Bernays used 'propaganda', he thought it was the right term to use and he liked it. And 'public relations', again, came out later because it sounded more, again, user-friendly, more, more nice, rather than lying to you, for a goal that you wouldn't even understand. So…) . . . "design public policies that work better, cost less, and help people to achieve their goals," (A: To help people achieve their goals. It's good to be brainwashed, achieve your goals that, you know...) according to a document describing the program. (A: And I'll put the links up for that too. Actually it's on this article anyway, you can see it yourself.)

"The federal government is currently creating a new team that will help build federal capacity to experiment with these approaches, and to scale behavioral interventions that have been rigorously evaluated, using, where possible, randomized controlled trials," the document reads. (A: So they've already used all these trials in other work. Actually they've been using it for... your whole life long.)

"The team will be staffed by 4-5 experts in behavioral science and experimental design and evaluation," it adds.

FoxNews.com was the first to obtain and report on the White House's "Behavioral Insights Team" memo.

The document praises British Prime Minister David Cameron for implementing a similar "behavioral insights" (A: It's actually called behavioral modification over there. That's what it is, you see.) team in the U.K., claiming the group has advanced the priorities of the British government while also saving it at least £1 billion within the next five years. (A: Well, that will pay, you know, .000000000% of this year's interest that they owe on loans.)

The document also shows the White House is already coordinating similar programs with federal agencies including the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Agriculture.

(A: And they go on and tell you all the different agencies that they're working this through.)
“We are already working with over a dozen federal departments and agencies on newly-designed behavioral insights projects,” the document reads, “including the Department of Labor, Department of Health and Human Services, Department of Education (A: Naturally, they've always done it through education.), Veterans Administration, Department of Treasury, Social Security Administration, Department of Housing and Urban Development, and the United States Department of Agriculture.”

Maya Shankar, a White House senior adviser on social and behavioral sciences, emailed the document to a university professor requesting he distribute it to people interested in applying for the gig. (A: Oh, it's just a gig for them, right.)

The document goes on to list the job responsibilities for the “central team”:

(A: Now, believe you me, when they give something out for public consumption you're only seeing...there's always two things given out. One is the one for public consumption, and there's always the one for the agencies themselves, that's totally different. So this is the user-friendly one.)

•Build Capacity: Work with a broad range of federal agencies to identify new program areas that could benefit from the application of behavioral insights. (A: What about using it on the politicians themselves, and test them for psychopathy. That would help us all.) Help to design, implement, and test the relevant interventions using rigorous experimental methods. (A: Oh, so they use rigorous experimental methods on you.)

•Enhance Capacity: (A: That sounds good, that's user-friendly.) Provide conceptual and technical support to agencies with specific behavioral insights efforts already underway.

•Convene: Lead a multi-agency “community of practice” to identify and share promising practices and common challenges.

•Create and Provide Resources: Generate tutorials and other “how to” documents to help accelerate these efforts within agencies. (A: Teachers get these things all the time, on how to brainwash the children, they call them toolkits.) Manage online library of relevant documents and media.

•Help inspire new ideas: Work with external partners to identify research findings that can inform policy and practice.

However, some are leery of the fed’s new initiative; (A: No kidding hey!)

“Such policies — which encourage behavior subtly rather than outright require it — have come to be known as ‘nudges,’” FoxNews.com notes. (A: Remember Sunstein?)

The term comes from the 2008 book titled “Nudge” by Cass Sunstein and Chicago Booth School of Business professor Richard Thaler. Sunstein was the Obama administration’s regulations czar and is married to Samantha Power, Obama’s new pick for US ambassador to the UN. (A: Naturally, you know.)

(A: Now, Cass Sunstein did not invent nudge. You've been getting this your whole life long, these nudges, through regular television shows, through school and different ways. They used to use peer group pressure because the majority of the public, the mass, will encourage the person who's going to be a bit different to go along with them, with all their opinions and everything else. That's old news actually. But they also do it through your Internet, oh people who liked this also liked that, you know. And then you help them with all the data, you know, folk who like this, tick this off, like this, dislike this. And you know, yeah, [Alan chuckles.] rats in the laboratory, and most folk are and they don't know it.)

Cass Sunstein, former Director of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs at the Office of Management and Budget.

And associating the fed’s new “behavior insight” initiative with the term “nudge” isn’t too far off.

Indeed, as one professor who received the “Behavioral Insights Team” email wrote in an email to his colleagues: “Anyone interested in working for the White House in a ‘nudge’ squad? The UK has one and it’s been extraordinarily successful.”

“I am very skeptical of a team promoting nudge policies,” Utah State University professor Michael Thomas told FoxNews.com.

“Ultimately, nudging … assumes a small group of people in government know better about choices than the individuals making them,” he added. (A: Of course they do because they want you to be a little clone, through brainwashing, and use all kinds of techniques on you. And most folk, again, will go along with the mass because they all want to be the same. And they understand all of this.)

Of course, he continued, the government doesn’t always get it right.

Dan Cruz, spokesman for the U.S. General Services Administration weighed in on the issue:

As part of the Administration’s ongoing eforts to promote efficiency and savings (A: Ha. Ha.), GSA is considering adding some expertise from academia in the area of program efficiency and evaluation under its Performance Improvement Council.

Here’s the “Behavioral Insights Team” pitch:

And I'll put the link up to it as well. And that's what it is, this is the exoteric pitch they give you, for you to understand how it's all going to be put on you. It's already getting used on you, all the time, and many… I could do 100 hours on it quite easily.

So you see, you understand, the greatest enemy of any mass system run by psychopaths is the person who can think for themselves, who hasn't been critically wounded mentally through growing up and life experiences. That's the greatest threat they have of all, so much so that Bertrand Russell who helped design the system that you're now living through today, and the whole degradation of the culture that you were to get brought through on the way, and the changing of all the gender stuff, all that was 50 years ago on their plan, actually longer than that, by people who are now dead. Long-term strategy planning and implementation, using all these techniques that they're claiming are new sciences. Which is a big joke.

So remember, you are a product of it to an extent. When you see people who will not listen, can't listen, who are completely at odds with everything you say, it's because the conditioning, they're nudging and all their conditioning work together to produce what you're looking at, that person. Perfect conditioning. But they themselves think they have made their own mind up on everything. That's how beautiful it all is. It's fascinating actually.

But anyway, that's just a little bit of the news. Don't panic over it. Don't cripple yourself by sweating over it. If you are in charge of your own mind you will see through all these things yourselves. And because of that you do have a firewall on your mind. Most folk don't. For them the mind has no firewall. It's up to you. And for those who can handle it, you can dig deeper. Don't go fanatically crazy digging into it forever and ever until you're like a manic-depressive. Simply take what you can handle at a time, at a time, and do a lot of thinking.

Believe it or not, thinking requires something called, which is really taboo, which is why they don't give it to you these days, they don't like it because it helps you along. It's called silence. Turn everything else off. All the data you want to think about is in your mind already, you go over it and peruse it in your mind. Your mind is awfully good at sorting and categorizing things out for you, cataloguing things. So use your mind. What a gift it is to have a mind. Why do you think there are so many powers in the world all trying to destroy it and rob you of your mind? Think about that.

Anyway, from Hamish and myself, from a still wintery northern Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on April 12, 2015. You know, reality is something we all take for granted, because you're trained to take it for granted, and it's a natural thing too. So you can really augment the natural inclinations of people by training them to believe that the reality that they're are born into is a natural system. Every country in the world uses the same techniques because we're a global society today. And academia, that deals with the creation of future reality for the cultural industry, in combination with them in fact, work hard to make sure that you're given a reality.

But as I say, we take it for granted, reality. And when you're young, it's well understood by those who study us all the time, and there's lots of them, that you take it for granted. You feel healthy, you've got some vitality, and you have many drives and so on at the peak. You don't step back and say, well what is this reality, or, why are things a bit wrong? Except some people do and they often go into self-destruct mode because they can see through the basic cons that go on around them, and then to them and everyone else as well. So simply understanding that there are cons going on doesn't enable you to cope with it. You have to understand the whys of it all. Because it's never just one why, there's many levels of the why. So reality, which you take for granted, is like your legs when you're young. If you lose those legs, they're gone. Things you took for granted are gone and your whole reality is going to change. Your hopes, aspirations, everything is going to crumble completely and you have to readapt to another reality without your legs. Well, it's the same thing with the truth of all kinds.

Back in the 80s, for those who don't know it, our reality of course has always been managed by those in charge and often it's not the governments at all. In fact, the governments are enablers, to an extent, of the big organizations that run the world's finances, corporations and so on, all the big clubs that you hear about, the big private organizations they're always coming up with, philanthropy and sponsoring and funding big nongovernmental organization demonstration and protest groups and so on, and they get the laws passed they wants to get passed and the government is only too happy to oblige. Because many of the top leaders are always, by the way, and in every party, doesn't make any difference, they belong to the same private organizations with their big global agendas. So you have to understand that in the information warfare which they talked about in the 80s, they mentioned copiously that, and the big think tanks that work for the elite of the day and the present talked about the need to prepare for the coming information age. And by that they went on to talk about ways to combat all the other information that was… it was contrary to the agendas the big elites had already laid out for the world and for all of us. So they talked about warfare of information. And we're in it today.

The big boys don't sit back, ever, in any generation in history and wait for things to happen. They've always had spies down through the centuries, all governments use them, locally, everywhere in fact, within their own countries not just abroad, and they gather all the data to see how the public are reacting to massive taxation or prolonged warfare and recruitment of all the young guys who would never come back. That's how it used to be often; in fact, in centuries gone by they were written off and some of them weren't even transported back home when the wars were over, in previous centuries. So we are basically the cannon fodder for big global private interests and those who control the world system.

It all starts of course with the control of the first con job which is money. They always make sure, since everyone's going to run on money, that's governments and all the people underneath it, right down to the population, they make sure to introduce the system of money managed at the top by themselves. And it's true enough, they can make money out of thin air, or give you some tokens for it, even gold is a token, in the past. A token is something that represents something else. It's a token, like a token of friendship, here's a little whatever it happens to be, a little gift of something. But a token of money is simply something they make sure is going to be accepted as a means of exchange. And they always at the top control the purchasing power, at any time and all times, of that particular token be it coin, paper, or blips on a computer screen. And everyone beneath that is taught that it's all kind of natural, they don't look into too deeply because it will terrify you and you won't understand it and experts must deal with it. That's the common theme of course, is that experts must deal with everything. And if you're not in that class of experts and up in those high academic levels then you have no right to really talk about anything at all. And you get hammered, rather severely, by the powers who have given themselves the authority over you to talk about these things.

Now, I won't reiterate tonight all the talks I've given over the years on how reality is encouraged, created and so on. Go into my website .com and you'll find in the archive section thousands of talks on this, with big organizations involved. Lots of information is put out by themselves from their own sources, and that's what you must always go by, and just start to understand that you're not living in some new freer age. Which every generation is told they're freer, you know. Every single generation is taught that, that they're the freest generation that's ever come along. And they're used like crazy, they work hard, they pay all their taxes. It keeps all the big machinery of the system in place.

And you forget too that much of the money that you pay in taxes goes to corporate welfare, big corporations with their massive agendas, and roads and water supplies across the world and so on, for private interests, who get big massive free grants from governments. They say, oh it's too costly to implement ourselves so we need government aid. And they constantly get grants for it. You'll find in centuries gone by it was generally the big arms manufacturers that were the main beneficiaries of it; they still are of course. But at the same time, we've moved into this transition age where the big corporations of armaments and all of the industries that are involved in it, including all of the security, and homeland security, and internal security, and computerization, they're all involved in the same thing today. And again, even they talked about the end of their sales in a peaceful world, what would they do? They'd have to go into internal security and therefore, just like the wars in the past, which were often sparked off by too many dogs in the fight, where they had big corporate agendas, big corporate interests, so they would make things happen, they could spark off things at all times, real or imaginary. And they used imagination quite often too, even with the Royal Institute of International Affairs and that Milner group that preceded it, that eventually became the Royal Institute of International Affairs. They actually had their own reporters who would claim there were wars abroad, when there weren't any at all. Or, they would get little mercenary parties to invade other countries, like South Africa and claim that the Boers were responsible for it, then the government would send in your military that you pay for and the corporations, and would take over all the resources. Nothing has changed.

Resource wars are phenomenally huge and they're constantly at the top talking about the future of the corporation, survival of the Corporation, all corporations. That's why all corporations are tied together, very tightly, much tighter than what you're taught to think as being independent of each other. In fact, many of the top CEOs have worked with the heads of other big corporations. And they also belong to these big private organizations like the CFR, which is a branch of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, all private organizations that you do not vote on but who have incredible clout. Because they put their own members in as prime ministers and presidents across the world. So they don't need to get everybody else down below in the political arena into the membership, they just need the ones at the top. Therefore, their big agendas always go as planned.

But just like nations, in the old days, we were taught, we were taught, I should say, first and foremost, made sure of their own survivability, regardless of circumstances, at the government level. You'll find it's the same thing with the big private corporations. And, they plan for 100 years sometimes in the future, sometimes even beyond that. They're always churning out their documents at the big global meetings on the next 100 years, the next 50 years and so on, 50 year plans, 100 year plans, five year, 10 year, for different parts of their own agendas. And let's be honest too, it's awfully helpful, in days gone by, and centuries gone by, when you could have global warfare on the go. Because if you're in the armaments business it was awfully good to have these things going on. So government has always been completely intertwined with private interests of the ruling elite.

Today we've got a global ruling elite and they still will use the national card when it suits them because they want the population always to back them. But at the same time too, they're going full scale for the global dominance of the whole planet, for the same private interests. Therefore, they always train every generation, and by that I really mean by every three or four years in kindergarten onwards are updated for what they are going to see in their lifetime and accept as a normal reality. That way there's a continuity, there's no break in the big agendas that they have there.

That's why there's so many behavioral psychologists, big associations of them, neuroscientists and so on, all working together at the very top, with government too and all government agencies by the way, helping set up the training for all government agencies. They have their own curriculums of course for all departments, even social workers, all put out by people way above them, that really aren't even involved in that particular area but they make sure that the workers have their own agendas to go out and implement upon the general populations. So those involved at low level don't even have to know the real intentions of what's really behind it, or the fact that they're being manipulated too. And it helps too when you give them a good paycheck, they tend not to look into these things, they simply do what they're told and they'll tell you, I was only doing my job, if things go sour.

With most people their indoctrination is perfect. They've all been given the same education, which is indoctrination, according to your class system. You watch the same movies and so on, you all chat about the same things, and you bounce off your sanity – as I've mentioned many times – by bouncing things off your peer group in conversation, different topics, and if they have the same opinion on something, or even a slight variation, that's all allowed of course, a slight variation, this or that, you're given two choices on everything, on what you want to believe in it, then you think you're quite sane, etc. It's a form of a blinder. It's like blinders or blinkers they call them on a horse. It's meant to see ahead and not to the sides; it's peripheral vision is blocked so it doesn't get distracted. And you're just the same, you see, you've been trained that way... Don't think for yourself, whatever you do, and reason for yourself, or even question things as they are presented to you. Simply regurgitate and go on the road ahead, which is all laid out for you to go through, your entire life on for that matter. And it was awfully, awfully successful.

Therefore, the information warfare age you've got so much information, and disinformation, and it becomes a bewildering mass of confusion for many, many people. Therefore they go into the staid things. The staid things are the things which are authorized, look into this, read the regular news, and believe it, and leave it to the experts and believe what they say. Remember too that Bertrand Russell, who created a lot of the culture, most, with this big massive world think tank that he was put in charge of along with the Macy group, the Frankfurt school and other ones, by the president of the United States by the way and with the government of Britain after World War II. They helped design the whole culture including all the massive changes which have happened since then culturally and in all different areas. They have the big reasons for all of the changes and they have worked awfully, awfully well. Therefore, the machinery of making your reality is all working in concert to make sure it works awfully well for those who designed it, and the particular elite.

Russell said himself that they would train, we're going to train, and they were doing it back in the 40s and 50s, even through radio. He said, we'll train the people to only believe what experts tell them. And that's the first great pitfall because they can bring out any dude, they bring out experts in every single topic. And that's what they're called… As soon as you hear the word now, expert, you think they really are expert in their field. And he could be an absolute idiot of course, it does make any difference, you simply dress them up as an expert. And then you'll parrot what they say. So people tend to parrot what they're given as opposed to thinking through, reason, and investigate for themselves and come to their own conclusions. In this age of mass information and mass information warfare people don't have the time to go into everything. That's why it's even easier for elite group, knowing your psychology, to manage us all. It's much easier in fact than ever before. So you don't have to know an awful lot, except wake up to the facts that the human race has always been managed by those in power.

In ancient times it was very simple. People had big families often within tribes. Sometimes one big family would be more psychopathic than others and they would get together, get the swords out and kill everybody else around them, or, kill enough to terrify the rest and say we're now the leaders of the pack. That was simple then. But they always ran the danger, without a money system, of the rest of the people in the tribe of just saying we've had enough, we're overthrowing you. So in comes the money and then you can hire as many mercenaries, called soldiers of course, as you want. And once that happens you can keep these dynasties going forever and ever.

And it's no different in royalty, or the royalty of the business Corporation world, or banking world or whatever, because they are royalties in their own right, and they rule. If they rule they are royalty, you see. They don't have to go and say, let's put this to the public and hear what they want. No, they don't care what you want. Although they're awfully good at employing big think tanks to work very well. Again, the experts. And with all their ongoing studies on us, because we're the most studied species on the planet, humanity. Not the ant or the bee, we are. And they find out how to keep us going forever in a particular state of reality that's been given to us, without much doing on our part at all, we simply think it's all quite natural. And when you think it's natural, you cause as less fuss as possible for those in charge, regardless of the plans they have for you which are often pretty well nefarious at times too.

I'd have to say that today, and it's very sad indeed, the techniques are so perfect and the implementation of propaganda is so perfect, you're trained to believe the propagandist too, which is pretty well perfect for most folk. And techniques that used to be seen through in the past, of who is really behind this fracas in India during the British Empire days and so on, or behind this African fracas, etc., were a bit easier to see for some people. For some. For the masses, no, because very few of them had any education way back then when Britain first went in. But other folk who were getting into the middle classes, who had an education of some kind, could also connect the dots in history and see what was happening in the present and say, that's awfully similar to what happened back in... whenever, in Machiavelli's various days of fantastic exposé of propaganda, in the form of resume to an extent to Kings and Queens.

But you always find there are so many dogs in the fight today in a global structure, it's difficult to find out who's really behind it, on the superficial level. If you go into much deeper and really dig you'll find the dots. And there's an old saying, if you can connect the money… and the plans to extract more money through various means, remember it can be minerals, resources, whatever it happens to be, oil, you name it, there's always a lot of dogs in the fight. And there's nothing you can take in the geopolitical arena at face value.

I've mentioned many times about the Lord Alfred Milner group, a private organization, incredibly wealthy, top bankers and their sons and so on, in Britain at the time, who were involved in the machinations of getting wars going abroad to take over the resources and wealth of other nations, Africa, India and other countries across the world. They became the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the private organization. Again, you don't vote for them. This is the same organization that created the American branch, the CFR, the Council on Foreign Relations, to take over from Britain. Because Britain at the time, the taxpayers had borne the brunt of all the wars that had been going on for such a long time, especially since the Bank of England was created, then after Rothschild took it over too then it was just war after war, because they could always use the people to pay taxes to pay for all the loans that the government got from the big Rothschild bank and so on. And you're the guarantor, if you were peasants, to pay off the loans. It's always been the same since. Nothing's changed since that time.

So the creation of a central banking system was essential to getting ongoing wars financed through the tax base, on behalf of the big private interests that have their own goals, and the real goals for the wars. And during the 19th century all the way through into the 20th century pretty well all wars were of a geopolitical nature with too many dogs in the fight, to muddy the waters as to why they simply seem to spark off. Nothing simply sparks off. It takes a lot of planning to get wars underway. It takes poverty in some countries to get wars started because if you're going to starve to death... here's your choices, starve to death or fight. And those who want the wars to start can often bring down a country economically to make sure that they'll start fighting, because they have their goals too. So there's lots of dogs in the fight in everything that you're told about.

Tonight I'll just touch on a few things briefly because, as I say, you could write books on every topic I bring up. As I say, most folk today, especially today, don't have the time in their personal lives to even read books anymore. They don't. Back in the 80s and the 90s they did study after study to find how many people were reading books and they kept diminishing up to the present time. In the 80s and 90s people were more conditioned in their spare time by tapes, documentary tapes and so on, of which were audio, and the VHS of course. So they became more visually orientated. Where one person could be saying the same things he said on the tape, but people would think it's more authoritative if they could see the person talking at the same time. They were losing their ability to simply listen.

Today most folk are completely orientated towards the visual. And because of that it's much easier to control them in fact. Because when you're reading a book, for instance, your mind comes into play when you're reading that book. There's no one going ahead at a rapid pace as you do on, say, a video or a CD or DVD, or an audio for that matter. You can stop after reading a line or two and think about it. So you participate in what you're reading and to the truth of it or the fallacies of it, etc. You had more time as well because to read takes some time of doing nothing else, no distractions. And that's awfully important. When the cartoon age really got going big time they kept bringing down the time for attention, the attention span down until it's about two or three seconds, if the child looks away from his hypnotic stare he'll miss the rest of the plot, it's so quick in how it changes, and that takes it down. Their attention span is even lower today than ever before.

So the big boys have done study after study after study, all the time, on how things affect us. There's an old saying in the Council on Foreign Relations, or the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the same organization, the Trilateral Commission, the same bunch, and a whole plethora, again, of subgroups underneath them all specialized in their own particular areas of managing us. But they've done so many studies on us that there's nothing that they really don't know on how things are working for those who control at any particular time. Therefore, reality, as it is presented to you, doesn't have to be true. Even news doesn't have to be true, by law, even. That was a Supreme Court decision in the US with a particular case a few years ago, where journalists actually were employed to do a documentary on genetically modified food. I think it involved Monsanto and other big companies. They were given the free reign to go their own way, that was part of their contract. But when they brought it out the big corporations pushed on the media outlet so hard that they literally fired and terminated the contract of the journalists. And the journalists said, that we were going to tell the truth and just the facts. But that's not allowed anymore. And it went all the way to the Supreme Court and the judge said, truth does not have to be the news, the news does not have to be the truth. There's no law that says news must be the truth.

Now, getting back to geopolitics and the history of huge finance and the controlling factors involved in it, and interference with countries to get the appearance of someone else creating mayhem abroad somewhere. It's perfected too. It's been the same for hundreds of years. Your country, since you're taught it's the best one in the world, every nation is taught that, of course you must believe it's always in the right. And politicians will get on indignantly to encourage the spread of warfare amongst the public. The warfare mentality, oh we must go and get those… sods, you know. It works awfully well. It hasn't changed really.

But today it's even better, again, with the media techniques involved, and the concert of the media. They're all in concert together to give the same information; that's the mainstream. I've gone through stories before from, again, even the mainstream who talked about the creation of, say, the Rockefeller studies a long time ago to find out how many newspapers could control the whole US. How many main ones would it take? Because the rest of them copy the main stream, the big ones, you see, even your local ones copy them. They talked about 30 would do it. 30 main ones, then they would have separate magazines, like Harpers and different ones for segments of the managing of society, the upper middle classes or middle classes, within government and civil service itself. Because you must always make sure that you control what information is given.

And information, again, doesn't mean truth. It's information. Someone tells you that he's been kidnapped by space aliens. You know, that's information. It doesn't mean it's the truth, you see. It's information. All things are. Even lies are still information, you're sharing information. Spies do it all the time. Governments do it all the time. Therefore you have to change the way that you think, and you've been taught to think about your reality, again something you've been trained and you do naturally as well, you take it for granted without questioning it. Truth today, it's hard to find because of the incredible information age. And naturally that age must be dominated by those who cause confusion, in order to keep you in confusion so you turn right back to the experts' opinions. And remember too, because something is put over in a fantastically imaginative way to you it doesn't mean it's true either. It might grab your imagination and carry you off, it does not mean it's true. That's another technique that's used on people, a very well understood technique too.

But the big organizations that at least came out openly, more openly, not quite openly but more openly, in the 1800s, they all merged together. They were all separate parts, really, of the same, again, secretive organization. They came out into the open and even had the Royal charter, such as the Royal Institute of International Affairs/Council on Foreign Relations. They came from groups who were involved, in the past, of geopolitical interference, the creation of wars. And they had their own personal historian I've talked about many times who wrote books on it, who are all for it naturally, that agenda, that an elite should rule the world. And academia, on their behalf, they would help rule and manage the people, and with the big money makers at the top, the cunning people, today we call them psychopaths, who are in charge. They would be the Masters. Nothing's changed. And they had to get the media all on board together by controlling as much of the media and big chains as possible, to give the same messages all in concert together.

You'll find that when, for instance, Britain, in the British Empire days, also had mercenary forces, private mercenary forces. In fact, they had one through the 20th century called Keeny Meeny, that was the name they used for it, where guys would, mercenaries really, drawn from Special Forces, would… They would be on higher basically by this Corporation, to the biggest bidder as long as they fell in line with the interests of the ruling elite of Britain. They couldn't use the regular army, at least initially, for a lot of things because you could never get public opinion to back up some big gold or diamond industry based in London to take over Sierra Leone, for instance. So you would use the private companies to do it and claim that you didn't know who they were, at least your national government would claim that, or it was independent of them, it wasn't their doing. And that's standard business policy, still is today. And when the US had to take over because the British public were taxed into the grave then, and that was part of the policy from the private organization that ran Britain, that the US tax burden would be put to good use and take over from Britain. And the US has been leading it ever since, really since the end of World War I, and definitely the period in between up to World War II, and took off completely after World War II. And it's the same corporations that run both countries basically.

But if we look into what's happening abroad and the little bits of news you get out, that simply are put to you as black and white things, black and white stories, here's the truth, here's the good guys, here's the bad guys. You have to look much, much deeper because there's nothing ever as clear as they make it out to be. Public opinion is the first thing that must be used in any big move to finance the big private interests, and of course the public are told little about the involvement of private interests. One of the biggest, really, admissions of that was when the US in Afghanistan and then Iraq had the big corporations involved that were given all the contracts, military contracts and so-called reconstruction contracts, that were to do with taking over the oil industries in those countries, in Iraq, and I think even the water supplies, everything.

But you'll find too they must have mercenary organizations at work. One of the corporations they use, one of them in the US, because there's a few, apart from the other ones too that are involved in the CIA creating wars and so on, you'll find that Blackwater, as it used to be called, is one of the big ones. It's still on the go. And each time the public start to get to know who they are and they get bad press they changed their name. But here's an article here and it says…

Former Blackwater (Alan: ... the mercenary organization, a big corporation, with fingers in many pies, apart from the hiring of mercenaries.)
gets rich as Afghan drug production hits record high theguardian.com / Spencer Ackerman / 31 March 2015

Opium poppy cultivation is up in Afghanistan despite the infamous mercenary firm formerly known as Blackwater being paid $569m by the Pentagon to stop it. (A: It's not meant to be stopped. And because we're given so much information folk just... It's like looking at the fast frames just flying past you that made up an old movie reel. You've got to look at each one independently to find out what they're actually doing if you really want to know the whole thing, each frame.)

An Afghan farmer harvests in an opium poppy field in Jalalabad, Afghanistan. (A: And remember, when Bush Junior was in charge of the neocons in the States and they went into Afghanistan, the first thing that they did was to allow the production, again, and the growing of poppy for opium. And it's just been a fantastic thing ever since for the big corporations that run it. Many of the big popular organizations, that are well-known organizations, that you know today, including the top banks, are involved in the drug money, as you know.)

In a war full of failures, the US counternarcotics mission in Afghanistan stands out: opiate production has climbed steadily over recent years to reach record-high levels last year.

Yet one clear winner in the anti-drug effort is not the Afghan people, but the infamous mercenary company formerly known as Blackwater.

Statistics released on Tuesday reveal that the rebranded private security firm, known since 2011 as Academi, reaped over a quarter billion dollars from the futile Defense Department push to eradicate Afghan narcotics, some 21% of the $1.5 bn in contracting money the Pentagon has devoted to the job since 2002.

The company is the second biggest beneficiary of counternarcotics largesse in Afghanistan. Only the defense giant Northrop Grumman edged it out, with $325m.

According to the US inspector general for Afghanistan “reconstruction” (A: That's what they call this department.), the $309m Academi got from US taxpayers paid for “training, equipment, and logistical support” to Afghan forces conducting counternarcotics, such as “the Afghan National Interdiction Unit, the Ministry of Interior, and the Afghan Border Police”.

Far from eradicating the deep-rooted opiate trade, US counternarcotics efforts have proven useless, according to a series of recent official inquiries. Other aspects of the billions that the US has poured into Afghanistan over the last 13 years of war have even contributed to the opium boom. (A: No kidding, eh.)

In December, the United Nations reported a 60% growth in Afghan land used for opium poppy cultivation since 2011, up to 209,000 hectares. The estimated $3bn value of Afghan heroin and morphine represents some 15% of Afghan GDP.

“Given the growth in opium poppy cultivation, it must be assumed that the Taliban’s income from the illegal trade in narcotics has remained an important factor in generating assets for the group,” the United Nations reported. (A: Well, naturally it has.)

That same month, the US inspector general for Afghanistan warned that the opium trade would surely rise as international aid money flees the country with the winding down of the war. (A: So war is great for busines. The opium trade will rise as the international aid money flees the country with the winding down of the war.) Yet the inspector general also noted that US reconstruction projects, particularly those devoted to “improved irrigation, (A: The usual rubbish.) roads, and agricultural assistance” were probably leading to the explosion in opium cultivation. (A: Because these are sidelines. Remember Halliburton in Afghanistan, this massive, giant Corporation, that the Federal Reserve even printed up millions, maybe even billions of dollars, and just gave it to them, to buy off warlords and everything else and make sure the big projects got underway, to grab the resources.)

“Affordable deep-well technology turned 200,000 hectares of desert in southwestern Afghanistan into arable land over the past decade,” the inspector general found, concluding that “much of this newly arable land is dedicated to opium cultivation”. (A: Well, they knew that before they started. To grow the poppy, the opium poppy, you need a salty water, slight salt, not too much but enough, and Afghanistan is rich in that, in salt water, and that's why it grows so well there, not just the heat. So they know all this stuff.)

Academi and its former Blackwater incarnation have an infamous history in Afghanistan. It once set up shell companies to disguise its business practices (A: That's what all the corporations do.), according to a Senate report, so that its contracts would be unimpeded by company employees' killings of Iraqi and Afghan civilians. (A: There's nothing clean in warfare or the mercenary business. And it's always money behind it. And massive profits. And big agendas, for profits, on behalf of big corporations, huge corporations.)

Blackwater's founder, Erik Prince, sold the company – then renamed "Xe" (A: They renamed it 'Xe' after 'Blackwater', and now it's the 'Academi'.) – in 2010. Under new ownership, the firm occasionally gestures toward emphasizing its original business training military and police personnel, but it has never quite divested itself of its security contracting business.

In 2010, Blackwater was one of a group of firms selected by the State Department for its $10bn contract to protect its diplomats worldwide (A: $10 billion.), precisely the mission Blackwater performed when its agents opened fire on Iraqi civilians at Baghdad's Nisour Square in 2007 and turned the company into the ugly face of private security. The following year, the firm's newly installed CEO pledged, "We're not backing away from security services."   (A: [Alan laughing.] …mercenary work, you know.)

A spokesman for Academi's parent company, the Constellis Group, said that the current firm had separated itself from its Blackwater ancestry.

"When the ownership of Constellis Group purchased our Moyock, N.C. training facility in 2010, Blackwater as the world knew it ceased to exist," said spokesman Tom McCuin.

"Since then, the new ownership, through a completely new management team, have worked diligently to establish a reputation for competence and accountability. I realize that for many skeptics, we have a long way to go toward winning their trust (A: [Alan laughing.]), and that for some, nothing we do will ever change their view. I can only reiterate how committed we are to delivering what we promise." (A: Well, to whom? Their clients?)

This article was amended on Thursday 2 April. Since publication, the US Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction significantly revised its estimates of US counternarcotics contracting totals. This article has been updated accordingly.

So you understand, that behind what they tell you, the propaganda and all the movies, the Pentagon funded movies they're churning out about these countries, Afghanistan and Iraq, etc., and even now in Africa big time, then there's much, much more too. It's not just a black and white issue, here's the official opinion, here's the bad guys, here's the good guys. And in this article here it says:

Blackwater founder Erik Prince:
Combative, secretive and expanding in Africa
washingtonpost.com / Dan Lamothe / October 28, 2014

(A: This is from 2014, last year.)

Erik Prince, the founder and then-CEO of Blackwater Worldwide, appeared at a House oversight and government reform committee hearing in 2007.

Seven years ago, Blackwater Worldwide founder Erik Prince was on Capitol Hill, defending the company he founded as it faced allegations that his employees had shot up a square in Baghdad a few weeks prior on Sept. 16, 2007, killing 14 civilians and wounding 17 others.

Prince insisted that day that all of his employees had acted appropriately, and that a series of baseless allegations of wrongdoing" had been made against his business, which he'd built from the ground up in the 1990s. (A: There's many more folk behind him, you understand. In all big corporations, international corporations, there's big people. It's not the people who invent some kind of a program for the Internet, believe you me; they're front men, that's why they're put up there as the big heroes and very intelligent. That's why they're running us through their NGO organizations across the world. Anyway back to the story and it says:) He bristled at the notion that his firm was a band of hired mercenaries, saying he and his employees “are Americans, working for Americans, protecting Americans.”

Five Blackwater guards — all military veterans — have been convicted in the September 2007 shooting, including four last week in a high-profile case in Washington. But while Prince continues to question whether politics tainted the case, he says he has never interacted with the former employees who were involved. (A: [Alan chuckles.])

“I’ve never met the guys,” he said (A: ...I've never seen them.) in an interview with Checkpoint. (A: You know, the usual stuff.)

Prince agreed to do interviews as his bestselling book, “Civilian Warriors: (A: [Alan chuckles.]) The Inside Story of Blackwater and the Unsung Heroes of the War on Terror,” (A: There’s good propaganda for you.) came out on paperback this week. The release date was planned for some time, but it comes just days after the convictions of the former Blackwater guards put the company back in the headlines.

So you understand, you can't get truth to look into the financial system and who is behind things and what they're after, and all of this hiring mercenary organizations, and funding them from the Pentagon too, for the private corporations that own them. We always pay, the public always pay for big corporations, for the big projects; the big corporations just collects the profit, you understand.

And quite a few years back and over the years I've mentioned about Africore, which is the big organization that’s supposed to start taking care of the whole of Africa, for a United Africa of course, on behalf of the big corporations that have been in there for centuries and taking out its resources and so on, and keeping it always in upheaval, just like Britain did in India, and always blaming someone else, some local tribe for starting something. But here's an article here and this is 2015. It says:

Kenya freezes key money transfers to Somalia over terror suspicion news.yahoo.com / Peter Martell / April 8, 2015

(A: And I just want to touch on something before I forget. This nonsense of Al Qaeda and ISIS. Remember, they were funded totally by the West, set up by the West, organized by the West, armed by the West. And they keep changing their name, just like they keep changing Blackwater, when you start to catch on to what's going on. And now it's ISIS and so on, it's the same organization who are used as well. You have to look at everything, into who profits, who benefits.)

Nairobi (AFP) - Kenya froze key money transfer companies vital for Somalia Wednesday after the police chief issued a list of 85 people and businesses with suspected links to the Al-Qaeda-linked Shebab.

Top of the list issued in an official government gazette notice was alleged Shebab commander Mohamed Mohamud, said to be the mastermind behind the university massacre of almost 150 people last week.

But the list also included money transfer companies that provide a crucial way for relatives to send remittances from abroad to war-torn Somalia, including Dahabshiil, one of the most important transfer companies across the wider Horn of Africa region.

Their suspension in Kenya would have major impact on money transfers, with aid agencies warning in the past their suspension would hit some of poorest people the hardest.

With no formal banking system in the impoverished country, diaspora Somalis turn to money transfer services to send money back home to support their families, sending some $1.3 billion (1.1 billion euros) each year, dwarfing foreign aid.

The move was immediately criticised.

"If you look at that list, it is sad that licensed entities are put together with suspected terrorists," said Anthony Wachira, the head of the Kenya Forex Remittance Association.

He said 13 of the companies were licensed by the Central Bank of Kenya as well as the association.

"I would only request the regulator and the security machinery to provide for an investigative period where they should allow them to operate when they are doing the investigations," he said.

Kenyan President Uhuru Kenyatta on Saturday warned Shebab fighters his government will respond to their killing of 148 people in the university in Garissa in the "severest way" possible, with warplanes on Monday attacking Islamist bases in southern Somalia.

But Kenyatta also warned that the masterminds behind last Thursday's attack were inside Kenya, not Somalia.

The notice, issued under Kenya's prevention of terrorism act and which gives the names listed 24 hours to demonstrate why they "should not be declared a specified entity," was signed by Kenya's police chief Joseph Boinett.

There are huge flows of money both ways between the neighbouring nations, for trade and business, as well as in lifeline remittances to war-torn Somalia from relatives in the region.

This is only a little bit of the article. But you have all different kinds of subversive groups, often terrorist, either terrorist… How many terrorists are actually mercenaries too? How many private organizations are inside the so-called... ISIS group, or Islamic-based groups? Also terrorist and also mercenaries. Who benefits from it all? Who is supposed to go and… Remember, Africore again, where the UN wanted the US and others, which always stands up for its own corporations, they want Africore to take over all the security of Africa, the whole of Africa, and then start integrating it all, just like they're doing with NAFTA and the Pacific partnership, with the transpacific partnership with Canada, the US and other countries all merging together, etc. etc. How do you get to your goal unless you create all this chaos? And especially confusion. So you've got all this going.

Now, could you imagine, if you truly are an Islamist group, and all the propaganda will keep saying that, oh they're just radical Islamists, radical, radical, radical. Now, within all groups of religious groups you'll get the completely radical, I don't care what country or what type of religion you look into. But behind many of them too, down through history you'll find again that private groups, that are inside of them, with mercenaries who are trained and everything else, and subversives to stir up other problems, to get a goal for their masters achieved. And it's the same with inside Islamist groups as well.

If you truly were religious, and for your religion, it would be ridiculous if you want converts to go out and slaughter those who won't simply convert or belong to a different faith. That's going to create antagonism against your particular religion and your cause or whatever else and it makes no sense whatsoever. So there's always, again, too many dogs in the fight here. And when it comes to mercenary groups, and trained western mercenary groups, you’ll never get to the bottom, the truth of it. You won't get it. You can suspect it. You might see it in the overall sense of seeing it, the gestalt way, but that's what's behind it. Who benefits? It’s always the same. And again too, this is to give more power to the international banking authorities, as they set up more and more power for themselves, these private organizations that also belongs to the one global organization that wants to run all global currencies, like the Bank for International Settlements in Switzerland. Everything falls into place when you go through things as to what they're after.

Now, here's another article here:

400 US mercenaries 'deployed on ground' in Ukraine military op
Rt.com / May 11, 2014

(A: And that’s 2014.)

About 400 elite mercenaries from the notorious US private security firm Academi (formerly Blackwater) are taking part in the Ukrainian military operation against anti-government protesters in southeastern regions of the country, German media reports.

The Bild am Sonntag newspaper, citing a source in intelligence circles, wrote Sunday that Academi employees are involved in the Kiev military crackdown on pro-autonomy activists in near the town of Slavyansk, in the Donetsk region.

On April 29, German Intelligence Service (BND) informed Chancellor Angela Merkel’s government about the mercenaries’ participation in the operation, the paper said, RIA Novosti reported. It is not clear who commands the private military contractors and pays for their services, however.   (A: They're awfully… I mean... And there won't be any inquiries to find out because it's part of the big… it's all authorized and approved and planned at the top.)

In March, media reports appeared suggesting that the coup-imposed government in Kiev could have employed up to 300 mercenaries. That was before the new government launched a military operation against anti-Maidan activists, or “terrorists” as Kiev put it, in southeast Ukraine.

(A: Do you remember too, that they use to start off in the West. It all came out too, it was found out, the color revolutions across Europe, where the Western powers, again, were employing and setting up people to organize and get these riots going abroad, to change governments, to suit the ones who rule over us in fact. [Alan laughing.] It's quite fascinating.)

At the time, the Russian Foreign Ministry said then that reports claiming Kiev was planning to involve “involve staff from foreign military companies to ‘ensure the rule of law,’” could suggest that it wanted “to suppress civil protests and dissatisfaction.”

(A: The Russian Foreign Ministry also said:)
 “Among the candidates for the role of gendarme is the Barbados-registered company Greystone Limited, which is integrated with the Academi corporation,” the Foreign Ministry said in a statement. “It is an analogue, and, probably and affiliated body of the Blackwater private army, whose employees have repeatedly been accused of committing grievous and systematic human rights abuses in different troubled regions.”

Allegations increased further after unverified videos appeared on YouTube of unidentified armed men in the streets of Donetsk, the capital of the country’s industrial and coalmining region. In those videos, onlookers can be heard shouting “Mercenaries!” “Blackwater!,” and “Who are you going to shoot at?”   (A: This is the public shouting at these troops, these mercenaries.)

Academi denied its involvement in Ukraine (A: …that’s standard.), claiming on its website that “rumors” were posted by “some irresponsible bloggers and online reporters.”

“Such unfounded statements combined with the lack of factual reporting to support them and the lack of context about the company, are nothing more than sensationalistic efforts to create hysteria and headlines in times of genuine crisis,” the US firm stated.

The American security company Blackwater gained worldwide notoriety for the substantial role it played in the Iraq war as a contractor for the US government. In recent years it has changed its name twice – in 2009 it was renamed Xe Services and in 2011 it got its current name, Academi.

The firm became infamous for the alleged September 16, 2007 killing of 17 Iraqi civilians in Baghdad. (A:It goes through the usual killings in Iraq and Baghdad and so on.)

So again too, you've got all these dogs in the fight, and governments and agencies and the corporations that run nations make sure that they try and keep their own personal involvement, what appears to be simply sporadic uprisings in different countries by infighting, are actually caused by their own mercenary forces that are kept out of the media. Standard procedure though.

And back to Africa again, this says:

White House officials defend Somalia strategy as counterterrorism model
washingtonpost.com / Greg Jaffe / April 3, 2015

President Obama has cited the battle against al-Shabab militants in Somalia as a model of success for his relatively low-investment, light-footprint approach to counterterrorism.

By some measures, it has paid dividends. U.S. drones have killed several of the Islamist group's leaders, including two top planners in just the past month, a senior administration official said Friday. African Union troops backed by the United States have forced al-Shabab fighters to flee huge swaths of territory.

But this week's massacre of 148 people at Garissa University College, the deadliest terrorist attack on Kenyan soil in two decades, demonstrates the limits of the administration's approach and the difficulty of producing lasting victories over resilient enemies.

Only last fall, Obama was touting his counterterrorism strategy in the region as one that "we have successfully pursued in Yemen and Somalia for years."

The collapse of the American-backed government in Yemen (A: Again, American backed.) forced the Pentagon last month to pull its Special Operations forces from the country. The chaos in Yemen and the absence of an effective partner has essentially halted U.S. counterterrorism operations against al-Qaeda's affiliate there.

In Somalia and neighboring Kenya, the record is less clear. Despite this week's killings, senior administration officials characterized their campaign against al-Shabab as highly effective. The organization, a onetime youth militia that began affiliating with al-Qaeda in the mid-2000s, once controlled virtually all of southern Somalia but has lost more than 75 percent of its territory in recent years.

This week's vicious killings in Kenya, carried out by only a small team of masked gunmen (A: Again, masked gunmen, eh.), were cited by White House officials as further evidence of the group's inevitable demise.

(A: And they go in to say they're desperate and so on.)
"They are desperate," said the senior administration official.

But analysts who follow al-Shabab's activities said the recent attacks demonstrate how difficult it is to destroy militant groups in places such as Somalia, where decades of war and famine have created vast, chaotic and largely ungovernable areas. (A: Again, don't forget what Africore is supposed to do, the UN group of Western powers that want to police all of Africa. So the more they have apparently happening within Africa and African nations the more they can use that as their ammunition to say, we've got to go in there and government these people and, you know, take their resources and so on. And that's what it says here. It says…)

. . .the recent attacks demonstrate how difficult it is to destroy militant groups in places such as Somalia. . . (A: Are they really militant groups?Or are they mercenaries? Remember, the West employs and trains mercenaries in other countries too. Always have.)

After troops from a coalition of countries acting under the banner of the African Union dislodged al-Shabab from the area it controlled, ill-disciplined militia forces filled the vacuum. Kenya's participation in the African Union mission has made it a target for reprisal attacks.

"There's no question that there was not an effective plan to win the peace (A: How many times have you heard ‘winning the peace?’) after winning the war,” said Kenneth Menkhaus, an expert on Somalia (A: Ha, an expert.) and a professor at Davidson College.

Some have criticized the international community for its failure to deliver the money (A: So, money again, the taxpayer.) and support the fledgling Somali government needed to function, Menkhaus said. Other experts contended that the government’s corruption and incompetence had caused potential backers in the West to pull their support.

And this goes on and on and on with the usual doublespeak confusion. Again, when you have masked gunmen anywhere, who are they really? Who are they really, folks? Who benefits if we the taxpayers fund our troops to go over there to police these areas, followed immediately by the big corporations, that seem to run all our countries? Hum? That's quite simple, isn't it?

Then this article here:

Expanding its role in Afghanistan, China to help build dam, roads
reuters.com / Feb 10, 2015

KABUL/BEIJING (Reuters) - China has promised to help build a hydroelectric power plant in a violent Afghan border region, as well as road and rail links to Pakistan, in the latest sign it is taking a more active role in Afghanistan.

The assistance will include an unspecified amount of financing, an Afghan foreign ministry spokesman, Sirajul Haq Siraj, said on Tuesday, a day after senior Afghan, Chinese and Pakistani diplomats met in Kabul.

(A: So here's how it's presented to you, that they're just going in there to do charity work? Of course not. I think it was a year or two years ago I mentioned a mainstream article too, that China was having the American troops protect the roads on which its big trucks went in to take out the natural resources. Incredibly rich in minerals, very expensive minerals in Afghanistan. And China is a bit more open themselves, that they have a different technique of taking over other countries to exploit the resources than the West. They don't just simply go in with the big massive gang of their regular Army or mercenary troops. They tend to try to do it through financing. And again too, do you think China is independent? Who set modern China up? Who set up communism? Who funded communism? Massive history to it. So China is not independent either, believe you me.)

In 2013, Pakistan said it would also build a motorway connecting the Pakistani city of Peshawar to Kabul, as well as a railway line from Chaman, on the Pakistani side of Afghanistan's southeastern border to the southern Afghan city of Kandahar.

So you have, again, too many dogs in the fight. And always deception. And believe you me, China couldn't make a move in these countries, if it was truly independent, simply going in there to take out resources and so on. Nothing is given for free. And when they want to get roads and railways in, it's to take resources out. That's what Britain did in India. The taxpayer-funded the roads and all of the railroad lines, and they also funded all the construction set up for it, and brought in engines and everything else from Britain to haul the freight, for the big moguls who ran Britain. Nothing changes. But if you can create the impression back home that there is simply chaos happening and you've got to get involved, and you hire mercenaries to go and start the trouble off, to get public opinion on your side, then the public aren't going to complain too much about it, they're just not going to do it. They won't do it.

Now, what I'm getting at tonight, take nothing at face value. What's happening today, the techniques that are used, are not new in any way, shape or form. And national governments have been used for this for centuries and centuries. And you must always make your enemy seem to be the bad guy for your folk back home who are going to finance it all, for the big private interests, and be taxed to pay for it all. It's expensive building, sending troops over and building things and so on, on behalf of the private interests. It's expensive to the taxpayer. So nothing changes. Nothing changes.

And when you have people going in to simply massacre people it makes no sense at all. You have a backlash. You'll not convince people that you are the good guys. Join us, it won't happen. But it certainly gets the animus up against them by outside forces and powers, the populations... something must be done. And that's the world we live in today.

If you have a big agenda, or a whole series of agendas to fulfill, running to a business timetable, and the whole world is run to a huge business timetable, long-range business plans, you must make the instance happen. The end justifies the means. So whatever you do to get the end accomplished you will do, no matter how horrific it would be if it was ever exposed to the general public as to what you have actually done. There's nothing new in this at all. Nothing whatsoever.

I can remember the battles that went on in Sierra Leone years ago. At first it was put out by the mainstream as internal battles of just crazy gangs and so on and it was interfering with business and commerce. They were debating then whether to send troops in there from abroad. Then some enterprising journalists and film crews went over and met some of the people who were doing the fighting. And the people who were in the countries that were doing the fighting were gang members - you're going to get the underclass of gangsters anywhere – and they were being trained by mercenaries, again, from the private security companies, who were there talking about it, all dressed in their warfare gear and training and under live fire you saw these bullets whizzing everywhere.

It turned out that Sierra Leone, one of its main exports was diamonds, gold too but diamonds was the big thing. And then an investigation was done, again by journalists, independent ones, but they couldn't keep their news down, and often, and eventually I think it got on the mainstream television. They traced it all the way back to London. They went into a big office tower, massive corporation, where this heavily jelled guy sat and he was interviewed about his corporation financing of the mercenaries in Sierra Leone, to get this whole Civil War started, to create the chaos. And this guy with the fat cheeks, he looks like a chipmunk there, they all do, they have no necks, you know, the money boys. And he was a good psychopath, very obvious too because he broke out laughing when he was accused. And he didn't rebut it, refute it, what he was being accused of. He says, well why not? He says, it's business. Hiring mercenaries, to him and his ilk, was business, always was, to create havoc elsewhere, because you want the resources, the diamonds and so on. And he looked at the folk who were interviewing him with an incredulous look, as a good psychopath would, at their disbelief at what he was saying, like, don't these numbskulls know reality? He says, these folk over in Sierra Leone are sitting on all this wealth and doing nothing with it. And he laughed and gave them that incredulous stare, like, can't you see that. Because to a psychopath it was incredulous that anybody wouldn't see that, he could see it, and doing what he and his corporation were doing, which is standard business practice. And he said that, this is standard business practice. The deaths that come out of it are of no concern to them whatsoever, at home or abroad by the way. It doesn't bother them at all. To them it's always been that way.

So I'm always very cautious when governments in the West, or anywhere else for that matter, try to get the people on board to go against the now hated whoever-they-happen-to-be... because of the incredible propaganda that's been put out, how atrocious they are. It really is something else. But that's humanity unfortunately. And within humanity I think there's a much, much larger group classed as psychopath involved than what they come out with an tell you of maybe one in 1000. I think it's much, much higher than that, say, 10 in 2000 maybe, maybe 5 in a 1000. I think it's much, much higher. In fact, they run the system. They give you your reality. And in psychopathic systems, where they rule it, they give the population that follow the system a psychopathic culture, which always leads to incredible degradation amongst the people themselves, to each other, as they all compete and, I'm-all-right-Jack-and-to-hell-with-you. That's the sad truth of it. It's very simple, it's not difficult to understand at all.

Anyway, from Hamish and myself from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Jan. 6, 2019 (#1702)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 6, 2019. It's kind of strange saying 2019 now. I guess it takes a little while getting use to signing 2019 on anything you have to sign these days. It takes a little while, doesn't it? Sometimes, too, even at the end of the year you'll find yourself, for some reason, daydreaming or whatever, and even putting a 2000… I don't know 16 or whatever, some nice moment in the past down on things that you sign. At least, I find that occasionally.

Because after all, we're living through an awful system right now. And by awful I really mean that. The important thing to realize is the system, we do live in a system, and in all ages, you're in some kind of system obviously. If you take the Middle Ages across Europe you had a religious system which gave you, to most people in the different strata of society it gave them purpose in a sense. And we need purpose. Without purpose you have nihilism. And without purpose and belief in anything at all you can become a terrible tyrant. That's also part of it too. That's one of the big, big problems of today in our society of materialism is that materialism is not supplying everything that we need, obviously. You can't buy it, as they say. There's even songs about that too, as you well know. But you can't buy it. You can't buy the things that you need. You can buy the basic things that you need, obviously, the material goods, food, and all the rest of it, and heat, shelter, clothing, that kind of thing, you buy these things, things that you really need. However, it doesn't supply all your needs inside you.

When you look at the big, big think tanks that run our systems, and they advise governments as I say, we don't vote the think tanks in. They preexist every particular party in government that comes in and goes out. I've gone through the history of the big ones that help run the world for well over 100 years, especially the Royal Institute of International Affairs and its American branch the CFR, the Council on Foreign Relations, a private organization. It was the organization when it was called the Milner group, that really was behind the setting up of the last part of the British Empire as they called it and they wanted a world governmental system.

They wanted a common culture across the planet. Which of course is bit ridiculous too because you can't just go and destroy people's cultures across the world to suit yourself, or because your own elite think it's their right to do so. However, they definitely tried that. Even today, you get the big arguments about, well maybe the British Empire wasn't all that bad. It isn't until you strip away so much of the myth of it all that you start to understand the picture. And we obviously all hate, all, we hate getting our myths destroyed. Every country's got them, every nation has myths, and they all have foundation myths and so on too. But when you look at the real histories of, say, the British Empire to do with commerce and piracy, piracy was a big part of it in Queen Elizabeth the 1st day in the Middle Ages. You know, you had Walter Riley and all these different people who were basically pirates, and Francis Drake. They also could use their pirate ships for defending the coast line of Britain against incomers like the Spanish Armada.

The world really is always living in, as I say, a system of some kind or another that predominates. And within the systems, you still have power plays of those who want to dominate it. Now, the CFR, even has its own video out there saying that they are the establishments that basically run all the big, big agencies within the USA, for instance. They do it within Canada as well. As I say, they've got branches of this same organization, whether it's called the Royal Institute of International Affairs or the CFR across the world, there's no country that doesn't have a branch working there. And they have direct access to governments. And they can advise all politicians in every government across the planet. So-called private organization.

They also, of course, a long time ago, remember, set up the banking system as we know it today with the big, big World Bank, the Bank for International Settlements, the International Monetary Fund which comes in to collect the debts and cuts your system to the bone in the process, including often destroying healthcare systems and things like that. Folk don't know that the same organization, this private club that started off in London, had the IMF in during Margaret Thatcher's reign in Britain cutting back on all these different things for the social services in the UK during her period there. Countries try to keep it as quiet as possible when the IMF is in. The IMF might be in in Ireland right now, I'm not quite sure. But I know that, I think they probably are actually. I saw a documentary a few years ago where Ireland had been encouraged, as always, this is how they work, to borrow and borrow and borrow money like there's no tomorrow. Then they crash the economy to an extent, and they're landed with all this massive debt, which grows all the time through compound interest. That's the beauty of this type of money system for those who own it. And it is owned. It's all privately owned.

But getting back to this world governmental idea. The general public are generally oblivious to it. It's like everything else, and I'll just touch on this briefly, the system here of how you're taught to perceive things. And I'll use analogies which are also factual in what I'm about to say. For instance, you all know comedians, take a comedian for instance. You see the product, the comedian is the end of the product. Behind a comedian, professional comedians, you have batteries, like a whole company, you might say a corporation running that front man product. You have teams of writers for the jokes. You have the image makers that literally create the comedian's image, his dress style, the whole thing. They even have deportment managers who come on and train with them to show them how to work through a joke with body language and all the rest of it. They have stylists and fashion designers, all that kind of stuff, all working together. They have the corporate boys behind them who must advertise this person on a tour abroad. And they must work out the hotels. It's a corporation basically. So, you see the end product.

Most folk never think beyond seeing the end product. That's all they think, this person just happens to be there, or he'll be on television or on stage, do his own thing and it's all down to your skill and talent. That's how you are meant to perceive this. It's no different than anybody going to out to give lectures. It's the same thing, same machinery behind it all. And the person who gives the lecture is coached, trained, the thing is produced, and you're given the final product and think, my God, this person is brilliant. You don't realize it could be an actor [Alan chuckles.] quite easily, and sometimes and quite often actually they are. That's the same as the politicians. Politicians get money, I read the articles years ago on one of the radio shows I was on, where in Britain, as an example, all the countries I'm sure are the same. Every politician was paid quite a big sum of money on expenses for training by special trainers on public relations on how to avoid answering, you know, factually answering questions, how to get around it, etc. And they were classified as acting lessons.

What I'm saying to you is nothing is real out there, at least the way you're taught to naïvely perceive them. When you see, again, a comedian on, say, a talk show on television and you see maybe an actor beside them as another guest, and they're chatting about, and they all seem to know each other, yada, yada… You don't realize that it's all been rehearsed in advance. The questions are all laid out before the guests even turn up. It's part of the contract, they make contracts before they come on these shows. It's the same with even, Kissinger used to do this, they all do this. If you inquired for them to come on for an interview, the agencies that ran Kissinger, and all the other ones out there, will put a list of questions that they'll allowed to be asked. They'll tick off what they don't want, etc. That goes back and forth, back and forth until they've all agreed, and it's signed legally in front of lawyers, notarized. Then they'll come on. But all you'll see when they're on the stage whether it's a comedian or an actor or a couple or whatever it happens to be, on some particular well-known talk show on -television - it's always been this way - is the joviality and what you think is spontaneous jokes and all fun and so on. They're getting paid big money for being on, they don't just come on and pass the time. But you're given the end product and you'll think you know the characters, you've seen them so often on television or whatever it happens to be. And that's the show of it. It's a show. It's showbusiness. And it's always big money.

Now, it's the same, as I say, with politicians. Even professors go through a lot of this. Because when they launch professors to help lead the minds of the public, they are launched on big talk shows and run often by the same organization, the top that I'm talking about in fact, to help guide the people. Because the people are followers, that's how they see the public. And this is not my opinion on it, this is pretty well out of their textbooks. They gave the CFR, for instance, recruited George Clooney and I think Angelina Jolie and they have others, actors and actresses and so on, and personalities, and philosophers and things like that. They'll bring them on and make them stars. If they're not already stars, they'll make them stars because the people will subject their own awareness, you might say, and observations, and put themselves down to a second-tier level and put the person that's presented as the expert above themselves. They'll do that quite easily actually, and there's a scientific technique to doing it. So, what we're living in is a kind of fake reality.

It's coincidental, I suppose, but I was thinking about that yesterday and today. I remember Adam Curtis has got some good documentaries out there. But Adam Curtis, as you know, also has had a lifetime of work in the BBC. He has access to incredible archives there, and who goes through a process of trying to show patterns in society and culture and times that we live through, either in commerce or financial systems or whatever it happens to be. But he also makes it very simplistic. And quite unfortunately, he'll often miss the big elephant in the room in certain areas, he won't discuss them. And no doubt too even behind Adam Curtis is a big machine too. So, he presents in a certain way, you've seen this, again, the finished product. But he did talk about this system of what seems to be unreal, and he called it hyper-normalization, after a Russian who lived through the Cold War in Russia, Soviet Russia, who called it that very term, hyper-normalization, where everyone knew everything that they were being told by the media, by this totalitarian system, was false, what they were being told, how great this was and how great that was, didn't mesh with their own personal lives experiences on a day-to-day basis. It didn't mesh but no one would talk about it. You accepted that there was something wrong, but you put on a pretense, the citizenry would put on a pretense of acting like everybody else would act and you'd all pretend to each other it was okay.

We're living in a more complex system but it's similar to that today with computerization, with algorithms monitoring your every move, everything that you think about almost, they actually predict what you're going to think about. You'd be surprised at how predictable you are. And today they've got almost everyone's data actually down to a fine art. But he mentions too that even the Internet and the ether, he was talking about the ether all around you, is an echo chamber of you, that's one part of it. I would add to it and say, it's an echo chamber of what's given out to be the official line of your present day's reality. But it's also, as he said, an echo chamber. Because algorithms are all about you. If you go on YouTube and you look at two or three things, in no time at all it's figured out your age, what you like, probably what country you came from, because it's all languages, remember, and what you like to look at for entertainment. Entertainment tells an awful lot about the person, what you like. It tells you a lot about you as a person. But in no time at all it will start on the right-hand column on YouTube, for instance, giving all, a whole list of similar things, or similar movies or similar whatever, or years, and the genre that's decided that you're going to like.

Now, the Internet was promoted for years, even before the public actually got it for themselves, it was promoted as a system that would free up people, change the system into a more progressive system and break free of this staid fix system, that's how it was portrayed, that's how people saw it at the time, at least those who rule the world and wanted to move on to the next phase. Instead of that it's turned into basically, yeah, you can get lost forever and enjoy yourself forever but it's really turning into a control mechanism. And that really was always the function, for those at the very, very top. Don't forget that DARPA and ARPA, but DARPA ruled the system, created the system, it was the military-industrial complex thing. Not by mistake. And the last thing that rulers will ever do is allow you to have total freedom. Well, even that's a whole separate subject with freedom.

The last thing that they would do is allow you to have more freedom than they think is necessary. You're given just enough to get by without having a breakdown and to pass the time thinking it's okay. And they hope you'll consume, and produce, and consume, until you die without giving the system any problems. That's the ideal citizen. Remember, the United Nations stated a few years ago that the perfect citizen, the ideal citizen, world citizen, is a good producer and consumer. So, if you get past a certain age or you get ill and you can't work, and you can't produce, but you're still consuming, then you're a burden basically. And that's how we're truly seen. We're seen as units, economic units. And that's not a humane way to look at us at all. It can't last forever, you get breakdowns in society, you'll get people going crazy, flipping out doing crazy, crazy things. That's what happens.

And they know this, of course, and they try to give you more entertainment, more ways to distract you. They also find, by the way, that during war time, and restrictions and martial law during wartime, [Alan chuckles.] it astonished me they were even doing these studies in World War II, there are less suicides and less domestic mayhem and murders and violence during wartime. Because folk, strangely enough, the people then feel that regardless of their own personal situation they're part of something bigger, there's a cause, and they give some purpose during wartime as you all pull together. It's when there's a lack of some kind of vision that things start falling apart.

So we're living in an incredibly controlled system right now. You can go protest anything you want as long as you get a license to do so, a permit to go and protest at whatever place you're going to meet. You can have a little chanting thing and put your signs up and do your thing and go home. It's funny to watch that in London because it's like one group after another with their permits, and they all take their place, then leave, and take their place and leave, and they say their peace. It's like a routine hobby with a lot of them now. Nothing's having an impact. And that's exactly what Curtis mentioned at one point in one of his talks. We accept things, including the wars, including the latest wars in, say, Yemen or whatever, with a, ha, yawn, yawn, yawn. Because deep down like hyper-normalization we know, we feel there's nothing we can do about it, this big system that runs it all is out of our hands, it never was in our hands. And that's the truth of it. That is the truth of it.

You'd never know, either, the massive machinery, getting back to just the smaller level of, say, an individual comedian or personality that's getting promoted, be it a leader in society in a professional field, they create the stars. I gave the talks years ago on the machinery, including the groups that brought you the big, big pop organizations, rock organizations, but they created the stars. You make the star. You pick them out and you make them, groom them and make them into the star. And they do that with scientists today. First, they tried that in a bigger way with Einstein and all the media went into action to promote him as some kind of star, he was some kind of genius. And it's been used many times since. It still is being used today to promote so-called experts that you're supposed to think are much more intelligent than you. You see the final product, as I say, and they promote it, so you'll follow them. They're picked up immediately by the big boys and promoted. But you see the end products, the finished product, as I say.

Nothing is spontaneous and this big system. Nothing at all. I've always said, you've got to be careful of what and who you follow because you're always given your leaders. If they're wealthy and become even more wealthy, then there's a good chance, very good chance they've been groomed, produced for you and you're seeing the polished managed product. I think, really, that's how it is. It's quite an amazing system we're living within though because it's never been so controlled as it is today. Because there's so many, I mean, there's so many of these stars out there across the world today, in every country. Polished. Managed. Often belong to the same organizations across the world. They're all on board with the same things, to guide the public that follows them, and for every fractured part of society, whichever you belong to. Every little fractured part because they've divided society up into all kinds of little subgroups, they've already got leaders out there for you. It's quite, quite beautiful in a sense if you're a master manipulator, to observe this, that's what you're seeing, how it's done.

And it works awfully well, doesn't it? Where politicians now, really, I noticed that with the last US election there with the midterm, and other elections across the world, you're not getting what they can do or what their background is, what they can do to serve any public. That pretense has even gone. They're giving you what's really a made product, as a star type thing, man or woman or whatever it happens to be or whatever it's called. They're this or they're that, where it's either the proclivity for a particular sexual thing or whatever, that's, that's like the qualification. What's going on here? I mean, who cares what they do in their own…? The fact is, can you do the job to serve the public, all the public? That's not even asked anymore. Because there's no real pretense they're there to serve anybody except themselves and their masters. That's really how bad it is today.

But getting back to all of that, the big think tanks, the big, big think tanks like the Royal Institute of International Affairs / CFR, and all of the other groups that they own. It's a big, big consortium of groups and specialized think tanks for different specialized problems and so on, or areas. The same guys who set up the United Nations and run that too at the very top, and the banking system, they never believed in democracy. I've mentioned this so many times before. The Club of Rome, if you read their own books will tell you that the problem with the world as far as they're concerned is this silly thing called democracy, they can't get anything done. But then they're a branch of the think tank that works for the Royal Institute of International Affairs / CFR. You'll find that the Royal Institute of International Affairs long ago, back in the days of Jimmy Carter I think it was, came out with not just the CFR group that most of the media is all involved in and, really, people who influence society belong to it, and the big, big moguls of corporations and business, but they also created the Trilateral Commission.

The Trilateral Commission are the real technocrats behind the scenes, who are not elected by anything, they're appointed. The public often don't even know they exist. But they go across the world deciding on collapsing economies, or working at central banking systems, and even replacing prime ministers in some countries who are default on loans, national loans, and replacing them with their own technocratic bosses, that are unelected. Straight in, they're put straight in by the central banks to run the country. Now, there's too much to just talk about, because this is spontaneous, pretty well spontaneous what I'm talking about here. But there's so much involved in this, I'd like to do a couple of shows, I don't know.

But here's the thing. If we go into the actual talks of some of the top leaders we've had, often we still have in fact, other ones have died recently. Like Zbigniew Brzezinski who again was a technocrat, remember, who was plucked out at a top university and he was put up there in the CFR and the Trilateral Commission. He came out with very, very Adam Curtis like proclamations and visions of the future, were very similar to Curtis's stuff. Because they all come from the same milieu of, how do we run the world, how do we control the public, how can we divert the public, how can we give the public vision that will be in our interest to rule over them, etc. etc. And even though they use democracy, and they even use your national military as a pretense of using democracy but it's nothing to do with that, it's for gain of course, then you come back to any reality at all.

For instance, here is a quote by Zbigniew Brzezinski and it was in the 1970s in the book, Between Two Ages: America's Role in the Technetronic Era, he called it. And the Technotronic, technetronic, '…ne…' ,he said, was a system, and he mentioned it, where radio waves, as an example, different kinds of quiet weaponry could be used across nations, continents, including your own one, and he could basically control the minds of the public, at least the emotions of them. Make them placid or angry, depending on the frequency and things like that, as a weapon system. Weapons don't have to completely disable you or make you bleed or kill you. A weapon is used to coerce you and force you into doing something. Whether they just point it at you and tell you what to do or, you know, or you don't even know it's happening to you, it's still a weapon. But anyway, it's also to do with control. It's always control, where you point a gun at someone to make them do something, or a microwave weapon, the thermal weapons that they've shown on television umpteen times that make your skin superheat, etc. and they can step it up to any frequency they want, by the way, whatever means they're going to use. The fact is, in the Technotronic era he says…

Between Two Ages: America's Role in the Technetronic Era, Zbigniew Brzezinski, 1970

"The technotronic era involves the gradual appearance of a more controlled society.

(Alan: Okay? For the hard of thinking, I'll repeat that again…)

"The technotronic era involves the gradual appearance of a more controlled society. (A: …CONTROLLED society, right.) Such a society would be dominated by an elite, unrestrained by traditional values. Soon it will be possible to assert almost continuous surveillance over every citizen and maintain up-to-date complete files containing even the most personal information about the citizen. These files will be subject to instantaneous retrieval by the authorities."

(A: So, let's break it down again here. This guy was up there, way up yonder with all the different military, top military organizations on their panels at the very, very top, on all the agencies. I'm telling you how it is, how it is now, but he was mentioning this back in the 1970s when he wrote this book.)

"The technotronic era involves the gradual appearance of a more controlled society. . .

(A: …gradual appearance. It's got to be gradual because if it's sudden you might notice it and complain. [Alan chuckles.] So, you just adapt into it, gradual appearance…) of a more controlled society.

Such a society would be dominated by an elite, unrestrained by traditional values.

(A: Now, traditional values… that's the rights of humanity, they couldn't be crossed before. So, this group would be unrestrained by traditional values. Traditional values, the rights of the individual, and that wouldn't stop them doing what they wanted to do with those people, they can do what they want.)

Soon it will be possible to assert almost continuous surveillance over every citizen and maintain up-to-date complete files containing even the most personal information about the citizen. These files will be subject to instantaneous retrieval by the authorities."

Now you go back to one of his predecessors working in the big global system, working on the culture and the minds of the public, Lord Bertrand Russell, who also belonged to the same global elite of Royal Institute of International Affairs. He also worked for MI5, at the very least, MI6 too during World War II at least. He fills the exact title all of being, or the exact role of what Carol Quigley talked about when he said that our organization, that is secret to an extent, semi secret, but he said that in his own writings, in his own book. He said, has existed for almost 60 years, he wrote that in the 1960s, his book. This is Carol Quigley I'm talking about now. He said, it's often mistaken for the Communists when he was referring to, there was the Reese Commission that had done an investigation into the tax-free foundations supporting the far left, the communistic sects, and what he's pertaining to, is that's really us running things. And he said that, we have the same kind of goals. Socialism is the best way to control people for those who are the experts and the rich on top, if you understand that.

Anyway, getting back to Bertrand Russell. Russell said back in the 1940s and 50s, and his big part, he worked with the Macy group, the Frankfurt school, all these different big, big groups that were meant to change culture and society. Lord Bertrand Russell said that shortly with the proper techniques anyone can convince anyone else of anything. He's talking about the ability to do complete persuasion and be completely believed by anybody and everybody at the same time with scientific techniques. Long before Brzezinski here. But Brzezinski would have all his inner writings, Quigley's writings, and Lord Bertrand Russell's writings, of course, he would, it's the same organization behind it all with the same goal. You know, what else did Brzezinski say in his books?

People in governments and economies of all nations must serve the needs of multinational banks and corporations. (A: And he also said…)

Today it is infinitely easier to kill one million people than to control one million people. (A: And he also said…)

Speaking of a future at most only decades away, an experimenter in intelligence control asserted, "I foresee a time when we shall have the means and therefore, inevitably, the temptation to manipulate the behavior and intellectual functioning of all the people through environmental and biochemical manipulation of the brain.

(A: Very similar in some ways, again, to Bertrand Russell long before him. And that's no coincidence at all, actually, because Bertrand Russell also said that by means of injection, and he's talking about medications, but by injection they could control people.)

…environmental and biochemical manipulation of the brain.

(A: He also said…)

We have a large public that is very ignorant about public affairs and very susceptible to simplistic slogans by candidates who appear out of nowhere, have no track record, but mouth appealing slogans.

(A: Isn't that ever, ever, ever true today. As I've mentioned before, what do they tell you their qualifications are? What did I say earlier? Hm? You understand, you're not in a true reality anymore. You're run by experts, including the products they put in front of you, which are the people that you're following. And politicians too, they're produced, created and managed for all the different factions of society that will follow them. This is also what Brzezinski said…)

The society will be dominated by an elite of persons free from traditional values who will have no doubt in fulfilling their objectives by means of purged techniques with which they will influence the behavior of people and will control and watch the society in all details. It will become possible to exert a practically permanent watch on each citizen of the world.

And it goes on and on and on. And he's only one of them. They're all the same. But again, the public are not encouraged to look into these things at all. You're encouraged to go into the kind of, almost you might call it the tabloid version, almost a comic version of what the reality is, the pantomime of politics as it's presented to you today. That's what it is, it's a pantomime, isn't it, it's a soap opera. But it's under control. You might have the appearance, or you might think it's all becoming chaotic but it's under control all right.

Trapped In A System Of Political Control - youtube.com

The Mayfair Set - youtube.com

You definitely have, again, I'll even put up a link to Curtis's The Mayfair Set to show you how Britain had to, getting back to piracy again, how Britain after the Suez Crisis where it was ordered, Britain was really put down by the US and told to back out of there along with France. That was the signal that Britain's power was pretty well over, this entity or corporation called Britain and was based in London. Because that's what it was, it was there to serve the interests of the big corporations, and certainly not the people. Anymore than it is today for that matter. You'll see how some of the people who were in the managerial military classes at that time, from old families again, with Lords and titles and so on, they got together, and they couldn't let the old system just die off. Britain was stagnating, it was left with incredible debts as a corporation from the massive world wars, two of them.

The public had only been recently been given any kind of healthcare in the late 1940s, I think it was, and early 50s, for the first time in their history. It was the same with welfare too, etc. It didn't exist before. The people were plundered and used, and they're used and used and used for centuries, for a corporation, including, this includes Englanders too... They recruited people from orphanages, like, that's where they stocked their recruits for the military for centuries from, pretty well. There's good documentaries out there even by the very authorities that are still running your brains, which is like the BBC, but the old documentaries had to admit to this kind of thing. Nothing is what you think it is. You're trained to see things, just like you're trained to think that those stars that you see on television with some talk show host, and they're all laughing and joking, and it seems to be spontaneous, you don't realize it's all managed and it's paid for and they're getting paid salaries to appear there. You're looking at professional products. It's the same with everything else.

But Britain got some of these families, they couldn't let the idea of what they saw as Britain just go down the tube, and they formed their own little pirate bands. They went across the Middle East and into other places, and even into Yemen, and started blowing things up there too, by using ex-special forces, mercenaries basically, that still worked in a kind of like semi-secret way on behalf of the establishment of Britain. But if they were caught, that was just too bad for them. But they worked, and some of them were selling massive armaments to all these countries, that's how they started off the big armament business. And the new Lightning Fighter, for instance, jet fighter that Britain had, selling them across to Arabic countries. But that really doesn't give much employment back home to people, it doesn't spread the economy. But it's the very, very wealthy, that's what it's making the money for. And it's never changed to the present day. But he does touch on that.

And for young guys, it can sound awfully exciting, this carefree, oh yeah… As I say, young men take a long time to mature. They do. It's a natural thing in them to belong to a clan or a tribe and want to go fighting. They have a small period of wanting to be a kind of warrior type. And of course, being young and healthy, think they'll never die anyway. But the thing is, they admire the adventurers, something, that's what their thriller stories or movies are about, it's about adventurers, really, people who break the rules. And they admire that. So, these characters in the special forces would break the rules, their own mercenaries and take their chances and stir up trouble across the world as front men for big corporations. Massive corporations. And some of the biggest arms sales shows, they're still held in London today for the world.

The same companies that make arms quite a few years back decided, in a world headed for peace and unification, they'd have to start, and they did have, they already started targeting surveillance technologies for sale, rather than just weaponry for governments and so on. Which we are now in. There's no special, we all belong to the same country, let's look after each other, from the CEOs of corporations, or their investors for that matter. It's pure corporate greed actually. And they'll exploit countries across the planet and interfere with them too, they always do, unfortunately. And when need be, just like Carol Quigley talked about them using the Jamison raid, this private clique that work for the Milner group at the time. They had the Times reporter they brought over with them to write up the story that the Boers had attacked the British settlements, and in reality, it was the other way around, so that they could then use their actual British regular army and have them dispatched over there to protect the British people. But in reality, these little renegade guys had attacked the Boers and started it up, and it was a woman reporter I think who wrote up the story for what became the Royal Institute of International Affairs but at that time it was called the Milner group or Milner's kindergarten.

Nothing's ever as it appears to be, isn't it? And if you really dig into reality, ha, what is reality? You'll get more and more levels of it. Don't lose yourself. Not everybody can handle it. And you don't have to know every little name and jot and tittle of things that have happened. It's really too much for anybody. But at least you get an idea of what's happening. And keep your sanity as you go through it. As I say, every country has its myths, its foundation myths, every single country, without exception. And there's also, they've exploited and trained everybody from every country to be born and raised believing in their indoctrination that they're given, with all this pride, and they've always got enemies who've done you wrong and you're taught to hate them forever, etc. etc., which makes you serve the system even harder and harder. Well-worn system.

Now, here's how, as I say, everything today has got the massive, there's thousands, thousands, literally thousands of sub agencies all working for the top big agencies in specialized areas of controlling you and what you think and what you're going to believe and all in preparation for wars to come, things like that. Here's some of it here, right, a little bit here. And I mean a little bit, right, there's too much.

Inside the Temple of Covert Propaganda: The Integrity Initiative and the UK's Scandalous Information War
grayzoneproject.com / 17 Dec 2018

(A: I hate to just pick on the UK, but it's just how, there's more stuff come out from there recently. I guarantee you too, a lot of the guys working in these agencies, these covert agencies, will have convinced themselves they're doing the right thing. They will, you know. Others are just psychopaths who have no problem. Because they're in a kind of marketing war of propaganda, that's what they do, make things up. How do we get the public to believe this? How do we put it across to them? Don't forget what Teresa Mays' specialty is, and she's worked for the Home Department for the UK's, they got security or spy agencies, you might call it, don't forget that too, her specialty is in marketing, a master marketer, so that spy agencies and so on, like this one here…)

The Grayzone entered the carefully concealed offices of a covert, British government-backed propaganda mill that is at the center of an international scandal the mainstream media refuses to touch.

Recent hacked documents have revealed an international network of politicians, journalists, academics, researchers and military officers, all engaged in highly deceptive covert propaganda campaigns funded by the British Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), (A: So, it isn't just internal, it's also across the planet, the FCO.…) NATO, Facebook and hardline national security institutions. (A: …all working together, 'eh.)

This "network of networks", as one document refers to them, centers around an ironically named outfit called the Integrity Initiative. (A: Isn't that wonderful, the integrity initiative. It's like George Orwell's ministry of love and truth and peace and so on.) And it is all overseen by a previously unknown England-based think tank registered in Scotland, the Institute for Statecraft, which has operated under a veil of secrecy.

The whole operation appears to be run by, and in conjunction with, members of British military intelligence.

(A: And it's got different statements by people who are professional propagandists and so on, and people who work to spot them, etc.)

"The most senior government people are professional propagandists and spooks," Miller explained. "The 'charity' (A: …they call themselves charities, by the way, it's wonderful, 'eh.) lead on this was also appointed as a colonel in military intelligence at the beginning of the project — a truly amazing fact that suggests this is a military intelligence cut out." (A: …cut out …that's how they refer to it.)

(A: And this is…) According to David Miller, professor of political sociology in the school of policy studies at the University of Bristol and the director of the Organization for Propaganda Studies (A: That's what he said. M-hm. He says…)

“The most senior government people are professional propagandists and spooks,”

The think tank that oversees the Integrity Initiative, the Institute for Statecraft, has also received funding from the British Army and Ministry of Defense.

This is pretty major. UK govt admits that not only the Foreign Office but also the Army and the Ministry of Defence have funded the Institute for Statecraft, the body behind anti-Corbyn propaganda.

(A: So they’re also putting out, they’re involved in politics here. And I’m not into politics, I think they’re all pretty psychopathic anyway. But here they are interfering with it. And here’s the world bashing Russia saying they’re interfering with other folks’ politics. [Alan laughing.] But every country has got this particular type of group working with and inside of them. Also, this professor Miller explained…)

The entire extremely shady enterprise, as Miller explained, is an elaborate front for the British military-intelligence apparatus. Its covert coordination with friendly politicians and mainstream journalists recalls the Cold War-era intrigue known as Operation Mockingbird.

And that was an interesting one too. There’s links on this article here and you can look them up yourself. It’s quite a long article actually. Worth reading for those who are into this kind of thing to give you an example how it works. It’s sad too, you know, most people in the military, most of the ordinary grunts and so on, and troops and squaddies as they call them, in the military, don’t know about this either. They just, they’re simple old guys like everybody else, pretty simple, go along to get along, etc., do what you’re told, don’t cause problems... And maybe you’ll get some recognition in the military and maybe you can get out of it and get a better job than you would have if you hadn’t gone into it in the first place. I mean, that’s the average person. They don’t know that most of what they’re getting told is propaganda, and misinformation, and even brainwashing. Also, this article here…

The “Integrity Initiative,” Spies and their Lies - veteranstoday.com / 3 Jan 2019

That’s by Sputnik News, which is Russian, I think. But they do go through some interesting information on this too. It’s good to look at all stuff because everything’s got a spin on it, sure. But you’ll get bits and pieces of truth. That’s how intelligence agencies get facts anyway. They get newspapers, they use to get newspapers across the world and cut bits and pieces out of them pasted them altogether. Information, disinformation, you name it, but you had to get it all and then try to make sense of it. That’s how it’s done. Nothing’s changed, even though its mainly electronic today. And also…

en.wikipedia.org

The Smith Richardson Foundation is a private foundation based in Westport, Connecticut, that supports policy research in the realms of foreign and domestic public policy.

(A: One of many by the way. And they also are tax-free in their foundations and they're covered as charities. Pretty standard stuff, 'eh.)

Another one I'll put up, it's to do with some of the people involved in running these agencies.

Christopher Nigel Donnelly - worldwhoswho.com

And another one I'll put up is…

The CIA and the Media - carlbernstein.com

It's by Carl Bernstein, an old one, old article, but he's wrote a lot of stuff about this. I'll put that up for people who… Again, there's only a few folk who will wade through all this stuff. I should mention too that I don't necessarily endorse these articles as being the ultimate of truth. However, you can definitely check certain facts within them. That's all that really matters to me. I expect spins to be put out there on most newspapers and websites, etc., and some people will simply have a point of view that will never budge as well. However, when it comes to actually analyzing intelligence data you have to go into all different areas. And you find sometimes too, and this is a technique I've mentioned before, years ago, that sometimes intelligence agencies will put out conflicting articles about themselves and different agencies they control. And they do control oppositions of pretty well everything as well. That's amazing, 'eh? They create the, it's the dialectic basically, but you must control both sides to get the synthesis basically. That's how it's run. From the intelligence services themselves.

So, remember, I'm not pushing one thing or the other, I'm just saying, look into everything and when you can verify certain data then at least you know that its intelligence agencies involved. And all countries use these techniques too. Because all countries to do with intelligence agencies, and top MI5 specialists have said that in interviews long after retirement in Britain, that every job that they had was really to do with subverting someone else's economy in order to get the business to big corporations within London. That's really how most countries really work. A country is a corporation, really, or a nation is a corporation with a different clique at the top who actually own it all. And you're all trained to believe and work for it. It's quite simple. So always keep it in your mind that you question everything.

The FBI is Trying Amazon's Facial-Recognition Software - nextgov.com / 3 Jan 2019

Just to go back to what I was talking about earlier with Adam Curtis and his articles, even though he'll do his own spin too and omit the elephant in the room on many things. But he did, he's quite right and what he says, how we are given a fake reality, very, very fake, and getting worse all the time with all these professional agencies massively giving us, dumping so much scientifically created propaganda onto us every day.

Another one too is to do with Amazon…

Amazon Web Services Announces Secret Cloud Region For CIA - nextgov.com / 20 Nov 2017

Another one too is to do with China…

China's new antenna is five times the size of New York City, but some fear it could be a cancer risk
scmp.com / 31 Dec 2018

•Work to build facility was 13 years in the making, but some researchers have expressed concern about exposure to extremely low frequency waves
(A: Remember the low-frequency that Persinger was working on? Well, here's a massive project here.)

•Project WEM will be able to communicate with submarines under the water, reducing need for them to surface
(A: The US has already got them, some other countries have too, by the way.)

China has built a giant experimental radio antenna on a piece of land almost five times the size of New York City, according to researchers involved in the highly controversial project.

The Wireless Electromagnetic Method (WEM) project took 13 years to build but researchers said that it was finally ready to emit extremely low frequency radio waves, also known as ELF waves. Those waves have been linked to cancer (A: Mind you, as I say, all our own countries have got it too, this particular technique.) by the World Health Organisation-affiliated International Agency for Research on Cancer. (A: …has also objected to it. But they're going to get it anyway.)

It's very similar to other side effects of HAARP techniques as well, ELF and so on. And every country's got them, really. It's also the reason, because they can communicate with submarines, it's also affecting, and I also mentioned, I gave talks years ago on this, it's affecting the dolphins and even whales, they're beaching themselves because it interferes with their guidance system.

Here's something that everyone should be concerned about. [Alan chuckles.]

Poo found on every McDonald's touchscreen tested
metro.co.uk / 28 Nov 2018

Traces of faeces have been found on every single McDonald's touchscreen swabbed in an investigation by metro.co.uk.

Samples were taken from the new machines that have been rolled out at restaurants across the country (A: …this is in Britain.) – every one of them had coliforms.   (A: They're talking about coliform bacteria.)

Senior lecturer in microbiology at London Metropolitan University Dr Paul Matewele said: 'We were all surprised how much gut and faecal bacteria there was on the touchscreen machines. (A: I'm not surprised at all.) These cause the kind of infections that people pick up in hospitals.

Unfortunately, they're using the same kind of touchscreen systems to put all their information on all patients in hospitals now. And those, the staff, they're all rushed, believe you me, they're rushed back and forth right from the patient's bed to these things, back and forth, back and forth. There's no common sense here, folks. Of course it's asking for trouble. I'll put this one up for folk who really care about it.

And also interesting at Walmart…

Walmart has patented autonomous robot bees | World Economic Forum - weforum.org / 19 March 2018

I think this is from maybe a couple of years ago, the first article I saw on this. But now they've done it. This is to pollinate plants and so on in different parts of the world. They call them pollination drones. It's interesting that they've brought out a few patents actually from Walmart, interesting how they're going to expand their business into much, much bigger realms of essential things, like your food supply.

Now, I think that's pretty well it. Remember, you can buy the books and discs @.com and see the other sites I have and find out how to order books and discs and so on, or to donate to me on the website. Because as I say, things are getting tough as the currencies are being devalued, and we all know this, we all know it. And people are getting really strained out there and trying to pay for everything that they need. A lot of folk already are so much in debt, because the system encourages debt. And Canada is one of the worst countries, apparently, for personal and national debt. I'll put up some articles to do with that in fact, for Canada. And Australia. It says…

(A: And goes through how it's rising, rising, rising, until we're paying more back for the debt, which is compound interest, by a system we shouldn't even have in the first place, which is not meant to get paid off, you can't pay it off, compound interest.)

Also…

An awfully good article on…

Eliminate court fines and fees that penalize poverty - usatoday.com / 4 Jan 2019

…in the US. It's astonishing how much the States, even local government, depends on fines to pay their bills, for the government, and how the poor naturally are suffering the most in paying all these fines. Which also have interest tacked on them if they can't pay. What a system. This is not our system, is it? It really isn't. But I will put up these articles here.

I hate even cutting it off so early, actually. I should really do another talk perhaps on this. Because this reality that I'm talking about here, the whole idea of bathing the continent and even the world in frequencies, like the ELF and so on, from cell phone towers even or across the planet by different means, is old. It's been experimented with and used and tested to see if it works. And it does work. I mentioned that years ago too, they tested different parts of the US with it. They even had lawsuits come in about it too when people found out was what going on. That's the world we're living in today.

Because those in control don't want to lose control. It's always been the goal to get control. That's what Brzezinski was talking about to his own peer group. Because the books like The Technotronic Era are meant for his own peer group and those who work in the Trilateral Commission and the CFR and the Royal Institute of International Affairs. And there's International Affairs organizations across the whole planet now. Every country has them. One big club of a private organization… that runs your school system to indoctrinate the children… decides what cultural changes they're going to impose upon you… what they're going to make trendy… even absurd… because they can break all conventional rules and experiment with you. And even sit back and laugh at the results.

Don't crack up about it. And if it's too much for folk, don't even go into it. There'll still be another tomorrow... Unless something out of control happens, out of anybody's control but there'll still be another tomorrow. Your life has to go on regardless of all the fear that's generated out there. It does. And always remember that you matter. That's awfully important. And don't get depressed about things. And stop knocking your head against the wall thinking everything is your own fault. But when you realize what you're up against, it certainly isn't your own fault. Everything's pushed this way. It’s up to you to try to break out for yourself, if you can. And if you can get in touch with other people who understand as well, all the better, all the better if you can.

For myself, Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it’s good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Trapped In A System Of Political Control

The Mayfair Set

Jan. 13, 2019 (#1703)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 13, 2019. I hope that everyone's recovering from their crazy, crazy commercialized Christmas and holidays. They call it Happy Holidays. It means nothing. What does happy holidays mean? Happy holidays? I mean, holidays themselves comes from the word holy days and for most folk in the West now that's kind of taboo and they've been trained that it's taboo because you can't have holy days. So, they haven't found another term for it, really.

It's rather sad that it's so commercialized. But the whole system now is commerce, isn't it? It's like the movie Network, awfully good rants go on about that in the movie where they talk about the commercialized system and how corporations run the world and rule everything and there are no nations anymore, it's all international corporations. That was an old movie of course that tells a lot of the truth and we certainly are living in it today. It takes participation of the public to be deceived in a system that they're taught to believe in. That's the key, you're taught to believe in it. And you're taught to vote for it too. But you must participate in the cons that go on when you're told that they're creating a utopia for you and everything's going to be just wonderful, sit back and relax and the future…

Back in the 70s, you know, I think it's the 70s, maybe even earlier, they had, they keep recycling the same articles over and over again in the newspapers and in academia where they had big, big newspaper articles of the coming future of Utopia where it would be a privilege to get a job to serve the public. Because with automation and so on most folk wouldn't need a job. And somehow money would be, again, the Bertrand Russell thing, just appear in your bank account from the state. But they didn't mention about how much control that would give the state over you, which is where we're going of course. Because money is an awfully powerful thing for controlling everybody, especially if you need it to pay off debts or your rent or anything else, so, Russell said they can use it eventually to punish you if you don't go along with whatever social agendas being pushed.

But it's so true, isn't it? And in the 70s, they said, oh, we'd all be wearing… I don't know how they're going to manage this part, but like, Roman togas. They had all these artists renditions of people in Britain wearing togas and just floating along the countryside, you know, as if they're on air or something. This is the rubbish, no doubt our tax money funded all this rubbish, it always does. But this is what they gave us for the future, and how really, you'd be bored stiff and the most important thing would be simply recreation to pass your time, that would be the big thing. But you'd have no worries at all, everything would be taken care of for you, and you just wear your togas.

I guess maybe they're going to, maybe artificially create a different environment for you so you didn't freeze to death like I would be here, for instance, since last night the temperature hit about -32°, -30° actually centigrade, around -22° Fahrenheit, around that temperature. That's pretty typical at night here now, has been since about October [Alan chuckles.] as winters get longer and longer. But anyway, I certainly won't be wearing a Roman toga outside. You'd have to chip it off me if I came inside. And probably chip me, my muscles too, to get them moving again.

But the thing is, we live in such farce and fantasy. We used to call it hogwash. Hogwash is an awfully good term for most of the stuff that's dished out to you today by your socialist type system. Now, I gave talks years and years and years ago about the system, many times, of how it changes, and using facts, not just my opinion of things, but facts and how you're trained to believe in a system, which is the country generally you live in or the area you live in. They tried that even with the European Union. Didn't work too well because folk can't really identify with this mishmash of different cultures all… you know the cultures are different and independent, as they should be, but you can't imagine them all being one particular people as they're trying to make it out to be. It just doesn't wash.

And no one can manage a system better than the folk living in the area they're actually living in. Some remote organization or parliament or government cannot ever possibly, anymore than ancient Rome could, govern a place far, far away better than the people living on it. Because every area has different problems, different geography, climate and everything else. So, utopias tend not to work. Even when they ram it down your throats. You can tell always when they're on a roll in the socialist, because all governmental systems become socialist. The bankers at the top, the big money boys that planned the world order, the Alfred Milner group for instance, Lord Alfred Milner and his whole group basically ran what was called the British Empire in the 1800s and expanded it too into the early 1900s, using it, they said, as a form of governmental control over the planet. And the US, it was to take it over and merge with them. That's what they've been doing since really World War I, I suppose, really. Because Britain by World War I was bankrupt many times over; World War II simply put the cap on it much quicker.

But the reality is that the US is to take it over. And don't ever get lost in this idea of countries dominating. There's a system on the planet here that will hop from country to country, which ever one suits them better at the moment. They've done it so many times, which ever one suits them best at the moment, they'll base it there. Remember, you don't even need a place anymore. London has always been one of the biggest places for international finance. Always. The US of course took that over with New York being 'the Empire State' of course. They call it 'the Empire' and people don't even ask what Empire they're talking about. But you know what Empire it is, it's rather obvious. And finances and basing the World Bank there too, and all the other banks that are involved with the World Bank, based inside the US, to dish out loans across the planet. They use the US Federal Reserve today as really a big bank basically lending out across the whole planet now. Just like the British taxpayers were put down as the guarantors to pay off debts of all kinds, the bankers in the US do the same kind of thing, including the loans to different countries across the planet.

So, there's an elite group way above what we think of as nations. There's an elite group above what you think of as even patriotic citizens. Remember that Carol Quigley said that when he was talking about this group that had existed so long, that he worked for in fact, a secretive group that governed countries and selected presidents and prime ministers,for over 60 years. That was in the 1960s, so you're looking at the late 1800s, the latter part, that he's talking about, that all leaders in all parties were members of this one organization. And he said, we're often mistaken for the Communists. Because really, the mission had a lot of socialistic implications very similar to communism. And it's communism or socialism that the big boys really like, the socialist idea, with governments elected, mind you, to keep the scam going. Because the bankers love socialism. In socialism everything becomes, beginning…

Here's the thing, let's get down to basics. It's not difficult to understand, but it's the terminology, I was going to say earlier, that we are indoctrinated with, that will stick with you, and it makes it very hard for people to understand they're looking at something, thinking it's the same but it's actually changed. You could still salute the flag and hear the national anthems and go through the rituals that you'll have every so often, and yet the policies within your country could be 180-degrees in the direction from where it was when they first founded your nation or that particular part or system in your nation. And you adapt and you adapt until you don't even know that you're 180° from what it was all about. Most folk don't even know it's changed.

But socialism couldn't take off so well in the West, especially in the US. They got around that quite simply by bringing in nongovernmental organizations, under charities, lots of charities, that's how you start it off, and social programs that were voluntary to begin with through libraries, etc., and independent of government at the time. Then over time the public get used to having libraries and social events put on by, initially themselves and little committees, it would be voluntary, and they'd have collections for it and all that kind of thing. But after two or three generations they can start asking for, quietly, grants, little grants from government to help them. Before you know it, it's run by governmental money. And then the leaders of these different programs start getting this semi-, semi-independent status as a kind of overseer or commissar over this particular little area of your culture or socialistic whatever it happens to be. Then the next thing you know they're dictating to you with authority. And so you bring it in, hchhh, in a very cleverly disguised fashion. Always to do good, mind you, it's always put forward as doing good, to help you. As I say, after a generation or two, well, since you've always known this particular event every year or whatever it happens to be, once you start getting cash to it, there's no big deal, it seems kind of normal to you. That's how you set up a socialistic system across the board, in multilayered structures, including housing and everything, that really at one time were kind of voluntary things with voluntary committees, etc., to keep it separate from the public purse.

The big bankers love socialism because every agency of government, even down to your local government, will go cap in hand to borrow money, and get used to spending more than they can take in, spending more than they can take in. And as long as the taxpayer is put down as the guarantor to pay it off through taxes the big boys are awfully, awfully happy. In fact, they don't… They know their compound interest structure is not meant ever to be paid off. You can't pay it off once you're into it. Remember, banks make their money off of interest. That's the key to it. So, the more debt that is owed to a bank, the happier the bank happens to be. That's why the big boys that run the global structure with the central banking system that they've enforced upon everybody is working so well for them.

As I say, money is such… it's almost a mythical thing [Alan chuckles.] in a sense as far as what they say it is. When you look at what it actually is worth, you're buying power, dropping your entire life, you need more and more and more of these little notes or whatever, or even numbers these days, because they're worth less and less and less. And you don't even understand, most folk will never ask who decides what it's worth or how they even come to that conclusion of what they say it's worth. And yet they still think they're free. If total strangers that you never meet, you don't know, most folk don't even know they exist in fact, decide what your currency is worth, you are on a tight rope your entire life without even knowing it, you don't know.

But as I say, getting back to the whole multi-governmental layered, it's a multilayered system. And when government even farms things out to agencies, so when you complain about the agency not doing its job right, the government will say, well, it's an agency, you know, it's a different structure, you have to take it up with them, it's out of our hands. Whereas if they kept it within governments you could at least get to the politicians and throw tomatoes at them, as you always do, verbally or whatever, and they'd have to answer to it. But as long as it's agencies it's easier for government to ignore you. Well, it's not our problem, you have to take it up with them. That's what I'm saying.

So, it's just too easy to use time. I always think of that Denzel Washington movie, it was awfully good, about a demon. [Fallen] [Alan chuckles.] It was a good horror, but a demon that could take over people and move from person-to-person just by touch. In the movie Denzel Washington who plays a cop is in the police station and this demon is now after him. And it comes. And you see, you see different people passing the table in front of Washington and singing, Time is on My Side from the Rolling Stones, and it's a tribute to the devil and so on. They'd sing a line, and somebody else would take it up as they passed. And the person who passed by, they would stop, sing a line and it would be passed on to somebody else. It just kept going back and forth, back and forth through different people. That's such a good, good example of how time can be used so, so perfectly in a sense to fool everybody.

Just like a corporation. A corporation, like I say, or even a foundation, there are foundations that run thousands of nongovernmental organizations today that are still classed as tax-free charitable foundations with multibillion dollars, some of them. They finance big mass movements across the entire planet and think tanks and so on, they advise governments. You don't elect them, they're private. Most folk don't even know how they even are structured, nevermind how they work. And yet these big massive organizations can last 200 years or more, with a set principle of heading towards this, global government, whatever it happens to be, or a total governmental controlled system with specialists running the whole planet. For 200 years or more. You don't vote for them. And they're constantly working. Countless generations are hired by them and trained by them, and get paid well, go across the world, there's technocrats implement things, and retire and other guys are brought on and so on. That's how it works. That is your system.

Most of us are short-term thinkers, we can't think that far ahead. It's hard enough even making sure you can actually get to the following year, financially or any other way for that matter. But the big foundations can plan centuries ahead if they want to. And when you have them all working together as one big consortium running thousands of nongovernmental organizations, openly advising governments, not the public, there's no public input here. These are private organizations advising governments in all governmental departments. But the person at the bottom that does the voting, you're taught, just vote for the person, that's it, once you've done your vote, that's it, sit back for four or five years, without knowing what's going on. And it keeps you all quiet, you see.

But socialism is the key to it all. Socialism, remember, is scientific socialism, that's what it's called in the West. In fact, so was communism supposed to be scientific socialism, where experts could be way more efficient than leaving it to politicians that represent the public. Because the public never ever agree on anything and they simply wouldn't vote or do things in their best interest, whereas these experts would, you see. So, you're in scientific socialism run by a form of secular humanists. And secular humanism is religion itself, as was Marxism too is of course. It's a belief system.

So, as I say, the big boys love this system, constantly getting into worse and worse debt. Each time they bail you out your currency drops like a stone in purchasing power, and then they tax you all the more, more and more for all the so-called money the governments are borrowing. Now, the big lenders to the planet don't want paper given back to them in return for things. They want real goods, tangible goods, or gold, diamonds, whatever it happens to be, or real estate. But all they really issue to the governments is the right to print cash, that's what they call a loan. What a fantastic system, really, isn't it? They don't have to ship in any gold or anything into a nation like they used to at one time. They simply write checks to give permission to whoever prints the thing up to print up the cash. Then they bill your government for it. The government then has you down on the tab for paying off the interest on it all, but it has to be paid off in real tangible assets not this paper nonsense or blips on a screen. Not bad at all.

That's why when you look at certain currencies, if you go abroad, and you'll say, you've got Peso and Lira and so on, and you can pay thousands of them just for a coffee. It sounds incredible, just for coffee. But that's normal to them. And it will be normal to us one day too. Look at the old movies and see what gasoline costs, say, about 30 years ago. Look at what the houses were bought for back in the 1950s when a lot of them were built. In the cities, like Toronto, the houses were often built for about $5000. 1940s. And a person back then could afford to pay off a mortgage pretty quickly for it. And often have a family. And his wife would look after the children at the time too, one person working paying off the mortgage, get a car and so on, on a small salary. Actually, it was, you see, the dollar back then was worth a lot of money. You could live well, remember, in some countries with a couple of pounds a week in your pocket. You could eat well too.

The currencies are constantly, constantly devalued through this thing called debt, which very few folk at the bottom ever understand, or care about, as long as they can still spend. I've gone through the whole thing with the bail outs the last time, where the Canadian banks were also, they were awfully good at keeping it quiet in Canada and lied initially too. Oh, we're fine. But the fact is, all the top banks in Canada, all the big ones were up to their eyes in massive debt when the crash came. It was the Federal Reserve, it was agreed in the US that the Federal Reserve would give special drawing rights to the top banks in Canada, just like they did in the States and the special drawing rights to help bail them out of that crisis. But it put the taxpayers in Canada down for huge interest increases in the paybacks on behalf of their government through taxation.

And it's not finished yet because they said at the time, and no one listens at the time, except those, even those that are on the streets and lose their homes, don't listen. They're too worried, that's why. They don't listen to news. Once a crash comes it's out of their hands. Like Curtis said, and others have said before, too, that there's a sense of apathy. I gave talks about that back in the early 90s, I said that apathy is a creation of government, it's a tactic for control. I knew that because I came from a country that had been soaked in apathy from at least, well, in my lifetime. They had price and wage freezes when I was small. They had I think three days of electricity going on for a while, with the Labour government at the time too, because there was a shortage of energy, they said, ooo, my goodness. It was a country that was still on rationing up into the 1950s. They've been on rationing right through World War II, 1939 onwards into the 1950s. That was Great Britain they called it.

Again too, you're always, they even had articles in the newspapers right through, when the Beatles were going on, of, tighten your belts, you know. Tighten your belts. That was a common term used by the government as they increase taxes and everything, they put prices up, tighten your belts. Then they had prices and wage freezes they called it. The wages were definitely frozen, the prices weren't as far as I can see. But the fact is, that was apathy, it created apathy, and the public got used to nothing but bad, bad news. Then during the 70s they had tremendous unemployment as factories after factories were closing down. It was never disclosed to the public why they were closing down, or the fact they were actually getting paid to move out of the country. But literally for a few years in the 70s that's all you heard, daily on the news. Daily. And folk… I think Britain had the highest suicide rate in the whole of Europe, then, and Scandinavia, at one time it was Sweden, but Britain overtook Scandinavia because of the unemployment was just, no future. There was absolutely no future.

Margaret Thatcher when she got in, by that time she got in, she actually said that. She said, there's a whole generation growing up who will never see work in their lifetime, get used to it. That was the speech, get used to it. Well, there's going to be future prospects for you. Because no matter how bad things get you still have to pay for your basic existence, of food, shelter, clothing and heat, you know. You need that. So, apathy was created. What do they do with apathy? They actually dish out, in comes the big, big drug cartels. All through Scotland it was just incredible the amount of heroin that was pushed in there. Very quickly too. Very quickly. And I don't care what they say, that's part of the system of control. That's what it is. So, apathy is a terrible thing.

Now, the governments, when it's getting really up there into socialism, and you get pummeled with the idea that you're free, because sexual freedom now it's called freedom. All freedom is sexual apparently. And you can do all kind of weird things sexually, whatever tickles your fancy. And now you're free. Now you're free, you see. Well, if you're starving, I don't care what you do sexually you're still going to starve. So, freedom is a lot more than sex. Obviously. An awful lot more than sex.

And freedom has a little bit of a responsibility as well, where you cannot allow governments to have all this authority over you, or agencies or anything else for that matter over you. If you can't have basic protection, if you won't stand up for yourself in basic protection for your basic rights, basic rights, and I'm including civility in rights by the way, because I've seen it personally not too long ago here, where folk can just start screaming in your face when they have no right to do so. But they actually believe that you're now a peasant, for different reasons they'll believe that. In some countries people come from too they actually have tremendous systems of talking down to people. Or screaming down to them. And in so-called civilized countries. And the West was supposedly civilized, you didn't talk to people like that. You had a certain modicum of civility and patience. And it's amazing how well things will function if you have that. Just amazing.

But folk today are cracking up and losing patience. No doubt they are all different kinds of reasons. But the fact is, people are now, I call it just basic, basic abuse in a sense. Now, you will have people who will always use the abuse technique for dominating someone else. You'll see it everywhere in fact. I remember there was a guy on radio for years and years and years, who is probably still alive actually. He used to give talks on not being abused by people. He even gave examples of going into restaurants and so on, and you would get, you might get a particular woman occasionally coming over who right off the bat would be very brusque. And the normal decent person's attitude when a person suddenly becomes brusque towards you, you'll back off thinking, what have I'd done to offend them? It's a technique that they use to control you. It's very common actually. And how he wouldn't stand for it, even there in a restaurant, he wouldn't. And quite rightly too.

Most folk will cave-in. Oooh, oooh, oooh, you know. And she'll say, what do you want, you know. It's like, I don't have all day, that's what they're saying, I don't have all day. And so you back off and you start cringing and oooh. Because normal decent folk will do that. Well, you've got to stop doing that. You've got to stop doing it. Really. Because in the socialistic system if you start caving in and walking backwards, when there's no negotiation left, which means there's no real rights or freedoms left, horror, there's only horror to look forward to. Ask the old Soviet Union. Ask the victims of the Bolsheviks when basic decent civil dialogue breaks down. Ask them where it ends up. It always starts off with the attitude, the nasty attitude, that's where it starts. You can't let it go that way, folks. You can't do it.

So as I say, we live in a system that's been designed purposely, it didn't happen by itself, with all the multilayered facets of socialism, which all the banks want. They prefer this system. A system that's not socialist wouldn't have all the borrowing rights and demands from these banks. You understand that? And having the whole planet basically getting bailouts from the World Bank, and then run by the IMF that steps in like the big bailiffs deciding on what you're going to spent on healthcare and how much is going to go to the people who you owe your money to, that's not... That's... Really, this is a prison. This is a real prison of finance. And it's meant to be so, so that a tiny small clique can live so high on the hog that you can't even imagine how they live today. Then they bring their relatives in and give them jobs and blah blah blah, in the socialistic system.

You'd be surprised how many of the relatives end up getting jobs over what will become agencies, which are in fact or were in fact charitable institutions but are now like agencies. It's astonishing. And always paid a lot of money. They don't believe in doing anything for the service to the people. They want big money. And big money is rather terrifying today. It really is. When I see some of the salaries that these people get, for nothing, really, then you really do realize that you are in the psychopathic era. Because psychopaths have no problem with accepting just disgusting amounts of money to be in service, as they call it, to the public. It's such a farce. It's scary, actually. Scary. To me.

I don't think it's meant to go on forever actually. And it won't be. Because money is a joke to start with. Only the joke is on us. Especially when you can't eat. Or when it's constantly devalued, and you have prices going up and up and up. It is, isn't it, it's on us. And there's no input from the public at all. You're not asked for any input on anything that matters, especially to do with taxation. Or even to do with the multilayered agencies for all these, you know, growing relatives as they take over the jobs everywhere, but being those who already rule. It's astonishing how big it is today. It really is.

But nothing is ever as it seems to be. There are no self-made people like Bill Gates or the Facebook crew or anybody else. It's all planned way in advance as fronts, they're fronts, big front people. There are so many articles out even recently, you're always getting them since day one but even recently to do with the control of Microsoft and how their system, I knew this years ago, even before I touched a computer... The big authority systems that run the world wanted one system to be the kingpin so they can control it all, obviously, and that includes CIA and everything else. And Microsoft was the one that they basically pushed, it would seem. So, nothing, as I say, is self-made, by itself. It doesn't happen.

And social movements don't happen by themselves. They're all planned that way. They always have the same agenda. It's astonishing to me when you meet people who suddenly become the big philanthropists, that all are completely on board with every part of the globalist socialist agenda. The greening thing and the gender thing and every other thing out there, they are on board with it all. Isn't that amazing? Do you think there should be some exceptions? If you had a law of averages? Doesn't that tell you something right there?

The little secret to the system, if you go into the Milner group that became the Royal Institute of International Affairs, is that they were all, if you got on board with them and you were selected for the inner and outer party… and the CFR is part of this group to today, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, it's all one group. If you were selected, you would be promoted to the top in whatever area you were selected to go into. Doors would just fly open and you would sail to the top. Even in the military by the way. And you would have, you'd be like a technocrat, you'd have lots of things you had to accomplish. But you'd be so incredibly rich with servants at all the rest of it, and chauffeur driven cars, in every country that you ended up going to and visiting. You'd have the life of a king in a sense. Very real. And part of it too was this, what they call public service, you see, to them, they say, you're being a public servant for the greatest cause on the planet, for this agenda. But you'll live, just like I say, like a king.

And if you get really up there high, like Cecil Rhodes, and he was selected too. He wrote about being in cahoots with Lord Rothschild, for this British Empire, South Africa deal and Rhodesia. He left in his will that most of the money was to go back to the Rothschilds. You must put your money back in to the same agenda for the next generation. That's what the philanthropists do, you see. It's the same organization if you haven't figured it out. The philanthropies they are into are all the same ones. There are… You couldn't have somebody with, I'll accept that and be on board with that, but not that. They're are on board with them all, always. Always, always. Because they must start putting money back in to the system that made them rich, you see, that's how it runs. They're not self-made at all, for those who don't quite know and haven't figured it out yet.

It's the same thing with the CIA and MI6 and many other special spy agencies, intelligence agencies they like to call themselves, across the whole planet. They have lots and lots and lots of big real corporations that really manufacture things, etc., but they're still part of the military-industrial complex too, most of them. So, nothing is quite as real as that. So, as I'm saying, socialism can be forced upon the people in a way which is wonderful, isn't it? That's what Aldous Huxley talked about too. He knew this, he knew what the agenda was. He said, the people could be taught to love their servitude. Step-by-step you bring them to a stage where they their love their servitude because they're constantly told they're free. Now they can take drugs galore, you know, lots of sex. If you get someone pregnant or someone gets pregnant, the state takes care of it, get rid of that little wart, as they call it. And if they can treat your STDs then also, yeah, if they can. Because they can't treat them all. But they don't like to talk about that part, especially in the movies that promote it all. But most of the problems they'll deal with for you. Or if you want to have a child without having the dad live with you, or even have a dad living with you at all, you can have artificial insemination. And you'll also have the state financing you through university or something.

It's a utopia for certain agendas. But each part of these agendas must destroy the tradition. That's the whole point of it. It's warfare you understand and the participants that go through it at the bottom level don't even recognize it as such. It's really quite fascinating. So, everyone comes to love their servitude. And if you get stressed out, well, just get your cheap drugs from your government, like in Canada here, at your liquor licensing bureaus that deal with it all, and they'll deal out your drugs, go home and stare at the wall, you know. And it's freedom. That's the new freedom. And if that's too much for you in a socialist system run by experts, and experts say, why waste money treating people for diseases when they're going to die anyway, or the older folk, why not just help train them all to start to just take a pill early.

They've had debates on it, I mentioned them years ago, debates. Not really debates, actually. It's generally selected professors coming out, across the world, all about the same time, and getting airplay, right, in this free society they just happen to always get airplay at the right time together saying the same things. Well, what's wrong with, you know, if you get fed up living, why not just die, or why not… Then Australia had a guy coming out all the time and given lots of airplay, who said, well, you know, if they could leave, if they could just kill themselves off rather than retire, and leave jobs for the younger people. You understand? This is what the technocrats do, they float these people out there just with ideas to see if you can and then check the chatter on the Internet and so on to see how you're responding to it. They're like trial balloons. They even have different algorithms, in everything, voting, you name it, blah blah blah, or opinion making, or opinion setting, to find out why you won't go along with something, what's your objections? Then they find ways to get around that. It's so quick and automatic it's just astonishing.

But that's the system we're living in. It's really, it will get to a horror show. And it will, honestly, become a horror show. So yeah, you've got, you're free, you can have sex, any problems to do with sex that come out of sex will be dealt with by the state for you quite free of charge. It's always dumped on the whole population, mind you, nothing is free. STDs will be dealt with as best they can. You just sit back and enjoy yourself, being a perpetual child with no responsibility, it's all taken care of for you. But along with all of this comes the agenda. It just comes. Because then you must accept more and more and more control over your lives in different areas and different fields. Then it will come down to, and they're floating that again too, voluntary sterilization. They're also floating, especially for men because men are bad apparently today, pills for men that will, chemical sterilization, really. Quite something.

And because society has been corrupted, intentionally, with lots and lots of pornography, even mainstream TV they're watching a lot of the time is loaded with stuff, it's weaponized, highly, highly weaponized. Hardly a thing, I'm sure, you can watch today that doesn't have all the subliminals, all the messages in it too that you're supposed to parrot. And with the right kind of writing, with behaviorists, all working on the same plays and dramas and so on, and the movies, they can make you believe anything. And cry at the wrong times when you shouldn't be crying at all. It can even make you feel guilty for something you've never done, in the world of fiction as you're propagandized and indoctrinated. It's a perfect science.

This is what they call utopia. And there are people out there today being brought up with the expectations that socialism is great for them. They're younger. They're generally selected with, on higher salaries than the general population, to be on talk shows on TV and things like that. They think it's just wonderful. They don't know much but they think it's all wonderful. Because to them, they can't imagine it ever being anything different than it is today, this very day, they can't imagine it. They will be in for a big fright at the right time down the road. They're to be taught, and helping to teach children, just go and play. Right through adulthood, just keep playing. And that's what you're supposed to do. You'll come to love your servitude. It's all here. It really is.

There's never been a time with so much entertainment dished out like you wouldn't believe. But all entertainment, as I say, is weaponized. The very fact you can soak a good chunk of your life away in entertainment, that in itself, even if it was all nice stuff to watch and good clean stuff to watch that wasn't damaging to your health, watching way too much of it is still a good chunk of your life. I used to look at my parents watching TV and apart from the fact a lot of people, it saved them from having to even converse with each other, that's a fact too. It was well understood from the beginning that would happen. But also, to watch them laugh, and sad, or serious in certain bits, then laugh again, I thought, this is happening across the whole country, watching this thing at the same time. What a power that is, isn't it? Tremendous power. And it's not accidental.

Now, you know, for instance that I've talked so many times about the fact that the sexualization of everything is a warfare technique of control. And also, to destroy family units and so on. And eventually, that everything would be allowed. Pedophilia wouldn't exist as a term because it would be allowed. And of course, it's being pushed right now, pushed, pushed, pushed, bit by bit. They've had judges in different countries even ruling that if a young girl, for instance had sex with someone much older, even though she's underage, then she was precocious and she knew was doing and yada, yada ya. There's been ones even in Latin America, well-publicized across the planet, the verdict was that it was consensual because she knew what she was doing. How many people know what they're doing when they're 11 or 12? Or the repercussions they're going to have for the whole of their lives?   On anything for that matter? But again, it won't exist as a wrong shortly. And full nudity, and full sexual activity, I mentioned back in the 90s too that, yeah, that will become standard fare. Definitely. And we've had incidences of that already. So it's here pretty well.

But I also knew the absurdity of the weaponization affecting people would have some amazing consequences. Well, I was looking through a paper today and there was an article about a woman who had turned her husband into the police, or at least his laptop into the police. He's a doctor and she'd had found child pornography, a lot of it on it. And apparently there's different categories of horrific, whatever that, however they grade it, I don't know how they grade it. She turned it into the police and he got arrested. But the thing is, I think she said something like she was looking to play something on the computer like Game of Thrones or something... Maybe I'm getting it mixed up with stuff, but I think that's what it was, something like that. And regardless of what it actually was, but the fact is… The only thing I remember about on Game of Thrones, because somebody sent me a disc once, was it was bizarre. But I could see right off the cuff, I think it was a dwarfish guy, having you know what with a woman, and then different angles of the same kind of thing with different people getting done. That was all I needed to know about it.

But you understand what I'm saying here is, here's someone who's already, through fiction, if this is the case, that has been contaminated, right, who then turns in someone, her husband, whose contaminated with something along similar lines, hm. So we're getting into degrees of what's wrong and what's right then, instead of saying the whole voyeurism thing is wrong. You see, everyone's taught to be a voyeur. That's the term you use for folk who watch other people having you know what, doing that. But now it's standard fare for everybody to watch. So how do you differentiate between degrees of standard fare? Or slight preferential change? Because that's what's getting used now across the board now, their preference is this and their preference is that, right. Then the next group come out and use the same argument, and that's how they get what they want. Because everything becomes muddied, there's no real clear-cut right or wrong anymore. And you can't even get the public ire up about something, that you disgust them, make them irate.

You understand, when you cannot protect children your culture is finished. That's one of the signposts it's finished. You can't go on protecting children if you're becoming addicted to variations of similar stuff being shown as entertainment, for goodness sake. This is standard entertainment to pass your time, to pass your years of way. Designed by experts. Hm.

Anyway, as I say, folk will do what they want. I'm not here to say they won't or that you should be stopped. I'm just saying that for those who want to know what's going on in the world you don't have to be like the rest. If you want to either regain your sanity or keep your sanity you have to start looking after it, don't you, like anything else, that's all. And don't go to pieces when you see the society collapsing around you, as it really is. There's organizations out there now getting pushed by big massive marketing companies doing great big experiments on the public, using the collective psychology and the bonding psychologies, and using all types of entertainments mixed in with it, making a lot of money by the way. I'll put one of tonight, this one's in Australia and you see the women there wearing hardly anything. It was all set up by a big marketing strategist, using psychological terminology to explain why they'll adapt to this and they'll fall for it and they'll go for it basically, and how it's fulfilling a social need, etc. etc.

The glitter and the grief: Another young victim is added to the death toll at Australia's summer dance parties as woman, 19, overdoses at FOMO festival – amid heated debate over pill testing - dailymail.co.uk / 12 Jan 2019

And exploiting anxieties for people who can't interact anymore and they feel they're left out basically. That's what they call it, I think fear of being left out. Something like that. Or not participating. But it shows you where it's all going as society has been broken. A lot of the functions in society have been broken. The functions in the relationships of men and women and all the rest of it had been broken. And are still under incredible attack. And of course, they'll be even fewer children born. That's part of the strategy and the goal actually for those who control the planet, as everybody has fun, nobody's having children. So…

FOMO - en.wikipedia.org

FOMO is the term used, fear of missing out. Generated by marketers and psychologists. And people fall for it, fall right into it. But anyway, I'll get onto some of the topics here because I've been prattling on too long. When I prattle too it's not a matter of complaining so much. It's a matter of just helping those who want to understand what's happening, that's all. If you understand what's happening you don't have to be part of it. If you understand the whys you might not fall into a lot of it. And you certainly can protect your mental health by understanding what's really going on. It's a good article there too, the FOMO one. I'll put that up. Because it shows you how easily led folk are when they think they're doing something different, but it's all been fabricated for them to follow. Always is that way, mind you.

Now, we have other things happening too. One is, I might put up some articles tonight about clusters of cancers that are affecting, they show up in youngsters quicker actually and there's some in the US, there's some in Australia, but clusters. And what's amazed me is to see the playing around the topic of the big corporations, and even the local governments. All governments are in bed with corporations because they get lobbied, and the get financial money too, they get money to run for elections, a lot of politicians, so you'll always get the same thing. But some of these children are obviously being raised in areas where there's highly toxic something in the area. One of them I think was to do with heavy, heavy pesticides. Another one was to do with waste from a big corporation that makes your big packing tapes and things, very, very top, popular, old corporation.

But when you get a whole bunch of children in the same years, or they turn 18 and all get brain tumors for instance, something big is going on. And that shouldn't be. It's just astonishing that the folks have to fight and fight and fight, and it's all through society, from severe things like this to even the lesser things like trying to find out what a local agency is doing in your area. That's how things are today. Everything is a fight, isn't it, in this corporate socialist system. I'll put some links up on that.

Another one too, it's interesting because I find that religious people can often have an insight because they meditate about pondering the past and things that have happened to societies that either have disappeared or lived through things that we're living through, in the past, ancient past. And even though they say that things are never, don't just repeat themselves, I think, as Mark Twain said, but they do tend to rhyme. In other words, the same cons go on too. But you'll find there's one here too and it says…

The Antichrist will control mankind through gadgets and the Internet as people 'fall into slavery' to smartphones, warns , leader of Russian Orthodox Church - dailymail.co.uk / 8 Jan 2019

I've seen articles like this before for years. I remember too, I think it was Dr. Scott his name was, used to be on the radio, worldwide radio and he died a few years ago. But he had good talks on that too. He was one of the first who was to use the Internet and computers in a big, big way to promote his own church, etc. And yeah, he was always screaming for money, like we all do, etc. But he did, he did say that this whole satanic Luciferian system could not be brought into being without the computer. And it's so right too. Because everything that you would have to be, that would predict control, would have to be done through constant gathering of information on every single person and monitoring them all throughout their lives in the world. And that's pretty well where we are. We always think of horns and fires and brimstone's, and that's why it's pooh-poohed. But the fact is, the most evil thing can come in under the most pleasant guise. That's how it comes in, because you never recognize it, that's why. It's an interesting little thing and I always find these things are always food for thought in many, many different ways.

Also, I'd like to put this one up too. The five eyes, that's the five agencies, the five countries I should say, that are all connected together. They're all really connected. I think they're all completely, [Alan chuckles.] almost all one corporation now with intelligence agencies. You cannot possibly keep things secret when you can't disbar anybody from any nation coming in, and with the right qualifications working their way up, becoming a citizen and getting into your intelligence agencies. Every country has obviously infiltrated and therefore they have to really be one. Of course, they are. On the high level. You can't keep folk out. And this one here says….

'Five Eyes' intelligence chiefs reportedly agreed to limit Huawei's growth - wired.co.uk / 17 Dec 2018

…that's a Chinese company, Huawei, and they're coming down on it. But it seems to be, really, it's just a battle between the big corporations to sell their own systems and have them dominate. It probably has got more to do with that than anything. They're trying to say that they've been hacking using the Huawei system. But I don't think there's any system that couldn't be hacked. That's just part of it too, isn't it? So it's really to do with domestic corporations wanting all the power I suppose. Let's be honest, who cares which country's going to dominate ultimately because all our countries have our own agencies spying on all of us, openly, so what does it matter?

I have to look at these articles and shake my head, like this one here…

Increase in student mental health issues means support must be efficient scotsman.com / 11 Jan 2019

Since the turn of the century, there has been a marked increase in the share of students struggling with mental health issues in universities across the country and although strides have been made in developing effective approaches to support students' (Alan: They call it…) wellbeing, (A: This is Scotland of course.) we know we have to do better.

(A: Well, when everything that gave you reason and purpose by tradition has been destroyed, you will have a problem with young people trying to find what life is all about and what the purpose of life is. Because a lot of the purpose has been destroyed. It's like psychiatry at one point, psychiatry used to think, well, if we just get everybody to be happy there will be no mental illness. As though you could just say, here's the happy pill and now that's it, now you've got, that would be your purpose, just be happy. There's more to life than this… this vague thing called happiness, like it's something you switch on or off. That's fine for the old gadgets, like ole Delgado, chips put in their brain and through a little button he could press and create different stimuli inside someone's brain. Like the Tavistock Institute, for instance, that's what they use there for a while. No, that's not happiness.)

(A: Here they go again with all their psychology that's supposed to help. And the terminology in this is amazing to me. Everybody today in a socialist system talks like a bureaucrat, like, or a corporate… a corporate bureaucrat I suppose, using the same terminology, like, 'well-being' and 'proactive' and all this rubbish, 'eh. They can't just talk normally human to human, hm.)

 . . . an enhanced safety network and investing in wellbeing.

Can't you just be human and talk like humans?   Hm? So, you read this rubbish here, this whole… and the whole thing is the same thing, you know, proactive this, proactive that. But they can't say what they're going to actually do, or even address the problems in the first place. That's the start of anything, address the problem, acknowledge you got them and acknowledge what led to this particular problem. [Alan chuckles.] That's where you start. It does help.

Another thing too is the corruption across the world is from top to bottom in most countries, I'd say. Psychopaths know that. They flood in and become the heads of the NGOs and become heads of corporations and heads of politics and government departments where the big money is. That's the psychopath. They know where the cash is. They know it's corrupt, but they don't mind because they feed awfully well on it. And they keep telling you, but they want to lock you up for saying it's corrupt. Naturally.

Six Mexican states are running short on gasoline, prompting frantic rush to the pumps
usatoday.com / 6 Jan 2019

(A: And why are they so short? You wouldn't believe the stuff that's getting stolen, the gasoline racket. Well organized crime obviously. But it says that they're trying to get more secure transportation methods. But it's because it's all getting stolen. Tankers, tank after tank after tank after tank are getting stolen. This is normal there apparently, they're saying, has been for a long time. Amazing. Amazing. Quite an article, I'll put it up for you. It says…)

. . . growing from $500,000 a year more(A: …theft in that area, that's what it was, more than $500,000 in the previous 10 years.) than a decade ago to roughly $3 billion in stolen fuel last year.

So, it's $3 billion in stolen fuel per year they're getting. Boy, that takes a lot of cooperation from all different levels of governance, doesn't it, including your police.

Another article, it shows you how they keep putting the same mantra, I'm sure it's just shoved out there to get the vaccinations going.

Sydney measles alert: (A: …a measles alert…)
Man with deadly disease (A: …deadly disease, right…) caught from a Thai child visits popular bars, a gym and a shopping centre
dailymail.co.uk / 10 Jan 2019

Deadly disease? We all used to get that, no one screamed and hollered about it. It wasn't deadly. Measles. We used to have measles parties. Somebody had measles at school, the parents would get together and bring the children and they'd hope you all get the measles, a natural measles. Not synthetic virus thing created in a lab, but a natural thing. And you'd have a lifelong immunity to it. So, there ya go. And I don't think this one was the German measles, this is a different type than was first recognized in Germany. The German type, that's different, that can affect the baby in the womb. But this is just normal measles as far as I can see. But they're calling it a deadly disease. Quite something, hey? To terrify you. Such childish propaganda isn't it, just be afraid, be afraid, get the injection, get vaccination.

48,000 Brits dead after worst winter in 42 years - dailystar.co.uk / 7 Apr 2018

That was for the last year I think it was. And it's not over yet, right. So, for this year it'll probably be worse. They're trying to hide a lot of the numbers now. But the folk are dying in their own homes. They can't afford the fuel taxes and the fuel itself, and don't have the fuel credits they call it now too. As they get you into the real socialist system of rationing, folks. Don't forget, your smart meters eventually are to be used to rational electricity to you as well. Folk don't remember much, do they, with short-term memory.

Now, I hate prattling on so fast with these things. But what I'm saying is, you're supposed to take this kind of stuff that I'm dishing out here as being all normal. Look around you and tell me how many times you're asked your opinion on anything that really matters, by any agency that's got power. It never happens. Every agency out there is designed to stop you altering anything. They don't want your input on anything. At all. Not at all. Even every agency, including government agencies now, have their public relations department and complaints department and they are trained there to say, oh, there-there, oh don't, oh my goodness, that's terrible, I'll look into that.

I just had an experience of that for a whole week, phoning every day to one of them to do with my mail. That's their job, you see. And each time that you talk you have to add another ticket, they call it, for a different problem. Because I've had two problems since the last one. I've never had to complain to them before about anything until this winter. Because now with this recent go-slow rotating strike they've had in the post office… And you couldn't even get the facts on that. Initially I just thought it was parcels but apparently it was letters too. And I'm posting off bills and then finding out I've got late fees on them and they're taking over a month to get through, these checks.

Now, when your government agencies, these are agencies, when they go down the tubes a lot of other things are going down the tubes at the same time, obviously. That was a mark of a first world country, was the efficiency for essential services. And you couldn't even get out of them, when you phoned them up, what the strike entailed. That was like sullen, angry, whatever, and then they tell you, oh, it's just parcels only. Now you find out it was letters too. So anybody out there who sent me letters and I haven't received them yet, maybe they'll turn up, who knows.

Because that's where it starts to go to isn't it, when things become later and later, you're saying, will I ever get them? You don't know anymore. You just don't know. And they won't tell you. Because government agencies now, they're not going to tell you anything. Someone apparently, also I was told by one supervisor, because I was given a notification of something received to be picked up in the main post office in Sudbury in town. And try to get an answer, they couldn't find out on the computer. I had the number for the whole thing of whoever it was. It wasn't in the place it was supposed to be. Then eventually I got a supervisor after about the fifth call, every day, you know, that is, every day of the week, who said it was for my keys for my box. And I said, I didn't order any keys for the box. And I was getting charged for them.

But didn't you complain? I says, no, I didn't complain about anything like that. And, do you got problems with your keys? No, I've got no problems with my box at all, you know. Well, somebody put it in. And then, the next day it's like getting gaslighted, for when their system's kind of screwed up. The woman said, but you got a call from us telling us what was going to happen about your keys. And I said, no, I didn't. She said, no one called to tell you you're going to get the key? I says, no. Well, they had it on the records that somebody called me. Well, who did they call? And they're trying to say that someone's impersonating me or something, because I never ordered this. You see what I'm saying? Everything becomes a big mystery.

And then when I phoned up yesterday. I think it was, oh, it's been resolved. I says, what happened? They won't tell you. Is everything classified here or something? What is this? You see what I'm saying? Is it just a matter of too many chiefs, you see, or what? But definitely you'll find that there's nothing out there to serve the public anymore. And that's what comes across loud and clear. Sad that, isn't it. That's what happens when you're going down the tubes. That's what it is.

And you told you're free, have lots of sex, and now you can get drugs dished out by and sold to you by the government, with shareholders that are ex-police chiefs and all the rest of it. And you wonder why the youngsters need mental health treatment? Hm?

Well, sorry for letting off the steam. But it's not me letting off steam, as I say, it's just explaining what modern life is about. And hopefully, and I do, I get through to a lot of young people to stop bashing their heads against the wall, whatever's wrong isn't their fault. They're not given a purpose anymore. What they're being given too is a lot of dysfunctional nonsense that'll help destroy a lot of them. And when they understand that they might stop drugging themselves to death, or drinking themselves to death, or at least blaming themselves, and start protecting their minds. It's awfully important in a weaponized system of culture with experts running it all.

For myself, Alan Watt from a very cold Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 20, 2019. Last night, because of global warming, when I left to go to bed at about two in the morning it was about -24°F, which is about -32° maybe on the centigrade scale. That's without a wind. It's been like that for quite a few nights in a row in fact. It's been one of the coldest winters, really, when you take a record for yourself. Don't listen to the stats they're constantly churning out there, you've got to keep your own records of them. It's quite amazing to see how cold, and how long the winters are now compared to what they were not so long ago. And yet, as you're living through all this you're told constantly, and come about February or March they'll tell us it was the warmest winter, probably, on record. That's what they generally do.

I've given talks about this before, by keeping my own records and comparing them, what they project it's going to be for today or tomorrow or whatever, and what I notice is, they never change their predictions. If they claim there's going to be a few inches of snow, you'll find it might be a foot or foot and a half and things like that, but they don't readjust it on the records to say that that actually happened, they just take their own predictions. So predictions are more important than the consequent facts.

Everything today is so incredibly politicized. Isn't it? The average person doesn't know that. That's the stunning part about it really. But everything is so politicized. There's hardly anything you read or hear on the electronic media of any kind that isn't incredibly politicized, and everything's out there with some agenda in view. Everything's agenda driven today.

I've mentioned it before, how we live in an age of personality cults. Folk don't even realize that even on your mainstream television the main anchor people that become, that are made to be popular, like personalities, they're really a corporation. Everything is a, everybody is a corporation these days. Politicians hire the marketers to give them a personality, an image to project it to the public in a kind of fake, fake reality, a kind of a fake image of how wonderful they are, etc. And it's all fiction. Everything is about appearance to the public. Perception management they call it.

We are in an incredible time today when everything is like that. Everything. The stories they put out today are often put out by marketing companies using the memes of today and the themes of today and the politicized agendas of the day, but the main motive is really to get publicity. Everybody this week has been prattling on about the latest Gillette toxic ads or whatever, men are toxic and masculinity is toxic and all that stuff. And it turns out the one who really put it forward is a person who was actually advertised on behalf of Gillette, in advertising themselves. So when you think of the free publicity they've got with everybody prattling on about it, for pro and con, etc… And again, it ties right in with what Adam Curtis talked about it with, the media is meant to get you angry and emotionally upset so's you'll all… because the more upset you get the more people will click away on the Internet in their chat rooms and their twitters and all the rest of it.

Gillette draws fire for #MeToo commercial that challenges 'toxic masculinity' - cnbc.com / 15 Jan 2019

But what a free publicity that is, isn't it, for a company that probably would not, maybe would have never thought about Gillette before, for instance, nevermind asked the question, what on earth is Gillette doing, a big corporation that's out to make an incredible amount of money, what's it doing in that area in the first place? Well, it's a great free publicity thing. If the big agenda right now was marriage, for instance, they'd be battering about marriage and oh wow, marriage, marriage, pro or con. Again, it doesn't make any difference, as long as that was the theme of today and everybody gets upset about it. You see.

But it's the same too with the personalities we're given as figureheads in charge, apparently in charge of countries. I gave out the articles before where politicians in the UK, and it's the same I'm sure in the US and Canada and elsewhere, actually have acting lessons given to them. They attend acting lessons and how to appear to the public, and deportment and how to stand and posture for all their photo ops, etc. Because nothing in the system you're living in today, it's all visual, etc., it's not real anymore. Maybe it hasn't been real for an awful long time.

You find too that a company like Gillette that's there for mass profit, right, with quite an amazing history. I remember a long time ago, many years ago an article in the paper, I think I maybe read it on the British side. It was a big award given to a man who taken over Gillette at that time, an ex-military fella, as the CEO or owner, I'm not quite sure which. But he turned it into the massive powerhouse it is today for profits. And it said in the newspaper how they did it was to vastly cheapen the life of each blade so that people would buy more and at the same time market it in such a way that folk would think it was wonderful and buy more of them, and lo and behold, it actually worked. That's what they said at the time in the newspapers.

And I thought about it too. Because you see, at one time people had open razors that would last a lifetime. They sharpened it on the strop, and you'd see it in old movies and so on. And then came in the closed razor, safety razor as they called it. You had one blade initially, that, again, would last quite some time. It was a bit thicker but high carbon steel and it would give you a lot of shaves. And everybody caught on the act, make them thinner and softer steel so they won't last as long, they'd be dull, and you'd buy more of them. But again, then you can make the people by the actual blade holder in fact, the rest of the whole thing more often too. That was part of the gimmick as well for a point. And they says, no, let's just make it a fancy looking holder and then give them a five blade pack and make the price awfully expensive. So they did it.

The same techniques basically as lightbulbs, I've talked about that too. Because there's an awfully good documentary put out years ago on built-in and planned obsolescence. [The Story of Stuff - youtube.com]Where the companies that used to make lightbulbs made them last for many, many years. Each bulb would last pretty well almost forever. And of course, if you're making a product and you've got a company to make them you would get to a stage, you'd think, where everybody got enough lightbulbs and unless you broke them by mistake they would last forever, so you're out of business. So the companies that made these bulbs met in Germany. They went from Britain and US and everywhere else over to Germany for this big meeting. All the makers of these lightbulbs decided to sign an agreement, come to an agreement where they'd limit the life to a certain amount of time. And even then, it was a much, much longer, much longer than they last today. And over the years they would agree again to shorten them even more and more and more, until of course towards the end you find that you put the thing in, it lasts a few days sometimes and just pops as soon as you switch on the lights. That's how you do it, the same with razor blades and everything else by different companies. They're all pretty well in the same con game. Then you have the double razor, you know, double blade razors and all the other gimmicks, etc. Whereas if you had a decent high carbon steel thicker blade it would last you an awful long time. And there you go.

But everything today is profit driven, big, big profit. At one time you used to have a lot of families, actually real families who had the controlling interests in the shares of their companies. Therefore, the head, the people who became the CEOs were of the family lineage. They used to have a kind of responsibility to the family name. They knew their workers too, a lot of the workers and they look after them, made sure they were okay if they were sick and so on, they'd make sure their pensions were okay and that kind of thing. And that was awfully good for a long time, the way that it worked with a lot of companies. Not them all, naturally.

Then along came the corporate raiders, as they called it. The corporate raiders found backdoors into companies to buy up excess shares and then get the controlling interests, kick out the family members of the board if possible, and then they started selling off the assets. All the things that functioned to make the companies what they were was sold off and stripped and made lean they said so they could resell it. The whole point was to resell them. And a lot of them went under as soon as they stripped them of their assets and so on. A pure incredible, a greed type… personified in fact, a greed personified, really, system as they ditched everybody. They got rid of older folk with the skills and training, etc. and sold off the assets. Until companies were folding all over the place eventually. But that was a get-rich-quick.

And since then, really, we've been in this era of the me generation as they call it, and winners and losers. Everyone's taught to be a winner. And as you lose old moralities that kept cultures intact, and we are, we're constantly losing our moralities of the old systems. And of course, the old system wasn't perfect, either, by the way. There was a lot of horror involved in the old system. Indeed. But what I'm saying is that there were values in amongst the people themselves that kept things just tolerable, and you brought in the human aspect of it where you couldn't just push people around for money's sake. Well, we've pretty well lost that today.

Back in the 70s I think it was, there was a book, maybe in the 70s or 80s, called The Corporate Man. It was about the era where they started to really, really push the corporations as big massive empires unto themselves. And you were part of a team, the teamwork, teamwork, teamwork. And of course, the neurologists and scientists and psychologists were on board with all this stuff to make sure, with all their different tests, that if they brought someone on board would they be the right person before they hired them. And they're pretty good at predicting who would go along with anything at all that the company did, even all the things that perhaps they shouldn't go along with, and they would swear unyielding alliance to these companies no matter what happens. And we never really got rid of that eventually. Now that whole kind of culture is spread into all of society. Milton Friedman too came out with his, oh, greed is good, greed is good, being taught through all business colleges and universities.

In such a culture of course as I say, it's winners and losers. With the Internet with the chat rooms and Facebook and Twitter and all the rest of it, everybody's a narcissist out there. It's all about me, as they say, it's all about me. And again, Curtis mentioned that too on some of his documentaries, where all the information is being gathered about you to reflect backto you, to advertise to you and suggest to you, it's all about you, you, you. Which boosts the whole idea of narcissism, that oh, I'm so important. Really. Really. But you've never seen such incredible arrogance on a personal level as we have today. We're losing our natural humaneness, and that's all through companies and corporations.

I've even found out this last little while, there's no point in complaining to a corporation about anything, whether it's a government agency or anything else. Actually, private ones are bit better to deal with, they'll try and get things fixed. Whereas government agencies are like civil service bureaus where they can't really fire them. And if you complain about something it doesn't matter what the problem is or who you happen to be, you're a figure, a number, a non-entity and you're dealt with as such. It's a there-there, dear-dear-dear. Nothing's going to happen really. Or if anything happens it'll be the wrong thing. Or they haven't listened.

It's like going to the doctors today, they don't want to know your family history. We are in Idiocracy, honestly, where they look at pictures, and the doctors look at pictures, and they'll even look on… [Alan chuckles.] I had an experience where one of them showed me something in a smart phone, I don't even have a smart phone, I don't need to, and which it was pointing out about the spine. Which I could write a book on the spine and I'm not kidding you. And I thought, why would you even point to this picture on a cell phone? It's just like Idiocracy. When in my mind I could just take it from my mind and draw it for you, perfectly. But that's what everything is today. And if you try to mention any kind of family history, which has always and always and always been so important, they don't listen to you, it doesn't matter.

Everything today is flowcharts. So if you go to the doctor or something with a problem, here's a problem, it goes to the next, and a little arrow points to the next flowchart, to the next flowchart, and the next flowchart and the next flowchart. But if you don't understand the family history side of things, which suggests that lineages have got a DNA or a chromosomal problem, perhaps, in the family lineage, or something that you're all prone to, then they'll definitely misdiagnose you. That happens all the time today.

Well, it's the same thing complaining, as I say, to different agencies, especially, especially with governmental agencies where they tend to pad the hierarchy, constantly growing all the time with people who work at the bottom, who worked their way up and come off the shop floor you might say to speak that is, and put them upstairs, and you end up with too many of them. And no one, no one, no one is going to risk their neck by maybe getting involved in any complaint or problem or whatever. Their job simply is to pacify callers with a there-there attitude and try and alleviate something. And often the alleviation will be a lot worse than the initial problem. I'm not kidding about that.

So that's where we are today. Everybody is a personality. Everybody's got their allegiance to whatever they work at, especially when there's big money involved. And the average person doesn't make the kind of money that the agency's for instance that are related to government do make, naturally. Therefore, since the whole point in the winners and losers society is to get up amongst the winners, then once they get up there as I say, they aren't really going to serve the public as such. They're not going to do the same way. No way. And they don't want their names mentioned, in case anything goes wrong on any particular thing and a complaint comes in about themselves, you see. That's how scared everybody is of losing their status, which goes along with the level of their paycheck.

But we're living in an age now, and it's not a matter of bemoaning it to an extent. It's a matter of factual reality. We go through massive transformations of society down through time and it doesn't mean that you're actually going into perhaps a better one. Although the different sociologists and there's even anthropologists involved now too. They even work with the military all the time when they go to invade countries, they go in with the troops. Because they know the ways, the Achilles' heels of different cultures and how to infiltrate, destroy and even threaten or torture them. This is the society we're into today, isn't it, where it's all professionals but the professionals are not there to really help you. They see you as numbers and figures and animals, actual animals to be manipulated. They do this and we do that and then you'll do this and… They, them, that's the public.

The biggest and most well-paid psychologists and neuroscientists, etc. and behaviorists all work for big top agencies in marketing, which also are related to governments and work with governments when required for big, big, big money, in order to prompt us and persuade us to go along certain paths. They also work and have done for a long time with teachers' associations for education. They create the toolkits and how to persuade the children collectively to come to the same conclusions as the teacher wants them to have on any particular topic. And how to even annul any individual responses from any actual individual child. It's all pretty well perfected, using peer pressure, even shunning techniques and things like that to make them conform. It's just astonishing. And that's through all of education today.

Then the same techniques are now used on the public, overwhelmingly so. You're seeing the politicization, as I say, of everything out there in order to control, to make you conform. It's nothing to do with idealism. Don't ever fall and say, well, they're really idealists so there's an excuse. No, they're not. The ones at the very top of this, who design all of this, [Alan chuckles.] their ideals are not your ideals. They want you to all conform and be controlled. That's what it's all about. That's what it's all about.

If society was free, really, we'd have individual opinions, individual everything out there. And people would not be at each other's throats because they were different than you. So they're forcing you to go along with everything, until you can't even have your own opinion. Or you'll be punished, sometimes in a more shunning type of way. Or else to the next step, which is coming, where they'll go for your income, or your job and get you out of work. That happens too by the way today. All the way to violence, and then that will come. Because the system today, run by those at the very, very top use all the unstable people below them to do the violent things to other people. Which also frightens those people who will not conform with the latest PC whatever it happens to be. And that's where we are with all of this.

I listened to a little clip by Christopher Hitchens's brother, Peter Hitchens, and he had done a talk show with someone from Australia. He was talking about the past and how he's lambasted at times about… His criticism today, Peter Hitchens, is that they're saying about him that he's bewailing the loss of a past. But he's not. He's bewailing the loss of some of the values, individual values that kept society going, even amongst the toughest times where folk would try to help each other out, out of just basic decency values, which are vanishing. That's really what he stood up for in the past. And why things are not necessarily on a great course for the future, nevermind the present.

But he did mention that he came out of University, in his day, I think he went to Oxford, and he came out like many of this peer group at that time, as Trotskyists, as Marxists and revolutionaries. They were all getting trained in University, that's what University is for. Never stopping to think, wait a minute here, this is the big Ivy League type of university, the real, real granite stone building type thing as opposed to the red brick, as they pooh-poohed the working-class type universities that were getting built at that time in maybe in the 1940s or 50s. And why would your establishment have brought in revolutionary Marxists and Communists into the country and given them teaching positions, in the areas where those in the elite who rule Britain… Maggie Thatcher talked about it when she was giving big, big grants to the private, top private schools, the posh schools as they're called, and University, she says, because that's where our future leaders come from, and they all meet each other there, and they'll all know each other as they grow up in politics and business and CEOs, you see. Why would the country be allowing that to, not just allowing it but encouraging it to happen?

They're not dumb. There was never a country more spied upon ever and monitored than the UK. A country that ran an empire didn't just sit back and let things happen. Even though they were rapidly losing the Empire with a massive debt being incurred from borrowing from the US banks during World War I, which you could never pay off, and then World War II rolled along too. They still had that same control system embedded in the universities, but they allowed all this to happen. So there's Peter Hitchens, and his brother of course, who became a radical far-left pretty well communist working for The Nation, and it wasn't until Peter Hitchens saw what was happening in the Soviet Union, towards the end of it, he was there when it fell or supposedly fell. It didn't fall, actually, it was just transformed. If those who remember at the time Gorbachev gave a speech, I think Eric Margolis, if I remember, who is a good reporter, he did, he covered that speech and he wrote it down and put it in the newspapers. Gorbachev at that time said that,you'll hear shortly that communism is dead. He was talking to the nation, the Soviet nation, and he says, don't believe it. He says, we're simply transforming into the next branch, international.

If you're wondering why the West, especially the US perhaps, is financing and leading the charge for a form of socialism, but it's a corporate socialism with corporations at the top running the systems below. Very much, by the way, very much like China, isn't it? Because China knows, they can give you everything you want in China. Everything you want. And Hitchens said the same thing. And they are, my goodness, you wouldn't believe what they can buy them, what they can do in the cities in China where the money is. The prices of even facelifts and things like that are so cheap and the youngsters all go in for mass plastic surgery, things like that. But what you cannot have his freedom of thought. You must conform with the ideas and opinions according to the party norm.

Well, it really isn't much different… If you stop thinking in terms like communism, capitalism and corporatism and so on, it's all the same, folks. I've said before, you can have the same brass bands playing the same national tunes and marches as long as you want, but you've got to remember, you can change incrementally quite a long distance, even face the other way, in one generation quite easily, and done so slickly that folk don't even recognize it. But when you see the same signs and symptoms of a system, across the world… and you'd better believe it is the same system. We're still battling the same nonsense today of, oh, they're right-wing, they're left-wing and they're liberal and all that nonsense. It's the same agenda. Just like Jefferson said, when you see the same agenda continuing between changes of the house, meaning parties of politics in government, they're continuing the same agendas, then know you're under tyranny. The trick is to make you, to appear like they're different. But they're not different at all.

The same agenda is in the UK when it happened, actually have happened. Look at Cameron for instance, he's supposedly conservative, what a joke that was. He was more liberal than anybody. Tony Blair was more conservative, with warmongering. And the big corporate giveaways, which rewarded him awfully well by the way, for his wars, don't you think? Have you seen lately all the houses and real estate he's collected throughout England, and abroad probably too? But, huh, you don't get that with just being a little Prime Minister, a public servant. Hm. Yeah. Then he was picked up by J.P. Morgan and elevated to the head of the group to do with, The Quartet they called them I think, The Quartet, to do with managing corporations across the Middle East.

So as I say, nothing really is what it seems to be, unless you want to look at it. Remember, most people, and it's not their fault, haven't got a clue what's going on. They're too busy having fun. And if you interject and say, well, would you like to know why this is this way, in whatever it happens to be, they'll call it, you're a downer. They don't want to be reminded of these nasty and unpleasant things. Like debt, for instance, don't talk about debt. Don't talk about, for instance, a Great Depression that happened before, for some reason it could never happen now, you see. Hm. But they can't tell you why it could never happen now. They really do think they're living in a kind of a type of free society where special invisible people above them are managing it all perfectly, on their behalf, like bureaus and bureaus and bureaus of saviors who just live in little offices in sky buildings or something taking care of everything in their lives for them, because they love them. That's as far as it goes.

It's astonishing, really, how little thought goes into asking questions. At least I find that. I've always found that, I suppose. And I did analyze even when I was young, I thought, well, the conditions in Britain were so bad for most of my life. They got a little better about the late 80s I think as the governments allowed more money to be printed up. They allowed credit cards to be thrown out across the board to everybody for the first time. At one time you couldn't get those things unless you had collateral to back any kind of loan, including credit cards. That's how they got a lot of the country through such incredibly hard times as the deindustrialization went on and on and on for years. Without telling the public even why. There were agreements they had signed with the EU to completely deindustrialize the UK.

Everything is secret, isn't it, when you're dealing with agencies and government bureaus and so on. It's always secret, they can’t tell you anything. And they won’t tell you anything. But people are told that they’re there to represent them. Well….. for who? Who is representing you? For what? They’re there to represent you for what? So we go along with this game of pretense, and we have to participate in the pretense, and you’re supposed to vote so that someone can rule you. And again, a marketing company will create the image of this person or this party that you’re going to vote for. They’ve been doing that for, long before I was born, that same nonsense. It’s really amazing to me that people just don’t ask the right questions.

How many folk do you know have even asked why your countries are always at war somewhere across the planet? Why? And don’t take the glib answer, oh well, it’s to stop some genocide over here or there or whatever. Really, is that what it’s… we’re just out there to do good for people and stop them killing each other, is that what it’s really about? You’ll find our countries are behind most of the killing across the world, and the plundering still today of the resources of different countries, way more than any little tyrant is doing. The first thing you need for war, and that includes localized war, without even the term war being used because we don’t use that very often, we’re policing, we’re policing actions. Just change the appearance of something, perception management again, to disarm your logical process of thinking.

You’ll find as I say that, I mean Tony Blair is a good example, only one of many. The Daily Mail had it years ago, years after the invasion of Iraq and elsewhere, where Tony met with the heads, the CEOs of big oil corporations, and the US ones too, and they divvied up the oil fields across Iraq before they did the invasion. But what was the guff that they gave to the public for the necessity for invading Iraq? Well, suddenly Saddam Hussein, the guy who had served the West all that time, was a bad man. Bad. He was the world’s demon, for goodness sake. And that’s how you do it. George Orwell’s 1984,who are we at war with today? Who’s the enemy today? …as they change the gun sites all the time, back and forth, until you’re lost.

But behind it all is always profit for big corporations, always. Always, always, always. The whole idea with Russia for years now, is because there’s a group in the Middle East involved with a group in the US and in Britain, who want to have the rights of the oil fields all through the Middle East and into the east of Europe. And naturally, Russia is also, was also laying oil pipelines across, in fact, they were feeding a lot of the gas to Europe of course, and that all got canceled supposedly because of the last fracas of propaganda. So it’s always to do with corporate warfare going on. That’s what it’s about. Nothing to do with ideology. Russia’s got the same successful psychopaths as we do running us behind the scenes. Governments are almost there to rubberstamp things on behalf of the big corporations today.

The big corporations use every technique of control. Again, persuade the public. The first thing you must do for warfare is basically get the public support on your side. For anything you want to do, if you want to invade and steal whatever, don’t say we’re going to steal, we’re going to help these folk over yonder, that’s what you say. It’s not difficult to do. And because you’re raising a public to be gullible, believing they’ve got an honest society, even though there’s no signs of it, they keep telling you there is, and so why would they lie to you? Decent folk will say, well, it must be, there must be something to it, for goodness sake. And the fallout from it all achieves further goals and that’s what people don’t realize too. The mass migration, remember, into the whole of Europe was discussed before Tony Blair got the war going with Britain involved in Iraq. That was part of the agenda, the mass migration into Britain and other countries. So there are many agendas being fulfilled here. And it’s not by chance. Not by chance at all.

In other words, what I’m saying to you, I’ve given talks on this many years ago about how history is written and it’s never, nothing sudden in history, unless it’s something out of nature that was unforeseen. But anything to do with human involvement means there’s been planning involvement. It doesn’t simply happen by itself. There’s never a spontaneous war on any grand scale. It takes years of planning to get it all going and to get all the logistics worked out, etc., before you even make the first move. Big, big battle plans. But for the public you are taught today that everything was just fairly sudden. Utter nonsense. Your history books are written in advance, and that’s why the initial propaganda, no matter how absurd it is at the time, and even more absurd after the facts and after time has passed with more evidence coming to light, is that the initial propaganda will be stuck to like concrete and everybody involved at the top, as they stand together and they close ranks, will never ever vary their opinions. They all know what to say and do to get, keep on their own little power jobs and to stay up in a position of wealth. That’s how precise and total everything is today.

History must be taught afterwards the way it was planned, to be taught, before the event took place. The same with World War I, and the whole of other wars as well for that matter. It's so fascinating to see how the group, the Milner group that became the Royal Institute of International Affairs / CFR across the planet, for the global enterprise system based in London, England at the time. It's so interesting to read The Anglo-American Establishment by Professor Carol Quigley who was given access to their own historical records. They have their own historical records for goodness sake. They also have members who write the history for the public, which, and it's different. [Alan chuckles.] But for accuracy's sake, for their own members, they have archives of the real histories as it happened, going way back. Quigley said it was so important, their function in history and altering and planning history, and planning the future, was so important that the world should know about it. Then, Tragedy and Hope went too far, the group that he belonged to kind of panicked and they took the plates back for the book for printing and didn't print more. Although, luckily, enough had been printed that could be copied. And they are accurate when you compare them.

But the other book, The Anglo-American Establishment, giving you the history of this group and how, they didn't actually start in the 1800s but they changed their name in the 1800s. In fact, it was so secretive they change their names even amongst the degrees of membership from the low to the top. He shows you how they worked in circles and how some of the circles would inter-lap, like Chinese puzzle rings, and where they inter-lapped, those members there, we would call technocrats today. They were the, they worked to do more of the doing, the persuading other groups on how to go along with the doing of things across this Empire that they were creating.

They also planned wars with South Africa to take over South Africa from the Dutch and settlers, the Boers. They planned an attack on the Boers. Members of this group attacked the Boers and they took along with them a Times reporter. Because they owned newspapers, the members owned the newspapers in their day too, as they still do today. The reporter's job was to give a fake account of this raid on the Boers and have it as the Boers attacking British settlements. That would give the propaganda, justification for Britain then, force them to an extent to then send troops in there. Then the troops would police the areas, fight the Boers, and they had the Boer War out of it. Then a few, a handful in London that really ran the Empire and the resources of it all, would then grab the diamond and gold fields of South Africa, the diamonds and gold. That's how it was done.

Quigley goes through it and a lot of the members involved in The Anglo-American Establishment. It's quite fascinating to read it. When you realize what he's telling you, and in his position too, what he's not telling you, he could even go further than that. But he did say that for the last hundred years or so they pretty well had been instrumental in steering the course of history. Well, it hasn't stopped. It hasn't stopped. And depending on how you look upon this agenda, if you're an insider naturally you're going to get rewarded for going along with it all. And you do. Doors will open if you are tapped to go into the CFR. You can't go and apply for it, you're tapped. They've already sussed you out to see if you can keep your mouth shut, how trustworthy you are, how much influence you can have in your little circle. Then they bring you up and put you into different positions. They're all through the civil service of government as well and the military too, at the top. And for the military, they don't often even have to serve much time in the field, if any at all, they're just rammed up through the ranks pretty quickly. Once they're up to the top ranks they know all the contacts, the military-industrial boys. Then they're given jobs, the CEOs at times, or go-betweens to lobby on behalf of the military-industrial complex. It's quite a system. But it's a completely different reality than what the peasants are taughtat the bottom, that pay for everything, and fight for everything, and do the fighting. It's vastly different. Vastly, vastly different. So perception management is incredibly important in the way that we are run.

I've always mentioned in my talks, at least I hope I have, that I don't give you nostalgia for the past. But there's no doubt about it, the natural humanity you'd see from people even in times of incredible poverty, and the UK was incredibly poor after World War II. And they were incredibly rationed right up until the 1954, I think, and even then, lots of the food was still getting taken out of British farms and sent abroad to feed Europe. It was a devastating war. Devastating. But during it all you still found decency amongst different people. But you'd also find a lot of viciousness amongst those who'd had maybe a few generations of poverty. Because to survive people can become awfully hard, as well, naturally. But it was the balancing out of it with the decency there too that got people through it.

I remember when people didn't own their own homes. I mean, most folk, say, in Scotland rented Council housing. They couldn't afford their own homes. A socialist country, socialism, as far as I was concerned, was the suppression of people, hchhh, not for people to be able to afford and to by anything. They were kept at the bottom level with wages controls, prices controls, high taxation. And that's how it was, set almost in stone that way. It was terrible. Amongst it all you had ridiculous public relations exercises of propaganda, run again by psychologists and marketing companies, on how wonderful the youth were today, they had all this chance in the pop business and rock business and so on, and we should all be happy because you had good music. Well, it was to give you the amount of fake idea for the change of the future. Because they weren't raking in the millions of bucks, like two or three different top groups. Of course they weren't. They were lucky to get jobs, a lot of them at that time.

As I say, so anyway, Peter Hitchens, he did mention that he's not nostalgic for all of the things of the past. But he did mention they had basic values and there was a basic remnants of a culture that came from what is hated, and that was at least Christian values, how to treat each other. That came in to good effect to get folk through the hard times. Neighbors would often, I remember, help each other out to pay the rents. Very frequently. That was quite normal. You didn't have the mass commercialization of purchasing and buying because most folk bought everything secondhand, that I knew. It was the same across a lot of places in England too, a lot of big, big cities, etc. People were just broke, and somehow, they survived and ticked along basically.

The so-called Empire thing, that was for Hollywood to play that up, the wonderful Empire, they had. Because the general public didn't profit from it at all. They paid for it all through their taxes, to be armed and policed by soldiers and all the rest of it. But that's what it was. Nothing really changes, just the perception of how it's managed today, and the constant reiteration that you're free and you've never been so free, as you're the most surveyed and surveilled society in history. It's incredible, 'eh.

But anyway, I didn't even mean to go there today. I was just going to prattle this off, a whole bunch of articles. But what gets me is, that most folk won't ask questions. The youth are always catered too much more than the adults too. Because the youth, and I really mean this, with anthropology and psychology and the milestones in life and psychodynamics, and all the rest of the stuff working on us all the time, they know exactly through the culture industry how to cater to you. For the young folk it's sex and hedonism and narcissism, and just fill their heads full of it, fill their heads full of it, get lots of this, party, fun, sex. For the people who do get hitched, which are declining all the time naturally with all the anti-marriage propaganda coming out there too, except for maybe single parents, the state has become the supplier of goods and finances to single parents and has done for an awful long time. And none of this happened because of pressure from the bottom, folks. It came from the top.

It always comes from the top. It suits the banking system, the international banking system, the big, big system that really runs the world through its networking and its circles and circles, like Quigley said. Awfully important to understand it. Because the same group that the Milner group belong to that became the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Council on Foreign Relations, Pacific Rim associations and all the other associations, it's all the same group, gave you the United Nations, the World Bank, the Bank for International Settlements, the International Monetary Fund and a host of other debt creating systems that profits from the banks that you'll pay off, they own them all, and the central banking systems across the world.

Because money was to be the new military power, the new form of military to control everybody's lives. It's been awfully successful, isn't it, when you think about it to the present time. Because when you're getting some of it, even though it's all debt base money people can live a bit better on a materialistic basis than they've ever done before. But again, they've been taught that somehow this candle will never burn down. Although it's designed to. Because once the whole world is under the same system in comes austerity. And just like they're teaching children today, in school now, to worship the planet earth and they must sacrifice for the planet earth, which is another big front organization for total control of the planet and how you live. Right down to even if you get born if they need you, eugenics, etc. Because that's all part of the same system run by the same group. Always was. And they've got all the time in the world to implement it.

They're awfully precise now with their 50-year plans and 100-year plans and what they can achieve, and different goals along the way, all the milestones. They know exactly what they can do now. And you will see all these things come to pass. The Brave New World of Aldous Huxley, that didn't appear out of thin air, Huxley mixed with all the eugenicists. He mixed with the class that were the controllers and the professionals that dealt as controllers on behalf of those who owned the planet and the finances of the day. He was well aware through many, many discussions from, and growing up, at the dinner table, etc., that through psychology and training and behaviorism, and repetition, you could train up and raise the public to believe and behave in any way that you want them to behave and believe. And that's exactly what they've proven over and over again.

Most people don't have their own mind. They have no reason to question things if they are basically materialistically happy and they're getting along in life with, as they say, the substitutes for everything else given to them. But from the beginning I never came out to talk to the general public. I just knew there was enough people out there asking questions who didn't have the answers. A lot of people, you'll find, were punishing themselves. They couldn't fit in. They knew lots of things were wrong in the world. They didn't know how to get verification of it and the knowledge of it, and what was going on. And maybe a lot of them, some of them were brighter than other people perhaps and if you don't get the answers and you're demanding questions, you might turn in towards yourself and destroy yourself through either alcohol or drugs or both. And I'm glad that down through the years people have got in touch with me to say I helped them get over that track.

It's very hard to explain to someone where this thirst comes from, this thirst, you know. The most important thing in life is, why… why? It's never been asked. Or, you're given ersatz answers, you're getting fake answers from the establishment who crush any alternative facts. I'm not talking about reasons, I'm talking about facts. And that's important to know as well.

Again, if you go into Lord Bertrand Russell, another Lord, remember. And folk never question, why are the Lords, would be they working to create this thing called socialism? Because they don't have any affinity for the general public, the common people. Just like George Bernard Shaw didn't. But he had the same attitude as Shaw, and he worked in the same organizations as Shaw. That the general public would have to come, everybody individually, to the socialist organizations, run on behalf of the elite, the elite who should rule you, and you'd have to justify why they should allow you to stay alive and live in a socialistic system. George Bernard Shaw said it. His voice is up on video out there, on audio, if you want to listen to it. That hasn't changed.

Russell also said that eventually, hopefully, he said, anyone will be able to persuade anyone else of anything they want. He's talking about with the right techniques and power behind them. Well, guess what folks? Look around you today. What's getting pushed? Hm? And they have everyone fighting everybody else. Because you fall for opinions, you immediately take sides. Rather than say, wait a minute, who's giving us this? Why are you giving us this? What is the final agenda with this? It's too easy by using emotion to get them all fighting rather than asking. Isn't it?

Remember too, before I finish off this talk that you can get the books and discs @.com. You can also donate to me. You can find out how to do it if you look into the websites. You'll see all the sites I have listed there @.com, you should take note of them in case any of them get pulled eventually, you just never know. Or if I just decide to cut some out because of the cash problems, everything takes money. And I was never out for money, otherwise I'd be selling you all kinds of gadgets and gimmicks and so on. Or magic truths. I could give you lots of the answers to what's called magic, but I wouldn't sell it basically.

Most folk want mysticism as opposed to facts. It's much easier to escape from reality that way for folk, rather than to really go after knowledge. Because if you go after knowledge, then you're left with decisions on what you're going to do in life. And will that mouth of yours stay silent down the road? Or won't it? I've said before, and it's amazing to hear that the talks I've given from even 20 years ago being reiterated by other people, and even in what's elevated high places you might say. I've said, remember that you're the only material, just like the builders were always talking about, you are the building material and you're the only building material that you can be sure of. Start with yourself instead of grabbing the latest flag or banner that's waived in your face for some cause or another. Start with yourself. Once you've basically built yourself then you see through all the cons that are out there. Then you can be a more complete person. And less angry perhaps.

Because you will certainly, if you follow all the stuff that's dished out on a daily basis to you by the marketers, including those who run all the rebel sides of all kinds, everything out there is either a color revolution or something else on the go, isn't it? Once in a while you have to ask yourself, what are you rebelling against? Who wants you to rebel? Now we have this sanitized version of it where every country will issue permits for your little demonstrations and you go and protest whatever it is, hold hands and sing whatever it is you sing, and then you all go off and have your pizza and coffees like you've done. It's almost like a hobby now in some big cities across the world. It really is, isn't it. It's a nice hygienic safety valve for everybody. Because everyone now is being pushed into different groups that you must belong to. You must belong to something or you're not complete, apparently. But again, with a lot of folk now it's the only socializing they get. They can't even talk to each other, even when they're standing next to each other, without texting. M-hm.

Anyway, I'm gonna put up some articles tonight, I was going to prattle on about them actually, but I just wandered off as I always do. One of them was about the libraries and how the libraries are churning out, and they have been from the 90s in Canada and elsewhere, you'd see massive book dumps and garbage dumps of awfully good books as they were, they call it weeding, by the way. Like all organizations today they're international, no one in any country in any particular job profession or anything does it according to that country or culture. They're all, they all connect, you see it being done across the world, oh, they're doing this, let's do it too. But your culture, your history is often getting trashed. And along with it, the weeding as they call it, and it's taught, they call it weeding, every top librarian knows it too. And some of the salaries of these librarians in the US blows you over. Really. Honestly. Wherever you get taxpayers money at work, you're getting plundered, folks. That's where the money is these days, isn't it?

But yeah, the books are getting, they've been getting chucked in the rubbish dumps and the whole bit. There's a lot of politicization involved in it, naturally, of things that they simply want to disappear. Tragic. New Zealand's doing it. Australia does it. Canada's done a lot of it, already. Still doing it. The US is just doing it at an awful rate right now. Quietly from the public. They don't want the public knowing about it because you might start getting complaints about it. I mean, this is public money that bought all these books, remember. And a lot of them aren't even selling them off. They're literally, they want them all ditched. There's a lot of stuff now that must just disappear from history. The memory hole, as George Orwell called it. So I'll put those links up for those who maybe are curious to find out, wonder where all the books in the library, and a lot of reference books too, simply went to. As they give you new histories all the time. Everything is remade again.

So I'm sorry to prattle on tonight but as I say, I didn't mean to go here in the first place. But once you get started sometimes it just happens. As I say, the main thing is not to repeat just stories, etc. It's to do some thinking at times, hopefully help other people out who are asking questions too. A lot of young folk are, and not just young folk but a lot of folk are asking the questions. And they've been running… I used to compare it to being… the awakening process, something sometimes stirs you, something might've lit the fuse basically, that starts you off really searching. It's like coming out of the tunnel onto a field. And the field is laden with minefields everywhere. Everywhere you've got posts with signs that say, come here, here's the answer, oh no, it's over here, here's the answer. That's how confusing it is. Often deliberately so, too.

Because those who control the world, as you're trying to break free, they'll wrap you off into some sideline, immediately, if they can. There's nothing in reality that's there by chance. Really. Information from the beginning of even writing, or even before writing but with writing came along, it was used from the beginning with conformity of thought, with political and control motives behind things, in many, many areas, not it all, but getting worse and worse, right up until the invention of newspapers. Now it's of course, the Internet and television and newscasts and newscasters. And the newscasters themselves, again, are corporations, a lot of them, with their big PR companies and the agent, their own agents that negotiate for their pays and all the rest of it... that don't do anything for free. Nothing is spontaneous, folks. Big money is behind them all. Big, big money. Millions. And teams of writers at times too. Teams of them.

So question everything and start thinking for yourselves. Hopefully. And perhaps like all down through history, there are always those who are around, a few, who can pass the knowledge on to the next group, who sometimes have to go and hide themselves in some generations, because knowledge can be dangerous. And those who control everything have always known that.

So for myself, Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on January 27, 2019. First of all, I'd like to welcome everyone who tunes in and listens to these podcasts for years and years and years, and for newcomers too who… We forget that, every year there's another bunch that will hit a certain age and are looking for answers to what ticks in the world, and what makes them tick, and makes everybody else tick at the same time. Because we don't get the answers. In fact, we have so much data thrown at us every day to try to keep us from looking at really what's happening on an individual basis. And it has to be individual basis, because after all, it's you that wants to know, right, hopefully. It's not we. It's you.

And you have to do your searching as an individual. Because it all reflects on you and your own behavior, your own desires, what you want, what maybe you don't want, just like advertising does, and what it's all about. And you come to the conclusion of course when you really go into it, that there's a massive machinery, you might say, that dumps all this data on a daily basis on you… to control you basically, and to keep you from looking at areas that perhaps you should.

Because after all, it takes time, and it's time… You understand, time is an awfully important thing in life, it's all you have. Really, it's all you have. And when you think about the time, and I've mentioned this before, that you look at when you're growing up your parents, I used to look at my parents watching television and it was like watching people suddenly smiling at a thing on TV, looking serious at a thing on TV, and then suddenly looking depressed or angry at some tragic seen on television. It came across very evidently on the watcher's expressions. And I thought, what a power, what a power this is. And of course, even Spielberg had said the same thing eventually, that it's the greatest powerful tool ever developed.

Because it can, it can train people to believe anything that the masters want them to believe. If you add music in the background when you're putting across different documentaries, with the dah-dum, solemn, dah-dum, dah-dum, dah-dum. That's how they show them to children at school, these documentaries on the environment or whatever it happens to be. They can make anything seem possible, and all humans seem utterly evil to the little children, it sticks in there, it's all done by professionals you understand, nothing left to chance.

I remember years ago too, that someone, a talk show host phoned me up with another fellow who worked in Hollywood, who was putting out information and collecting data on mind control basically through video and music and how it's put across, etc. We had a long conversation and he put that into his own book, etc. But I've always known it, and I think lots of people have always known down through the ages these particular things, just by studying other people and how all these things affect you yourself. It's true that, for instance, a good Hollywood movie can switch folk from anger to tragedy to utter fear, or horror, into laughter very quickly, by triggering your emotions. And that's a tremendously impressive tool. It works very well on most people.

You have to sometimes stand back and separate yourself from being most people to study these things and analyze them. When you analyze them you'll really see how much indoctrination goes in to what's called entertainment. That's where you get all your ideas from and your updates given to you on what's okay to talk about or think about or say, and what's not. It works very, very well on most people. But it never stops, you understand, it never stops. There's hardly a thing out there today that's entertaining that's not full of messages. It's highly weaponized.

I've mentioned before too that even authors of children's books, regardless of the age, are paid by cultural departments and governments to insert all the PC updates and things that they want that child to grow up to believe, or even behave in a certain way. It's quite interesting to see how much of your tax money goes into brainwashing you. You get the simple things like Bertrand Russell talking about the techniques in use, in use in the 1940s and 50s and how already, he said, the techniques are really advancing so quickly, in behaviorism psychology and so on, he said, that eventually anybody will be able to convince anyone else of anything. He's talking about the controllers of course. And he was quite explicit in different areas of control over the general population, he was all for that.

Socialism, remember, was born out of the minds of the intelligentsia. And the intelligentsia were a part of the elites. It's the best form of control that they could think of, a uniform control. Individuality, for the masses that is, was taboo. They could never predict what an individual could do. And, an individual, like Russell said, that couldn't be won over and who had a good intelligence, couldn't be won over to the crew who rule the world basically, the dominant minority, and accepting the scholarships into the Ivy League schools, the old ones, old schools, and refused to part ways with their own family, of the lower classes for instance, they could be dangerous because they could, they'd have the intellect and understanding and study abilities to put across information to the general population, and they could unseat those who ruled.Therefore, he said, they'd have to be eliminated. And he meant killed, literally, if they wouldn't join them. But most, he said, could be bribed over, and the doors would open for them and they'd go up through the ranks. It's awfully impressive the list of people down through the last 150 years who got up the ranks that way, in all walks of life. Still very much so today. Maybe even more so today than ever before.

But anyway, that's only part of the control system. Most folk still think they're living in a free society. That's really wonderful to see how such intense indoctrination can work so effectively, isn't it, when you can live with two opposing opinions in your head, on a myriad of topics, and believe in them both at the same time without thinking you're crazy. Because that's how we really are. When I talk about the organizations that boast about controlling the system, the technocrats, the Trilateral types, and the Council on Foreign Relations, Royal Institute of International Affairs, Royal Society, all the other ones that have got their talk show hosts now constantly using my archives and bringing it out although they never mention where they get it from. But it's fascinating to see it in your face today, the techniques are so prevalent.

Some countries like Canada have even had them come on television occasionally, rare occasions, like the CFR, taking the credit for drafting up and being behind the whole NAFTA deal, the North American Free Trade Agreement, which is now, they've changed the name but it's the same organization exactly. Their goal ultimately was the unification of the Americas, complete, including the Caribbean countries as well by the way. And it hasn't stopped. Back in around 2005 they came out with a lot of this stuff, with some of the main players and I think Mr. Axworthy in fact was one of the members that was on television at the time talking about it quite openly. And other reporters too, because lots of reporters of the mainstream, top reporters, not them all, but some of them are definitely members of the CFR.

We can read about it from their own writings. You can even get some documentaries put out by them on video, from the Council on Foreign Relations, about America's ruling establishment, meaning the CFR, by the CFR, boasting about it. And yet still people will think that somehow we're free to make our own decisions and that somehow the future is just developing by itself. And it's never been that way. When you think that, long before we were born, most of us, that the same organization was on the go with its British grandparent running the European side of it all, the Royal Institute of International Affairs. The goal was always the same of a system of control over the entire planet, and first setting up the European conglomerate union, trading block, including Scandinavia, and then the American one for all of the Americas, and then the far Eastern bloc. And they've got organizations, parts of their organizations dedicated specifically to that particular agenda. You can read about it from their own writings.

You've never had a vote on this anywhere in the world. Most folk are still oblivious that this organization, that puts their members into politics, puts their members into all the top bureaucratic positions in every country, that runs the media pretty well in every country because all the top owners of the papers, etc. are members, and editors, etc. They decide what you're going to hear and what you will believe. And then television too, it's the same kind of thing on the newscasts there. So how on earth can you possibly believe that what your vote is supposed to do, to change the world, and the same agenda will continue regardless of what color of party, red, blue or whatever they call themselves, happen to be in power. It's always stunned me to watch it.

Remember too, it's a legality in a sense. Everything is very much a legality in the system where you've got to vote. When you vote, legally you're giving someone authority to rule over you. And these are people you don't even know. You'll get the marketed image of the person put across to you. But as you know, they're pretty well all figureheads who sign whatever's put in front of them. And the top bureaucrats in all governmental positions and important people were placed there, who really know their business and they work there their entire lives until they retire, they are the people who draft up all this stuff and manage all the stuff behind the scenes for the politicians. In politics, as Carol Quigley said, he said, they're allowed a certain amount of competition between parties, he said, but in reality, it doesn't matter, the top members of every party belong to the same one organization, the CFR.

So therefore, as I say, we're living in a bit of a fantasy, in a dualistic fashion, believing that your vote counts and that somehowyou're making history. You see, everything works the same way, the future is planned, as I've mentioned before, by those who control it today. George Orwell knew the same thing. And that's how you keep a hold of history, by making it happen, what you want to happen. You could even write the books in advance, how it's supposed to happen. No matter how many flaws it has in its actual working out, that are discovered eventually and found out to be, they'll never change their plan or the original story.

It's kind of like where I live here in Canada. I've been keeping my own records of temperatures for the last few years, and snowfalls for instance in winter, and I'll often find, especially since the snow started here in September, last September, and it still looks the same today, I mean it's just freezing. Last night it was -38° on the Fahrenheit scale. Once it hits about -40° it's about the same on both scales by the way. This is quite normal here now. And the winters are getting longer and longer. And more snow. And a lot of the days, in fact, the temperature doesn't get above zero Fahrenheit, in this last while. But if you keep your own records and you listen to the forecasts, you'll find what they predict is going to happen, even if they're 20° higher than what actually happens, their particular one is going to stick as though it had happened after the fact. They don't change it and say, well, we're wrong, here's what actually happened.

Because after all, were supposed to be going into global warming, right, therefore you'll find that the real weather, the actual weather is not cooperating with the agenda. It doesn't matter. It really doesn't matter. Because most people will, after a month or two, maybe in May or June or so, when they're told that the last winter was the warmest on record, which it's actually the coldest on record as far as I can see, they'll go by the official report. And that's known too, that they do take official reports on things. They're taught to believe in experts. That's why you get so many presented to you. If a new field was found tomorrow, discovered tomorrow, they'd instantly have their experts on television telling you what to believe about it. Because they must always keep themselves in control.

But anyway, as I say, the whole agenda is to use the weather especially and terrify the public when you get hot summers or freezing winters. That's what we had, summers and winters before in climates like Canada. But now of course they are 'arctic vortexes', 'polar vortexes', we don't get 'winters' now. They changed the terminology to terrify everybody. As I say, it doesn't matter, it really doesn't matter, facts don't matter anymore, you go by the official reports on anything. And that's just the way it is. That's the way it is.

If you watch politicians, and when 9/11 happened it was awfully interesting to watch. Many of the folk who worked around Bush Junior at the time came out afterwards and admitted that they were all told to give the most negative reports on Saddam Hussein and different people, to match their agenda. The agenda was already planned for the invasions of the different countries before 9/11 happened and they needed, basically, the Pearl Harbor event, as they said themselves, to get it all going and to get the public on their side. Now, it doesn't matter that this all came out, it doesn't matter that everybody who was on television at the time, or any report at the time from the cabinets around Bush and the rest of the characters in the presidency, they all said the same statements, same quotes, short quotes, short quotes, short quotes, short quotes, weapons of mass destruction.

It didn't matter that they never found them. It didn't matter that they probably never existed. The fact is, they had to keep saying it to the public and have that drummed into their heads through repetition. And like a bunch of robotic clones, everybody you saw had the same quotes on television for the general public, all planned in advance that you'll all say this when the public come up with the microphone and reporters come up with the microphone, this is what you'll say to them. And they did it dutifully.

Well, it's the same with everything else today too. Those who are getting up the latter, who have been chosen to get up the ladder, you must get picked, especially for the CFR. And you will, you'll be vetted and not even know you're being vetted, before you're asked to join. You're asked to join if you can be used and if you're trustworthy. And they'll have tested you already. And yes, doors will open, but you'll do what you're told. They already know that the ones they pick will happily do what they're told.

And by the way, it’s fascinating to go way back into the past to the books that were put out by this group, from their own meetings, they had annual meetings across the world. I have some here. And the one, I’ve mentioned this before, that was held in Australia in the 1930s, before World War II started, a big, big meeting and they brought everybody in, politicians, prime ministers. I’m sure there may have even been presidents there from other countries. The top bankers from all across, the central bankers across the world attended it. They had members of the Communist Party from different countries. Fascist parties. All different parties. And Quigley said it himself in his book, he said, they don’t mind what you are, if they can use you they’ll bring you in, you simply have to agree on certain topics.

Now, the topics they agree on are control of the public across the planet. And all of its resources. Awfully interesting isn’t it. That’s why you meet some of the richest communists on the planet, that are multibillionaire some of them. So, don’t fall for what people say they are or pretend to be. To me, standing back and watching it all, it really does seem like the biggest organized crime gang on the whole planet, that’s ever existed, even more beautifully so because it’s a camouflaged under the pretenses of doing good. We’re here to do good, you know, we know what’s good for the public, the public don’t, but it’s to do good, you know, and we want to help feed the world… By controlling it eventually, all of the world’s food supplies under about five different agribusinesses, five corporations, which they of course own… And running the world’s complete financial system, which they’ve pretty well done from the central banking conglomerate, and the World Bank, and the Bank for International Settlements and so on. They even put their own bank managers from the CFR in as presidents of some countries occasionally as technocrats when there’s a bit of chaos.

It’s astonishing. And yet people still think they’re living in democracies where they can vote. And of course, are taught to believe that those that they vote for are, they know them, that you know them. It’s very much like being in the music business. In the music business, people forget first and foremost, it’s called show business. It’s showbiz. Even exposes of different musicians or bands or whatever are often paid publicity stunts, and reporters are well aware of it too. And sometimes, if they’re really busy, the bands, or completely out of it through drugs or booze or whatever, the managers will give the right of whoever they’ve chosen to do writeups on them to just make this stuff up… I talked to so-and-so today and he’s still doing his own thing here and blah blah blah. That’s how they do it.

It is business. And it’s show business. And when you create, for a long time, creating the bands for a long time, it’s a corporate thing, a band is a corporation. Members can leave and bring in new members, and keep the trademark of the bands name because it’s worth so much for the following that they have, even though you bring in occasionally different members, you see. It’s business. Big, big business. The trends of music are part of the culture industry, it is a cultural part. In the 60s they brought out the rebellious types. In the 50s they even started it in the movie types with the Marlon Brando’s and different ones, the bad biker boys, you see, the rebels. They also had Dean, the Rebel Without A Cause, that kind of stuff. Then the 60s came along, they put out the Bob Dylan types, The Times They Are A Changing. Revolution. It was all about revolution.

Young folk really thought at the time as they bought all the records that they could, if they had money to do this kind of stuff because it was not good times for most folk across Europe financially. They were trying to give them, the youth, a new idea of purpose, and of course it was to use them and have them accept and swallow all the doctrine that was being promoted to them as though they themselves were part of a revolution. And it was a revolution. It was a cultural revolution. Planned. Directed. Well-financed. But the last folk to figure that out were the actual youngsters themselves who could put on, oh, the bad boy pouts, that’s what they liked at the time, bad boy pouts, and tell them they’re part of some kind of big, big change.

They threw drugs out there like you wouldn’t believe, drugs are awfully important, by those who rule the world. Don’t forget that Britain and America flooded, absolutely flooded the coast of China with the bails of opium until China capitulated and let them in. They started to divide up certain parts of the coastline there for British sectors, French sectors, American sectors and so on. People forget that initially the Chinese didn’t want anything to do with nasty folk from the West, you see. That’s how they did it. There’s well-known names today, I won’t go through them, old families who were, ha, made a fortune off the opium industry.

Don’t forget too that George Orwell’s family were a traditional intergenerational family of bureaucrats who serve the British Empire, the royalty. His father at one time was governor general of, I think it was Burma, and he was in charge of her Majesty's opium company. Not George himself, but his father was at one point. I think it was a politician called Thompson in the 1930s brought it up in Parliament, everybody thought that opium organizations were done for, because of the terrible publicity when folk started to find out what had been happening. Nevermind the facts that even Britain itself had been flooded with opium in the 1800s by some well-known characters who were awfully good at using it and pushing it under the term for medicinal purposes. Is that familiar to you, medicinal purposes? Hm? Medical purposes, 'eh. And they put the stuff in everything, from cough mixture to whatever, to everything, absolutely, and lauding them and so on, all the different derivatives, etc. They were hooking people.

But it was lucky, it was actually lucky for the working classes of Britain especially who couldn't afford the darned stuff. But the thing is, too, it was lucky, they preferred beer. Isn't that amazing. That saved them, a lot of them. So they shifted their attention to promoting it across to other parts of the world. But yeah, they used it definitely against the Chinese. That's the reason too that Britain used to be into pushing up the Khyber Pass, as they call it, and into Afghanistan, was for the drugs, for the opium. Even today we have got lots of footage of Allied troops as they call it, guarding the poppy fields. Because the first thing we did when they took over Afghanistan was to start growing it again, the Taliban that ran it before had banned it. And once it happened again, then you have the different heroin derivatives from it, and it gets flooded across the world.

I've been looking at Australia recently because there's some good, put it this way, it has a lot of information going for it, Australia, as a test bed for a good part of the world actually in certain areas of culture. Every country's used a little bit differently occasionally when they're testing different parts of culture, even different drugs out by the way, for those who don't know that. Well studied. But even if you look up Wikipedia about Australia and the drug industry and the drug problems and so on, it's interesting. There's a lot of articles, spinoffs from it too you'll find about, that they quite openly know that the CIA had a lot to do with the introduction of heavy drugs into Australia. They also used the American military bases there to bring it in. Even from the Vietnam era onwards in fact, too. All kinds of drugs. Well organized.

But the CIA have always used drugs to either takedown countries, and also to get the money, extra black budget money for other black operations. And that's not… Of course, a lot of the world knows about that today. But it's still going on. Big time. It's never stopped. It never will stop because it's so lucrative, and it's not traceable either, most of it. But remember, drugs are used as a weapon.

Sex is used as a weapon, even from ancient times, used as a weapon. It isn't just Sodom and Gomorrah you get all the stories about debauchery and the terrible things that were happening. You also had in Greece, they also had the different Bacchanalia basically. They also had their different female secretive societies where they would do a lot of different sexual things as well in ancient Greece. But you also had these big empires at the time, and then Rome after them. But they both went down the tubes the same kind of way, when they stopped producing offspring. Rome even tried, remember, to mandate that the nobility marry and have offspring. Even that wasn't working well, under punishment if they didn't comply. They were so debauched eventually that, well, we know what happened basically. They got overrun.

That's always the way of it. But again, it will be helped along its way. If you understand, it's a formula, isn't it… The partying. Drugs. Alcohol. Lots of sexual activity and promiscuity, massive promiscuity. Abortion of children and infanticide and so on. And then they're overrun and that's the end of them. That's the formula. So when you know what happens you can create the formula again and again as a form of warfare. For those who don't understand that. But they do. And I don't watch the History Channel, I don't have TV, anything like that. This is just, this used to be taught in schools, this kind of stuff. So those who understand it, and there's lots of organizations and secretive agencies understand this and they can put it into effect. Very, very well, in fact.

So what I'm saying is that, how can you possibly believe you live in democracies? If you ask a thousand people what a democracy meant to them, you'll get a thousand different answers. Some people think it's the causes they've been given, such as the greening of the planet or environmentalism or whatever. They get all confused what democracy is. And why do you think they give you parties in the first place? And why do you think the parties today cater to the same groups that have been established by those who control the parties, like environmentalism and so on? They can use them as a voting block, it's quite easy to do. Well, so much for the individual, when it's supposed to be a free and open society where everybody's vote counts, every body, their vote counts. They've got them all into different segments of society today, all split up into the various different segments.

Labour Party is a joke today, has been for a long time. During the Cold War they talked about the fact that they could never have a successful, they knew this early on by the way, in the UK, for instance, at least the Communists did, they could never have a real communist revolution that they had in Russia, the Soviets version, the Bolshevik type. They knew it would not work in Britain. It would take time, and they used Gramsci ideas of subversion of the culture from within, take it over and do it incrementally so they don't really notice it, they'll adapt to it. And that's what they use, all the behaviorists. That's why behaviorism really came into existence, it was for control purposes. And all the different areas of psychology that are combined with it, for control purposes.

So they knew they could not have that kind of overthrow, a sudden overthrow. The Fabian Society's writings are awfully thorough on that particular point. So they went to work on the Labour parties themselves using the unions, and eventually the unions cut their own throats by going overboard. It was meant toactually bring the country to stand stills until there was some kind of chaos, that was the point of it. Those in the unions, the followers didn't know that. They thought it was all for themselves. They had coal strikes in Britain and Margaret Thatcher's group brought in coal from Poland during that period. Poland was still a communist country. And I don't know how many folk saw the dilemma of this whole thing. Margaret Thatcher, the supposed epitome of conservatism, was bringing in coal from the communist country to put down unions in your own country of British people. It was quite fascinating to study that and watch it actually happen. And eventually, of course, one by one the mines were all closed down over time.

So they knew, as I say, they've known a long time ago they couldn't use that type of sudden revolution in Britain, the UK. The people were more, I don't know, collectively uniform in their Britishness or whatever you want to call it, you might say. And it doesn't mean the British system is great because the British folk were abuse for centuries and centuries. And they were used to abuse other people. And each other. There's no doubt about that at all. Because history is, it's quite a nasty nasty thing to look at critically. It doesn't mean everyone was bad. You'll find people through the worst times of everything, just trying to keep a sense of humor and slug along and get through things. Because it's never been easy for most of the ordinary people. Never. N-n.

But that doesn't mean you jump into the clutches of some other group that's going to use you for their own agendas. The United Nations, you couldn't find something more collectively communist and totalitarian in its viewpoint of controlling the populations of the planet in every possible area. You can't imagine them ever really claiming to be Democratic in any way at all. Or the EU for that matter. The commission that runs the EU, the parliament system, the secretive group at the top, they don't believe in democracy either. Even the top Soviet ex-Soviet dissidents came out and said that years ago, after the Russian system, the Soviet system fell they said that this EU is even worse. It was meant to be.

Democracy, as it's promoted to the public, is a tool to use the public and different segments of the public, which have been created. Gender segments, environmental segments, all kinds of segments, to be used, just like guaranteed tools basically, they know how they'll vote on certain things. They know they supply the leaders that these people will follow. And I keep telling people, to be individual. The United Nations said that the enemy of this whole agenda is individualism. And sure enough, it's like the old Soviet system. The old Soviet system, Soviet means 'rule by counsel'. All kinds of councils. So they had councils for the proletariat in manufacturing or welding. Just like unions in a sense, but councils. And it didn't really work out like that because the Politburo at the top appointed those who'd be the head of all these different organizations to make sure it would do what it's told and go the way it's supposed to go. It's easy to control society that way, when the folks think they have their own little group running just their lives because they've got different needs perhaps than those a thousand miles away in a different part of the country doing a different kind of work or whatever. But in reality, as I say, they're all used.

So if you belong to groups, I can guarantee you, you're being used. I'm telling you. I've always noticed that. And I used to notice it too, as I say, even with the music industry. The music industry was taken over early by, you might call them the avant-garde of what at that time was thought of as the Marxist communist group, when it was the folk industry. Now, the folk music industry before that was traditional folk in most countries with old old songs passed down through generations, that belong to the land, the people who lived on the land and that area of the land and so on. When the Communists took over, by giving you stars, because they always give you stars, they create the stars, they have a massive machinery to create stars. Big money. And people will be taught how to follow them… Oh, they're wonderful, oh that's fantastic, wow… then they follow them. Then the stars start promoting certain causes, all planned in advance and so on. That's how easy it is. It's all done that way. Still to this present day.

But they even took so many of the old traditional tunes from the old folk songs and adapted them into old, actually, Russian Communists, actually they weren't even Russian initially, [Alan chuckles.] but these communist songs to try to get the people stirred up. And luckily in America, luckily, in the folk area, it was some of the groups that were Irish groups, and of course in Britain too. In America you had something like the Clancy Brothers and so on and they managed by their popularity and their great singing and great old traditional songs to bring the real stuff back into vogue which suppressed the communist stuff, the revolutionary communist stuff.

So they used some of those guys like Bob Dylan, his future was mapped out for him to come out and do the sexual thing. Sex is a weapon, you see. Liberate people through sex, destroy the family unit, etc. etc., and, the thing about drugs, the colors in your mind, all these kind of things, blah blah blah. And then of course, they'll give the different groups that would promote the pop groups, and even create the rock groups that would do the same kind of thing. Revolution. Revolution. Revolution. A complete break with tradition from the past, that was the whole idea. Very successfully done. But it really didn't help the average person's life at the time. No matter how much money the Beatles were raking in, for instance, or the Stones, it didn't help the average person in Britain. It didn't help the poor girl standing at the bus stop with her plastic short coat on in the wintertime, and plastic miniskirt and plastic boots, and she's freezing to death. It didn't help them any at all. But it gave the impression that they were part of something, that was the idea of it, you see.

Then before the 60s were out, you could have free access to the birth control pill for women across Britain and other countries too I guess, some of them. Then of course for the ones who didn't take it then you had, naturally, as they promoted promiscuity, you'd have pregnancy and then the state would come in, well we've got a problem here, we'll have to use taxpayer's money, then you've got abortion. So they were fulfilling lots of different areas at the same time. This is all planned stuff. It's not make-believe and it's not conspiracy stuff that you're just picking out of thin air. It was planned and written about, by the way. Some people like Yuri Bezmenov talked about it, the ex-KGB guy, many other ones did too, in book form. And I'm one of these oddballs that still have a lot of the old books written by all these ex-KGB guys. Again, through universities and professorships they knew what was going on. But don't forget too the big organizations that run all of them, like the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Council on Foreign Relations, they're part of it too. They're a big part of it because everything else comes underneath them. Remember what Quigley says? We've got communist, fascists, capitalists, you name it, we've got them all. And here we are today.

Now, I'm not complaining about things like some old fuddy-duddy here. I'm just saying. Because I stand back from it. I'm not here to change it. It'd be impossible to change it, this way. When you lose something that's so important to humanity, you generally never get it back without massive catastrophes. It just doesn't happen. It doesn't happen. And when you have old values, that, yeah, could be used against people at one time too, to suffer and pray and suffer and pray, by an establishment that abuse the people, yeah, hchh, that isn't much good either, is it. But don't throw out the baby with the bathwater, remember. Because a lot of the old values folk had from their religions helped them, helped them to help each other, to get through a lot of these terrible times, mostly to help, anything like that, they helped each other. That was awfully, awfully important.

When you lose the last vestige of humanity… everybody's fair game for a terrible, terrible ending. Peter Hitchens mentioned it too. He was in the Soviet Union when it supposedly collapsed. And it didn't collapse the way they tell you, but. He said that the crime went rampant, immediately terrible. I know from the documentaries that came out at the time, it was the saddest thing to see people in food banks, massive food banks, set up by the West, and charities from the West's, and even the religious institutions that they were taught to despise and hate, as folk rushed over with money, supplies and food and equipment to feed them. And to listen to the people, who were heartbroken… for everything they believed in, they'd been brainwashed into it, every culture does the same in whatever it happens to be, all just suddenly gone… and here's their supposed enemies feeding them. It's a tragic thing to see.

But in amongst it all to you had the top crooks who ran the old Soviet system who grabbed all of the supposed shares of the corporate businesses that would be divvied up amongst the people. They grabbed these, there was gangsters, they grabbed this for themselves and became the multi billionaires today of the resources of the Soviet system. But that's an aside of what I'm talking about. But Hitchens said that, he said, what he's noticed as a journalist is that the horror of countries that didn't have even the vestiges of religions left in them, of what happens in times like that. And you'd better realize where you are today. There are certain little things that hold humanity together at the worst possible times and if you lose that you've lost everything, you're fair game.

Anyway, what I'm going to talk about tonight, [Alan chuckles.] and tonight's almost gone again, 'eh? I generally get lots of topics, and I don't like getting just topics off the media unless there's a reason for it. So in the last few days I've just looked up certain things and then an idea came to me. And I was thinking about the control of the system that most folk wouldn't even think about. Don't forget, with the system we're living in you've got massive massive debts incurred by everybody. Encouraged by everybody, they teach them in school how to use credit cards and borrow money and so on. Don't forget, at one time that was called usury. It was looked upon as a curse, where folk lost even small holdings, down through centuries and centuries, across the world. Don't forget, going back into the past people who lent money out, by their own laws, could take your offspring if you couldn't afford to pay, as slaves.

And how glibly we take it all today. Well, it's just so easy, blah blah blah, it's easy payments. You borrow a couple of thousand bucks on a credit card and they'll tell you, you have to pay the smallest amount back. And it'll take you may be 20 years to pay it. And by that time, you've paid maybe that $2000 over, many times, many times, maybe even 20 times, by the time you pay it off with the minimum amount. What a con this is, 'eh. Obviously, it's the poor folks that's going to use it that way. But everybody's keeping up with the Joneses and you're promoted, your whole culture promotes that. Everything visual is run by advertising, whether it's television or Internet or whatever it happens to be, and there it goes, bang, bang, bang, buy, buy, buy, have all that and be happy, be happy, buy all this. Keep up with the Joneses.

But don't forget, though, that everything today is run this way. If you buy a car, I know people who have bought new cars in the past few years and had an awful time trying to buy a car straight out, paid in full. Because the car companies now, the outlets are run by the guys who lend the money. They can own chains of them and they want you to take on loans from them. Because a car is worth in Canada maybe 40,000, plus all the taxes, it'll end up being maybe 60,000 or even more before you pay it off. And most folk don't pay it off, they simply trade it in for a new one before it's paid off and the try and work out, juggle the payments that way. It's like houses. Think about it.

But yet, everybody wants you to buy things, pay it up, from their lenders, you see. The whole world is run this way. Our countries are run this way. The governments run to them too to borrow. And we're taught this is all normal. We're all slaves, you know. And every convenience store or any supermarket or whatever, do you have a convenient card? No. Do you have a loyalty card? No. Oh, you have to pay extra for the same goods then. You see, you're penalized. You're penalized if you want to just pay without taking on their credit card type thing, that takes all of your data and everything you're buying every month or whatever it be, and they can even watch what your diet is. It all goes into banks for agencies in your governments and so on. But you get a discount, 'eh?!? That's the mousetrap, if you just take this, that's what they tell you. And then they train the people too, you see them at checkout counters, probably the same in the US but in Canada they do it. They've trained folk, you'll hear them in front of you asking for the data from older folk who are pensioners, for their convenience card, oh,you know, you got a loyalty card you get a discount if you come in every Thursday, you get a discount. So they train them, everybody, then to come in on Thursdays, you see.

What was it Bernays said? Bernays, the big marketing so-called genius. He wasn't a genius. He learned from a long lineage of people who studied people intensely, believe you me. But Bernays, he even worked for about five different governments in succession, maybe more, as an advisor on mass manipulation using psychology for behavior modification of the general population. He said to the big organizations that produced goods like automobiles and fridges and everything else, don't improve your product, to sell the improvements, on how good it is or how long it's going to last, etc. He says, you sell them a fantasy, but you change, you change the consumer to suit your product.

Everybody's now a slave borrowing money all the time from the lenders. Think about it. Even older cars now, it's the same thing, they're all willing to give you loans. You know, oh, we can sign you up here and it's only so much interest, blah blah blah. And most folk think it’s normal now. Their houses are the same. Why do you think houses are so incredibly, like half a million, three quarters of a million for a little townhouse somewhere? What!! Why is that? Because the big bankers will give you easy loans, working in cahoots with those who set the big prices, big corporations, and chains of them. Governments love it because they get a higher tax back from the homeowners every month, local governments love it too. So, they can stuff their pocket. Everybody lives off the public. We are the product, really.

You go to a dentist now. A dentist, there’s dentists that will offer you, through relatives or whatever, loans to pay off, you know, so they’ll take your work on. Isn’t that amazing? Folk get really ill and they have to have operations and so on now, or get cancers, can go for better treatments in other countries at times. And you get videos and courses given to them by the companies that will give you these treatments, telling you how to convince your peer group, your friends, your relatives to give all that they have to pay for your treatment. Salesmanship marketing. It’s incredible.

This is the system they have given us all. We are the products. And by the way, we are disposable. We are. After the big planned crash of 2007 and 2008 when the banking system, and it was planned, there were folk who knew all about it long before happened and didn’t try to stop it or anything. Then you find that, remember, since then people with any savings in the bank, and everybody’s got money going either through the bank or cashing things or whatever, or using the banks, or electronically using the banks. The banks now have all that cash, especially electronic money, and they loan that out all over the planet. But you can’t get a penny back pretty well in interest on anything. And it’s done so slickly folk think that’s now normal. It was unheard of not to have to pay anything, in the bank, even 20 bucks, and leave it there without getting interest accrued. But now it’s normal. And they call it negative interest, you might owe them money. Train the public to suit your product. Train the public to suit your product. Think about it. Think about it, folks. It’s all there, isn’t it. And everyone thinks is normal.

The articles I’ve read the last little while too, because they do the same investigations every other year for the big universities, how far away is the general person from the street basically if they lost their jobs tomorrow? And it’s about 400 bucks. Even in the middle class, a lot of them. Their holidays are all done on borrowed money and credit cards and so on. Appearances, appearances, ‘eh? But yeah, you think about it. Now that everything’s going electronic, why are they pushing the electronics? Apart from monitoring everything you do and buying and so on, it’s also to keep the banks going. The banks are happy then because now they’re guaranteed the money’s going to flow through them each time folk use their cards for everything.

They can use that money that’s going through it, temporarily, even overnight. Look at the money every bank, big bank and investor company, they used to have Merrill Lynch, they would invest big chunks of money across the planet. There’s many of these organizations do that, these corporations. They might move them from Tokyo, after six hours, to another place for a few hours, and overnight they can make massive amounts of interest on the money they put through. That money could be transitory, going through all these electronic machines and so on. But the people who are basically, supposedly, earn the money are getting nothing back when it goes through the banking system. In fact, you’re paying for it all. Isn’t that wonderful? And you get nothing back in interest at all. Not bad, ‘eh. Train the people, the public to suit your product.

Most things in this system are so slickly done the folk adapt into it without thinking. And believe you me, those who manage you all are not in the business of telling you. [Alan chuckles.] They give you lots of other crisis to distract you. Many things to distract you. Even fun is a great distraction, isn’t it? How much time of your life is wasted on entertainment, for instance? Hm? But they train you to be egocentric and narcissistic, it’s all about you having fun, don’t say this, that’s negative, I don’t want unpleasantness, that’s a downer. Well, there’s nothing you cannot do with the population you’ve trained to avoid unpleasantries.

Now, remember, change the public to suit your product. As I’ve already mentioned about Australia, it’s a good example of testing of intergenerational cultural changes, planned changes. Because it’s summer in Australia and they’ve got all these different big parties on, and huge parties in fact, Australia Day and all that kind of thing. I’ll put some articles up on it and you can see how these revelers as they call themselves there, that every time you see the big parties over there across the big cities in Australia, you’ll see them, young folk with very little on at all. Often now it’s just glitter on some of the women that attend, young women. And the drugs are just flowing like crazy with overdoses. The more severe ones you here about in the newspapers and the media. Other ones too, there are stacks, a lot more than that, that will be helped up by their friends that will have been taking all kinds of drugs.

Now, change the public to suit your product, right. And the taking of these different kinds of drugs today is quite, quite normal to them. They're heavily promoted, always easily assessable. And yet, the public are adapting into it and adapting and adapting. Every few years it's like a big jump to the next step, the next step, the next step. As I say, we're becoming like Sodom and Gomorrah in a sense. Because sexual freedom, as they call it, was always a big, big push, even in the late 1800s HG Wells pushed for it then too, to destroy the idea of marriage so that the governments could control the general public, experts would control them all. And it never occurs to you when you're having fun, you might say, that you're being controlled. Just like dumping bales of opium on to the shores of China, they want to make your own military bases basically in China in the old days.

Drugs, drugs, drugs, and with things which destroy your ability to judge properly, in comes the sex too, big time. Then you're well on your way. We've watched it for many, many years, this war, this cultural war. They call it a war, a cultural war. The sexual revolution wasn't mistakenly called the sexual revolution. [Alan chuckles.] That was all planned and directed with the help of the culture industry. In Britain it was comical to me to see the so-called staid BBC pushing stuff that was sometimes ahead of even the US and other countries in that department.

Anyway, Australia, so there you'll see them, the revelers as they call themselves, and you see some of them with MDMA pills, methamphetamines and so on getting pushed there. All kinds of drugs, though. And there's kids dying, some of them. Because to them it's all being promoted as normal, you see.

And I'll put up too, the results for drug overdose deaths.

Search results for drug overdose deaths - dailymail.co.uk

… a whole bunch of links for those who care to look at it. Most folk don't. Again, don't look at the unpleasant, look at the happy stuff, happy, happy, happy, and that's what you've been trained to do. That's why you're all sitting ducks for more big crashes and more unpleasantness or austerity plans. And eventually mandatory, either one child families, which is on the cards... Remember, China is the model state for the whole world to follow, according to the United Nations. Although the wealthier folk and those who have proven their worth will be allowed to have more children, you see. That's even happening in China. The proper eugenic type of program.

I'll put up all these links to do with, you see the revelers. I won't say what they're wearing. [Alan chuckles.] It's what they're not wearing perhaps.

Sun's out, tongues out! Thousands of revellers masquerading in a sea of showstopping, barely-there outfits flock to Australia Day music festivals across the country as temperatures soar to 45C - dailymail.co.uk / 26 Jan 2019

Again, you're looking at… They're probably the last generation really, many of them will never ever have children. They'll have lots and lots of sex but no children. And it's been planned that way and folk haven't figured that out yet. And the abortion industry is just doing great-guns as they say.

Now as I've said before, Australia is interesting when it comes to social experimentation in, well, I call it the social scientists, of course, that are behind a lot of the cultural creation and the cultural changes that we've witnessed over many, many years. You find, combining different aspects of it, odd things happening here and there. Not just in Australia, of course, but Australia has been ahead of the game for a while in certain areas. Here's an oddball one to do with drugs and someone flipping out completely, picking random people in a store, deliberately, I mean coming into a store with an ax and attacking them. So I don't advise people to go into this and look at it. I can put the link up for those who are interested in crime or dysfunctions in society that are becoming more prevalent today, and drugs, etc. etc.

But it was apparently a transgender who had been let down with some date, I have no idea what it was, really, I'm not interested at all. But the thing is, this character went into a store, after warning whoever let him down with the date, that he was going to go into a store and just start killing people.

'I will kill people it will be your fault' : Transgender woman flies into a fit of rage after a failed Tinder date and storms into a 7-Eleven with an axe trying to 'cut a man's head in half' - dailymail.co.uk / 26 Jan 2019

But when you see the drugs this character was on, legal, illegal. And with the legal drugs, antidepressants of all kinds, probably the SSRIs, selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors and so on, no doubt, and plus cannabis, hah, got a cocktail of drugs altogether, that they were told were okay, and some of them were even administered by physicians in this particular case. Why aren't these characters, these physicians and psychiatrists being called up for their actions? When people, and there's been so many, many accounts of people, even mass shootings in the States, they're all seeing psychiatrist's, these guys in the States, and you find that they have histories of the same kinds of antidepressants and so on. It's just phenomenal that there's no, hhhh, there's no come back on the so-called professionals that put them on these mind-altering drugs.

There's no doubt about it, generally you'll find there's some mental disturbances long before they're put on the drugs. But the fact is, I think it definitely exacerbates it in a lot of cases. But they're put on all kinds of drugs which generally upset the chemistry of the brain. And when you've already got pre-existing other mental problems that are there, I think the psychiatrists should be really held to account for letting this kind of thing going on. It's just getting worse and worse all the time. And I think if that was the case, they'd be far more diligent in what they recommend for different patients. They really would. And they could maybe… We know, for instance, some of the shootings in the US over the years, the psychiatrists had long, long records with these particular people, and they even had warnings that things are going to happen in some cases and did nothing about it. If you're going to prescribe these kinds of drugs to people, they were definitely disturbed, I think there should be some kind of definite inquiry into it. Because I think it's becoming worse. It really is. It's becoming worse.

But again, there's a lot of social experimentation going on. As I say, Australia is a big one. It's an interesting case, this particular one, from different perspectives. But what gets me too is the sentencing now is becoming a joke. It has been for a long time. And for attempted triple murder, and deliberate, I mean, this was no holding back at all here, would you really risk putting them back out there in four years or so and say they're fine? Really? Anyway, it's definitely of interest to people who want to study the social phenomenon of social engineering that we're living through in this day and age. Including the justice system, and the psychiatric system, and the medical system, who are all making a lot of money off different things to which perhaps they shouldn't be.

Now, as all this is happening, go back, think back to even the opium dens they flooded Europe with at one time trying to get them to take off big time. You can read about…

The Marijuana Billionaire Who Doesn't Smoke Weed - fortune.com / 16 Jan 2019

It's a big PR piece, naturally, to promote Canada's big big cannabis business. And it's not just one person. Don't ever believe that the fronts they give you, any more than the ones who run the tech industry, don't think it's them at all. They are the front people. These are massive businesses. Multibillion-dollar businesses, all ready with massive corporations behind specialists to promote it all. And payoffs all over. I mean, you've got ex-police chiefs, you've got governor generals involved. And you've got another one here to do with…

Tilray - International Advisory Board - tilray.com

…in Canada, and massively, anybody that's a who's who in the Who's Who directory for Canada and the US is on the board of this thing too. Including Lord Axworthy of Canada who was up there, way up there in politics next to the Prime Minister, and who also was one of the heads, I think he was the head for a while of the CFR, Council on Foreign Relations. They're awfully good at making business to suit themselves, aren't they, with their national trade agreements, etc. Oh yeah, massive business now in drugs, drugs, drugs. That came out, again, just like the opium business in the medicines, it was for medicinal use initially, for health reasons, you know. And of course, it isn't simply for pleasure. And there ya go.

I'll put these articles up anyway, for those who care to go into it. And lots will actually. There's another one too…

Israel's grass to grow greener, cabinet about to approve cannabis exports - jpost.com / 23 Jan 2019

…big time. We'll be competing, I've no doubt they've already preplanned the areas that, they'll divvy up the planet basically, and it will be interesting to see how it works out. They might all be related in fact, for all we know, which wouldn't surprise me at all, the big corporations that is.

And also…

Sharp rise in number of Australians accessing treatment for amphetamine use - www1.racgp.org.au / April 20 2018

That's one thing I did look at is the incredible drug abuse system they've got there too. Remember too, you need to create a system of pleasure and recreation, as they call it. In other words, leisure time for all these kinds of things to take off. All of them. If you're struggling like the people did struggle, you know, hand-to-mouth basically for a long time, before they gave you time off, there was no time for all this kind of stuff. But now they're giving you time off. It's a great way to make sure that you're not protesting on the streets. You're having great fun, it's all about you. And you're taking drugs and they get lots of sex. And any fallout from the sex will be dealt with by the state on your behalf. And the rest of the public will pay for it probably. Not bad, 'eh? As I say, it's a good thing to study. Believe you me, it'll be the same across the planet. If you had the same kind of weather in Canada, for instance, you'd be seeing the same kind of big, big massive parties and dressing the same way. But there you go.

And Australia is an interesting study to watch what's happening there. And even to see the general population standing back, at what used to be called the older generation, whatever they happen to be today, standing back and letting it happen too. Because they in turn, in their turn too they were also altered in preparation to accept it all, step-by-step to the next step and the next step and the next step. But there's quite a few articles I'll put up for you that ties in.

Remember, change the public to suit your product. Whether it's drugs, money, borrowing, whatever it happens to be, change the public. The last folk to even notice they've been changed, to do it all and go along with all, are the public themselves. And at the same time, as you get fallout too, they're going to the next step, as I say, across the world…

New York celebrates legalizing abortion until birth by lighting One World Trade Center pink - lifesitenews.com / 23 Jan 2019

(Alan: So yeah, now they can kill a child up until the age… of them getting born basically. And they're celebrating it as a great achievement.)

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) directed that the One World Trade Center's spire be lit pink overnight on Tuesday to celebrate his signing of a law allowing abortions until birth in some cases, and letting non-doctors commit abortions.

(A: Bring down the populations, 'eh? And it says…)

The law, the Reproductive Health Act, (A: Doesn't that sound wonderful, Reproductive HEALTH Act, it's health, you see, it's unhealthy having children as far as they're concerned, that's how they name things like that.) also erases the state's recognition of preborn babies older than 24 weeks as potential homicide victims. (A: …because that's how they used to be seen as, you kill life. You see, pregnancy is not classified as a disease, except by those who run the planet. And they don't belong to the same class as you, according to themselves.)

Cuomo called the bill an "historic victory for New Yorkers and our progressive values." (A: So, killing children is progressive, it's progressive, up to the age of birth, the day of birth basically. M-hm-hm-hm.)

By the way, I mean, I know a lot more about it all because I've followed this kind of stuff and I know the different groups that are behind it you might say, who even wants to do it afterbirth. That will come eventually, I guarantee you. And as everyone's having fun and stripping off in public and taking drugs, that's called progress. As you devalue life, you're obviously devaluing your own life. And so, when you're demanding rights you're going to get to a stage where folk are going to laugh at you, absolutely laugh you, your betters as they call themselves will laugh at you when you demand rights when you've stood by and let all this happen.

I'm not kidding you. I'm not preaching here either. I'm just telling you how it's going to be. Because it's planned this way. Everything is control. Drugs are control. Sex is used for control. And naturally everything that happens, including pregnancy, pregnancy is now treated as a disease obviously by those who control the planet, and they're cheering it on as a great success story. And we're all paying for it. So even if you're not involved in it, you're complicit, legally. Interesting, 'eh?

But what I'm saying here is, it's interesting just to look at Australia at the moment, because Australia has the climate, for sure. And they think they're progressive too. And step-by-step every 10, 15 years they go to the next step and the next step and the next step and the next step and the next step, until those who are older, even the parents of the youngsters you'll see wearing their glitter, some of them just about that's all they're wearing is glitter stuck on their body, the parents will, oh well, they're just young, you know, young ones. But what does it remind you of, 'eh?

Now, getting back to world government and those who created the central banking system across the whole planet, one organization, gave you the United Nations, this one organization gave you the Bank for International Settlements, this one organization gave you the Council on Foreign Relations, that's one of their groups. And gave you the abortion agenda. Give you the drug agenda. And it's for control of the world. And it's all mapped out how it's to be as the people die off having fun, but not having children. Interesting, 'eh. It really is. It really is.

What I'm saying is, it isn't spoilsport stuff. It isn't like an old-time profit just decrying how bad it's going. I'm just stating how it is. I'm stating the things they don't want you to think about. Because you're supposed to all be complicit, legally, in your own demise. Because that's how history has already been written.

Anyway, remember, if you want the books and discs I have @.com, go into the website and you find out how to order them. You'd be surprised at all the different names out there, and I mean pretty well all of them use my website and my archives on at least a weekly basis for their own talks. It's astonishing, really. But it's good, it's good that it's got out that far from what you might call humble beginnings long ago. So remember, order the books and discs of the talks I've given, and you can donate as well. You can find a how to do it @.com. Remember, cash is okay to pay for things or donation and other means are explained on the website too.

For myself from a very freezing Ontario Canada, I'm Alan Watt and it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Feb. 3, 2019 (#1706)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on February 3, 2019. And what a week this has been with the weather where I am in northern Ontario, where it's been… giving us lots of snow up this way. And at night too, it plummets like you wouldn't believe. Last week after the Sunday talk, come early Monday morning, about three in the morning I think it was, the thermometer read -48°F. And the temperature during the day never got anywhere near above zero Fahrenheit, it was way below it in fact, during the day. That's what I had a lot of this winter in fact. Many of the days during the day when it should be a bit warmer it's actually below the zero mark on the Fahrenheit scale.

So it's been a long winter already. It started snowing here in September and it might snow up until April for all I know, maybe even longer. No doubt about it, to me, the winters are becoming longer and colder. I'm sure people are really going bust trying to pay for heating, etc., or else to turning the thermostats so far down that they're trying to get by that way. Because people generally try not to talk about any kind of hardships they have. It's astonishing, really, isn't it, that people are afraid, they're afraid to mention how hard up they are at times to each other. Because in the system it's almost a sign of shame. It's an old tradition, the class system, from Britain I guess and Europe, to mention that you might be hard up.

That's the unfortunate truth, they find it hard to talk about. Like how they're surviving with things going up and up and up with inflation. Because we're still paying massive debts off now because of the last bank bailouts in 2008 and 2009. That's why the dollar has plummeted, especially in Canada too. Because we got special drawing rights, remember, from the bailouts from the US Federal Reserve. For those who didn't know that, Canada was bailed out, all the top banks were bailed out and they were given special drawing rights from the US Federal Reserve on the condition they have so many years to pay it back with massive interest. That's why the dollar's plummeting in Canada.

It's a fantastic system, isn't it, where they're so interlaced and interfaced, these banks across the planet, that you all get punished. Eventually, all the public get punished all the time. Of course, that's what you're there for. You get plundered each time banks have overdone it, whatever they're doing with their lending and so on, and debts, etc. And often too, I think it's really planned that way. They know what they're going to do. They know they're going to get bailed out and they go on a plunder spree basically until they collapse things, and then they plunder us again when they're given huge bailouts. It's quite something isn't it. At least twice a century this happens, and it's normal [Alan chuckles.] to be robbed twice a century, sometimes more, by the big banking systems. When one country, for instance, overdoes it even more than others and causes, starts off the spark of dominoes falling across the world, they end up going back to the same countries to borrow money from them. Because we're all interfaced, as I say, and we're broke as well. Quite a system.

They know to send people to university to learn this thing called economics. And that always ties me back to Lord Rothschild who said in the last century, well, actually in the 19th century. He said when he was asked about the system of money and debt, and even the creation of money out of thin air basically through accounting methods, etc., he said that it would never change basically because apart from the fact we're given [Alan chuckles.] no choice in using it. But he also said that the ones who really understand it are those who take courses to learn what it's about and because they're going to benefit more than other people, the general public, off of the system which they are working with, they're not likely to disclose it or condemn it.

And it's so true, isn't it? It's very, very true. Most folk made money off ofother folks' money as opposed to the ones who actually create the actual tangible goods that are sold, etc. It's the ones who push the pens, as they used to say, and now they just punch in digits in a computer, that actually make the money off all the rest. And that's just the way it is. Because no one's going to change it.

Because when you're conquered, and you are conquered… We keep forgetting, that after all the wars that were planned to take place… The Milner group, Lord Alfred Milner, they planned world wars to bring nations to their knees in order to bring their dream of a world governmental system into being and to do away with sovereignty and the only way to do it they thought was to get world wars going. HG Wells was all for it. He was part of it too. He wrote about it, and he said that, out of the first world war that was, he said, and that was called The Great War at the time, and it was ‘a war to end all wars’. [Alan laughing.] It’s likely he had a hand in creating the slogans in fact. It was a big con game.

But the governments threw all they had into these wars, especially World War I, I think. Incredible, incredible casualties that they had. It’s… And we can’t believe in this day and age how countries could throw maybe 30,000 men away, per day sometimes, on all sides doing the same kind of thing. And never stopping their tactics. It… You can’t… It boggles the mind. It does. And sure enough, all the countries involved had the borrowed money initially from the US, they kept out of it until the last year. Because they had just created, in time for the world war of course, the Federal Reserve system, it was set up just in the nick of time. Through that monopoly of banks which is the Federal Reserve, etc., they lent to all the different countries with incredible interest rates. And actually, got in the last year because they have to make sure, now, that they had to get the payments back, in order to get paid back. [Alan laughing.] It’s quite something, ‘eh?

But when you think about World War I, it was meant to end national sovereignty in the hope the people would be disgusted and in shock, which they were in fact, of the incredible casualties. I don’t think anybody in Britain, for instance, didn’t have somebody who was killed off in World War I. And I really don’t think… It’d be the same in France too I’m sure. And Germany. It was phenomenal. Often whole families were wiped out in fact, in the men’s lineages. So much so that when World War II came along, and HG Wells said it too, he says, they haven’t given up their sovereignty, we, we need another world war, he said, to bring them to their knees.

Well, because Britain, ha, had been in perpetual war through the whole 1800s into the 1900s, and on rationing through the 1900s, and the Great Depression came along again, because of it too, you find that they couldn’t even feed themselves for World War II. When the men were joining up and going off to war and farmer’s sons and so on, they had inquiries into the lack of food and what they would do about it because Britain at that time was importing so much of their food even then, which is not a good idea if you’re going to go and have a world war with submarines lurking around and so on.

But the thing is, they had to get commissions up. The government literally came in and took over farms to make sure in World War II that they could produce, in all bits of wasteland whatever it was, and they would try and get things to grow. But many of the farms had the old man dying off, the old grandpa and so on who lost his sons in World War I and he’s too old to farm it now. The government literally seized their farms because no one was able to work them. The government literally took them over and handed them to the, well, the guy in the proper clubs, put it that way, to do the farming. And they kept them after the war.

You have no idea of the mayhem that’s caused by these massive wars. And you never end up paying off the debt, because it’s not meant to be paid off. It keeps you in slavery. It’s designed that way. The compound interest is meant to keep a clique in charge of every nation. That is understood. They realized, and they said that too in their writings at the top clubs you might say, that the power of money would do the job that armies at one time did. They could threaten countries. They could withdraw money and close down countries. They could starve people to death by withdrawing money, or using embargoes like they do at the United Nations. That’s all part of the same system that came in. You have no idea the power of money.

We’re all subject to the same con games where there’s no point even if you have money to save up, trying to save it up, because the banks will constantly collapse every so often and bingo, there goes your money. And they won’t give you any interest on it anymore, and they’ve trained you in no time at all, since 2008, it’s quite normal to get no interest back on any savings. Isn’t it amazing how fast we adapt to their con games, ‘eh?

At the same time money controls all nations. Because your governments are constantly borrowing too, and that’s the agenda, that’s how it’s set up. Governments are meant nowadays, that’s the normal, to borrow money constantly and put the public down as the guarantors to pay it off.So we’re basically slaves. And there’s no point really… People put money into retirement schemes of all kinds, some to try to save money in taxes, etc. But if they pull it out ahead of time or their fixed times, they’re penalized, sometimes about half, 50% or even more. Because they’re naughty-naughty. Those companies, those insurance companies want your money but they don't really want you to get it back. In fact, they hope you'll die before you even collect most of it. That's what pension schemes are about. It's phenomenal.

But even that, and the con games they use… Well, you know, you put so many dollars in every month of your paychecks and one day you can earn… Well, by the time you retire for every dollar you put in today, right, in 20 years time, 30 years time, that dollar won't buy you a box of matches. It won't. You'll need about $20 in 20 years time, 30 years time, maybe $30 to buy a cup of coffee with inflation. That's how it's designed. That's how folk back in the 1930s were living pretty well on 10 bucks a week. Actually, very well, actually, on 10 bucks a week back then. Yep. So, it's a racket and a con game. And all those folk in-the-know at the top who are benefiting off it keep their mouth shut because they are benefiting off it too.

It's very much like, I think it was Chretien in Canada who became Prime Minister, who immediately after being elected, if that's indeed whatever elections are in reality, it was a shoo-in as they say. He had to go and see the head, or, the governor of the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada is not really a bank anymore. It's a negotiating place where a representative negotiates loans for the governments from the lenders. Chretien came out after the election for a meeting with them, it's a ritual, you go to meet them, to meet your new master, the Prime Minister must go and meet his master. He was asked, so now you know all about economics and how the Bank of Canada works? He says, I didn't understand a thing. The joke with Chretien is, he couldn't speak either French or English. And he put it on, it was part of his act too, he says, I didn't understand the thing, a big smile on his face. And of course, the joke was, that was why they picked him. But he knew perfectly well what was going on.

That awfully good documentary was done some years ago called Oh, Canada, where the young fella goes around and talks to ex-prime ministers and politicians trying to get straight answers from them on money and what it was. Nevermind the confusion on most of their faces. It just shows you the racket. And it's meant to be a racket. It's because money is the ultimate form of control in our world. That's really what it is. Utter control. You can buy anybody off with it. Countries are brought down, in fact, you can buy generals in different countries for coups. There's nothing you can't do with it. As I say, you can starve people to death. Even if they have products to sell, or oil, like Iran for instance and other countries. When they get embargoes put on them, and they can't sell off their oil, they can't get money that way to buy other things. So this medium of exchange as they call it is a very, very important thing.

So those who control it all… and there's a clique. There's the World Bank, remember, private organization, that supposedly is a lender of last resort to the whole planet's central banking systems. And they're all connected. It's one club. One club where the IMF, they're debt collectors in a sense, they come in and they'll manage your economy, and your governments, until they claim the latest interest rates payments are paid back, not necessarily the debt itself. They cut your health care and everything else. And they're doing it and that's just too bad, they say. That's how it is. Even Alan Greenspan himself, he's up on YouTube somewhere saying that, talking about the actual US Federal Reserve. He says, the government can't do anything about the Federal Reserve, it's a separate, completely separate institution. What he was also inferring is that it was, it has special status, very special status, different from other corporations. So we're living in a world of make-believe.

But yeah, getting back to the wars and the world wars for the elimination of complete national sovereignty. The same group that brought you the wars, and they did, they did bring you the wars, they boasted about it before these wars happened and the necessity of having them, world wars, to get everybody involved, and bankrupt, and how they'd all come together under a global authority and, they hoped, that the League of Nations would be the embryo for a world governmental system. And that morphed into the United Nations. It's not Democratic. It was never intended to be Democratic. The Club of Rome, a big think tank for the global elites, who came up with the idea of using famine, global warming, desertification and drought, all that kind of stuff as a scare tactic, they said, that would fit the bill, we'll blame humans, humans are the enemy, of survival basically, for the world, and, that would fit the bill, they said. Well, the Club of Rome, said the same thing, that democracy is inadequate, it will not work.

So the elite who usedemocracy, because they want to have the mob on their side. And if you could belong to any group, I'm sorry, you're part of a mob. It's true. You cannot go along and say to yourself, well, you know it's better than, I know it's bad but it's better than those guys over there. If that's the best you can do, you really deserve what you get. Honestly. Honestly. Because every mob is controlled by, they call it the deep state, there's many names for the same thing. But if you get members, and I've mentioned it before, how you can elect anybody in any country who belongs to a society, a secretive society number one, and who belongs to… Don't forget too, that the Rhodes Foundation, and also, which is part of the Roundtable Society, and they're all part of the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Council on Foreign Relations. How can you elect people who have already sworn allegiance to a different system, a private club you might say with incredible power across the world, why would you elect any of their members in to represent you? Why would you do that?

You know why you do it? Because people fall for basic pithy little slogans. I feel your pain, that was Bill Clinton. And other ones just declare they're going to give you pain, and they certainly do. But that's the reality of politics. It's slogans. You get a packaged product all wrapped up with public relations, big, big money, to sell it to the public, and you, by a myth, a phantom basically. And the same group are always there behind it anyway.

So, let's go back to World War I and read about Winston Churchill, who was Lord of the Admiralty at one time. He came up with this plan supposedly of sending troops to the Dardanelles, it was called, which would be a strategic point for the furthering of war across, which would be eventually the Middle East. But it would split Turkey, he thought, and a few other countries as well. Well, Britain took it over, that was the idea. They pulled men from all over the battlefields of France and Belgium to do this. It's never been explained to the public, and never will be because there's other reasons behind it obviously. They were looking towards the future for other reasons, and people wouldn't be happy if they knew the reasons.

But nobody should have been fighting in the first world war to begin with. It was a ridiculous affair. Absolutely ridiculous. They were using methods used, like maybe in the 1700s, standing upright and marching into battle would have been fine before heavy-duty machine guns were invented. But they were invented for World War I. It literally took them many, many years to allow the troops to get down on their bellies and at least crawl towards their targets, giving them a better chance of survival. But you look at the Dardanelles project by Churchwell, it was his baby supposedly. He wanted to be even more famous, go down in the history books, that was always with them. It was an absolute disaster. Absolute incredible disaster. They used British troops and they used Australian and New Zealand troops, and the first day of the landing in the Dardanelles it says that they lost 60,000 troops! I think 19,500, almost 20,000 were killed and the rest were wounded, by all kinds of wounds and amputations and goodness knows what. That was normal. That slaughter went on for weeks and weeks and weeks until they eventually had to abandon the idea and pull out, well, the guys that were left that is.

It's weird. I mean, you get a feeling of who's who when it comes to people who want to go down in history books, like Wellington and things like that. Because they have a rather callous psychopathic disregard for human life. The whole point is to win, that's it. And they'll survive because generally the ones who are generals, etc. stand on the hilltops in the old days and watched it way down below, the battles going on. The same throughout the Napoleonic wars too. So they survive and they hope to get into the history books. But the little peons down below are getting, are slaughtering each other. It was really war by numbers, how many have you got left? And if you had more than the enemy, then you'd won at the end of the day. That was the whole idea behind World War I across Europe as well. And those were accepted policy.

Numbers were… they didn't care. Because the class system was so incredibly, incredibly all pervasive all through their societies, it was just your duty to go off and get slaughtered without thinking too much about it. And if you did survive you might get a little gold star, maybe a peg leg or something to go home with. That's the reality, that's the truth of it all. Today we're shocked by the numbers, throughout the whole World War I campaign. You can't, you just can't picture it. Daily, multi-thousands of people, per day being slaughtered. We honestly can't picture that today. Today we'd be horrified. But back then they had trained the public it was their duty. Mind you, a lot of them didn't have much to go back to in the first place. Honestly.

But that was, again, HG Wells said, we need word wars to bring nations to their knees. He worked for the Fabian Society and the Fabian Society is part of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, that run the right wing and the left wing. If there's any wings out there, they run it, they've got their leaders running it all.

That's how it's done. To manage any change in the future and to get it happening you must create the sides and you must make sure your own people are there to guide them in their conflicts to bring them to the right conclusions. And you'll win. You can't lose that way. That's the real dialectical technique.

Today we have gender politics and all kinds of politics. You've got lots of psychopaths, getting coached going in because they… They'll say all the right things for their particular following. And believe you me, if it was more lucrative to change their mind and go to the other side tomorrow, they would do it. That's what psychopaths do, they change parties very quickly, in their own interest. Winston Churchill did that himself actually. And Churchill, this great guy, who really, I mean, there's a long story behind the Churchill family. But he helped Lord Mountbatten during World War II with the plan to raid Dieppe in France. Mountbatten was to be given that as his baby, because he wasn't doing much and he wanted to be in on the, you know, in the history books too. So he got himself permission from Churchill, who helped to organize it too and plan it, to get Canadian troops trained up and ready to invade Dieppe as a tests, many thousands of them as a test for invasion. They had reconnaissance, air reconnaissance and so on, for days and weeks and so on and they knew eventually that the Germans, because the Germans got wind of it all and they fortified all along the coastline there. They warned Churchill and Mountbatten that it would be a mass slaughter because it was so well fortified now. They wouldn't listen, they went ahead anyway. It's like telling…

Don't forget, Winston Churchill, to the day he did, had rooms full of toy soldiers in traditional battle lines for old wars and so on. This was his hobby. He saw real people, the peons, the same way as his little soldiers. Honestly. That's what it is. Mountbatten was the same. So anyway, they sent I can't remember how many thousands of soldiers to mass slaughter at Dieppe. Absolute tragedy it was. Because it could all have been avoided, no problem at all. All the intelligence, and lots of intelligence all was adamant that there would be mass slaughter because it's so heavily fortified. But they wouldn't listen. They wanted to get their names in the history books again.

What I'm trying to get at here is, it isn't just to do with this kind of war. The people who run the world and have the big club at the top, through the banking system, with the organizational system of, as they say, a kind of semi-secret societies, based on the Jesuits, as Cecil Rhodes said about the Cecil Rhodes Foundation and the Roundtable Society. That's what he said, you can read it up yourself, it's in his own last will and testament, he put all that in it too, to bring about a world governmental system. They merged with the Lord Alfred Milner group, which became the Royal Institute of International Affairs, private club. The branches across the world, especially in America, are called the Council on Foreign Relations.

Anyway, the whole point of it being semi-secretive, they didn't want the public to know of how they were really being governed. They would give you a fake reality of how you're being governed. That's what your politics happens to be. You do see it once in a while when the so-called champions of democracy, they keep telling you about democracy, democracy… Well, they don't believe in democracy. Margaret Thatcher said the same thing when she left politics, she was brought in to be a technocrat at the Royal Institute of International Affairs and she was open about it in a newspaper article. She said, I can now get things done across the world,I know the ex-politicians and heads of state and so on, I can get things done, for the big goal of the world, and that's the way things were really done, because they're not responsible to the general public. She said that too.

But again, as soon as, they say, that people don't remember, they go right back to politics, for the general public. And it's all emotive stuff and you fight for it and so on. And before you know it, everybody, it sounds like chaos. Because it will split society up into so many diverse little segments. And pushing victimhood everywhere. You know, if you're not a victim of something, or you don't claim to be a victim of something you might be the best victim of all but don't claim it, you've got no power at all in today's society. Because that's what different groups are all about, creating the victim societies. Once you claim you're a victim, then you can do the unthinkable, you can really project hate on whoever else is across the room from you. And that's what it's about. It's, who's allowed to hate and who isn't. That's really what modern society is about.

You're in a very delicate position, situation I should say, and time. Because it's planned that way, the chaos is all planned. Out of it will come the new order. The Club of Rome are well aware of that because, as I say, they've never, they speak on behalf of the elites and they've never, they've always, they've got lots of articles out and their own books as well saying that democracy is just too slow, doesn't work and you'll need exactly what the Council on Foreign Relations / Royal Institute of International Affairs, the Fabian Society have always said, in socialism, that experts must run the world. For the likes of every single individual, the expert class and scientific class must run the world, on behalf of the dominant minority. So it's all out in the open.

And having said that it's, as soon as some politician opens their mouth to read some pre-prepared scripts written by scriptwriters, in an emotive way because it's written by marketers and so on, oh, the folk go crazy again. They forget what you've just said to them. You'll forget the evidence that you can even go and look at for themselves. It's just too easy to tweak the emotions, isn't it? And when people are running on emotions they don't listen to their common sense. And they're blind to reality. It's like a bull in a red rage, as they say, with anger, that's what emotion is meant to do.   But it's just too easy now as so many university students of all different kinds groomed for positions as leaders for different, all kinds of groupings and splinter groups, hhhh, off splinter groups, to make sure that everybody's catered for, so that no people can ever, ever get together collectively to fight anything. Isn't that rather wonderful.

But people think it's a coincidence. The art of ruling people is very ancient. And it's never been lost. It's simply being added to. The knowledge and the techniques, etc, have been added to. Machiavelli was awfully good in his day, but Machiavelli literally is a Boy Scout compared to these days and times we live in. Everyone is monitored to the nthth degree, and the goal has always been lifelong monitoring from birth to death. Not just monitoring but managing from birth to death. We forget that, don't we, as we play ourselves. Go and play on the Internet, and people do. And they give all their data out. And as soon as their friend gets back to them or whatever it is, they've forgotten all the warnings of the caution and they'll click anything, 'eh, permission for this, permission for that, click clickclickclickclick. And they've clicked their lives away and their future away. They don't even know it.

Privacy was fought for by revolutions in the past by the people, by the peasants in different countries. Because at one time, not so long ago, not so long ago, the peasants had no rights at all. Forget all the dramas and the fiction you've read or seen in plays about the 1800s. For most folk, it was a horror show in the 1800s in Europe, in Britain especially. It was called 'the poor man of Europe' because of the way it treated its people. The class system is so embedded there was no help for anybody. In fact, the only help the people would get occasionally if they were starving was from the churches. And that's a dirty word today, isn't it? You've been taught to hate them.

You'll find that the class system showed you what the elite are like. They're still the same today. They're better, they're prepared, they have lessons to prepare them on how to present themselves to appear in public. But it's the same people… with the same views and opinions. Because their reality has never altered. They've just made sure the experts trained your reality to perceive everything differently, to believe in democracy and to believe you're living in a fair society. But at the top, they never ever have thought that way at all.

We adapt so quickly to everything. We adapt to the fact that everyone is getting cancers. As though it's a normal thing. We adapt to the fact that food is produced by five main big agribusinesses, a monopoly, a cartel. With the chemical industry completely involved with them. And it's the same chemical industries that was part of, that is part of the military-industrial complex, remember, that gives all the different weed killers and pesticides for the genetically modified crops that are all patented. When the food is patented do you understand the power that these companies have over the planet? It's bad enough when you're all dependent on this strange authorized banking system that tolerates no other banks before it, you might say. Because it's their system, and to be part of their system you have to be selected and thoroughly vetted, etc., to worship them, and never break ranks with them. It's the same with the food industry and everything else today.

So they feed you all this stuff. They train you that everything's normal. And we do adapt. As I say, look at how quickly folk think it's normal that you put money in the bank and you won't get a penny back, if you're lucky you might break even, but at the moment you're not getting taxed extra. But if you've anything in the bank at all you get nothing back. Now, the money you've had in the bank, you think of millions and millions of people with deposits in the bank, that's being lent out daily by the banks, it doesn't just sit there. They're making incredible interest off it. They're also sending it across the planet for loans, with very high interest rates, especially to very dodgy customers and so on. The people that they're using the money from, they get nothing back at all. And we're taught now, since 2008 the last bank crash, that's normal, that's quite normal now.

So we adapt quickly, don't we? But we adapt very quickly to, as I say, the food, the same thing. So you've got a monopoly of money power across the planet that can crash nations if they want to. And you've got the food industry run by, really, a cartel. And don't forget, one company, if you're in a grocery store and you see all the different brands of tinned whatever, one company might own all of those brands. Dozens and dozens of them, that's quite legitimate. That's often what you're actually seeing. And when you look at what's in it, it's just heavily pesticide laden stuff. And you're eating it. And you wonder why your cells start to change. It's been known for a long, well, almost for about 60 years now that cancers, different cancers are caused by different things. Radiation is one, naturally. But chemical changes can make it happen too. And when you have persistent chemicals coming into your body that shouldn't be there, then it can certainly cause cellular changes.

Viruses can cause them too, we know that too. In fact, the war industry created a lot of stuff from viruses to do with, if they ever had long, long term wars it would take generations, they've got all kinds of weapons, including viruses that could work down generations and kill and sterilize the coming generations of a potential enemy. You have no idea what goes on. But we're fed this stuff.

Now, remember, that the big boys through many front people, with whom they made famous naturally, and some who were already famous because some of them literally belong in this managed system, like the Huxley's, Thomas Huxley and the offspring. They actually proclaim that they are part of the scientific management elite. I think it was Julian Huxley mentioned that. So they already, it's intergenerational managers and that was their job, as certain branches of science, including social sciences. They all talked about the big problem of overpopulation. Now, the countries that they were talking about at that time were presumed to be so-called Third World countries. Oh, there's too many of them, look at them all, my goodness, there's too many. But in actual fact they were talking about a world society and that's why they really started their depopulation in their home countries. Because they were just as terrified of the peasants in Britain, if they weren't mowed down by machine fire every few years, rising up and overthrowing them. That's what frightened them. And when communism got on the go that frightened them all the more, the prospect of that too.

So they were rather blatant as I say, their whole goal was always a world governmental system to be dominated. No point just going after a country here or there, get the whole, get them all involved. Then you get a world governmental system with your world managers system and classes, and scientific class and academic class running the show. Then social work departments, etc. etc. Then you would train the people from birth to be good citizens, which means obedience, do what you're told and don't ask questions and so on. But they also wanted sterilization for a lot. Don't forget, these are the same guys who brought you eugenics. They'd always believed in eugenics, and there's way too much to go into it.

But the fact is, they got their World War I. They got their World War II. And they kept saying, see, see, see, we told you so, you can't go on like this. They helped bring it about, but,we told you so, are you ready to give up your sovereignty? HG Wells even said after the second one, he actually made statements to the press, we need another war, they still haven't given up their sovereignty. So he said that after World War I, and he said the same thing after World War II. But he made it quite plain that the goal was always a world governmental system. Part of the planning techniques he put into some of his other books as well, like A Modern Utopia, including sterilization of the unfit and unwanted and the unnecessary basically. You see, that's what the whole thing is, you're unnecessary. And with progress, progress, progress more and more of you become unnecessary.

And farming, back then, don't forget farming back then, they kept saying, and the United Nations said it too when they came in. But they said, they only copied what they said long before that, it's too important to be left to farmers. If you want to control people and you, even if you had a good slice of the market, you controlled a good chunk of the market, could control the food supply and even withdraw the food supply. If there's any independent ones out there at all the peasantry could go around there at night and maybe get some food for themselves. The whole point is total control, then they can't get food anywhere. That's where they want to bring you too.

Don't forget that Canada quite a few years back now passed a law to make it illegal for Canadians to, who have furnaces, you know, forced air furnaces, oil-based, made it illegal for them to purchase oil to heat themselves in the winter without a governmental, the government approved inspection. That means they can come in every year at your home and if they don't like this or that or whatever you have to buy a new this and a new that and yada, yada ya. Systems that were perfectly fine and worked fine for generations suddenly are obsolete and they need new tanks every so many years, at 2000 bucks apiece to hold the oil, etc. etc. They always make sure that their own businesses make a fortune out of the control put out on top of you. But to basically forbid folk without this license, you have to get a license to heat yourself!

You understand what it's all about? And you've got global warming and global cooling and all the rest of it. Do you understand what it's all about? And then food control, that's coming down the pike too? I hope you do understand what it's all about. As I say, the ones who created the world wars, and who helped foment the action of country against country, and who profited mightily up to the present day off these wars because you're still paying interest of them, they're still in charge today. They see you as the same peons that ended up in Gallipoli or whatever, wars they had or in the Western front in Europe and France, they see you exactly the same way.

They're not as arrogant in public as they used to be because they've been groomed, given basic training on how to act. But oh, they're still the same, still the same. And they'll tell you, when you meet them and have little chats with them, they're quite open about it. There's too many of the peasants, you know, the people, there's just too, they just don't, we don't need them anymore, yada yada ya, they're taking all of our resources up and we can't survive as a species down the road and… Meaning, they can't survive as a species down the road if you're all surviving too. Quite blatant about it. But they give you the fronts which is, oh we have to save the world, we're going to take all the rights off you, to save the world, you've got to stop heating yourselves. Because it's causing carbon, oh, we can't have that, you'd better freeze to death, hey, for the good of the planet.

You understand the incredible behavioral psychology that's rammed down our throats from everywhere you look, even the movies and children's books for children that make sure it's all embedded in it. The teachers are getting paid big money to be change agents to indoctrinate the children into these kinds of citizens. This is a war technique. In a war, everything's flat out and no expense is spared, because they're borrowing money like crazy and you're all going to pay it back anyway. It's the same thing with this big agenda, it's a war agenda. Oh, global warming is the thing they settled on. Even though we're freezing to death in the winter, they won't change their tactics. There's too many of you breathing, too many of them, if half of you would just die tomorrow we might get it down by 2% or whatever, yada, yada ya.

It's all to do with taking over control and having you acquiesce to give control for your very existence to these characters who are just about total socialistic control of your lives, and your thoughts by the way. They aren't stopping at what you eat or how you heat yourself or anything like that. Including what you think. It was all planned a long time ago. Bertrand Russell said it when he was a big planner for this agency. In fact, he helped design, as I said before, a lot of the culture that has changed since the 1940s to the present, and still some of it to come, he helped design it. With the Macy group and the other groups he was authorized, he actually, I've actually published all the organizations he was authorized to work with. He was rather blatant about it. Lord Bertrand Russell, right. Quite something.

Now, one of the books he wrote was called The Impact of Science on Society. I used to read parts of his books years ago on the air to show you how old this agenda is, and how it ties in with the food today, your vaccinations, all this kind of stuff. It ties in, folks. Ties in, ties in, ties in. The Impact of Science on Society page 50 he says…

Fichte laid it down that, education should aim at destroying free will, so that, after pupils have left school, they shall be incapable, throughout the rest of their lives, of thinking or acting otherwise than as their schoolmasters would have wished. But in his day this was an unattainable ideal: what he regarded as the best system in existence produced Karl Marx. In future such failures are not likely to occur where there is dictatorship.

(Alan: He's talking about the need for dictatorship, you see.)

Diet, injections (A: ...that's your vaccinations.), and injunctions will combine, from a very early age, to produce the sort of character and the sort of beliefs that the authorities consider desirable, and any serious criticism of the powers that be will become psychologically impossible.

(A: So you won't be able to criticize anything at all.)

Even if all are miserable, all will believe themselves happy, because the government will tell them that they are so.

A totalitarian government with a scientific bent might do things that to us would seem horrifying. The Nazis were more scientific than the present rulers of Russia, and were more inclined towards the sort of atrocities than I have in mind. They were said — I do not know with what truth — to use prisoners in concentration camps as material for all kinds of experiments, some involving death after much pain. If they had survived, they would probably have soon taken to scientific breeding. Any nation which adopts this practice will, within a generation, secure great military advantages.

The system, one may surmise, will be something like this: except possibly in the governing aristocracy, all but 5 per cent of males and 30 per cent of females will be sterilized. The 30 per cent of females will be expected to spend the years from eighteen to forty in reproduction, in order to secure adequate cannon fodder. As a rule, artificial insemination will be preferred to the natural method.

(A: Now, so much of what he's saying here [Alan chuckles.] is exactly where all your tax money's been going for the last 40-50 years, isn't it? Think about it. So he's talking about his, what he mentioned about, even that was inadequate, he said. So, diet, injections, and injunctions…)

Diet, injections, and injunctions will combine, from a very early age, to produce the sort of character and the sort of beliefs that the authorities consider desirable, and any serious criticism of the powers that be will become psychologically impossible.

Now, that ties in with all the articles, even some today, I'll put some links up, to the system they brought in, electronic system of communication. And don't forget, communication is something that they always have worried about from the dawn of time in governing classes. If the peasants start to communicate then you have to nip it in the bud in case they end up having rebellions or whatever. Or having incredible spy agencies to collect all the data on who's saying what. And to punish those who are saying certain things, always. And today they've made it, with giving you about 25 years or more of the computer, making it indispensable for all kinds of business and so on, they're already censoring people from saying certain things now, 'eh. Quite openly.

That's not by… It's the same agenda here. It's the same agenda. Russell himself talked about using credits, given out by the state for pay basically. Like a basic income for everyone, deposit it into your accounts. If you were disrespectful of the system, of the governing system or whatever or complained about anything, they would simply withdraw your ability to withdraw your credits every month. So you couldn't pay your rent, buy your food or anything… until you got down on your knees and apologized and paid the penalty, etc. Well, we're here, folks. You've got the exact same system where you're taken off the air. Or you can't communicate to people electronically for X amount of time, like a penalty, like a prison penalty. This is the new justice system if you haven't quite caught on to it, folks, and it's judge, jury and executioner all combined in one. You have no say in anything.

It reminds me so much of, what's often laughed at, because you go into the old, old religious discourses they had about what would even Revelation be all about and so on. And it is a fascinating topic because it has such great imagery. Of course, the old languages and the old stories were fantastic for imagery, and mental imagery. But you also find that, the statements like, in the Bible, for instance, that out of your own mouths are you condemned. So if someone's twittering [Alan chuckles.] and tweeting all over the place, and you're seeing that, and bang, they're getting pulled off for this and pulled off for that because of something they said… Judge, jury, executioner. So all this stuff I'm talking about was planned long before I was born, and before most of you were born too, I'm sure.

So yeah, he tells you what they would do. He's not fantasizing here. He's saying his version of it, and many of his compatriots were giving the same versions of it, in the same big think tanks, etc. of the day, belonging to the same organizations. Don't forget that Russell himself belong to MI5 during World War II. He and George Orwell in fact, Blair, worked together, sometimes even at the BBC and outside the BBC, in different think tanks as well. They also worked with Koestler, Koestler that came out with Darkness at Noon, and far left, almost communistic I suppose, and a few other books as well, well known for it. So they all worked together. They used a lot of communists by the way, for MI5 during the war for propaganda purposes. Russell, from insiders who wrote about their experiences there, they actually mentioned that Russell was your typical psychopath too, very arrogant and completely self-confident about himself. Because he was very pushy and arrogant and strong, to women's eyes, he would have affairs. He was always going after the women and trying to seduce them simply to peeve off their husbands, to prove he was stronger. He did it with Arthur Koestler, he kept hitting on her because his wife was at these meetings.

But that's the kind of character he was. He was an arrogant psychopath employed by the powers that be, and part of the powers that be to plan the future. We're living through a lot of it today. It's coming out exactly, exactly as he forecasted. He wasn't looking at a crystal ball, he knew it was going to happen because they had planned it all. They'd planned it. HG Wells talked about 'the world brain', instant communication of all data across the planet. Hm? But it doesn't matter, people will forget this. As soon as you get the next quote from some politician, folk will forget all about you, you know. I'm not kidding you, [Alan chuckles.] they will. They'll go, oh, did you hear what so-and-so said? Well! And they're ready to kill each other again. And all the real stuff is just ignored.

So if you wonder what all the big push now for trying to get all genders to produce babies, I remember in Australia when they tried it with a guy, to create an artificial womb years ago and I kept saying, what on earth are they trying this for? Well, they're trying to create ways of creating artificial wombs, just like Brave New World. Where do you think all that came from? …from the 1930s, for goodness sake! And you get all the articles today with the same things going on, of this incredible rush to produce children outside of the female womb. And that's why Russell ended that little bit there with…

As a rule, artificial insemination will be preferred to the natural method.

We're simply living through a big agenda, an old agenda. Reality is far different than the one that they've indoctrinated into us through school, and through what you're given as documentaries and so on about reality and the cutting edge, etc. They're way way ahead of it always and you're given a completely different version. That's why folk across Europe are wondering, they can't figure out why their countries are sinking and sinking, the politicians can bring more and more people in, and you've got to support them all, and you're not making anything anymore. Do you really think they're this stupid? Do you really think that? Do you? Hm? Your nations are not what you think they are. And the politicians and your governments are not what you think they are either.

Now, I have to rush, I guess. I always prattle off before I even read the articles. I don't even like reading the articles, except occasionally to tie them in with what I'm prattling on about. And I don't plan these things. I've been busy all week shoveling snow most of the week and trying to stop the roof from falling in. Because the weight was incredible with snow that kept building up, about a foot every other day, on top of the previous snow. And then if you get ice settling in there and is going to be awfully heavy. Then snow again. It's pretty nasty. Plus, I have about over 100 foot of driveway to shovel too. Anyway, that's what I've been doing all week. And I had no idea what I'd talk about tonight. So anyway, I'm going to put up a few links regardless that might tie in with what I've been talking about.

Polar vortex, again, too, it's a joke. I'm telling you, when this winter is over it will be one of the longest winters, I'm sure, in my history, by the time it's finished. And the coldest. They'll tell us in April and May or in June that, they'll tell us, the experts will tell us, right, it was the warmest winter in history. You wait and see. Because it's an agenda, it's nothing to do with reality.

MIT climate scientist Dr. Richard Lindzen: 'Global warming' 'consensus' was determined before the research even began - climatedepot.com / 30 Jan 2019

That's old stuff too to me because the Club of Rome came out with it and says they were given the agenda, to get an agenda for reasons to take over control of the planet and resources and everything else, and they said, they hit upon the idea of global warming, famine, drought, and the like, that would fit the bill, and man, therefore, would be the enemy of sustainability. Then another one, the Club of Rome, the ones who came up with the idea, because they were given the task, they had to find some way… They even considered UFOs at one point, anything at all to bring the world together, a very old idea. Some presidents mentioned it, some prime ministers in Canada mentioned it too, that if we were only invaded by people from a different planet, we'd all come together, and then have their global government, you see. But of course, it's much better to get the weather than fall for the UFO invasion stuff. So the...

Food in the Anthropocene: the EAT–Lancet (A: That's the British medical Journal.) Commission on healthy diets from sustainable food systems - thelancet.com / 16 Jan 2019

They've now got committees together to try, because everything in an expert controlled society has to have divisions, you see, of different sciences. So now you've got the doctors involved in what you're going to eat and what you'll be allowed to eat down in the future. And you will, you will be monitored. They've already turn out the machinery to monitor you like crazy on what you're eating and buying and so on. And you will be controlled. They mean it when they talk about a totalitarian system.

Family Was Watched Through Nest Security Cameras - chicago.cbslocal.com / 31 Jan 201

…for those who don't quite know what's going on with all their wonderful security systems. There's nothing out there that cannot be hacked and is hacked. You'll find even from Vault 7 I think that WikiLeaks came out with, and you saw what the CIA can do, used, and all the rest of the big boys, and how they could hack your car and make it go off the road and so on, you know. I remember too a few years back when they were, with the newer accelerator pedals in cars, there were certain cars that were getting locked down, in other words, go down by itself and stay there. Because you don't have the cable anymore, it's all electronic positioning. But I'll bet you anything, I wouldn't be surprised if that's what they were testing and unknown to the drivers. We're constantly being studied as they test these different things out on the public. But anyway, there's people getting, using their own home security system and it's being hacked like crazy. And they spend a lot of money on the security systems, it's phenomenal. Another one too is…

Is the 10-year challenge a boon to Facebook's facial recognition tech?
smh.com.au / 22 Jan 2019 / Jacey Fortin

(A: This is an incredible, big incredible intelligence agency, isn't it, running Facebook. It always was from the beginning. They always give you the front people with the claim, they make you believe in the mythology. But these are all planned long before the even pick the person to front them. It says…)

The 10-year challenge was all fun and memes until last week after a tweet moved thousands of people to worry: are we unknowingly helping giant corporations to improve their algorithms for biometric identification and age progression?

OF COURSE, YOU ARE. And they mention in it too, again, Facebook was part of it to find your family history, get your DNA tested. And the idiots send it all off, you know. I mean, you can't help most folk, you know. It's true, you really can't. You can't. I'll put these things up. And then…

So there you go. There's another article too. Some guy made some kind of like or dislike comments. I think it was on a joke he'd seen, then ticked it off, he disliked it, and he got a visit from the police who said he better start being careful about what he's saying or thinking. The thought police, hey. It's all here, folks.

I said it would be a 20 year span you would get for the computer, as they made sure that everyone would get on to it, until it would be indispensable, and then they'd start taking away the freebies and that. Six Tanzanian children killed 'for body parts' - bbc.com / 28 Jan 2019

(A: After reading the other stuff too, about the abortions, and they sell the abortion parts off, you know, across the world. You don't even want to go where a lot of it goes, to make people young and so on, you don't want to even go there. But then when I read this article on Tanzania, it says...)

Six children in south-western Tanzania have been killed and had their ears and teeth removed, the authorities say.

Some of the bodies of the children, aged between two and nine years old, were also missing limbs.

"This is all about superstitious beliefs and many believe they will get help from witchcraft," Njombe District Commissioner Ruth Msafiri said.

Police have detained one suspect, a close relative of three of the children who were from the same family.

Ten children in all have gone missing in Njombe since the beginning of December and four have been found alive.

Correspondents say that some witchdoctors in the region tell people that human body parts have special properties that can bring them wealth and luck.

Now, this is from the BBC we're talking about that reported this. Now, after reading the other stuff too, and I thought about the abortion parts, and the money the surgeons are making off this and abortionists and so on, and selling these parts across the world for all kinds of, we call it Western witchcraft, which is longevity products, etc. What on earth is the difference, folks? Hm? Really? Really, really, really?

So we're due for more bad weather this weekend too so I'll get on with it and get out there and start shoveling again. It's not all gloom and doom naturally. But for those who can handle it, who can handle the bad news without cracking up, I think, I know from the folk who get in touch with me, it has a good effect across the planet on lots of people and at least a lot of folk understand the system much, much clearer and better, and don't fall into the traps that's laid out for them. You wouldn't believe, ha, the massive bureaucracy and the sciences involved in conditioning us all to be dumb, stupid, immature for our entire lives and to believe everything that we're told from government departments. It's incredible.

Russell said it too, remember, that everybody in the world will believe, no matter what country they live in, that they live in the best country in the world with the best health care and the best this and the best that, simply because their government will keep telling them so. And isn't that the way of it.

For myself, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on February 10, 2019. I should really start off by reminding myself as well as you, that I should really be mentioning the books and discs @.com websites. You can buy them, you can find out how to do it @.com. Also take a note of all the other sites I have on that page in case any of them go down for any particular reason and you'll always be able hopefully to access my shows and so on. Also, you can donate if you'd like to. Because I've had so much stuff up for many, many years for free. It's only the occasional person once in a while, or the same handful of people in fact, who will donate on any kind of semi regular basis. That helps me to tick over.

But people from all over the planet use the website constantly, a lot of talk show guys do it too for their own shows, etc. And so many people are into all kinds of occult and New Age things, because they're bored stiff probably, and they want information on these old religions and things like that, and the present ones too, and I used to cover them all in pretty good detail… and many other things too, to do with our existence on the planet. Because our existence, again, your life is pretty short, you know, it will fly by. One day you'll sit back and say, why did I waste so much time on this or that or whatever it happened to be? Or even just entertainment in itself?

Because the biggest problem with people today, it will get worse and worse and worse by the way, as, really, the old, old, ha, the joke and the reality too, of the meaning of life and the purpose of life, etc., as you go through rapid changes... Because we're trained by the masters of the world to behave in certain ways, with each generation, and to believe in certain things and even to have causes, that will always suit those at the top, which generally are the international bankers and I'll touch on that tonight.

However, I do go into the fact too that there's much more to humanity than what you're given. I think we've all experienced, and hopefully, hopefully we've all experienced, I think you're cut off through pure materialism if you don't experience it, but the occasional sensation of someone going to phone you or something like that. It used to be more obvious before you had cell phones, because people didn't phone you all the time, especially if it was long-distance and things like that. But the cell phones now, people are actually, they expect phone calls all the time.

But in the old days, not so long ago, which are the old days now, you would get senses of people either going to visit you, just unexpectedly, but you'd get a sense it was going to happen. And you would get senses. These are senses, the natural senses that we do have, sixth senses. I think really children probably have more awareness of the senses, they don't suppress them. Because they haven't been told to yet. Once they're in school they drum all of that out of you with so-called practicalities for survival, so they claim. But it's really just to get your early indoctrination of the system so you'll obey and work for the system without even knowing it. But it's drummed out of you through materialism and the worries of just surviving and getting through life, etc. etc. etc. And dealing with all the natural drive that you're born with that develop even later. There's lots of drives that will distract you, and there's massive businesses to help them on, because they get money off you as they distract you. It's quite surprising, the detail that goes into creating any particular batch of years. And that's how I see them, are batches of years.

So as I say, I go into all this stuff in detail over many, many years and lots of people use them. So remember, you can buy the books and discs @.com. I would churn out more books really, but the reality is too, I'd prefer just to tell the people information that might help them get on through life, or survive through life, at least on a personal basis. It might not even be successful financially but at least it's helping. What is success, really? Hm? You're told you've got successes, and believe you me, you won't find any real genuine people out there that have what you would term big, big success who are really happy. You'll find too with incredible alterations in society and functions, etc. and expectations, that it will get worse and worse and worse.

That was also known back in the early 20th century by people like Aldous Huxley who also talked at Berkeley in the 60s about it and he said that people really are not terribly happy, basically, intrinsically they're not terribly happy. And happiness is a strange term because today, under psychiatry, which helps to rule you, and psychology, and you have behaviorists all ruling you, they promote the idea that happiness is success and happiness is what they tell you success happens to be. And they give you all these idols to follow, that really are just fronts for big corporations behind them. The making of a star, Hollywood, music, whatever it happens to be, takes a lot of money, or even books for that matter, it takes a lot of money to promote the person and to create them into the star image. And when you get big television stations immediately grabbing on to somebody you know it's one of the establishment's creations. Because they give you people, from all walks of life, or thoughts of life, or segments of thought of life, to guide people who are looking. In other words, they give you a guru for every particular area that you happen to look at in fact.

People also will condemn you for even voicing certain concerns, and it has to be done at times. You've got to be honest about everything, as best as you can. And being honest will mean you'll be condemned. You'll find even the old religions were suited to the time, what they called old religions. And even though you have different criticism of old religions, in all countries, and all types of religions, you'll find at the same time that some of them, especially those that came into Europe, you find that they give you values, or they give values to the people that stopped total chaos. It was bad enough being plundered by nobility and futile systems and so on, like that. At least they give a sense of worth to people that didn't exist anywhere else in the world. You were either a loser or somebody. And if you were a loser you were a slave generally, and the property of somebody; serfs were obviously property too.

The big condemnation in hindsight, this is the big problem that you have today, everything is judged in hindsight, according to today's standards. And you can't project today's standards on to the Middle Ages or yesterday's past. It can't be done. Different times. Different era. They didn't have welfare systems. They didn't have social work departments. They didn't have all the different things you're used to today. And people really didn't have the drive for materialism that you have today, where there's mass consumerism, it didn't exist before. It was basics, that was it. And it wasn't easy. And life was tough. And we only got out of that in some countries in the 20th century because of world wars. And that is true.

Different movements took place to allow some of the cash to stay in the pockets of the earners, for a change, and to get something back for your money. The US was the same too… And I'm talking just off the top of my head, this wasn't planned or anything like that. But I was just thinking of the US revolution, much more to it than meets the eye too. It took years in preparation, Benjamin Franklin mentioned that too, with the secret societies that ran the day. They were intragenerational revolutionaries. Like Tom Paine for instance, who in his own writing said that he belonged to a family of intergenerational freedom fighters, or revolutionaries. Revolutionaries was the term, actually.

So you don't realize that things are not spontaneous in life, anymore than today, the different values you're given today, and the switches are spontaneous and that's so far from any kind of reality. I've mentioned so many times about some of the books I have here, old books, because I studied as much as I could about certain things which interested me, as to the whys of things. And one of the whys was, how, what shaped society's values? It's like George Bernard Shaw, for instance, a member of the Fabian Society. He defined along with HG Wells, to the readers of their different publications, what they meant by socialism versus socialist. And all these… it sounds subtle, the difference, but they're not subtle at all. There are big differences. Where he said, literally, socialism was the complete reordering of all society. Complete, that's man, woman, child, everything, nation, purpose, function.

And it was intertwined with Marxism of course. That's why Marxism was pushed too, in London, by the way. Don't forget where Marx… Marx was kicked out of Germany, he went to live in London and he was kept in a good lifestyle there, he even had servants and so on. For those who think he was a poor little guy, it's far from the truth. And let's be honest too, since the whole point of Marxism was to overthrow, again, of all organized governmental systems and monarchies, believe you me, the British monarchy was not a system that took this kind of lightly. So they gave permission for him to live there. There's much more to everything than meets the eye, obviously.

Communism was basically a big, big test. The first one was the American Revolution, could people basically, and this is a bit of a joke of course, run their own lives without having experts and the proper people managing them? That was part of the test, supposedly, the big study, the big experiment. And the next experiments was the Soviet system that came along, where they had, again, the epitome, supposedly, of true socialism where the 'Soviet', which is a 'rule by councils', councils for every type of function in life and department and so on, and unions, would be run by the Soviet, these councils and it would be a perfect utopia for everybody. Which was a big lie because humanity always overtakes any idealism, and that means the crooked psychopaths are always at the top. [Alan chuckles.] I don't care what the system is called, it's the same system, really.

But getting back to what I'm saying. Beria who was the chief of police at one point in the 1930s in the Soviet system, or the and KVD and the Cheka, etc, he ran the Comintern for the Soviet system, like the Young Communists International. Many leaders that eventually even ruled Canada at one point went over there because they were members of the Comintern, and other countries too attend it. And bankers too by the way, you know, bankers were not out of this picture at all. Beria said that it used to take a whole generation, about 70 years, that's how they took a generation at that time… He said that,it used to take 70 years to make the small social changes necessary before they could make the next step, to push it further, on any particular area. But he said, now with the scientific study of humans in society, talking about behaviorism and psychology and psychiatry that was still fairly new at that time, then he said, we can, and with the proper indoctrination, we can literally by intense propaganda and indoctrination alter behavior and opinions and segments, within every four years.

Every four years. So if you're taking the span of, say, 16 years, you could get the first group of children coming in at school at four or five, and then four years later you could have an indoctrination which would up the indoctrination of the first four years, and a step further, and within 16 years of doing this technique, you could have a reversed opinion on it, the particular topic could be reversed completely and the belief could be reversed. And that's happened so fast in fact. Today with mass communication, they said that mass communication would be more and more perfected and available to everybody, would be the technique which would be used.That's television, radio, they have cell phones and the Internet and so on. It's all been done.

It's interesting to stand back and just watch it, and to see it happening. And to even see the fronts that are developed and put out for the public to follow that pretend to speak for different segments of society and the public. Segments which they've actually created in fact, as though we're a separate species or groups or whatever. Which is nonsense, you're either all human or you're not all human. But this is what they've done. It's easier to control society and that way, in voting blocks. By segmenting them all it's easy for those who rule the planet, and the future. It's very important to understand this idea of the future, and the planet itself. And unfortunately, it really does eradicate the natural human abilities, techniques of being human, that are techniques of being human, and it takes work to be a good human.

And unfortunately, as you throw religion out the window you've lost, you've thrown out the values that helped your ancestors up to the present day, your predecessors, survive, so that you are here today. Because it took a lot of social involvement by neighbors, as I say, even in places like Britain to help each other out before the welfare system really came in. And you've got mass unemployment and so on, people had to really help each other. It was only because of the vestiges of religion that kept them alive. Today, they'll tell their relatives, just go on welfare, before they'll help them out. That's what you get unfortunately. So the state has become supreme, exactly as HG Wells said it would it be made to be, supreme over any family involvement. It would be the head of the family in other words, whatever family that happen to be, or kind of family it would be. It's all happened.

It really is fascinating to see it all happening and to live through so much of it and to see the massive well-financed pushes, and organized pushes, not just for segments of society, but through entertainment and through everything, to make all of this possible, to make it happen the way that it was planned to be. So before, as I say, even 20, 30 years ago you had ideas of where it was all going, how it works, etc., and you'd study enough to understand where they said it would go, and bingo, it's happened. But every generation, once you hit 20 you've got folk who think it's somehow all their generation, that they are in charge. They really think that. They believe that. They have no idea that the music, the entertainment, even the jingo talk and vernacular that they're given for each age, they really think it's theirs, it's their creation. They really do believe that. It's fascinating to watch it over and over and over again.

But what I'm trying to say, ha, what am I trying to say? I'm trying to say that basically things are vastly different, vastly, vastly different than you'd imagine. I read some articles this week about some people in Britain who like to have debates, who get, you know, in public and universities and so on, who've been banned from universities because of the previous views, and the present views on certain topics. And he was banned. I think his talk was going to be freedom of speech and censorship. [Alan laughing.] So, the student unions and so on banned him from giving his talk at university. And universities are supposed to be, at one time, the pinnacles, supposedly, I don’t think they ever really were, but they were the pinnacle supposedly of free speech. If you lose free speech, you’re under tyranny, if you don’t understand that. And if you lose one area of free speech then there’s always one to follow and get added to it and get added to it and added to it until literally, you’re in a corner somewhere, like George Orwell’s 1984 and Winston has to write in his diary trying to be out of sight of the camera in his room. That’s where we are. That’s where we are right now actually. But this particular guy, it was Peter Hitchens, he said that you have to remember that these students, it’s easy to forgive them, all your students and you’re young and all. But the students, he said, will become the civil servants, the CEOs and the teachers and professors that will teach the next generation, and if they’re so intolerant now, what are they going to be like when they’re in charge of everything?

Really, what you’re seeing is the implementation of the worst tyranny this planet’s ever seen. And I really mean that. Because as bad as 1984, George Orwell’s book, was in his portrayal of a future, at least, at least there were some places perhaps outside of the camera you could get away. In our total surveillance society, hell is staring us in the face, and you’d better become a good PC robot if you want to survive. That’s what is going to be, when you will eventually be picked out because you had wrong thing, you thought something and it was the wrong thought. Like Winston’s neighbor in 1984, where, when Winston is in the jail, you know, in the Ministry of Love or whatever it was called, where they tortured you, naturally, then he met his neighbor there. And his neighbor said, oh, he says,my daughter, his young daughter who was about 10 or something, wearing the little outfit of socialism, because they all… All socialism has outfits, uniforms, for those who don’t quite get it. There’s also uniformity of behavior. There’s uniformity of speech. There’s uniformity of topics which you’ll talk about and push and opinions you’re going to have. It’s like a cloning in fact they all have with each other. But he meets his neighbor in there and he says, it’s my daughter that found out, I was saying something in my sleep, I didn’t know it, but thank goodness that she did the right thing and turned me in.

That’s how you’re all going to be. You’ll feel guilty for thinking something. You already do. Pavlovian style. Because indoctrination is so scientifically incredibly amazingly accurate with today’s technologies and methods, methodology. I’ve already mentioned the different nudge units that you have out there that are in charge of everything put across the Internet and your cell phones and everything else, and your chat rooms, and pushing you and nudging you to be good goodgood, and good depends on what flavor the tyranny that runs you wants today. Not kidding you.

But getting back to what I’m talking about. If you say the right things you’re going to be definitely attacked. That will happen. There’s a lot of rather fake people out there too that have made massive businesses, massive businesses out of being the fake fronts for a lot of the stuff. That’s when you always know, if they’re rolling in the bucks, believe you me, they’re part of the system. Even if they pretend that they’re opposite, they’re rolling in the bucks, that’s one of the clues, and will have no problem getting on television or whatever it happens to be. But when you forget and throw out your natural humanity, and that was the connection with what they called the world of spirit, all through religion, when you throw that out then you’ve are at the mercy of the worst materialistic scientific tyranny the world has ever seen. And unfortunately, because you have nothing to hold onto faith wise, and in terrible times of stress and evil, then you’ll crack completely with nothing to hold onto.

When you look across the world today at the incredible corruption, everywhere, everywhere you look in the West amongst the general population now, now that it’s on a roll for materialism, easy credit and disposable products that don’t last very long, but just constantly a consumer society, it’s really scary when you look at it. Really scary. Where life is becoming so cheap, and folk are being trained to see life as being cheap… and,I’m okay, Jack, as they say, I’m all right Jack and so tough luck on you. And it starts with youngsters, babies, and ends up with elderly people or folk who are just sick, being offered euthanasia rather than having treatment for problems which are easily treated today but maybe costs a bit of money. So what? Your governments have got plenty of money to blow on their own incredible salaries and expenses, and the massive civil servant, multilayered civil servant system that you have that would terrify when you when you see the incomes of these characters.

And I’m so out of touch with a lot of the income brackets and so on that I get kind of shocked at what I see. Then I realize it’s probably fairly normal, when I see the incomes that the greedy society that we now live in has created. Because there’s way too many folk getting churned out of university and college’s now that are taught that greed is good and they deserve it. It used to be just the ads to sell you things, you deserve it, go and have another chocolate, you deserve it. But now it’s, yeah, take the world by the you know what, you deserve it, you can have it all and then go for it. It’s like there’s no humility left anymore. It’s really something else. Because the culture, and the old cultures have been destroyed, interesting, that, in itself, and replaced with another culture.

Now, here’s an example of how out of touch I am about what folk earn. And the cost of living of course, which is going to go up because of the bank scandals, which is simply the fact that the money system has always been a scandal, it’s backed by nothing. There’s nothing backing, you know, the paper or plastic or digital currency. There’s nothing there. It’s a whole different topic, but the fact is, society now wants to be the multimillionaires, everybody’s been trained that they deserve it. I was looking this week in Sudbury, the city nearest me, and it’s not a huge pace, Sudbury. Even in Greater Sudbury, it’s a lot of scattered places and so on, little villages and all that. But Sudbury, it’s not a huge place, like Toronto or anything like that.

I just looked into the local papers for a change to see if they mentioned anything about the ice storms that we’re having here in this area. And sure enough, I had tremendous ice storms. Well, not tremendous, there could have been a couple worse, I suppose. But this is backed by very high winds too for quite a few hours in the middle of the night. Trees went down all over the place and my roof got covered, on top of snow, with about 2 inches of ice. I had to get up there today and crack a lot up, or crack it off I should say, [Alan chuckles.] …cracking up doing it I suppose. But it’s quite something, this has been one of the coldest and earliest starting winters I’ve experience so far here. Because winters now are becoming longer and longer, starting in September with snow all the way through to the present time with lots and lots and lots of snow. And very low temperatures at night sometimes, -48° without the wind chill, that’s just the temperature, that’s Fahrenheit too.

So I was looking at the papers in Sudbury and around the same time this happens, this happens there just the last couple of days or whatever, they also had earthquakes in Sudbury. And immediately they bring out the experts, oh, it’s just probably just mining related, probably. Even though east of Sudbury was one, and another one was in the west of Sudbury, quite a distance apart, but they, oh, it’s probably mining related, nothing to worry about, etc. Meanwhile too there are, well, there’s one, at least one that we know of, underground accelerator not too far from Sudbury in the area. It’s been there for many years in fact. And there’s also a big lab deep, deep down at a different place in Sudbury. And it makes you wonder what really is going on. But that’s another thing, again. [Alan chuckles.]

Because you’re living in an era of incredible secrecy, it’s not your right to know anything. It really… And that’s how you are being trained by the way, have you noticed that? You’re getting given no real news to do with, before, there’s no debates in parliaments or governments about upcoming this or upcoming that, you’re told nothing now, until things are just, laws are just passed. Have you noticed? You’ve been trained. You’re given lots of dramas and soap operas to fill it up and pretend that it’s news. Entertainment news is not news, to me. News is what’s going to affect your lives. But anyway, I looked through the papers and one of these articles just hit me. I guess if I read more and more of the local papers, I’d see more of it. I know there’s always scandals and politics and money and all the rest of it, and taxpayers cash put up. But this was in the local paper and it was about a policeman that…

Sudbury officer found guilty of discreditable conduct thesudburystar.com / 6 Feb 2019

An 18 year veteran of the Greater Sudbury Police Force has been found guilty of discreditable conduct.

(Alan: And what it was, he said something on Facebook. Like, he’s kind of like a whistleblower. But he aired a grievance that I think people should be [Alan chuckles.] …should be allowed to know about since we’re all paying for this kind of stuff, heavily, and they keep upping taxes and everything. And it’s the same everywhere, every city across the planet is the same, we’ve got psychopaths running the shows, folks. We DO. We do. Anyway, it says…)

The complaint stemmed from comments Constable Robert Rheaume made on social media back in March 2018.

Rheaume's problems started due to some Facebook comments about the wages of several colleagues that were published through the annual Sunshine List. (A: …whatever that is.)

On March 24, 2018 he made this comment on a Facebook post titled “Sunshine List swells in Sudbury, Ontario.”:

“What people should really be looking at is how someone like Sharon Baiden at the Greater Sudbury Police Service (A: I guess she’s up near the top or whatever. Actually, she might not even be near the top. Anyway, it says…) went from making $130,000 just four years ago and is now at $205,000!! (A: Annually. I mean, what’s this?!? What kind of…?!? I really am living way in the past, I guess, with cost of living and what folk are earning.) That’s almost 50 percent raise in less than 4 years… (A: This is only one of them.) As a matter of fact, the year that former Chief Frank Elsner left, she got a $48,000 raise. (A: Not bad, ‘eh?) Sudbury taxpayers should be asking council how that happened?”

And on March 28, 2018 he posted another comment:

“Don’t take this the wrong way my friend…But after seeing the Sunshine List last week, you should be posting about how some Managers at the Greater Sudbury Police Service got 33% Raises…They’re [sic] are a handful of them the [sic] got extremely hefty raises..Your taxes and mine going up because of the Police Service Board’s approval of these raises..Look up Lori Marconato..From $106 thousand (A: …this person, this other person…) in 2016 to $149 thousand in 2017… (A: Not bad pay raises, ‘eh?!) How do they justify that..Here’s another one..Melissa Bamberger $110 thousand in 2016 to $148 thousand in 2017…(A: [Alan chuckles.] Not bad at all.) Again, how do you [expletive] justify that?? Carrie Lynn Hotson..$109 thousand in 2016 to $132 thousand in 2017. Three people..over $100,000 in raises.”

So of course, they all come down on him for informing the public. And it’s true, the public wouldn’t, we’re pretty well in ignorance of what so-called civil servants, right, public servants are earning, ‘eh, aren’t we? We’re completely ignorant of it. You see, the public are the business and folk who go into college and university now are told that’s what the business is, and they want to get in managing the public where the big, big money is. Quite something. Anyway, the fellow’s pleaded not guilty to the charge, etc. but they’re going after him. Because the public are not supposed to know it, it might upset the public, who get upset enough to complain about this nonsense going on, ‘eh. Really. Think about it.

But yeah, I’m so out of whack of what folk are earning, it’s just… [Alan chuckles.] astonishing to me. It really is. And I’ll put up the link to Sudbury’s earthquakes.

Sudbury experiences two earthquakes in less than 48 hours - thesudburystar.com / 8 Feb 2019

And then an ice storm too happened about the same time. Quite amazing, hey. [Alan chuckles.] And incredible temperatures to boot. So yeah, it’s quite something. It’s one of the coldest winters I’ve experienced, and longest lasting, and it’s got a few months to go yet, I’ve no doubt at all about that.

Now, as I say, tonight’s talk was going to be, and hopefully I’ll get back onto it, about the fact the materialism has been indoctrinated into the public, where everything was just me-me-me, and narcissism, and hedonism, and get what you can. How many folk, and I’ve herd too, maybe you’ve said it yourself, when you say about scandals of folk dipping their hands into the till and coming out with big, big bucks and so on from the public. How many folk have you heard saying, well so what, if I was in that position, I’d do it too. I mean, do you understand that when society applauds criminality and this kind of behavior, as I say, you’re in for a horror show. Because it just gets worse and worse and worse. It really does.

It’s like George Bernard Shaw who did say what socialism really was. And the socialist, he said, expects, whether it’s a man or woman expect to get all the money back in taxes to help them on their way, etc., and pay for all the different social necessities that they need. He says, it’s far from the truth. He says, there will be no marriage, there will be no man and woman getting married in the state, and he says, and bringing up children themselves, etc. He says, that’s the difference between socialism and a socialist. What are you living through today? What have you already lived through? And he said too, he says, why should we keep you alive, you’ll have to come to us and explain why we should allow you to live. Because if you don’t eventually work for the system, and work for them, the ones who rule the system, then he said, why should we keep you alive.

You tie that in with the Georgia Guidestones for instance, hm, and all the UN, and all the so called, the front groups for the environmental movement, which are just eugenics movement, too many people, too many of the wrong sort of people, bring down the population, it's the people who are the problem creating all that carbon and creating all this needing of all these things, it's all your fault. And they use environmentalism and sustainability as the excuse, and that's the front of it all, that's the front for it all. The Club of Rome.

But yeah, you are looking for horror. And folk who think they can just keep voting and somehow get their champions in… Oh, you'll get all kinds of front group champions, well-made presented champions for you all because that's how easily you're all played today with politics. Really. There's so much you could say, and things you can't say anymore, about politics. Really, you can't say it, you really can't say it. But it's a complete joke and a racket today. When you see who runs them all… When you see who they are obedient to… And it's not you, the voters. In any country. And the rackets that go on is just incredible. The greed has never been so open today.

It's… I remember reading a long time ago, I think it was maybe Thomas Jefferson said that the people, it was regarding good and bad societies, and workable societies, eventually gets so crooked you don't really have a workable society. But he said that a good society can only be as good as the corruption which they tolerate from those who rule over them. And today folk accept the corruption as a normal thing. Because they themselves will say that, they will say what I said before. Well, if I was in the same, I would do the same thing if I was in that position. That's what you've got today. That's all your game shows on television, for many years have been winners and losers, winners and losers, don't you want to be a winner?

And now you're living through it as they all go for the people who are earning the money. Canada as well I think recently just said that, I think about 40% of the population that should be paying taxes, including corporations, are not paying any. 40%! And a lot of folk will say, well I wish I was part of that 40%. Because they want to be the same. The corruption, you see. And when things go belly up the next time, which it will because it's planned to go belly up, the financial system, to bring in the next stage of the same dominant elites' plan for the next stage of ruling society. And ruling is the word, to get away from this idea of democracy which the Club of Rome keeps telling you, doesn't work, it wasn't intended to work, but it was an awfully good battering ram to get folk to believe in it to push different agendas. So you need big upheavals to make it happen. And they won't get what they want if you think you've got rights. So they take all your rights away because you'll have crises, you see. Oh, it's an environmental crisis, it's a catastrophe.

With all the weather warfare programs on the go, very old ones, since even before World War II, nevermind the present ones, they can make anything happen, can't they. And even natural phenomena. And don't forget, all climate change is natural. We've always had it. We've had how many ice ages that we can detect? And between the ice ages, you had what? Warming trends. Warming up until the glaciers disappeared, then back to the ice ages again. Hm! Before humanity even trotted across the planet. But facts don't matter anymore.

Well, let's get back, and I hate to just jump all over the map but getting back to this corruption system that we live in, winners and losers. Now, here's one from Australia. I've been mentioning it. It's a good example because Australia is very similar to Canada with the old British colonial system and the banking system copied from the central banking from London, you see, and the kind of old-school tie set up too that helps run the system. And again, they always give you leaders every so often to vote for who pretend that they're different from the other ones by saying the opposite and all that, but what they do is different. It's always the same, what they do is the same, that's the key, not what they say. Never it's what they say. Anyway…

Hayne's findings won't be a shock; the banking scandals were decades in the making - mobile.abc.net.au / 4 Feb 2019

I've been talking about this for quite a long time building up and building up, watching the same bubbles with real estate that was created by the big banking industry and the chains of real estate organizations that help shove up the cost of housing, up and up and up so you've got bigger loans from the banks, they're all in it together, you see, that's how it works. And then your local governments, they get all the tax money from property taxes, that go for big pay raises and things like that for civil servants and public servants. [Alan chuckles.]

So Australia is just the same and it's a good example because they did the same with the homes in Australia. They're out of site as to their real value, any real estate value. So…

Hayne's findings won't be a shock; the banking scandals were decades in the making mobile.abc.net.au / 4 Feb 2019

How did it come to this?

How did we arrive at a situation where banks and financial houses slugged dead people with fees?

(A: They do that, you know.)

Where billions have been sucked out of Australians' retirement savings by bank-run super funds profiting at their members' expense?
Where many vulnerable people were doled out credit they could never afford? (A: …to buy the houses. Same thing with the last collapse too, right.)

Where households live with an unprecedented debt burden fuelled by lax lending standards that inflated a risky property price bubble?

After months of exposés, the banks and regulators will now face the fallout from the Hayne royal commission's final report; but the truth is there are many culprits, and the poor conduct and culture were decades in the making.

The genesis goes back to the 1980s and 1990s when Australia shifted from a world where banks were tightly controlled and credit was rationed, to a world where credit was free and easy, and banks — embracing an aggressive sales culture — flogged products to make money.

Alongside the floating of the dollar and the dismantling of tariff walls, the deregulation of banking was one more step in the liberalisation of the economy during that era.

(A: Now, that's what led, they took all regulations off, all the watchdogs off of banks. And guess what happens when you do that? Well, we lived through it with the big banking crash of 2007/2008, and into… we're still paying for. It's because that's why your currency is devalued constantly, because you still have to pay back the loans to bail out all those big banks from then. But this article goes on…)

How did the banks become so big?

(A: You could actually change this from Britain to Canada to Australia, the same article because it's identical everywhere, it's identical. Mind you, it's one system at the top running the banking system because the boys and gals that ran and created the Royal Institute of International Affairs were also run by the central banking system that came into Britain long before that... And gave you the British Empire actually… And profited from that Empire, these big banks… And use the countries as their battering ram, including the people, the armies to conquer for the big corporations. But it's the same system... across the world… for global domination. It hasn't died, it's still running it all. It gave you free trade and amalgamated countries into big trading blocs.)

So it goes into, again, the same repetitive stuff. Nothing will be done about it. After 2008 and 2009 they're right back to square one with the big bubbles and multibillion-dollar bonuses at the end of the year. If you've ever seen the movie, Ewan McGregor was in the movie [Rogue Trader], it was about, I think it was Nick Leeson the guy's name was who was to be given charge of the stock trading for Barings Bank back in the 90s. He did the usual kind of back-and-forth trading, borrowing money and trading, pretending they were making fortunes, and into multimillions and getting big, big salaries and bonuses. But it was all conology. And the guy in the documentary, the actual guy himself, not the actor, the person who got caught doing it talked about it in the documentary, about the incredible cons of banking and how they were, the greed factor overtook them all, all the different representatives who work inside the big banks, near the top. Not the little guys at the bottom with your local bank where you go in and walkout or whatever. But the big banks themselves, they don't care as long as the balance that they're showing shows massive income of profit, profit, profit. They don't care how it's done, even if it's fake. It hasn't changed.

How the biggest shake-up in Australian banking history will affect YOU - dailymail.co.uk / 4 Feb 2019

When you take the watchdogs off it, during Margaret Thatcher's time, and Ronald Reagan's time, that's what happens of course. Now, here's another one here too…

Cold calling customers to flog insurance and superannuation deals will be BANNED as part of crackdown on greedy banks - dailymail.co.uk / 4 Feb 2019

They're into everything now. They've got sales driven bank culture, they called it. And that's what they are now, big sales. And they churn out these characters, again, from college and universities, they got their little courses on banking and profit and investments. And the greed factor is phenomenal. And raping the public is just the way it's done. Because that's where all the money comes from eventually. We pay off the debt that's incurred all the time, every time it happens, we pay it off. The government uses your tax money, you're put down as bailing them out. Next time it's to be the bail-in's as well. So this is a good article here. And then there's another one and it's to do with…

Big banks accused of ripping off customers may not face court for a DECADE

(A: …a decade, for 10 years. That standard. Because lots of politicians and judges that are the old school tie, they're all part of the same clubs, will postpone it as long as they can. By that time no one will care and it'll just fade away. So…)

Big banks accused of ripping off customers may not face court for a DECADE despite the royal commission recommending criminal charge
dailymail.co.uk / 4 Feb 2019

•Kenneth Hayne's banking royal commission recommended criminal charges

But I don't see anything… it won't happen. It won't happen. It's a good enough article, you know, to show you how it's happened. They do this over and over. Again, no one ever goes to jail for it.

Now, the big con too with the guys who gave you the central banking systems, it's one big chain you understand across the planet, these central banks now, it's a chain. And they're all under the World Bank, the big, big one at the top. They have the International Monetary Fund that come in when countries can't make their payments. They take over the running of your country until you start paying off the interest, at least, if you can manage that. It's not meant to pay the whole thing off, and compound interest is not meant to be paid off, it's impossible to do it. They know that. It's all a racket, that we accept, isn't it? Anyway…

Goldman chief says sorry over ex-banker's role in 1MDB scandal
theguardian.com / 16 Jan 2019

The chief executive of Goldman Sachs has apologised to the people of Malaysia over the role of a former employee of the bank in the (A: Malaysian Development Bank, they call it…) 1MDB scandal.

In a rare move for a Goldman chief executive, David Solomon joined the company's fourth-quarter earnings call and gave an update on investigations into corruption surrounding the Malaysian sovereign wealth fund. He also said the bank was sorry for the effect the fraud had on the country.

(A: Well, that's nice. That's nice. He's, oh, he said he's sorry. Well, let's just forgive him then, 'eh.)

"It's very clear that the people of Malaysia were defrauded by many individuals including the highest members of the prior [Malaysian] government," (A: …because psychopaths always go into power, that's what they head for, folks, they sniff it, they want it, and they go for it, in every country.) he said. "Tim Leissner, who was a partner at our firm, by his own admission, was one of those people. For Leissner's role in that fraud, we apologise to the Malaysian people."

The investment bank has consistently denied wrongdoing, and said it was lied to about how the proceeds of three bond sales it conducted on the fund's behalf between 2012-2013 were used. Solomon echoed the bank's stance on Wednesday.

(A: It's quite a good article, you know, they try to make it as light as possible, [Alan chuckles.] believe it or not, as they sink a country. Again, you had the Cayman Islands involved for tax-free havens, and billions of dollars. And not just, you know, a lot of it's given to these countries, you understand, for development banks through the World Bank and the United Nations, etc. The racketeering is phenomenal, it really is.)

(A: As I said at the beginning, WE ARE the business, the public are the business. That's where the money comes from. For everything. And when there's tax money involved from different countries and handouts and so on and we're put down as guarantors, they'll plunder and plunder and plunder, folks. International crime. And it says here…)

News reports claim Goldman's former chief executive, now chairman, Lloyd Blankfein, held initial meetings with Low. While Solomon did not directly address those reports, he said the bank was sceptical of Low's dealings.

And also, I've got another article on the same thing, a couple at least.

Goldman Sachs plans to cut bonuses

Goldman Sachs plan to cut their bonuses… Oh dear. You know, these multimillion-dollar bonuses at the end of the year that they get on top of all their massive paycheck.

Goldman Sachs plans to cut bonuses as 1MDB scandal deepens
theguardian.com / 8 Feb 2019

(A: Isn't that a shame, hey, isn't that a shame. How will they survive, these poor guys, like that, 'eh?)

Goldman Sachs's decision to potentially cut bonuses for top executives over the 1MDB scandal reflects an acknowledgement of shareholder and public outrage over the debacle.

(A: Because this is fairly common this kind of thing. And it says

In Blankfein's case, the bonus began at $7m (A: Not a bad bonus, 'eh? Good work if you can get it.) and nearly doubled, according to US securities documents.

Beyond the bonuses, Goldman also said it could claw back compensation from the current chief executive, David Solomon, and two other current senior executives, president John Waldron and chief financial officer Stephen Scherr.

Solomon was paid $23m last year, (A: How on earth is a guy going to manage, 'eh, how will he get away without his bonus.) including $15.4m in stock options. (A: Tt, dear poor fellow. Iy, the weight of the world on your shoulders, that's what you have when you read these articles, 'eh.)

But that's what you live in. That's the system that you're into today. Isn't it? And it's getting worse and worse as greed-is-good is the national policy of indoctrination throughout society, from the bottom to the top and the top to the bottom, winners and losers.

Another one too in Britain, right. Have you ever, ever seen, have you ever seen in any country, ever seen the real cost of any project that's estimated by governments, even local governments, have you ever seen it fulfilled? Always quadruples at least, or more. You know that. Once they put it in and say, well, because there's no intention of doing it for that particular amount of money, once they start it, well we've worked on it for a whole year and we already put, you know, 20 million into it, so I mean, you know, we can't very well… So the government is, oh well we have no option but to put more into it, ya-da. This is the racketeering that goes on. And there's no checkups, real checkups where all this money goes. You know that. You really do know. I hope you understand it. Here's the Defense Secretary in Britain…

Defence Secretary Gavin Williamson 'lands taxpayers (A: …that's a bad headline.) with a £300million bill ' because he objects to his VIP (A: …very important person.) parking space at Parliament being used for building work on the £5billion restoration - but is he really trying to protect a nuclear bunker? - dailymail.co.uk / 9 Feb 2019

(A: Well, they're building a nuclear bunker, it's another one. There's already one there for Parliament to scuttle into with their ill-gotten gains if a nuclear war starts. They have them all through London for important people and royalty too and so on. But it's all the taxpayers' money, naturally. Isn't that wonderful, they all hope to survive there for many, many years, through anything that might happen, living on your tax money. But you'll all be kicked out and… I even read the article years ago, because it was signed when Maggie Thatcher [Alan chuckles.] was in, and they would have special forces surrounding the entrances to these particular places to stop the public trying to get in, the folk who paid for it all. Again, that's what equality is in this democracy, isn't it? And people think democracy is all about different groups with special particular little idiosyncrasies getting the right of this and the right to that. They have no idea what [Alan chuckles.] they're losing along the way, for everybody. So anyway, it says that…)

The restoration, which is being studied by the joint committee on the draft Parliamentary Buildings Bill, follows warnings that the Palace of Westminster is becoming a 'death trap' beset by falling masonry, leaking pipes and lethal electrics.

Equipping the new building with a chamber and offices would require extensive work,

(A: …etc, etc. So this is why it's going to cost, you know, £300 million pounds or something. But actually, it's where Pindar, that's the name of the underground, three-story, at least, that they admit to, shelter is for all these people, even with kindergartens and stuff and schools, you name it. For the proper people, you understand. And it says…)

How nuclear bunker known as Pindar is connected to Downing Street by a where Britain's future would be decided in the event of a catastrophe or conflict.

(A: These are the characters who allow things to happen. [Alan laughing.] And for nuclear war sort of thing, they're going to try and save themselves, 'eh, and you all perish. M-hm. Well, there you go. They've got secret tunnels, it says, that can exit from Downing Street to this particular underground place. Quite something isn't it, though, 'eh. Isn't it something, really.)

And the general public, as we lose, as I say, to try to get back on the initial topic that was vaguely in my mind at the time, are losing so much to do on the spiritual side of everything. Most folk, you go into anything to do with what you'll call modern New Age type religions, want power, to affect other things, you see. They don't want to work on themselves so much, but they want power by simply learning different little rituals, whatever it happens to be, to conjure up and get power for themselves to manipulate those around them for their own, so that they themselves can benefit from people, etc., or whatever it happens to be. Very old, as you know. In ancient times it used to be just love potions to turn a guy's head, whatever it happened to be. That was long before they created the miniskirt. It goes on and on and on with power powerpower. Where really, the spiritual side of thing was about improving yourself and changing yourself. Really, that's what it was about.

Everyone's got the great equalizer eventually, which is death in itself, isn't it, you end up dead. Whether it's in the grave or you go up in a pile of flames and gas, it's all the same, you end up dead, whether you like it or not, in the physical world. Most folk want to come back into this world, if they're very rich and wealthy and they love life, like the ones who rule the world, they want to live forever. If they could simply clone a body, a brand-new body and download the engrams from their brain, their whole memories, everything, and take it over, they'd be very happy. They're actually working on all that. Because they really do, they don't have the same, oh my God I'm getting worn out with working and I'm worn out with my joints because of working, or whatever it happens to be. They don't get that because they get incredibly high medical care, the real stuff.

There are three levels of medicine, they're at the top level. Not at the professorship downwards, that's the bottom level. And that's why they live so long at the moment. And because they do love life, and they've never had a care in the world, and they have servants that deal with all the management and their land managements and their domestic management and everything else for them, they don't even know when the car's being serviced, it's all being done for them. And these are petty things, not to distract them from what they're really into, you see. And they do want to live forever. It's the opposite, interestingly, of really what religion at one time was about.

Now, religion too has been abused all down through the ages, on and off. You'll always get bad, you know, segments and bad people in charge of things. You'll always get it. It doesn't matter, anything that starts off even with the best intentions over time will become corrupt when money enters into it, and a good lifestyle enters into it. It's very much like the Franciscan society, as an example. St. Francis, his idea was that they would serve humanity for nothing. The monasteries grew the food and all the rest of it, the monks would go out and help the poor and feed them and so on. That's how they started. Then he went off to do his rounds to other places and travel and came back, and he was so disgusted how fat, no kidding you, the monks had become. Because so much money was being donated to them by people, by rich widows generally whose husbands died of either wars or whatever, or just old age, and they would leave their money to them, and they were getting rich. And fat. And they weren't going out to help the poor anymore. So he literally turned his back on it, on some of the orders that he'd started, on some of the monasteries he started. He wasn't the only one.

But that's always human nature. Because we're in a world, a physical world, a hard physical world, aren't we? You can't deny it. Some climates are easy to get on with than others and live in, but it's pretty harsh for most places. And, survival in a moneyed system doesn't have much time for people who are either sick or getting older and can't do the hard hard work, just to scratch the dirt even, in a system where they don't have the welfare state, etc., etc., etc. And that's the dilemma folk are in, always, how to survive and get along and just survive, basic survival, and at the same time keep your humanity and your link to something greater than yourself.

Without it, you truly are in… the worst horrors in the world have been committed under socialism, the atheistic system. The worst horrors. National Socialism was a Nazi thing that they tried and that was carefully studied by the Royal Institute of International Affairs because they were awfully interested in maybe using this across the world. It hasn't disappeared, that technique. Forget Germany, it was meant to be international. And so they used the international communism, Soviet system, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Horror, I'm telling you, horror is where it goes when there's nothing else. Because natural human decency goes down the tubes because there's nothing to hold it there, something bigger than yourselves. And I don't mean government. And that's so sad, isn't it. So sad.

And horror will come when they collapse everything again. Because it will come. Because the system they, and they keep repeating… They've got so many books put out by the big members in society, the big members of all these big organizations that help to rule us all, about the future and even the size of the population they'd like on the planet. Now, they're not giving you some fantasy that they have. They're giving you how it's going to be. And they will drive you into it, painlessly, with your own cooperation. Just as Aldous Huxley talked about, a kind of painless concentration camp, he said, where you'll love your servitude. And along with your servitude you'll say, oh well, my life isn't that important, I've had my… That was what the whole Brave New World was about, once your time was up you could get euthanized, painlessly, with the right drugs and so on, happy drugs. That wasn't, oh, that wasn't imagined. He talked about how it was going to be, Brave New World Revisited. He mixed with all the top world rulers of the day who helped plan all this stuff. They planned the next 100-200 years. Many committees, that still exist today, and foundations.

Anyway, it's not, I'm not… You see, here's the thing too. I'm not bitching about things. I'm beyond all that. But you have to point out to others, who literally might save themselves a lot of misery by falling into so many traps that's going to be presented to you. And it's possible you might find others with a like mind who will also have a wary eye on the happenings of their time that they live through and find out the real reasons for it. As opposed to, just be happy, don't look at anything important, and, oh, that's heavy man, as they used to say. But they might help themselves because a lot of folk do, as I say, become self-destructive knowing things are just plain wrong. And they find that there's no purpose anymore. The old purposes were often thrust upon you but they were natural purposes, families were natural. But they were being destroyed before I was born, very, very intensely so. And it's affected everybody. Everybody's been affected by it. No one escaped.

The massive propaganda through movies and fiction of what you should have and what you could have, all these temptations. It wasn't just glass beads, folks, was it? But it's an interesting technique, it works awfully well. And they're turning to all the different drugs, hey, as your elite members of society have decided to make it the painless concentration camp, as you go down the tubes and give up all your rights and freedoms. Quite happily along the way, you've got more drugs than ever dished out across the planet, at the same time, the same drugs, isn't it? Your Soma, it's everywhere.

Opioid strong enough to sedate elephants on rise in Ohio, coroners warn
theguardian.com / 9 Feb 2019

Carfentanil(A: …is one of them…), described as 'extremely potent' and often undetectable, involved in multiple overdose deaths

(A: This article I could exchange for British Columbia, Canada, and countries across the planet, at the same time, they're ALL doing the same things at the same time. What's interesting too is when you see the breakdown of the age groups and the genders, mainly men, and it's often men in their 30s and 40s who are killing themselves with these overdoses. But it says here, this is in Ohio, right…)

Drug overdoses killed more than 72,000 people in the United States last year (A: Right. Now that was 'registered' as overdoses, right. It doesn't include all the deaths by cars, as overdosed and then crash the cars into things and things like that. This is just straight overdoses.) – a new record driven by the deadly opioid epidemic, according to data from the Centers for Disease Control (CDC).

The CDC estimates that 72,287 people died from overdoses in 2017, an increase of about 10% from the year before. A majority of the deaths – nearly 49,000 – was caused by opioids, according to the new data.

And then you find, there's so many articles about the same kind of problem, in British Columbia…

Nearly 1,500 died of illicit overdoses last year in B.C.
ctvnews.ca / 7 Feb 2019

(A: This is at the same time as they are pushing legalizing drugs, 'eh. And don't forget, it's all been declared in Canada that legalizing marijuana and cannabis is basically the first step in legalizing ALL these drugs. But the rulers, and believe you me, Canada's got rulers, that you don't vote for, that don't even live in Canada. The same as every other country. Because it all happens across the world at the same time.)

VICTORIA -- More people fatally overdosed in British Columbia last year compared with 2017 despite efforts to combat the province's public health emergency, the coroner says.

So again, they go into the different, again, it's mainly fentanyl but there's many others, there's crystal meth and all the rest of it too. There's over $1 billion by the way of ice, the particular drug that they're using now, I think $1.5 billion worth was caught, made in the US and meant to be exported to Australia. That's how big the money is now, these kinds of drugs, hey.

But the public, I just hope as I say, enough folk who really are asking questions, getting depressed about society and trying to find purpose, maybe they will hear my talks occasionally and find that there's other reasons to keep alive, and you don't need to kill off your brain cells with booze, with alcohol and drugs to try and quieten it down. There's other ways to do it. The more you learn, you'd be surprised how much it helps you cope with getting through this very corrupt system, this well controlled system that we're living in. But that's the answer to everything today now, drugs drugs, drugs, and your governments are legalizing it all. Quite something, hey.

Also with big businesses and banks, and corporations helping, helping to run the world, with the foundations, on behalf of the international bankers, and on behalf of the very, very top dominant minority. That's what they call themselves, dominant minority, Aldous Huxley called them that too. They're doing awfully, they're really, the taxpayer funds everything. I've mentioned before about the big factories that are set up in their countries, and your countries bribe other countries businesses to come into your country, they bribe them, using your tax money. Standard practice. If you did that you'd be in a jail for it. But your governments do it.

Nissan was offered secret state aid to cope with Brexit, minister concedes
theguardian.com / 4 Feb 2019

(A: Brexit, the British exit.)

Business secretary vowed to maintain manufacturers' capacity to trade with EU.

Well, listen. It's quite simple. If they won't put a factory in your country and pay for all the infrastructure to build the place themselves with the massive profits they've got, then pass a law so you don't, so they can't bring cars in and to try to sell them in your country. That's how you deal with that, folks. You don't build their factories for them, bring in the electricity, bring in the septic systems, bring in the plumbing systems and the roads for them. But there's kickbacks all over the place, isn't there? That's how it's done. And that's the system we're taught is normal, for those above, above the normal, ha ha, arm of the law, I suppose. Isn't that something, though, 'eh. Isn't that something.

But as I say, that's really all I have time for unfortunately. This week's been hectic. Even today was hectic. Because it's going to snow Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday I think again, and I already had layers of snow, with ice on top of each layer like a sandwich, and the weight was incredible on the roof. On one side there still is, so I've got to get up there as soon as this talk is done and get back at it. Because as I say, this is a very severe prolonged winter and it's only February and it can snow here up into March and April, quite easily. And it's true enough, it's becoming longer and longer as… as global warming is the advance guard, because they picked the loser, they should've picked global cooling actually.

Because it's got nothing to do with facts, the whole agenda has got nothing to do with facts. It's simply an excuse for eugenics to depopulate and rule your lives from beginning to end, including consumption too. It's quite easy to phase folk out of what they've been used too, they can do it just as easily over a few years. And with the right drugs and all the rest of it, and folk will comply go along with it, until within 15 years, 20 years, it will be the normal. I've seen this kind of thing happen through my life and in quite a few different areas. The techniques of behaviorism and neuroscience all coupled together with propaganda, their nudge units, your behavior management teams, your BIT units they call them, working internationally, I've done the shows on them too, are responsible for most of your thoughts and opinions, and to nudge you into feeling bad about having the wrong opinions. And they decide who decides what's wrong in a free society.

As always, you can go on and on and on. But as I say, I'm not a prophet of doom. I'm just mentioning that it's good to be cautious and to think once in a while. For those who want to. Most, and there's a lot of folk who don't want to think, they really don't. I know that. It's always a shock when you're growing up and you find out that, when conversations start with people your own age, even when you're 10, 11, 12 and so on, it's always a bit of a shock to find out that so many of the topics you would bring up they'd never even thought about or questioned. So, people are different, absolutely.

And for those who do question and you don't want to simply become rich and screw the rest of society, then I hope you'll find a lot to talk about, and think about, from all the talks I've given you, thousands of talks over the years. And I know for a fact that people who do get in touch with me generally have good comments. And that's all it is, you don't have to agree with everything I say. I don't have to agree with everything you say in reply. But there's no need to fight over it either for that matter. Because we're living in such an intolerance society today, under the guise of tolerance it's become completely intolerant of any other opinions except from the ones who are at the very top pushing it all. Because they are given authorization from the masters of the planet to do so. And that's why it's happening.

For myself, Alan Watt from a very cold and icy and snowy Ontario, Canada, it’s good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on February 17, 2019. For those who listen a lot to my talks, and for those two who come in for the first time, there's always younger folk listening for the first time as word goes round and round... And in these days of incredible censorship, because we are incredibly censored in this day and age, it depends who you are of course. Some pretend that they are, and other ones really are and can't even tell you because they can't get the word out. It's pretty bad because we're in a big training exercise, and it's a big, big world agenda to train everybody to say the right things, and never the wrong things, which are your own thoughts basically. Never ever say what you really perceive in your own lives because it will generally contradict what you are being indoctrinated with at the time.

Eventually you will not be able to use any electronic communications media at all, nevermind even your banking and things like that electronically if you're deemed bad, you see. That was planned a long time ago, an awful long time ago, back in the 40s and 50s. Some of the top players that help promote and plan the culture industry for the whole planet, to bring us all under one system, talked about this quite openly of how you'd be controlled from birth to death basically and they would punish people who wouldn't simply go along with the agenda and rebelled. Speaking is a form of rebellion, remember, about something, especially if you're under tyranny.

In a free society you have all kinds of opinions, on everything, and you're allowed to express your opinions in a free society. You don't live in a free society, obviously. The agenda now is total socialism, in regard to being controlled by experts from birth to death. Again, Bertrand Russell and many others, he worked with all the top agencies that were given the power to create and alter the culture industry through movies and television and music and so on, all the way through to this century basically. They were dead long ago but their agenda goes on. Others took over from them too, for behaviorism and psychology and neuroscience as well, all working together. Academia is on board completely with the indoctrination of children across the globe. They haven't quite gotten to the standardized indoctrination to do with all the new norms, they're always giving you new normals, you see, and you have to adapt or you're going to be heavily punished and censored in many ways until you comply. That's the real tyranny that you're under today.

When something as basic as free speech is completely curtailed, and even outlawed, by law, so you're punished by law for having opinion that's contrary to whatever that's being pushed from the top... And don't ever believe that everything's coming from the bottom. That's nonsense. Everything in this culture to do with changes is promoted from the very veryverytop, discussed even 100 years ago some of these topics and how they would make you believe whatever they wanted you to believe, to achieve goals that you didn't even understand, and you still don't understand at the time.

When you will deny basic, basic normality's, which are self-evident, when you're taught to deny that and, or if you don't go against [Alan laughing.] what you're being taught, because what you're being taught is not self-evident obviously, then you're in deep, deep trouble. But if you can be taught that the sky is purple and you go along with it, then there's nothing that cannot be taught to you. Bertrand Russell went through these techniques back in the 1940s and 50s in fact, quite blatantly. He worked with all the top, the very top culture agencies that were given power to re-create cultures in the Western civilizations after World War II. Before that too he'd been trained, heavily trained in the behaviorism of his day. He himself, Lord Russell was, as I say, again, a Lord, eventually, it was in his family lineage and they were up there with royalty and all the rest of it for a couple of hundred years at least, probably more.

And yet he believed in this technique of Fabian socialism where by using money, it's a big, powerful tool, money, naturally, and socialism, which is collectivism where you all must conform and act the same way, dress the same way, be the same way, etc. etc., then they can achieve their goals much quicker. But the whole point was that those who already ruled the system, which is the moneyed ones at the very, very top, the dominant minority, who employed academia, and they appointed through royalty , for instance, in Britain, they could appoint various ones to different knighthoods and bring them up the ladders into being Lords and so on. They could run the whole society with this multi-strata, obedient and loyal, expert class at the very top running it all.

Once you have socialism then you have, you can standardize the education system, a very big important part of UNESCO from the United Nations, you can standardize education system across whole countries. So, counties didn't matter, and the US states wouldn't matter, they'd be at the same indoctrination. It's all been done. All been done. There's nothing, as I say, you cannot do with the people. So I'll be touching on that today a little bit. Not too much because regular listeners know a lot of this. But don't forget for regular listeners, that most folk don't know this at all. And many have copied this information to put it into books and so on. But the fact is, it can still be explained in better depth of understanding.

Because understanding is imperative. It's not a matter of just spewing out details and facts and names, etc. It's very much akin, if you understand, to what Mr. Peter Jackson, who has brought I think it was old footage from World War I back to life by colorizing them and computer altering the grainy affect, until suddenly the people that you were seeing, like grandfathers and great-grandfathers, are young guys, young people in trenches and so on. And they're not like a different alien thing from the dinosaurs anymore, they're real people, who really went through what they went through. And so, it brings them alive. It brings their era alive. It brings even their psychology at that time alive. Because we can't understand today with the different forms of warfare, we cannot imagine where whole regiments went over the trenches, one after the other, and sometimes 60,000 per day, and they all got slaughtered, mowed down by machine gun bullets.

It was like a rain, the bullets were like rain with these heavy machine guns. Nothing could get through them. And yet we can't even imagine, again, how generals could continue to carry that on for years. On all sides. But you do see this obedience thing. That is true, that obedience to authority is a technique in itself. Those who rule love to have obedience, instant obedience to their own authority and no other authority of course. And it works awfully well, a whole science in itself, of course, and even as to why you obey. As I say, I'll be touching on that tonight because it's awfully important to understand as I say, the way that they put things over to people. Because it brings it alive. If you can compare what was done 50, 60 years ago, even 100 years ago, and realize that those experts of their day… that's part of this international group, based initially on the British Empire system, though, which wasn't British at all, by the way, a little clique in London who ran it all.

And hhh, you can't blame the English folk for it because most folk were working-class, like everybody else in Britain. But they were used of course. And it's easy to use people by using nationality to subjugate other peoples. The old story is, the abused becomes the abuser given a little bit of power. They can be pretty well guaranteed to do that. And the more you abuse them the more horrific will be the abuse they inflict on others. Abuse is a dehumanizing technique to begin with. And it's a very powerful technique. So the British Empire, was an expert really in using orphans. People who had broken the law as young as 12, 13, 14 years of age were put into jails by the way. There was no difference at that time for working-class people to do with the jails, the kind of jails they were put into, or adult versus juvenile, etc. They were all put in the same places.

I think the Daily Mail had a good series at one time to do with photographs of young people from the late 1800s, who were picked up, in rags, children, some for stealing a handkerchief. You see a young guy there about the age of 11 who stole a pair of trousers, probably from the washing line or something, because his own ones were ripped up, he was in the streets living. And that was Britain, Great Britain. Remember, the word Great Britain when you see these kinds of photographs. And realize this white privilege stuff is a whole weaponized technique of the same rulers using it against the descendants of those who survived all these horrors down through the ages. Don't forget that. And for those who want to do the hating, believe you me, you'll be used in turn as well by the same people. Everyone gets used here. Because the whole world has to be depopulated and once you have done what they want you to do and you've been useful to them, then they eliminate you as well. You'll find that Julian Huxley was very specific about that in his speeches. But that's a different thing again.

So remember to you can buy the books and discs @.com. You can get the discs going back many, many years of the talks I've given, many thousands of them, and good quality discs. That helps me to tick along. Because I don't demand money off anybody and I don't sell you all kinds of gimmicks or whatever it happens to be to make money. I just still count on the few who occasionally will send something this way. And I don't live high on the hog. At all. Believe you me. And I don't have a staff to do everything for me either. I do everything myself. This last week, for instance, I've been battling the elements really big time with the snow dumps of 2, 2 1/2 feet sometimes. That's without the drifts, the drifts go up to about 5 feet at times. And I've had about three this week alone. And there's more to come in about three days time I think it is. And between that, at nighttime I'm getting maybe -30° on the centigrade scale, quite often, actually. Right now it's -27 or so on the centigrade, and on the Fahrenheit it's about -20 the way it works out to be anyway, that's how it averages. But it's always way below zero on both scales.

During the day, this is one of the coldest winters I've seen yet here. My winter started in September with the snowfalls. And the snow stayed, it didn't disappear. So since September to the present I've had stacks and stacks of snow. Lots of folks have had troubles with their roofs caving in. I've had a horror show here trying to save mine. And nevermind the digging and digging and digging and digging your way out all the time. It's like a full-time job now. The winters are extending longer and longer with heavier winters. Because obviously, under global warming, it means that the opposite is true, you see, at least for me and for good part of this hemisphere.

Mind you, too, we also go through these natural phases down through time. Weather has never been static, like, forever and ever. You've always had sometimes a century or two of cooling, a century or two of warming. And even between those ones you can get ups and downs. During World War II, you'll find people at the time who were children who remember that the roads were, the tar on the roads were melting in Britain, for instance, with the hottest summers they'd ever experienced. Then when it went back down to the freezing by the 60s, that's when the boys that become AC/DC left Scotland and went over to Australia, because it had been one of the worst winters they'd had then at that time.

So that's normal, you see. If you think you're in a clockwork universe [Alan chuckles.] where it's always the same, there's nothing further from the truth. Nothing further from the truth. But it's used this whole thing of weather for different purposes too. And the spraying has been quite open actually since about 1998 to do with… And their talks in their geo-engineering, if they were ever to do it sort of thing, and then they admitted they are doing it but it's only testing it. And this is from the University talks and so on. It's quite open, they've been doing it for a long time quite extensively across the planet. And with that happening naturally you alter weather. That is the intention of geo-engineering. Then they'll blame public for causing global warming, you know, climate change or whatever it happens to be. What nonsense, 'eh.

As I've said before, we've had so many ice ages with obvious warming of the, and disappearance of the glaciers in between, to bring it back to the next Ice Age. It goes back and forth, back and forth, back and forth, back and forth. Long before humans apparently were even in the planet. But reality doesn't matter once again, 'eh. Facts don't matter when you've got a big agenda at work. So remember, buy the books and discs @.com. Make a note of all the other sites I have because if anything happens to one, the .com site, hopefully you can always get them from other sites there. They're all my sites that are listed there on @.com. There's also @AlanWattSentientSentinel.eu. Anything happening, hopefully you'll get the it elsewhere, you see the ones listed on the .com site, make a note of them all. Because you never know, things are really closing in.

Now, the weather… the weather, the weather, 'eh. But there's no point in reiterating the talks that were given 20 odd years ago to do with geo-engineering, or the Club of Rome even for that matter, you know, that really was given the task of finding some kind of crisis that they could blame humanity for, so that the authorities could step in across the planet, with a uniform system of control, controlling human population number one, which would then control obviously human consumption of all things, not just food but all produce. And they could bring down the population by increasing the price of energy, especially. Because energy is awfully good for human life and existence, including heat. [Alan chuckles.]

So if all these things could be done then population would drop, diseases would come back again and you could really bring new commissars forward in a collectivist type system, even force folk to live all together in big long sort of buildings, like some of the American Indians did in the North, especially in Canada, we had some on the West Coast like that, and Montréal had some too. But long, long hut type things where the heating would supply everybody's heat. All your food would be done in a communal way too.

That's the dream of owners, if you think you're really free, no, you're not, you're a slave. That's always the dream of owners of the slaves. They'd have an expert class there that would live better than everybody else, because part of their job is to indoctrinate you all to accept your station basically, and to accept why you can't have extra food or you can't have what you want to eat, for instance, and you can't have more heat when your feet are turning blue. They could, and they will, they'll make it awfully, awfully acceptable, as time goes on, by using fake crisis to make you comply. You can make children believe anything if you get them early enough. And they've done the experimentation with that, there's reels and reels and books and books and books of how to do it, for those who are interested in behaviorism in control.

That's really what psychology is about. For the public to normalize the topic like psychology or psychiatry you bring out a Freud. The initial saying is, oh, it's to help individual sufferers, you see. But in reality, no. Even in behaviorism too, the money is all from top foundations that work for the owners of the planet. And often the foundations are owned by, generally they are owned by the owners of the planet. They understand how all these techniques are done, how they work, what can be accomplished, how long things take. And if something, a specific aspect of psychology might take 5, 10, 15 years to change in culture, some might only take four or five. To change major things or major norms into different norms it might take a generation, maybe 25, 30, 40, 50 years. They constantly do poles to see if what age groups are accepting the new norms more quickly than others. So they're pretty precise, they know exactly how long it's going to take by the constant polling and checking of the same topics year after year after year.

They also do poles to find out how they can alter the minds of those who still have their own-think, or wrong-think, as they like to call it, as George Orwell went on about it in his 1984 novel, which showed you a tyrannical system. We're pretty well living through it as I've said before. But folk have no idea to what extent it is. Because it's a pretty painless prison camp at the moment. You can get by if you're hooked on the Internet or on cell phones and gadgetry and so on, lots of cheap entertainment. Ah, you're allowed to have as much sex as you want, if you can find it. And they give you all kinds of substitutes for sex now too, you see. All the old norms have been crashed and they give you all kinds of new things to do. And they promote them too. They promote all these new things. No matter how bizarre it would seem to someone who's old-fashioned, say, that are older. In other words, they make it all acceptable.

I have to remember too, that the Council on Foreign Relations, which is simply a branch of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, has branches across the whole planet running every country pretty well. Every member accepts the fact that they must have world government. The US was picked after World War II really, to become, definitely to become the spearhead for world government, using financial clout, by using the World Bank, which also was a private group belonging to the Royal Institute of International Affairs, as is the IMF too and the Bank for International Settlements. These are not public institutions, although they'll accept public money from governments handed to them that's your tax money.

So you're living in a system run by private, a private group, really, with many branches, specialized branches, but it's the same group. It took over from the UK, or Britain, but London, the city of London, the financial institutions still have a big, big part to play in it, of course. But one of their major think tanks, and don't forget, the CFR is itself is a think tank supposedly that advises nations across the world. They're not voted in by anybody or even given a vote to vote on by the public, they just simply are there, they grafted onto it. And we accept that because folk, most folk are oblivious that's what these leaders all are. All leaders are, all the party leaders are, it doesn't matter what party it is.

I've mentioned so many times before that the whole idea was to get away from politics, to understand things you must do that. I've watched a whole massive movement in the US, that was the last really free system of discussion where you could say things and get a lot of the stuff out into the limelight for the first time. Unfortunately, everything's been subverted and destroyed until they've brought you right back into politics again, very cleverly, that's what counterintelligence does. But you're right back into the con game of politics and parties. The same agenda will go on regardless of who's at the top. Politicians at the top are just there to have tomatoes thrown at them basically, that's an analogy at least. It's a Punch and Judy show you might say. The public can vent their anger by saying, well, that's it, we're going to vote somebody else in next time. And that's what you do. And they promise you… But the same agenda continues. It has your whole life, and before you were born. It's an agenda.

Anyway, the Club of Rome has all the top members in it, that belong to it, and people who are on the board of it. In fact, you'll find that even Jimmy Carter is a high member of it too. And many well-known names if you look into the membership of it. They were given the task as I say to find something that they could use to dominate the public. It's interesting, the talks I gave many, many years ago, 20 odd years ago, are now in different books, as though they came out for the first time. [Alan chuckles.] But they never mention you at all. And that's another part of the age we live in, isn't it?

But anyway, they looked at all angles, even UFOs, would that work? We had the massive rush of UFOs, oh, alien invasions. Different politicians gave talks about it, if only… Ronald Reagan gave a lot of talks, little openings in his speeches about, if only we were invaded by an outside force from outer space, we'd all have to come together, work together to fight the aliens. That was a common theme back then too. One of Canada's prime ministers talked about it for years in the 50s and 60s. This isn't what we have of course, it didn't work out. And again, they did plenty of polls to see if, and lots of sci-fi movies to really get the mood just right, you see. It didn't quite pan out. They knew that there would be enough skepticism that they just couldn't really pull it off, to give up national sovereignty and let experts rule the world, etc. And they didn't have all the scientific techniques to fake it all at the time.

So they came up with the environment, that would do instead. They said, in searching for new enemy to unite us… Now, this is for the people who rule the world, this think tank, hey. It says…

"The First Global Revolution", A Report by the Council of the Club of Rome (Pantheon Books, 1991.)

"The common enemy of humanity is man. In searching for a new enemy to unite us, we came up with the idea that pollution, the threat of global warming, water shortages, famine and the like would fit the bill. All these dangers are caused by human intervention. The real enemy then, is humanity itself." – Club of Rome, premier environmental think-tank, consultants to the United Nations

They said, that would fit the bill, actually, you know. What they would bring in then is a socialistic planning system to save the environment and blame us all for it. And the general population would never catch on to the fact that they're going to get taxed into the ground. All your spending money is to go into taxation and to pay for vital resources and energy, just to survive. And even that, there wouldn't be enough of eventually. It's quite interesting how they plan it all through time limits and so on.

Bertrand Russell that I've mentioned before, so many times, again, was a big part of all of this, a very big part. He said in one of his books, he says…

"The Impact of Science on Society," Bertrand Russell (New York: Simon & Schuster, 1951 and 1953):

"I do not pretend that birth control is the only way in which population can be kept from increasing. War, as I remarked a moment ago, has hitherto been disappointing in this respect, but perhaps bacteriological war may prove more effective. If a Black Death could be spread throughout the world once in every generation survivors could procreate freely without making the world too full.

These considerations prove that a scientific world society cannot be stable unless there is a world government.

. . . it will be necessary to find ways of preventing an increase in world population. If this is to be done otherwise than by wars, pestilences, and famines, it will demand a powerful international authority. This authority should deal out the world's food to the various nations in proportion to their population at the time of the establishment of the authority. If any nation subsequently increased its population it should not on that account receive any more food. The motive for not increasing population would therefore be very compelling.

(Alan: You understand how it's done? What he doesn't mention here too, although he does mention it elsewhere in the book is that by the use of…)

. . . injections and injunctions will combine . . .

…they could literally reduce the population of the world. And also talking about tampering with food, altering the food and altering water, etc. etc. He goes into all these different things. He wasn't the only one. I mean, he came out of many, many think tanks, he worked with many think tanks, full-time, and all these things, all the unthinkable things were discussed quite openly and freely, and even enthusiastically by these characters.

Another thing which these international groups, there's really one group, as I say, with the same techniques and the same agenda and the same plans, and in every country, for instance they give you at least one major well-known environmentalist from maybe the 1950s onwards. In Britain they had David Attenborough.   Again, they give you all these wonderful wildlife shows and so on. But the whole point is to show, oh look, oh, it's all terrible, there's too many humans on the planet, too many humans, too many humans. But you're brought up looking at them with little furry animals and you think how cute and nice they are, so you tend to dismiss the rather, although it sinking into your subconscious, that there's too many of you. But that's how it's done. They've got to start you off, for the young children who watch it say, oh, that's nice, look at all these cute little animals.

Every country's got them as I say. Canada's got one too. It's a geneticist, who again, will give you nice furry little animals and different things too. But being a geneticist they're into eugenics, human eugenics. And eugenics is all to do with superior, middle, and inferior people, and the right of the superior to survive and the rest must eventually just die off. Or, as Russell would have it, eliminated, be eliminated. Then you also have Jacques Cousteau. Everybody knew Jacques Cousteau. They'd all watch the shows with the deep-sea and so on. He'd go underwater with his family and show you the various life, etc., and into jungles of the Amazon in the boat and all that kind of thing. And you'd start to, well, a decent fellow too. But incredibly well-funded. And if you check where the funding comes from, it's always the same sources.

Jacques Cousteau, what did he say, 'eh, 1991? And again, he's with UNESCO as well, the same UNESCO as Julian Huxley who was quite open about the population. He said…

"What should we do to eliminate suffering and disease? It's a wonderful idea but perhaps not altogether a beneficial one in the long run. If we try to implement it we may jeopardize the future of our species...It's terrible to have to say this. World population must be stabilized and to do that we must eliminate 350,000 people per day. This is so horrible to contemplate that we shouldn't even say it. But the general situation in which we are involved is lamentable".

You know, these characters are rather blatant about this. [Alan chuckles.] Really blatant. And most folk never really get it too. But that was an interview that he gave at the time, an interview by BahgatElnadi and Adel Rifaat for the UNESCO Courier November 1991. So these great heroes they have all have the same speeches about how there's just too many of you. They never include themselves in it, it's you. You see, they know themselves they're obviously superior because they're the multimillionaires and billionaires working for multi-trillionaires.

But it's so slick, isn't it, that it's hard for a person to reconcile a nasty thing like that coming from the mouth of someone who loves all these little animals that you grew up being utterly entertained with and overwhelmed with the wonders of it all, hm. It makes it easier for it to come out of the mouths of these people…   I guess he didn't really mean it, he such a nice person… That's how you forgive them. They mean it all right. They really, really mean it. They have a hatred for the ordinary people, that they say have no function. The ordinary people, the masses of people, the consumers, they have no function. They really believe that. Your period of necessity is over. They don't need you anymore. That's true.

Getting back to the sexual different mores and so on that's been pushed for years now… As long as you don't have children you can use any other kind of substitute or whatever it happens to be. They haven't even unrolled all the gadgetry they're going to bring forward to you. Just don't have children.   And you'll die off. They're already complaining in some, well, you see, there's just still too many of you around, you should not have had children, we gave you all the abilities to get rid of the children or even not to have them in the first place. They're not happy with that either. Then you get the doublespeak on The World Bank and so on, and even your own national bank, oh there's just not enough people to pay off the national debt. Well, what do you want? Do you want no people? Or very little people? Or do you want a lot of folk to pay it off?

It's nonsense! You understand, when something doesn't make sense, you're being fibbed too, put it that way. [Alan laughing.] Rather mightily. But that's what you're living in. Amazing system. And it never ends. It really doesn't end.

You also find too that Gorbachev, I've mentioned Gorbachev, I gave the talks at the time years ago when Michael Gorbachev came over to run his foundation, that was already set up for him, in the US, thePresidio, an old military, ex-military base in the US. He was given the whole thing to run his green organization, you see. Isn't that weird?... a guy who was the head of, at the time, the communist Soviet Union, and he becomes a swinging guy, you know, a modern man, with his expensive Western suits, etc., completely different from the old characters that would stand up there was scarves around their necks and get blasted by the winds outside the Kremlin giving speeches. And that's what they present to the world to run the… And he always, he boasted, he had the documentaries out there on his socialism was anything but dead, it was just simply moving worldwide now.

Because socialism is a technique run by the top capitalists, by the way. It's easier to have you all in the collectivist system doing what you're told, being indoctrinated with every technique possible to obey and do what you're told, and alter all kinds of your culture and thoughts and beliefs and everything else, it's much easier for those in control, it's a bureaucrat's dream. He laid it on the line about what the whole agenda was. He also talked about the goal of government, and that was always the goal, he's a top Soviet person who was still a socialist, at the very least a socialist, put it that way. Remember, communism was socialism in a hurry according to some of the leaders of the Soviet Union speeches they gave, as a joke about the West.

You find that Gorbachev was rather open about it too and he did say that, they'd have to create a religion, a form of Earth worship, he said. This is after saying in his own book that he was an atheist. But he said that this would be a new Earth worship and all the children would be taught this Earth worship. He's talking about sustainability, and with the climate change and ecology and all that kind of stuff, all combined, you see. This didn't happen by itself. It wasn't an invention of Gorbachev's either. He worked for the same globalists who already ruled the world and own the world and planned it all, before my granddad was born. Anyway, that's what he said too, Gorbachev. He says, one of the worst of the new dangers is ecological…

The River of Time and the Imperative, Delivered by Mikhail Gorbachev, former president of the Soviet Union on May 6, 1992

One of the worst of the new dangers is ecological.

But today, global climatic shifts, the greenhouse effect, the "ozone hole," acid rain, contamination of the atmosphere, soil, and water by industrial and household waste, the destruction of the forests, etc. all threaten the stability of the planet.

And he goes on and on and on and on. But as I say, the whole point was to create a form of green religion and that's called todaysustainability. It's eugenics, folks, too many of you. And CO2, all the taxes and stuff that's getting hammered on, you know, oh, it's all your fault, your destroying the whole planet, look at the weather for goodness sake, as they spray and spray and spray and have [Alan chuckles.] geo-engineering meetings about it. It's a good… That would fit the bill, right? The Club of Rome, that would do it. And you find, it's really amazing to me to read it all, all over again, because I've done it too many times in the past.

Canada too had Maurice Strong and I gave talks on him and the Baca Grande Ranch they called it. His big New Age area supposedly, where he brought in different people who would… they tried to get new religion, a new religion formed, you see, using New Age techniques, and getting the youth involved and… to see if they could create a… They tried gurus from India and different places, from all over, Buddhists, Buddhist sects came to live there... to try and find a way that they would go out into the world again and indoctrinate children. It's much easier to get a religion on the go. Gorbachev's technique of course was different. His is to use socialistic values that would be a form of religion. You see, communism was a religion, for those who don't get it. You had to believe in it, a belief system, to be a communist. Even when it definitely was not working, and you kept your faith in it, that was a religion. But he still had the belief that you can indoctrinate them to really believe in it as a religion, you see, a true faith thing.

Whereas they tried all these different techniques including religions and that's what Maurice Strong tried as well. Maurice Strong was picked up supposedly from nowhere by the Rockefellers and set up. What they do is they make them into a sort of magnet, like someone who will be a kind of CEO type, without having to carry responsibility, and put them around the oil fields to see how the commerce works and big business really works, etc., supposedly. Then they make them Masters of the universe by giving them authority over… They are unelected people, remember, but they've got all these different… Maurice Strong, all the environmental things that were implemented and signed by your governments were all drafted up by Maurice Strong and the Rockefellers, for folk who don't know that.

With the Rio Summit and so on, and the biodiversity treaty, oh, where Maurice Strong said to someone at the meeting, who said, well, there's no rights for humans anywhere in this, you know, just trees and animals, and Strong turnaround and said to him, by the time we're finished you'll wish you had the same rights as a tree. Well, no one elected Maurice Strong, who worked at the United Nations and went to all these plum jobs all over. He was treated like royalty everywhere. He got red carpet treatment. He was a governor general or a lieutenant governor, that's kind of like the role that he had. He literally got red carpets unrolled for him, he had that in Russia when he was there. Royal treatment. But no one elected this guy who affected all of our lives. But he was a big technocrat, they are the implementers of things, given full authority from the owners of the planet, obviously. You find that Strong said, this is a talk he gave…

In effect, the U.S. is committing environmental aggression against the rest of the world. At the military level, the United States is the custodian. At the environmental level, the United States is clearly the greatest risk.

One of the worst problems in the United States is energy prices, they are too low.

(A: I'll stress this again, and Canada should listen because since about 2008 at the last bank crash, all food, which is energy by the way, if you haven't figured that one out, has shot up in price, all of it, very quickly, mainly in the last few years actually. The same with electricity, it's to go up and up every year. Gasoline is to go up. And the carbon taxes are to get really slapped on, slapped on. We're already paying it already for those who don't know it, it's included in so many things. As folk try to keep a good standard of living they borrow and borrow more and more money, and the Canadians are up to their eyes in debt basically, in debt trying to keep up the standard of living. They have no idea it's part, their governments have all signed on to this through all the different treaties with all these agencies I'm talking about at the United Nations. So energy prices, Maurice Strong said, they're too low…)

It is clear that current lifestyles and consumption patterns of the affluent middle class…involving high meat intake, (A: ..ring a bell anywhere, all their articles in the paper recently, again.) consumption of large amounts of frozen and convenience foods, ownership of motor vehicles, numerous electric household appliances, home and work place air-conditioning, expansive suburban housing are not sustainable…

Now, that's like a judge making his verdict, and hammering on it, bang! …the gavel. That is the agenda, folks. It is not coincidence that it's happening. It's quite amazing as I say, amazing story just on him alone, Maurice Strong, because I gave a lot of talks on him years ago, that no one had touched on really in that kind of depth I suppose.

But what I'm saying to you is that nothing is by chance. I gave the talks on when the United Nations had their technocrats out talking and getting everybody to sign on to austerity programs. The leader of the Green Party in the UK said, if only folk would go back to the obeying governments and doing what they're told, this is, I'm paraphrasing really, this is what she was saying, as they did during World War II when the blitz was on and everybody was worried about could they survive, would Britain survive, would they survive, etc., and they ate less, with rationing, you see, food. The folk were malnourished by the way, terribly malnourished, it really showed in their offspring. Anyway, she was lamenting the fact they didn't have that kind of thing, so she hoped for a crisis thing so we'd all pull together and just do what we're told, eat less, do what we're told by the government and agencies and authorities and be very obedient. That's, again, the technocrats and the bureaucrats dream. It really, really is, folks.

And in this day and age where, I'll give you an example. If you say something, with all the facts at your disposal, and you're being listened to by people, that's noticed immediately. Nothing is not noticed in this system that we live in. And out of the blue will come characters that will be elevated way, way above you, financially, and they'll say amazing things and they'll put into the… They'll use the same kind of talks you're giving, and often borrow your stuff, heavily, and they'll bring in aliens or something else or some strange, strange thing, which ridicules what they're saying. The intention is to ridicule the person that's giving the facts out without all the bazaar stuff. That's called counterintelligence. That’s how you ridicule somebody.

They’ll also use people, and Carol Quigley admitted this in his own books and interviews. He said that… Quigley was part of the team of professors that they’ll often pull out when anybody came out and talked about the globalist, this globalist international order that was bringing in the system that he talked about quite freely, he was part of it too. He believed that the ordinary people didn’t have the right to decide for themselves what they wanted to do. He really did believe in a class system and that there are superiors and inferiors, and then the superiors had the right to dominate and rule the rights of others. He really believed that. That’s why he was picked for the State Department for teaching them and so on like that. He also believed in the role of the Milner Group and the history of the Council on Foreign Relations, that really was an invisible government, he admitted that, he worked for it and he was all for it.

But in the talk he gave, a little talk he said that, I have to admit, he said… I think he was pulled out to try and ridicule someone who had facts about world government and this global order that was coming into view. It might have been the book called None Dare Call It Conspiracy, by Gary Allen. He says on this talk, it was televised apparently, he said, I couldn’t ridicule him because the man has all his facts there. It was the first time that Quigley had realized that he couldn’t defeat a person with all the facts, who didn’t go off into bizarro-land, and just presented fact after fact after fact. So, he admitted that, that if you are genuine they will bring a stack of people against you, and top names, top professors, you name it, whatever it happens to be, or they’ll invent them, and bring them on the spot right out, well rehearsed, well doctored for their talk and try to ridicule you. That’s how things really are, folks.

They also give you leaders for you to follow, who will say the right things, heavily finance them, knowing that most folk will go for, they’ll follow the wealthy. Well, they must be good because they’re wealthy. It’s a very simple thing. It’s like advertising, marketing, they’ll tell you if your product isn’t moving, up the price, up the price, make it more expensive. People will buy it then thinking it must be good because it’s expensive. The same kind of thing, that’s why they follow leaders too. And some of the leaders will have instant books across the planet. That’s a fortune at work just marketing the books and getting the sales for all the different stores and chains and so on. So, don’t be silly and think that everyone out there is genuine, whatever you do, please, because nothing is further from the truth. [Alan chuckles.]

To tie this in with what I’m talking about here, let’s just look at this for instance, a few articles here. One is about…

Everything You Know About Global Order Is Wrong
foreignpolicy.com / 30 Jan 2019

If Western elites understood how the postwar liberal system was created, they’d think twice about asking for its renewal.

This goes into the system that was brought in by the same clique who gave you basically the World Bank and so on, long before that ruled the money system across the world, how they brought in after World War II at the end of it all the different bailouts systems to help refinance the West and to build itself up again. And the Bretton Woods agreement too and so on. But it's an interesting spin on things. A lot of it’s missed out of it too unfortunately, but it gives you a bit, a basic condensed idea. It goes into the World Economic Forum as well.

Now, the World Economic Forum should have no say in your lives, folks. Because you didn’t elect them. And when gangs of the richest folk on the planet get together to create policy, then you’d better realize that they either are government and you’ll go along with them or they’re not a government and you’d better do something about it. Because you’re being trained to accept that somehow it is some form of government. And if you want that, fine, that’s your decisions. It’s not mine.

Again too, back to the weather and so on, it doesn’t matter about reality. It doesn’t matter too that since the USSR as it was called, collapsed as a Soviet type system. I read at the time too many hundreds of weather stations, where they collect all this data, in the whole Soviet Union, a lot of countries involved, and cold climates, they closed down all the stacks and stacks, hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of the stations. They’re not even brought into the old weather standards now, they don’t put that into the global temperature statistics anymore. You understand? There’s whole massive, massive chunks just disappeared. And so, we get articles like…

Earth just experienced one of the warmest years on record
cnn.com / 6 Feb 2019

(CNN) — Last year was the fourth-hottest year ever recorded, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and NASA, which means that the past five years have been the five warmest years in the modern record.

(A: Remember too, they haven't been keeping records for that long, folks. It wasn't up until about 1920s and 30s they even started to get accurate thermometers, [Alan laughing.] that were mass-produced across the world. [Alan laughing.] Because different countries have different standards and there's a big, big difference. But remember too, as I say, they had all these other stations across the whole Soviet Union that don't exist anymore, that was all from the newspapers at the time and I kept them all, and they said that, this will really effect what they give you for Global temperatures, it will make it appear warmer.)

If it seems like you've heard this before, you have: Eighteen of the hottest 19 years have occurred since 2001.

There's lots of good documentaries out there showing you, and mainstream too did it back in the 70s, where they put these temperature stations up and thermometers inside these cases, etc., in places that were in the countryside that are now all concrete everywhere that reflect heat like you wouldn't believe, like a frying pan. And, you know… But again, facts have got nothing to do with the agenda. You've got to believe it's really bad, bad, bad. And mind you, my temperatures here as I say, I'm getting longer and longer winters, and colder winters too. So it's from September snow right to the present time, I have to get snow all next week I think, or at least maybe starting Wednesday. I'll probably get snow up until March, maybe even April, so it's getting longer and longer.

So with the cost of energy, as I say, for most folk for heating, of all the different methods that they use, you can see what's going to happen, 'eh? Unsustainable, unsustainable, you can't manage anymore. And they'll move in, they'll come out with all these big, big massive new communal living association type systems where you have to move into huge blocks where they all get fed communally and so on, etc. That will come under the crisis, as they ramp it up into a war, it's a war situation, we can't go on like this, you've got to live together in big, big hut and have communal dinners and communal everything, etc. That's how they'll do it.

Another one too is…

Hawaii sees snow from winter storm for first time in state park on Maui

. . . a weekend storm left parts of the Aloha State looking like a scene from the Arctic Circle.

And then you get…

Snow joke! Cold weather can cut the range of the Tesla Model S and other electric cars by more than 40% as it saps their battery power
dailymail.co.uk / 7 Feb 2019

(A: Now, this was fairly mild temperatures where they were testing these things.)

Included: BMW i3s, Chevrolet Bolt, Nissan Leaf, Tesla Model S and VW eGolf

High temperatures can also cut into battery range, according to the research

Electric cars have 40 per cent less range when the temperature dips below freezing, new research has revealed.

(A: Well, that's just below freezing, and on the centigrade scale that's at the zero mark and that's about 32° in the Fahrenheit. It's quite amazing, really. They love degrees in the systems, don't they, above and below. [Alan laughing.]

But anyway, can you imagine when you're getting 30° below here, and not just below freezing, but -30°, and centigrade as well, and even -48° last week, was it, -48°. Once you hit about -40° it’s the same about on both scales, they kind of match up together. But anyway, it says here…)

The BMW i3s, Chevrolet Bolt, the Nissan Leaf, Tesla Model S and the VW eGolf performed far worse that during balmy weather.

It also found that high temperatures can cut into battery range, but not nearly as much as the cold.

But mind you too, that it’s not meant to last forever. This is a stopgap so’s you don’t start rioting when they say we want to end your gasoline engines. Because that’s the whole purpose of it, really. If you cut mobility, because that ties in with commerce, it ties in with the commercialized system and the system of buying and selling, etc. Everything is transported. You are transported, in fact. And if they can get you back into your stabilized little community areas where you’re supposed to be and stay and live, then you won’t need a vehicle.

Agenda 21 says that in it, there will be no privately owned vehicles. For those who… Look it up. This is an official… It’s not myth. It’s not some conspiracy. It’s signed. Everybody signed on to it and they go into 2015 was part of it too, 2030 is the next part of it. But Agenda 21 is for the whole 21st century in sections, into the next century, all the things that must be achieved. Again, from the same group they gave you, hhh, sustainability of all kinds. Maurice Strong’s groups, the Rio Summit’s, etc., biodiversity, it’s all the same one group that gives you all these things. They have decided how you’re going to live. And how you’re living now by the way. And the other scientific group that runs with the minds gave you all the cultural changes and sexual changes, things that you’re going to have to accept and adapt to. And even maybe participate in, because you’re not going to be allowed eventually to breed, period, without permission. I’ll put this link up too.

Climate change “more dangerous than terrorism” (A: Hhmmm.)
theportugalnews.com / 31 Jan 2019

The head of Portugal’s UNESCO (A: That United Nations, again, Educational and Scientific group.) National Commission said that climate change was more dangerous than terrorism, adding that it put the planet’s survival at risk.

(A: See. Oh, we’re in a… it’s a war! It’s a war, and humanity, you are the enemy. Hhh. It doesn’t say that, but Maurice Strong did and the Club of Rome did. And the way you’re living did.)

Filipe Duarte Santos said at a conference on climate change in Lisbon organised by UNESCO that (A: They always say this…) rising sea levels could lead to a human catastrophe unlike anything ever seen before.

(A: Mm. Ohh, no kidding, ‘eh? Amazing. I guess these guys really do have time machines, go back into millions of years ago, and even thousands… Well, that would be quite a feat going back thousands, or even a few hundred, ‘eh. But no, they just know these things. Because they say it. If they say that they must know it. That’s all it often takes, is someone to say it.)

The country’s Foreign Affairs Minister, Augusto Santos Silva, said that Portugal had a responsibility in the area of climate change as it would be one of the countries most affected by it but it was also one of the most determined in fighting its effects.

(A: So you see, it’s a war, you have to fight its effects. Why do you fight? Well, depopulation, stop consumption, etc. etc.)

Meanwhile, seven in ten natural UNESCO World Heritage sites are at risk of being affected by climate change, expert Filipe Duarte Santos warned at the conference on “UNESCO Territories and climate change” in Lisbon.

Duarte Santos, who is the head of the national commission for the environment and sustainable development, said 71% of UNESCO's natural sites, included in a list of over 1,000 that are defined as world heritage, will be affected by climate change.

(A: They just keep saying these things, 'eh. They don't give you any proof of anything, but they keep SAYING it. My goodness. Well, would they LIE to YOU for goodness sakes, they're professional people.)

Aussie Court . . .

I've got to laugh. Australia, really, hhh, it's easier to push the avant-garde systems in Australia. Australia, it's got some things in common with the US. The US doesn't realize it, but it's people from the Soviet system know it, they can see it, the US has simply continued in a more scientific method the revolutionary spirit and the revolutionary cause that was behind even Marxism. They keep pushing it and pushing it and pushing it and pushing it. It's Trotskyist, meaning its perpetual war against all normality's and any normality that is made a new norm for maybe 50 years, or even 20 years, even 10 years, will then get smashed and must evolve into another new norm, you see. That's Marxism, with the dialectic at work. Nothing must stay the same for any length of time. Australia has got a lot in common with that too because it's very far left. And under the guise, and this is the trick of it, under the guise of far left, we the people, the same world agenda can get pushed much easier when folks think it's somehow theirs and their system. So, they reject a new coal mine…

Aussie Court Rejects New Coal Mine Because Climate Change - wattsupwiththat.com / 8 Feb 2019

Even though they have great scrubbers in coal and everything else now for chimneys and you don't even see smoke anymore. But again, facts have got nothing to do with it. [Alan chuckles.] It's so comical in a sense, because China is building stacks of brand-new coal mines all the time. And they're even importing coal. And they're even importing coal I believe from Australia as well.

I remember the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, the IPCC, and they have a guy there, I don't know if it's the same guy now, who is the head of it, appointed the head of it. He's always getting into trouble for different things too. Again, he was all for sustainability and yada, yada ya. He put money that he was earning into private investments for brand-new coal mines in India, as he's telling the rest of the world to cut back and stop heating yourselves. [Alan laughing.] Quite amazing, isn't it.

You see, reality… Facts have got nothing to do with it. Reality has got nothing to do with what you're hearing. It's a cover for a war agenda against all of you. Most folk will never figure it out. Most folk will think, well, they'd never do that to you. Even when top members of this global organization say it, on television, oh, I heard them say it, they can't really mean it. And…

Germany to close all 84 of its coal-fired power plants, will rely primarily on renewable energy - washingtondailyreport.com / 27 Jan 2019

Well, that's doomed in that case. They will definitely… You see, they're sort of avant-garde, that's the Maurice Strong agenda, that's the Gorbachev agenda. Because high energy and all the rest of it, you want to supply your needs and when you get a really cold snap coming in in the wintertime, well, God help you all. Folk will die.

They want to, like Bertrand Russell says too, you know, if only they could have black deaths and black plagues, you know, every few years and kill off the population, or the weak or the elderly or whatever. Euthanasia is a big part of it, remember. Euthanasia is killing people, from children all the way up, folks, to the elderly. If you get the George Bernard Shaw type, they'd be killing you as adults as well because they just don't need you anymore. I'm not kidding you. This is what… hhch. You've got to understand, the fantasy they bring you up in to believe in, because you're natural humans, right, and compared to how they think amongst themselves, is to them their natural class system. They're very open about it amongst themselves.

Wyoming Valley Sanitary Authority Stormwater Fee Sparks Controversy wnep.com / 8 Jan 2019

(A: Water tax. All the things you need, right? And carbon taxes. There you go.)

The higher bill came in the form of a new fee that cuts in homeowners and business centers off guard.

The few results from the mandate by the US Environmental Protection Agency.

(A: So here you have this agency, that's appointed, right, making us laws now. And you won't hear the government screaming and saying no, it's, well, you know. They allow it to happen.)

The federal government demands that as part of cleaning up the Chesapeake Bay in Maryland, people in our area have to pay for ways to reduce pollution in the Susquehanna River, which flows into the Chesapeake Bay.

The agencies now billing the owners of more than 85,000 homes, businesses, and empty lots stormwater runoff fee.

The fee is earmarked for programs to reduce pollution . . .

(A: That's the con about it all. It puts me in mind of the racketeering that goes on. And it is. Don't ever think that there's not incredible amounts of people in on the act here of racketeering and ripping you off for everything you've got.)

At least in the US they have instances that have happened before, like the returning veterans from World War II, for instance, who had shootouts when they got home and found that gangs, organized gangs had become the Sheriff's and the politicians in their areas. Like Athens in Tennessee, the sheriffs were literally grabbing the polling boxes at the end and running off with them to fake all the results to get their own folk in. Complete and well-organized crime. And the veterans, the military veterans, ha, they got the keys to one of the armories there and they did get all the weapons and they blew up where these guys were holed up and got them all, got these guys out. These racketeering sheriffs had deputized about 200 gangsters basically to be deputies for them. They were making a killing just arresting people under fake charges, and the judges were involved, obviously, and everybody's getting a cut off the fines and all the rest of it. It's just… They were grabbing folk off trains and everything just pulling into the station to arrest them for things just to get money off them. Incredible racketeering.

So don't ever think that you're living in some kind of Disneyland where everybody's wonderful. The psychopaths out there can smell a way to get into any possible hairline crack in your wallet to get money off you. And when it's organized to the very, very top, because the whole system is corrupt, obviously… Come on, here! Come on, folks. It's going to get a lot, lot worse when the agenda is to get everything off you, so that you literally won't have money. You'll be looking for handouts from a government agency, and the government agency will be demanding that you behave and talk, etc. in a certain way, and live in a certain standard as well, much below what you might want yourself in a natural system.

"It's hilarious to think that we're going to be charged because rain hits our property," said Kathy Dymond of Wyoming. "We can't stop where the rainwater wants to go."

There you go. That's only a little bit. But you start tacking these things on everything you buy, which is your real carbon taxes, and energy taxes, how much did it cost to make even the wrapper for that chocolate bar? And you've got these fake, this new priesthood that sits there. They're not deciding how many angels dance on the end of a pin. They're deciding how much carbon, you know, just by smelling it probably, you know, with their sacred scientific noses, how much carbon it took to make that wrapper, so they can really screw you and get the cash off you and make you suffer. Everything you buy is going to have this stuff on it. And again…

- Ireland
- Australia
- Chile
- Sweden
- Other Nations (including Finland, Great Britain, and New Zealand)

Canada has its own page, where we summarize its plan to adopt a nationwide carbon price in 2018 and also report in detail on British Columbia’s carbon tax, the Western Hemisphere’s (if not the world’s) most comprehensive and transparent carbon tax.

(A: And this is all part of…)
Carbon Brief’s Paris climate pledge tracker

…something that you don't vote in. You don’t vote either for the self-confessed NGO groups that say, we’re environmentalists. Well, we all live in the environments, folks, no one is above you. It’s all a con to bring you into utter austerity, which will bring in disease when they can’t eat properly, folks, or heat yourself. And when they ration medicine, and that is coming too, they’re already doing it in some countries, in Canada they can offer the euthanasia pill rather than treat you if they think it’s economically… [Alan chuckles.] …you know… You’ve got to think of all of this.

Don’t ever think you’re living in some, again, Disneyland nonsense. You’re not.There’s tremendously ruthless people very successful at the top. That’s who gets to the top are ruthless people. Just like bailiffs that have no problem going into folks’ and kicking folks out of their homes because they owe money on something, and watching them on the streets with the heap of their belongings. Bailiffs have no problem. You can hire psychopaths, they are a dime a dozen out there, in every country.

You also have lots of other taxes as well for all the other free things they’re supposedly bringing in. Nothing’s free. Everything costs you. Government doesn’t give out cash to countries. No, government takes your money and puts it across the planet. Government doesn’t create anything except misery and con games.

How Ring & Rekognition Set the Stage for Consumer Generated Mass Surveillance wjlta.com / 28 Jan 2019

If every home on a street, in a neighborhood, or in a town had a Ring surveillance system, the individual cameras, taken together, could construct an extremely intimate picture of daily public life.

They’ve got total facial recognition across, they’re putting into all the… Well, they’ve got stacks of them in most of the countries already. This is the system you’re into. They even have movies out about this now too, where they’re taking it. One was called Anon I believe it is and you can read up on that or maybe get it if you can find it. That shows you where they’re taking you. You’re always preprogrammed in advance for all this stuff. And don’t forget, China has those glasses, they had advertised glasses that the police wear now in the train stations and as the faces come up, the names and the IDs of the people instantly pop up on the glasses that they’re wearing, they see them, they see who they are.

IBM builds a more diverse million-face data set to help reduce bias in AI techcrunch.com / 30 Jan 2019

(A: …AI, artificial intelligence. A good article too.)

This is a multi-layered problem . . . (A: …and so on and so on.)

Facial recognition is being relied on for everything from unlocking your phone to your front door, and is being used to estimate your mood or likelihood to commit criminal acts (A: …that's pre-crime basically, like Minority Report the movie.) — and we may as well admit many of these applications are bunk. But even the good ones often fail simple tests like working adequately with people of certain skin tones or ages. (A: So they're trying to improve all of that as well.)

And…

Diversity in Faces Dataset
research.ibm.com

The Diversity in Faces (DiF)is a large and diverse dataset that seeks to advance the study of fairness and accuracy in facial recognition technology.

(A: Fairness?... How can computers become… They're not human, how can you be fair in anything?!?)

The first of its kind available to the global research community, DiF provides a dataset of annotations of 1 million human facial images.

What a horror show! It's pretty well here but gonna get worse. And you will be looked upon with suspicion if you even voice what I've just said. Also…

Uncle Sam Wants Your DNA: The FBI's Diabolical Plan To Create A Nation Of Suspects
mintpressnews.com / 24 Jan 2019

(A: And how, yeah, how they're into all of this kind of thing too, to get your DNA database. And of course, you know that too from the different free apps that you use. You know, the very popular ones that asked for your DNA, let's find your family history for you.   And it's all for you, isn't it? You know something? You can't help people that fall for everything. You can't help them. You really can't. Well, it's free, it's free. Nothing is free.)

As the New York Times reports:

"The science-fiction future, in which police can swiftly identify robbers and murderers from discarded soda cans and cigarette butts, has arrived. In 2017, President Trump signed into law the Rapid DNA Act, which, starting this year, will enable approved police booking stations in several states to connect their Rapid DNA machines to Codis, the national DNA database. Genetic fingerprinting is set to become as routine as the old-fashioned kind."

Now, it's true, Trump, for folk who don't listen, he did say before he got in that he was going to massively expand the surveillance systems and technology. Well, he is. The same agenda would continue regardless of what party or person was in. They're all sworn to the same agenda. All the rest of it is just drama and soap operas for you to pass the time and get angry about.

One Of The Biggest At-Home DNA Testing Companies Is Secretly Sharing Data With The FBI
zerohedge.com / 2 Feb 2019

Just one week ago, we warned that the government — helped by Congress (which adopted legislation allowing police to collect and test DNA immediately following arrests), President Trump (who signed the Rapid DNA Act into law), the courts (which have ruled that police can routinely take DNA samples from people who are arrested but not yet convicted of a crime), and local police agencies (which are chomping at the bit to acquire this new crime-fighting gadget) — was embarking on a diabolical campaign to create a nation of suspects predicated on a massive national DNA database.

FamilyTreeDNA, one of the pioneers of the growing market for "at home", consumer genetic testing, confirmed a report from BuzzFeed that it has quietly granted the Federal Bureau of Investigation access to its vast trove of nearly 2 million genetic profiles.

(A: And it goes on and on and on.)

The move is of significant concern to much more than just privacy-minded FamilyTreeDNA customers. As Bloomberg notes, one person sharing genetic information (A: …let's say one family member, right…) also exposes those to whom they are closely related. That's how police caught the alleged Golden State Killer. And here is a stunning statistic - according to a 2018 study, only 2% of the population needs to have done a DNA test for virtually everyone's genetic information to be represented in that data.

There you go. What do you think of that then, 'eh? [Alan laughing.] Also…

Clicking on terrorist propaganda even once could mean 15 years in prison under new law independent.co.uk / 12 Feb 2019

UN inspector accused government of straying towards 'thought crime' with law

Anyone who views terrorist propaganda once online can be jailed for up to 15 years under new laws that have sparked human rights concerns.

(A: This is in Britain.)

MPs had urged the government to scrap plans to criminalise viewing "information useful to a person committing or preparing an act of terrorism", which goes further . . .

(A: Now, you know darn well that no matter what they say it's for they'll explain it to every thought that you have that's not quite politically correct.)

A United Nations inspector accused the government of straying towards "thought crime" with the proposal, which originally stated that people would have to access propaganda (A: Now, who's defining what is propaganda, 'eh?) "on three or more different occasions" to commit a terror offence.

So looking at something three times, and different sites maybe, for a topic, is going to be called a terror offense. And eventually it will be, maybe in five years time, who knows, maybe a bit longer. It depends. They'll do their polls to see how well it's working, until everyone's got same opinions and so on and you'll all say the same things, you'll all look at the same stuff on the Internet. They pretty well know how long it'll take to train you all. And punish the ones who don't, obviously. The threat is often enough for most folk, a few warnings. Then they'll come to the door and give you a warning. That's all coming.

This is tyranny, folks. It was meant to be this way. Because the Internet was never going to be used to give you freedom. [Alan laughing.] The last thing that power and control wants to give you is freedom. But they use the technique beautifully, the mousetrap, didn't they? Here's the cheese, there's the mousetrap, go and play yourselves, it's all free. Until you can't do without it, in fact. You can't do without it even to do your banking and so on. And then they'll punish you, for something you need, which is the system, the Internet to use, to even survive. That's what they're going to do. Like Bertrand Russell said they would use something like this. And he was dead on. They never change their agenda, you know.

One click and you're out: UK makes it an offence to view terrorist propaganda even once
theregister.co.uk / 13 Feb 2019

Oh snap. UK netizens better hope they don't have twitchy mouse-click finger.

This is all to scare people off too. And it will work. Remember, law and even police are used with threat of intimidation, they'll intimidate you and coerce you into doing what they want you to do. And if that doesn't work, then force is used. That's what it is, that's how law, all law is the same way. So that's the system you're living within and most folk don't even know it.

So anyway, I don't tell folk it's all, you know, abandon hope all ye who enter here. I'm just telling you that the world is and was designed to become a rather evil place by the experts. I think the only time people had a bit of freedom was probably before the Normans came in, for instance, to Europe and then to Britain. People in rural areas and scattered across the planet lived a bit more freer in small tribes. But once money came into being, forget it, folks. That's when… Money is power over others, you see. Money can then buy different systems. It can buy the food system until you've got nothing left, until you join them and do what you're told. Then you become dependent on that one system, and the money system to buy the food that you once grew yourself, you see. Money has always been about power and dominating other people and having them do what you want. You can hire whole armies with money.

Again, I'm way over time. As I say, I wasn't even sure I was going to do this week because as I say, every day, every day has been a battle here with the global warming and dumping all the snow on me, and ice, even ice storms and things like that.

For myself from a very cold northern Ontario, Canada, I'm Alan Watt, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Feb. 24, 2019 (#1709)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix February 24, 2019. It is in fact the early hours of the morning of 24 February because I'm staying up to do the show early. Because I've got maybe eight hours or more of hail coming down, and then freezing rain on top of that afterwards, and then more freezing rain, supposedly, then rain, then snow. I have to stay up to make sure I get as much off the roof as possible. I've never seen so much snow as I've had since about, well, the beginning of January really. It was really deep, deep, deep freeze time from September right up to that period. And I did have snow in September as well that stayed right up through.

But the masses amounts that have come down in this last few weeks has been tremendous and it's just nothing but shovel, shovel, shovel and trying to save the roof. Because when you get layers of ice on top of snow, and then more layers, then more ice and more snow, like a sandwich type idea, multilayered sandwich, that weight really packs in pretty quickly and you've got to get up there somehow to get the darned stuff off… or your roof definitely will fall down. That's what's happening across the board in a lot of places actually. And because of the cold temperatures this year, and because of the lack of the thawing that occasionally comes in between big falls, you find the snow just keeps going higher and higher and higher. That's what I've certainly had here. Although the odd phenomenon too is that the snow, if you drop anything in it, even a bar of metal or pole or something, you'll find you pick it up and the snow will attach to itself immediately and just stay on it. You can hammer it and the whole thing to try to get it off, it doesn't just wipe off so easily. It's quite amazing to experience all this kind of thing.

Plus too, when I go into unbroken ground where you haven't walked on the snow before like at the front of the house, because I have to get up there somehow with a long, long, long pole just try to scrape some of this off, even though I can't really break off enough of the ice actually. But I can't climb up on top of it, it's just too high. But I get into the ground that's got maybe 5 feet of snow on it and I have to make a trench through it. And I'm tell you, you really smell, as you're walking through, it's not hitting the grass yet, there's still maybe a foot or 2 feet of snow underneath you when you dig a trench. But you can smell mold in the snow. It is quite phenomenal, a very, very strong smell of mold. I guess it's coming down from the sky from, mmm, something. But it's very, very, ah, it's obvious, it's so obvious it's incredible. Never seen that before either.

But anyway, that's why I'm up at this time, really, the middle of the night. At the moment, about 3:18 a.m. and I'll try to talk about something. Because this whole week, literally, I haven't had time to look at much at all. It really is just shovel, shovel, shovel and out there trying to get snow and ice off this particular oddly shaped house with its two, it's kind of a sunken basement in it as well and then an upper floor. But the sunken basement slops away from the house in the front so I can't, it's just too high to get up there to get the darned stuff off. But again, that's what we live in now with the coming Ice Age, 'eh? [Alan laughing.]

They should've stuck with that back in the 60s, when the same group by the way, that were looking for a reason, before even the Club of Rome got in on the act with it too, they were looking for a reason to take over and manage society with experts and commissars of all kinds. And academia then and today has never been off the same agenda, they've always been on board with it all. Because that's what the real idea of socialism is about. It's nothing to do with helping the public. If there's any help at all it will be a spinoff side effect and an accident probably. But in reality, it's about experts running your lives from birth to death to do with consumption, sustainability, population reduction is a must-be for them, by any and all means possible. And treating the people like children is very important because they can't ever tell you the truth.

The few who do come out and tell you the truth about diet, injections and injunctions as Bertrand Russell said, really, the few are just ignored, they won't mention them. Although in academia they certainly do, they worship these characters like Julian Huxley and Russell and so on. It's quite fascinating to see how old the agenda really is, going way back into the 1800s, and how it all came together properly for the rulers at that time. Where they had famines, not just in Ireland, they had famines, often manufactured famines in fact, in the age of what they called laissez-faire capitalism, and it was a liberal type upper-middle-class that ruled it all. Britain had its empire and, again, an upper-middle-class helped to run it for the masters who owned it all.

But the general population, the vast bulk of the public were not living very well at all. Life was cheap. People died pretty young. There was often starvation of all kinds happening. Because under laissez-faire, export across the world was vital by the agribusiness. You've got to understand that that's never changed. You've got about five agribusinesses running the planet's agricultural systems now. Five companies, corporations. You have a population across the world, most of them actually, especially in the so-called civilized countries, which really mean totally dominated countries, where you depend on supermarket chains to deliver food to you, the ability to even grow the darned stuff yourself has been lost to most people. And that's what they call civilization.

Unless you understand what they're talking about [Alan chuckles.] in all the books going way, way, way back, for centuries in fact, you'll never understand what's really happening today. Yes, you'll get the stories on the neocons back in power with their wars down in Venezuela, against Venezuela and so on, and against Iran, etc, and across the Middle East. You can get all of that information for sure. Look at the big, big picture. Because the big picture has all the top countries leaderships on board with the global sustainability agenda. And it goes way back, even before Karl Marx. Karl Marx put a lot into the writing that had been previously discussed for generations before he came along to do with centralization of power.

That old thing, it goes back to even ancient empires where you had a city-state that dominated what became a country, and then other nations and other city-states, until they had the massive Empire. But centralization of power was vital to them. That way they could standardize the system of laws to manage everybody, the system of taxes especially to tax everybody. Because everything to do with helping bring 'civilization' is a mass plunder exercise where the wealth is going to all get shifted into the hands of the few around the dominant minority who rule. So it's never changed. And under communism it was exactly the same. So Marx had the centralization of power idea. He congratulated Lincoln for fighting the South and even further integrating the US states into a tighter, tighter union for centralization of power. Marx congratulated him with a telegram at the end of that war.

You're living through an agenda, a big, big agenda that those in academia are perfectly aware of their part in it. You're given the leaders to follow. It's very simple. It's always been that way. In fact, for over 100 years. Anybody who is not authorized for you to follow simply won't be heard of. [Alan chuckles.] You get no publicity at all. But they always give you the ones that come out against it, and in all kinds of professions even. And people will follow because they don't suspect anything. If they start talking about the same kind of thoughts that you have, then you think they're genuinely off the bat. But if you look at what they belong to, like the CFR and higher institutions, even getting asked on television, mainstream television, that's a clue that you're being misled again. It truly is.

You're in an incredible war, incredible war, it's total, actually, when total thought and all thoughts is under attack, unless it's authorized. You're under the same system actually that we used to complain about, about the Sovietized system that used to be complained about by the British system. You have no idea how many people were imprisoned in a free society called England at that time because their sympathies were not with Britain when it came to war with Germany. Or with other countries for that matter. They were imprisoned for the duration of the war. George Orwell talked about it. Now, George Orwell is a mysterious man because he belonged to the upper-middle-class, in an intergenerational family of workers for what they call the Imperial system at that time, the British Imperial system. He also was trained in this strange progressive, they call it progressiveness. For instance, for those who don't quite understand it, most folk can say it all the time but don't really understand what they mean. To be progressive you must be progressing toward something that's already drafted out to be coherent and meaningful, but it's never told of the public what they mean by that. When the upper-middle-class are for it, you got to stop and think a minute here.

Don't forget that Carol Quigley who, again, used to be pulled out with different experts in the field of history and so on and the Constitution etc. for America, he used to be pulled out to try and go against what the system saw as upstarts that were going to try and expose the system. So he and the experts would go there and try to decry them with their vast array of knowledge, etc. and expertise and qualifications, and to try and ridicule them. He admitted, when it came to one person that eventually knew his stuff, None Dare Call It Conspiracy I think it was the book, he said, we were stymied, we were pulled out to defame this guy… And this is what they do, they'll mock and defame you on behalf of the government. And they're all tied in with the CIA, all these people by the way. Like Quigley, he worked for the State Department too. When you work for the State Department and you train the State Department people, you're part of the, definitely, this strange CIA system. But he did say too, he says he couldn't deny what this man had gathered, it was the factual evidence of the group… and Quigley said it, he says, there is and has been a group that's operated for over 60 years, and given us our presidents all that time, every president, and he said, it's secret and it's often mistaken for communism because our goals are very similar. That's so important. You can read these little things and just dismiss them. But when you're given little gems like that, take them and investigate them.

Because he's telling you, this is a global system, remember. But not just a system to bring little happy families across, hands-across-the-sea, it's not that at all. It's for an expertly run society. It's the same thing that Orwell had said too. Because he was so fanatical about it, he did go over and fight with the left-wingers against the government of Spain, for instance. He definitely was on board with much of their ideologies. But he turned against them, supposedly, when the Communist faction were using the socialists from all the countries like Britain and so on and then they were killing them. Because communism really do believe there could be no other gods before them. And no rivals for sure. But they would use them and then dispose of them, and he thought he might be targeted too.

But you've got to understand, this guy was trained at the top university, just like Lawrence of Arabia was taught the same thing, to go over in the Middle East and subvert that country with incredible propaganda techniques and so on before he went into actual warfare. They were trained by the British establishment, this strange entity the most folk don't understand at all. Especially folk who live in Britain, they really don't. They're really, really don't. They think it's just the vestiges of a system that's antiquated and just developed by itself from the days of imperialism. Partially true, of course. But it didn't develop by itself. And the City of London never had any preference for the British peasant over any other peasantry on the planet. So you have to understand, what on earth would, what did Orwell envisage for himself and others who were fighting in the Spanish war? And what did he hope to gain from World War II, for instance?

In World War II he helped actually work at the propaganda and he worked for the Department of Information and actually, all these, these terms went into his book [Alan chuckles.], the Ministry of Love and all this kind of stuff, and the Department of Information. But he worked for it in the BBC, and he was responsible for making up the propaganda that was mainly broadcast eventually to, well, his main job initially was to India and the areas over there and for listeners there. But it was propaganda nonetheless. And other forms of propaganda which he admitted, such as having a daily show to do with cooking and telling the people how to eat stuff that was much more nutritious for them, listen to this, so nutritious, that was the propaganda, but really it was stuff that would normally get thrown away and had very little nourishment value at all.

The people in Britain were being starved really with rationing. From World War I they had rationing, into the Great Depression. It lasted in Britain from the end of World War I, it wasn't to do with just the crash that came later, and they were in depression all the way into World War II, then they were still on rationing, even worse rationing, and that lasted until the 1950s. And even then, most folk couldn't afford it because everything was taxed out of sight.

So you've got to understand that the people who ran Britain, forget the papers with propaganda and so on. There's a much more secretive element to Britain, like the Royal Institute of International Affairs. The owners of all the newspapers were members of this organization, this private club. They were the advisors, with think tanks, for all the nations that Britain ruled over. Of course, they eventually changed the foreign ones to the 'Council on Foreign Relations' as an example. Or, 'Asian-Pacific League', etc. They still draft up the unification of continents today, like the EU, the North American Free Trade Agreement, before that it was the Free Trade Association, FTA, and so on. It's the same group who does all this work for it. You don't elect them. They're working in universities, they have universities in Canada where they're working for Global Governance and, they'll have little things added like, Innovation. But they're really the CFR, funded and looked after. And that's where they train future leaders, exactly, for top positions and so on.

That's also where the smart cities ideas have been run from, how they can innovate it, make it sustainable. Meaning, get out of cars for Agenda 21, the agenda for the whole 21st century. All the different 2015, 2030, 2045 and so on, it's all worked out that way up until the end of the century and everything they must accomplish. It's all done with your tax money being used. Never mentioned during election times. Kept as quite as possible from the general public. You're simply run by diktats from governments, and even local government, we have decided blah, and that's it. Just the same way as the Soviet system did it. Again, going back to Quigley, they're often mistaken for communists.

The same agenda, sustainability, reduction of population, expertly run planning for the people into the compact cities, out of the rural areas, the elimination of freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of action. And the massive training using the Aldous Huxley method where they come to love their servitude, given lots of drugs… That's what it's time for now across the world. And give them lots of cheap entertainment… They literally, [Alan chuckles.] make them live in Lala land. They already do. Look at the stuff, I keep using Australia as an example, because it's perfect example. Nothing against Australians. It's just fascinating to see how quickly they're moving it all there. Again, youngsters are almost in… If you remember The Matrix series, the movie series, there was so much in that series that the people missed. You always get that, you're intentionally getting ideas thrown at you in all the top stuff.

Even today they're getting programming all the time. Like I've said before, that movie that came out, there's only one movie with brain implants where everything was seen in, like, glasses, without the glasses, you'll see inside your optic nerves basically. Your memory will be there, everybody, you'll see everybody coming up towards you, and you see imprints on your lens basically of who they are, what they are and all this kind of stuff. All predictive programming. You've had it your whole life, predictive programming, but now it's really here. Starting with Star Trek, the old series, with their communicator. That was the cell phone. Ha! So you get taught and trained and taught and trained with it, and you adapt into it. Aldous Huxley said, it becomes a painless concentration camp. And you give it up with perfect servility as Rockefeller said, perfect servility, they'll come to us with perfect servility. And you don't even know that that's how you are now.

But when I look at these massive festivals in Australia, and yeah, they'll have lots of young female models and so on, you know, in pretty well nothing at times. But you're seeing the post cultural war episodes, a few levels of it, all passed, that works perfectly well, step-by-step, from the grandmother, mother, to the daughter, well, even to the great-granddaughter today, with the sexual revolution, until sex is just a form of casual recreation. All the old stigmas have gone, because the state will deal with any, what they call, unfortunate problems for them. They're told to just play and have a good time. They never mention diseases of course, they tried to play it low-key as much as possible. Even though now in the papers they keep warning you occasionally, for those who look at different papers than the usual ones, from the different health industries, they constantly are warning about the incredible diseases that are coming in now, of rampant syphilis, that almost was eradicated but now it's rampant, back, coming in from different countries. And there's so many types of it that are pretty well resistant now to the antibiotics we have. That's only one disease, there's many of them of course. But it's played down because they want you to have a good time, have fun and whatever you do don't go back to getting married and having families. That's the message, isn't it?

Unfortunately, the targets that you see in the pictures from the story and so on, and other countries too naturally, [Alan chuckles.] it's just in Australia they've got better weather so that goes a bit further faster. But it's fascinating to see that they're living a virtual reality life in fact, where they even dress up like the characters in the mythological, almost, cartoonish ways. But these people really are adults running around like that. And yeah, they're having fun. And yeah, you don't have any responsibility anymore of, really, the outcomes of things that you're doing.

But it ties in again with the meetings, well documented meetings, world meetings on depopulation. Even the one that was done during World War II, and it was the king of England that chaired it at the time, during the war, where people were being slaughtered all over the world, they were worried about too many people not dying off because of the war and too many people just breeding afterwards. Eventually they called it the baby boomers, as though no one had children before or something, you know. You understand, the terminology is meant to make you think about things negatively. So they call them baby boomers. People had, all the people had children before that World War II. That's how the folk who went and fought in World War II were alive to go and do it, you know. But you understand, you're constantly given terminology worked out by marketers who work with psychologists. And psychology, by the way, the real reason for behaviorism and psychology was for total control of the public for this particular system I'm talking about. It hasn't changed either. And to make behavior modification easy for those who control the general public.

But what I'm getting at here is most folk don't know any of this, or if they do, they can't retain it for long. Because you're given stacks of data like never before. I've mentioned it before, even from the intelligence agencies that have published some of their techniques years ago and I've read them a few times over the years, the last 20 odd, over 20 years. They admit that they'll flood people with data and trivia and that will simply absorb their time, get them nowhere. Because there's no danger in giving you data. The data doesn't have to be factual, true or anything else, just data. It's mainly ooo and aaa stuff, you know, did you know that blah blah blah… ooo… You know. That's how simple it is. Or lots of pictures of Siamese twins or something. This is what they give you for news. It's not news. It's deliberately put in there to distract you… and to train you, and it's already worked… it's already worked, that you don't have to sit back and expect to be given any real news, that's going to affect your life, from the media. That's the reason for it. And data is just data, it doesn't mean anything to you. Sad, but true.

You understand that we are, we are the world's problem, according to those who own us. They're quite open about the fact [Alan chuckles.] that we are actually existing at their sufferance. And the way they talk to us is just as arrogantly as the elite would talk to us back in the early 20th century, for instance. What gets me is, and I do, I got, I look at all different aspects of everything. And when I talk about things don't think I'm just condemning things. I'm not a person to stop anything. How could you? You understand, you can only help the occasional individual who's truly, truly sincere and who's truly wanting to know, because, for their own benefit, their own mental health, being awake through all of this is like the one-eyed man is king in the land of the blind. And it's true. You feel much more, much better when you realize that as folk go crazy, and you're not going crazy, it's because you understand that they want you to go crazy. [Alan laughing.] And now you don't have to.

And you can't stop the mob as they call it, either, because they will go whichever way they're directed. Look at the groups today that are so radicalized and how easy it was to radicalize them. When you radicalize and join groups you don't think for yourself anymore. You are part of the problem. That's what the United Nations said, they hate the individual, they really hate the individual. They want you all to belong to the groups which they are partly responsible in organizing. But anyway, you've got to understand you're living in a very complicated multilayered system of control, and all the departments as I've said before, in academia to do with the mind, with psychology and neuroscience, behaviorism, are all part of controlling you, that's their purpose. The ultimate revolution that Aldous Huxley called it, total control to take away your will.

Remember too, that Aldous Huxley and his brother Julian Huxley considered themselves to be part of the scientific ruling elites and they talked about this, separately, on how they belong to a scientific family, intergenerational, a kind of revolutionary part of it too because science is always breaking ground, technologically revolutionary. But also, how to do, the work was to do with controlling people. Julian Huxley worked with UNESCO to create, to standardize a curriculum across the planet to ensure the same indoctrination and secular humanism across the board in all countries, to make it easier to dominate and control everybody. Secular humanism is a religion, but they don't have the allegiance of the individual to a deity, which makes it far easier to control them. In secular humanism they have lots of sayings but it's all left-wing sayings, of authorship, etc., that they quote and talk about and so on, they can't think for themselves.

The Huxley's were part of this, a secret organization, very secretive, with different multilayered factions of professionals working on their specialized areas for the same agenda. Charles Galton Darwin was one as well. And remember that that particular Darwin worked on the Manhattan Project for the atomic bomb during World War II. But he wrote in The Next Million Years that there's too many people, of the wrong people actually, and he said would have to, they were talking about ways to get them to stop breeding, and if they could just get the women, all the women into the workforce, make it very sexy to be in the workforce, for instance, have the money and so on and buy cars and so on and what you wanted, then they wouldn't have to have marriage, etc. If they didn't have marriage, then hopefully they wouldn't have children. That was what he was talking about.

Even before him, you have HG Wells talking about the same thing. They all belong to the same organization and had their own specialized parts to play in making things happen on behalf of this organization. It still exists today. And it's succeeded beyond its wildest dreams. Destroy the culture for the people. It's destroyed what was called religion for the people. And I'm talking about religion where you could talk to a deity, who is the ultimate master, as opposed to government. You understand, Wells said it, he said, they must destroy the religions in the Western countries, especially, in order to dominate the people. Because the biggest problem they had was the rights the religion had given each individual versus the fact of a government who wants to take away those rights except for the ones it gives you. In fact, they don't give you rights, they give you privileges… which can be taken off of you any time.

This is incredible war, really, the cultural revolutions. We had it before, you know, in the West, even prior to ones before this sexual revolution. We had them before the Communists in China had their culture revolution. In fact, much of it used in China had been experimented on already in the Western countries. Going back to the 1920s even when they tried cocaine and drugs and the miniskirt and booze cans, and made it sexy to get people being promiscuous, you understand. But they didn't have the pill at that time or all the abortion facilities so they put it on hold again until the 60s. You have no idea, these things are not coincidental. It's a really worked out plan.

But anyway, let's look at, say, George Orwell. George Orwell put out his book 1984 during, he really thought about the idea in the late 30s when they were going to war with Germany and he published it in 1948, or it was released then I should say. It was 1984, also titled, he wanted to call it The Last Man in Europe I think it was, The Last Man. Because really, the last thinking person, who would be able to think, it was about that too with the character in it of Winston. After that it wouldn't matter, no one could break free from the mind control that would be instilled in everybody perfectly through science. That's already happened. But anyway, he talked, he did send a copy off to different people. One was to one of his, the people he admired, and it was Aldous Huxley. Aldous Huxley had been a tutor of his at Eton for a short period in 1917, I think it was 1917 where he taught French to Orwell. And in 1932 I think it was maybe Brave New World came out from Aldous Huxley that really showed you through science, the understanding of human nature and using the sciences to exploit this human nature and manipulate it, they could eventually come to a society where you had a controlled population, you were all born in test tubes basically and your genes were completely manipulated for the function that you had to serve society. So there you had the perfect, as the Marxists said… And don't forget… And the Marxists really are just part of the same group, the real Marxists that is, who rule the world through finances and through academia and so on, an Empire. It's Empire.

Brave New World would get just the amount of different people they would need for each category, each class, or caste system, from the alpha plus all the way down. So, distribution of labor was already worked out, you were born into your function basically. And you couldn't do much about it because you were genetically, any genes that would cause individuality to crop up were eliminated before, you know, from the ovum or the sperm, it was eventually put in and heavily manipulated until you are simply a repeat, a kind of clone of previous types that had gone before you in the same jumps or class.

But also, he said that you would get the people to the exact number you wanted for 'sustainability'. This is the 1930s, remember. You could make sure they were happy, because even the traits that led to depressions would be removed genetically. If it was genetic, it would be removed, you see, in this technique, and you would be what they wanted you to be. Very predictable. Even your likes would probably be already instilled into you. And your traits for being good at accounting or bookkeeping or whatever, with certain classes, certain types that they had, all the way down to the ones that had to do the manual work, the manual repetitive labor, boring labor, they would be made for their task, although some of them still went a bit crazy with the boredom. But that was the perfect system of Brave New World.

And everyone could get Soma, the drug which would just make them instantly happy. It would relieve you of anxiety pretty quickly. And you had a good supply of it, etc. You had good health too to make sure of that until you, a certain age would crop up and you'd suddenly age very quickly and die. And death was also encouraged as a wonderful thing, that children were brought around not to mourn death, in this atheistic type society. Although the state was worshipped because it gave you all your goodies and your free sex and big clubs and all that kind of thing to be happy, happy, happy with.

Anyway, here is what George Orwell received after he sent the book out to his mentor in a sense, someone he admired, Huxley. This is what Huxley said after reading his book, or some of his book. He couldn't read all of it because Aldous Huxley had terrible eyesight, terrible problems with his eyes. He could only read little bursts here and there because it hurt him to try and read things. It was 1949 after over his book came out and Aldous Huxley sent a letter back. So anyway, it says here…

Dear Mr. Orwell,

It was very kind of you to tell your publishers to send me a copy of your book. It arrived as I was in the midst of a piece of work that required much reading and consulting of references; and since poor sight makes it necessary for me to ration my reading, I had to wait a long time before being able to embark on Nineteen Eighty-Four.

Agreeing with all that the critics have written of it, I need not tell you, yet once more, how fine and how profoundly important the book is. May I speak instead of the thing with which the book deals --- the ultimate revolution? (Alan: Now, this is so important, the ultimate revolution …)

The first hints of a philosophy of the ultimate revolution --- the revolution which lies beyond politics(A: You see, there ya go, BEYOND politics, because all the leaders of all parties, as Quigley said, belong to the same group and had for over 60 years, in the 1960s! Ha! So you go way into the 1800s. Anyway, beyond politics…) and economics, and which aims at total subversion of the individual's psychology and physiology --- are to be found in the Marquis de Sade, (A: Awfully important, this stuff…) who regarded himself as the continuator, the consummator, of Robespierre and Babeuf.

The philosophy of the ruling minority in Nineteen Eighty-Four (A: So he's comparing his book with 1984…) is a sadism which has been carried to its logical conclusion by going beyond sex(A: …going beyond sex, understand this…) and denying it. Whether in actual fact the policy of the boot-on-the-face can go on indefinitely seems doubtful. (A: Now, don't forget that Orwell was comparing Britain in the West at that time with the Soviet Union where they had all this stuff in effect when they printed 1984. So Huxley goes on to basically contrast the differences and how he saw the world. Don't forget that Huxley [Alan chuckles.] belonged to this scientific elite who understood psychology and psychiatry and behaviorism, and what we would call neuroscience, and had all the studies of the ages at their fingertips always adding to it right to the present of course. But he says here…)

My own belief is that the ruling oligarchy will find less arduous and wasteful ways of governing and of satisfying its lust for power, and these ways will resemble those which I described in Brave New World. I have had occasion recently to look into the history of animal magnetism and hypnotism, and have been greatly struck by the way in which, for a hundred and fifty years, the world has refused to take serious cognizance of the discoveries of Mesmer, Braid, Esdaile, and the rest.

(A: So, there's no problem talking about its lust for power. Just forget all this democracy stuff and we're here to help you, and for sustainability and saving the planet, like I'm talking here right, huh, to save the planet we've got to take all your rights away from you and manage you, to save us all. But that's just the present con, folks, to make it all happen. Anyway, it says, its lust for power…)

(A: Now, remember, this was written in the 1940s. And in the 50s and 60s they went waay beyond anything with the Esalen Institute and different institutes they set up. Now you can make folk do anything that you want them to do. Even eat bugs on television or lie in coffins of fecal matter for that matter. And they'll fight each other to do it, to win something. Who would've thought, hey? So let's go back to what he's saying here…)

Partly because of the prevailing materialism and partly because of prevailing respectability, nineteenth-century philosophers and men of science were not willing to investigate the odder facts of psychology for practical men, such as politicians, soldiers and policemen, to apply in the field of government. Thanks to the voluntary ignorance of our fathers, the advent of the ultimate revolution was delayed forfive or six generations. Another lucky accident was Freud's inability to hypnotize successfully and his consequent disparagement of hypnotism. This delayed the general application of hypnotism to psychiatry for at least forty years. But now (A: Listen…) psycho-analysis is being combined with hypnosis; and hypnosis has been made easy and indefinitely extensible through the use of barbiturates, (A: He's talking about drugs now…) which induce a hypnoid and suggestible state in even the most recalcitrant subjects.

(A: Now, that was heavily used through the 50s and 60s and 70s, even with MK Ultra …which didn't stop when they said it stopped either, and didn't start when they claimed it started, it was much earlier than that too. They were using all kinds of hallucinogenic drugs and so on. And it says…)

Within the next generation I believe that the world's rulers will discover that infant conditioning and narco-hypnosis are more efficient, as instruments of government, than clubs and prisons, and that the lust for power can be just as completely satisfied by suggesting people into loving their servitude as by flogging and kicking them into obedience. In other words, I feel that the nightmare of Nineteen Eighty-Four is destined to modulate into the nightmare of a world having more resemblance to that which I imagined in Brave New World. The change will be brought about as a result of a felt need(A: …felt need, right…) for increased efficiency.

(A: What do you think you're hearing today about, well, sustainability and there's got to be… And they talk about efficiency, efficiency for farming, it's too important, they say at the United Nations, to be left to farmers. Of course, the big corporations say the same thing, because they stop up all the farms, the small farms, and amalgamate them into the big, big monstrosities. Your whole food supply is under a handful, a small handful, maybe even one cartel really. What a power that is. What a POWER, 'eh? And you have no idea. And you trust it all. That's all that holds us together, is trust, isn't it, trusting systems you don't even understand, nevermind even know exist for most folk. Anyway, Huxley goes on to say…)

Meanwhile, of course, there may be a large-scale biological and atomic war --- in which case we shall have nightmares of other and scarcely imaginable kinds.

Thank you once again for the book.

Yours sincerely,
Aldous Huxley

So he's giving you, he's telling you where it's going to go. In Brave New World, don't forget, you can have all, as much sex as you want. In fact, it's a cultural no-no to have the same partner over and over again, you're supposed to take different people every night of the week basically. Don't forget, when he wrote that one in 1932 or so, that was Brave New World, that was quite an idea, a thought isn't it, the abolition of marriage? Again, the same as the Communists. Isn't that coincidental? Again, getting back to Quigley, he says, we're often mistaken for communists, he says, talking about the Council on Foreign Relations /Royal Institute of International Affairs, same group. So there you have it. I mean, nothing that's happened before I was born, and since, and to come, that wasn't discussed by big think tanks by the way. Don't forget that Huxley isn't just talking off the top of this head. He belonged to all the top think tanks of the day. Very secretive. Very powerful. With incredible data that had been flooding in every day on behavioral studies and so on.

Even when he said here, what I've said already here, how many of you actually think about, why is he talking, he's talking about "Mesmer, Braid, Esdaile, and the rest". But the fact is, we now have so many subliminals just banging away at us, it's quite… Whether it's legal or not it doesn't matter, you're getting them all the time. You find the same thing with Freud's nephew, Bernays, who said the same thing that this power, this power to control the mind is done all the time, by the big marketing organizations that knew the psychology of the people, and they are the real power behind the throne basically. Because they could tap into the unconscious desires and things that you have, that you don't consciously think about very often, that they're always working on you, and they use them against you. So he puts it on the line there, that they could train the people in, don't forget too, school is awfully important. From very early school everything you read, even at school, your initial little children stories, the authors all get paid to put the updated PC stuff into them. They get paid extra to make sure that's all in there. The same with cartoons and movies and films. There's nothing out there that's not weaponized politically. Nothing. Not anymore. That's what we've got.

Now, he mentions too the Marquis de Sade. The Marquis de Sade was a sexual revolutionary in all kinds of sadomasochism, and possibly even down to death in fact, for that matter. And it was part too of revolution, you see, at the end of this, what they called cultural inhibition, which is the only way society could survive. They didn't have welfare states back then, you know. They didn't give it to the public. Why should you pay for other people's children, or for their decisions for being pregnant in the first place? I mean, these were all big, big things at one time. When they eventually started heavy taxation in came the abortion clinics and so on. You've got to understand, we're managed just like a herd of cattle. And those who manage us often [Alan chuckles.] refer to us as cattle by the way as well. [Alan chuckles.] We certainly get milked a lot, don't we? Everything we produce is just taken from us. But anyway, that's a different story.

What I'm saying is, it's fascinating to me, it really is, to live through the time when right is wrong is being taught everywhere now, suddenly, and up is down, left is right, etc. etc. All the opposites come to the fore as new normals, as they were planned to come out. But you read it years ago, even as a child all this stuff and then you actually live through it and see it happening, it's mind blowing. Even though you know you're living through an agenda and the script is written, to actually experience the big, big shakeups that go on, it's still, it's almost exciting to live through it. Because you're aware of it when most folk are not aware of it… even as they are adapting into it all. That's fascinating too, just watching and standing.

As I say, Aldous Huxley did give a lot out to the public in interviews because he always started off his talks by saying his biggest fear for the future was overpopulation. What they never told directly to the public, some of them did like HG Wells, Wells hated even the British working-class people as being inferior. He was terrified of them actually. They don't differentiate between the peasants, as I say, in countries like Britain… to Africa, to China or anywhere else. They're all the same.

I could go on and on and on, even though, as I say, all week I've been just basically shoveling snow and trying to clear the roof. [Alan chuckles.] You're sure this stuff expands, the snow, all the time. It's the strangest looking snow that I've ever seen. But anyway, that's a different story again.

So I'll put up some links too to show you Australia. This ties in with what's happening in Australia as I say, where they're at the next stage, they're post-, almost post-sexual revolution, it's beyond sexual revolution, it's almost post-, well, it's now into sexual boredom, I think. They had books out in Universities in the 80s for instance, on what their own teachings in universities would do to society, as the students went into the world and adopted into their own lives their teachings in universities, and how sex would become boring and then how men might get fed up having sex with women at all because it was to so commonplace, etc., and how they would introduce all kinds of self-eroticism, etc, and all kinds of…

And you've seen, I've seen it all happen. It's in the papers. And the people have floated through it without even thinking as to how it all happened. Isn't that… That's what astonishes me. Really. And it's so true, and I hate to say it, Bertrand Russell said, there's nothing we cannot do with the people. Nothing. And that should be terrifying. Because when you've lost your basic common sense and grounding, grounding into personal, personal determination and survival, it's really over for the bulk of the populace. I hate to say that. But it is true, isn't it?

I can still talk to those who are looking for answers. And it is so true, lots of people across the world come in all the time. I'm glad to say there's a great response from people who have pulled themselves out of traps they've been in with all of this and they've got off the drugs or whatever it is they've turned to. Because a lot of them who are a bit brighter will try and quieten their minds by any kind of drug, whether it's alcohol, or all the terrible amount of drugs that are out there that really destroy you. They're learning that, now that they know the reasons for things, they can investigate. And it really does empower you when you know why. When you know why all the ridiculous characters that are presented to you on television as new leaders of all kinds are there and what they really belong to, and listen to the things they're promoting, now you know where it all comes from. They're all fronts, all of them, folks, well-paid fronts. It's really something to see.

Politics is completely politicized, hhhch, and in a different way than you think of being politics. Politics is a joke today, an absolute joke as you all know. They've managed to try and get everybody back into politics, in this wing and that wing and all the rest of it, to basically throw you off the track. They're all the same, the same agenda goes forward. I've watched it for years, since the free-trade agreement for Canada through the NAFTA agreement into the new, they just changed the name of it because we all knew what NAFTA was. It's the same group. The presidents of the countries must sign it every, they go to the next update of it every other year or so and they have been since the first lot way back, regardless of the parties, whose in at the moment, what front group is in, they all sign it and update it. None of them throw it out the wind. The intent was completely in-your-face in 2005, it was to literally amalgamate all of the Americas into a single system, just like Europe, with its own individual government.

Now, Australia, getting back to Australia as an example, and it really is, and I really feel sorry for Australians, how they've been a tremendous testbed for a lot of this. Here right now you've got…

Some of Australia's top universities are accused of selling permanent residency and access to jobs to foreign students
dailymail.co.uk / 16 Feb 2019

(A: Every country in the West is doing the same thing.)

•Claims made that some Australian universities are effectively selling residency
•A Melbourne population expert said universities opening 'shopfronts' in the city
•Universities offering bare minimum courses to qualify for skilled visas, he says

We live in an age of incredible greed, folks. And since there is no morality, anything to do with even cultural morality has been tossed out the window for greed. Everywhere you look, it's the same. And it will get a lot worse by the way.

Australia's immigration level soars to a record high in 2018 - with 832,560 new arrivals calling the country home - after the Government promised cuts - dailymail.co.uk / 19 Feb 2019

Now, that's not all the migrants coming in. These are the ones, a lot of them I guess, that probably apply to come in. It reminds me of the old saying, it's a mythological saying of Nero fiddling while Rome burned. It's kind of like that, like, party party until you drop. If you're reading the papers as an alien looking at this strange place with these incredible big festivals that are happening, and they're all having fun and so on, the music, you know, wearing very, very little, and I'm sure there's lots of sex involved and things like that, you realize that most of those people will never have children. And they won't even want children. So, they're being phased out, all of them. And they don't even know that either. But they'll have fun. They'll have painless concentration camps like Aldous Huxley said. They'll have fun until they die basically but they won't leave anything behind, nevermind another generation. So it's all working very well, isn't it?

Another thing too with Australia, they always go along with the Western society, especially America, to do with whoever the latest enemy is. Of course, it goes back to Russia and China, I said in the 90s on a show, that they'll bring back the Russian bear, the big bad bear if they start losing too much money in the weapons industry. And lo and behold, here it goes. But also, China and with that Huawei debacle they've created, you find it says…

What we will lose if an angry China stops buying from us: Australia will plunge into a recession. . .

It's strange, I said that last week, that Australia is proudly declaring with its virtue signaling, or its leaders are, how they've, they're banning a new coal mine from opening because they don't want it sold in the country. What they don't mention is, they don't want [Alan chuckles.] to sell it all to, China is buying it up. In fact, China's laughing at them for not having modern coal generators …which really are awfully good because all that carbon is just taken out of it through incredible filters now. But facts don't matter, right.

You take away energy and make it expensive, people start dying, folks. Food is an energy, when you don't get what you need, the proper food, you start dying, and you get sick, diseases come back. It's all part of Agenda 21 and sustainability. So China has said that, with them getting this bad flack from Australia about Huawei going along with America and Canada, they're going to stop taking the coal from Australia, $22 billion a year.

What we will lose if an angry China stops buying from us: Australia will plunge into a recession
if our biggest trading partner stopped buying $22 BILLION worth of coal every year - dailymail.co.uk / 22 Feb 2019

(A: Now Australia's in a panic of course. That will be fixed very quickly, I'm sure. You'll see the groveling that will happen.   [Alan laughing.])

China, which also spends $10billion a year sending international students to Australia, has hinted at a trade war in retaliation for Huawei being banned from installing the next-generation 5G mobile phone network and the National Broadband Network, over spying fears.

Well, how come it's okay to buy all our computers from China, because they're all made there, but one company… you know? It's such nonsense, isn't it. The West's system, that runs the West, created modern China. We funded them into existence. We funded all of our factories over there with free trade and the GATT treaty. The people who rule us all funded it all. They own shares in all these factories in China. They have never complained until now that all your computers and so on are made there? But this Huawei one is the big one? Oh, dear, dear, dear. Who's kidding who folks? It's quite something. And yet [Alan chuckles.] there's other countries not there that make all your software and everything, and it's a country boasting openly that they do most of the anti-spy work in the security systems for computers. And the guy that's now working with them was the head of the NSA in America for a while. [Alan laughing.] Ah, you've got to laugh at the nonsense you get, 'eh.

And we've all to emulate China anyway. They are the model state that we must all emulate. And of course, they control the population very, very well. And most Chinese are pretty happy people, a painless concentration camp to an extent, as long as you do what you're told and obey all their rules and don't say anything from your own thoughts basically.

Your phone is a weapon of deception. Nearly half your 2019 calls will be spam and junk usatoday.com / 23 Feb 2019

Welcome to 2019, where the phone is a weapon of deception. A new study by the Federal Communications Commission projects that nearly half of all cell calls received this year will be spam.

(A: Well, who's trying to stop that? Nobody, hm, that I can see.)

Another thing I want to mention too before I run out of time, I've already run out of time, I've overdone it again as always, even though I didn't have anything ready really for this one because of this last hectic week, last hectic few weeks actually, is Orwell talking about the press. Most folk don't know that he did a preface to his first book in 1984. It was taken off from subsequent books because it might offend folk. And he didn't want it removed. But he was talking about the press themselves and how the press go along with totalitarian regimes, including Britain. He said, you didn't have to tell them what not to print, they would go along with it voluntarily. The so-called Free Press, right. But he also talked about censorship of speech and so on and he says…

The Freedom of the Press

These people don't see that if you encourage totalitarian methods,

(A: He's talking about the left, far left and so on, which is no different than the fascist systems that they had. They're really one and the same thing, I don't care what you want to call them, it's the same thing, run by the same people actually, who own the whole system. To get change in the system you need two sides, you create them, and you plan the conflict, and you plan the outcome. He says…)

These people don't see that if you encourage totalitarian methods, the time may come when they will be used against you instead of for you. Make a habit of imprisoning Fascists without trial, and perhaps the process won't stop at Fascists. Soon after the suppressed Daily Worker (A: That's what they had in Britain at the time during World War II.) had been reinstated, I was lecturing to a workingmen's college in South London. The audience were working-class and lower-middle class intellectuals — the same sort of audience that one used to meet at Left Book Club branches. The lecture had touched on the freedom of the press, and at the end, to my astonishment, several questioners stood up and asked me: Did I not think that the lifting of the ban on the Daily Worker was a great mistake? When asked why, they said that it was a paper of doubtful loyalty and ought not to be tolerated in war time.

So anyway, he ended up defending the Daily Worker, which even had libeled him at times. He knew to stand up for other people's points of view OR you're in a totalitarian system completely. The very thing you're supposedly standing up to fight against, you have become. You always become your enemy, unless you're conscious of what you're working through. People in the mob are never conscious because they've lost their individual ability to think for themselves.

Lenin, remember, talked about, we shall win by slogans. Look at all the slogans across the board today. And the name-calling, the name-callings are just categories of slogans as well. And they've been encouraged through universities. They're the main… That's where you… Every… I've said this since before probably the Communists attempts to take over the West, years and years ago, they're all getting trained at universities, the top universities. Why would that be? Why would your Ivy League universities have departments where they teach communism? …and generations of future leaders to be communists? Unless it's the same group, who are your so-called fascists and your capitalists at the top. And it IS.

An article too…

Cold outbreaks are not caused by global warming
wattsupwiththat.com / 19 Feb 2019

What do heat waves, floods, droughts, rising sea levels, forest fires, hurricanes, African wars, mass extinctions, (A: …all the terrible things that they warn you about, daily, through television no doubt….) disease outbreaks, and human and animal migrations from South America and the Middle East have in common?

According to climate activists, they are all caused by dangerous man-made(A: …that's your anthropogenic global warming…) global warming. And this, in turn, is supposedly caused by rising carbon dioxide (CO2) levels resulting from our use of fossil fuels.

They might as well add alien invasions to the list, because it is all nonsense. Indeed, the climate scare industry (A: …and it is a scare industry because THAT's the agenda, folks, to take all your rights off you, you'll voluntarily give them up and get managed.) has achieved such a level of absurdity that, on February 1, journalist Andrew Revkin reported in a National Geographic article that, "Many stories in recent days highlighted studies concluding that global warming is boosting the odds of cold [weather] outbreaks."

(A: And then this article goes through it and debunks all the stuff and so on. Those who've been following this for years know the cons they've pulled where they give you scary stories. And most folk never check it up. Or, you can't even find data to check it up and even ridicule it, or believe it for that matter. Just keep churning out scary, scary stories.)

Dr. Tim Ball, an environmental consultant and former climatology professor at the University of Winnipeg in Manitoba, said that Scavia's statement "is utter rubbish." Ball explained, "It's wrong in every aspect, from the basic assumption to the interpretation. In fact, a gradient makes things move. It doesn't 'keep the cold where it is.'"

(A: So, he debunks this latest thing too. It's just too easy for them. But don't forget the real agenda and using all these excuses.)

Also, there's…

Centre for International Governance Innovation
en.wikipedia.org

(A: It's called CIGI. It was set up quite some time ago, actually at the University of Waterloo, is a big, big player in this. It says…)

. . . was headquartered in the former Seagram Museum in the uptown district of Waterloo, Ontario. It is now situated in the CIGI Campus, which also houses the CIGI Auditorium and the Balsillie School of International Affairs (BSIA).

That's quite interesting because 'International Governance', hm, 'and Innovation'… All the CFR stuff, Council on Foreign Relations stuff. It's completely, it's actually really part of it as far as I can tell. The top members of the CFR who've already done positions in CFR studies and so on… and International Development Research Centers and so on to do with money… And the International Monetary Fund, etc. and the World Bank… People who work in all these kind of things too. It's fascinating to see, this is one of the big, big agencies for the Council on Foreign Relations / Royal Institute of International Affairs, call it what you want, it has many, many names for the same organization, but it's completely on board with the whole global agenda.

And they actually use the Waterloo area, an area for their sustainability testing and programming and so on. They've churned out somebody who's going to go across the country now, given a plum job obviously, to do with…

Municipalities for Climate Innovation Program

(A: Do you realize there was a municipality agreement there for…)

Transition 2050 partner grant recipients

FCM has provided grants to 10 organizations that will help participating municipalities of all sizes — from all regions of Canada to reach significant carbon emission reduction targets. (A: The same agenda, same agenda, same agenda, 'eh, get the cars off the road, etc, and decide how you're going to live, and how even building houses, where they're going to be, what kind of houses, yada yada yada yada ya. Did you vote for any of these things? No, you don't. And that's how you're run, folks, by the so-called pretended experts.)

Waterloo City Councillor bringing climate change expertise across Canada
kitchenertoday.com / 4 Feb 2019

(A: …hey, so somebody you've never heard of before…)

Councillor Diane Freeman will be travelling across the country as part of the Municipalities for Climate Innovation Program. (A: Did you vote, again, for that? No, you didn't. And do you have a say in it? No, you don't.) She says she will be working with municipalities across Canada to help them find efficiencies when addressing climate change.

Now, talking about getting you off, out of your cars, and more plug-ins for electric cars, which are useless in this climate here. And they know this, it's not meant to be practical. It's to get rid of your gasoline engines, that's what it's for. Once they're gone, folks, you can moan all you want when your electric cars just run down or you can't replace the batteries after three or four years, then you've got to pay another 40 or 50 grand for the batteries alone. Do you understand, Agenda 21, the main charter says the elimination of private vehicles. What part of that don't you understand?

They also want to control what you eat and everything else too, there's a couple of articles about that. I think whatsupwiththat.com has got that.

The Green New Deal Isn't Just About Energy, It's Also About Controlling What Americans Eat - wattsupwiththat.com / 17 Feb 2019

And the fact that energy, to do with food energy, as I said last week and before, even years before I mentioned it, food is energy and they're going to go after that. They have been going after that for years and years and years. And bring you down off your protein diet into really a vegetable diet. You'll start seeing yourself getting sicker again too. Nevermind the fact that most of what you're eating now is so heavily contaminated with herbicides and pesticides, for the genetically modified food.

Canadians, by the way, were, remember, we were the test, the unwitting subjects for the testing of the food, GM food, for 10 years before it was admitted that the government had signed a secret deal with the big chemical agency that own it all at the time, you know who they are. Where they didn't even inform the public. We were informed through a big meeting in Britain at the time when Tony Blair was going to introduce the genetically modified, or engineering crops into Britain. There were big rallies against it in Britain and that's when we found out, from the NGOs over there, that they were testing it out here in Canada for 10 years, in secrecy, across the whole country, to study our health. They know what it does.

And everyone thinks they're free, hey? Anyway, it says…

A Major Study finds Half of Australians have been Bullied at School or Work

This is interesting too because the mental health industry are kind of kicking back, at the same time trying to get more power over everybody, especially children. I mean, how many children now are prescribed antipsychotic drugs? They're given basically amphetamine as well, prescription for different ADD, ADHD, etc., and all these fake diagnoses. Because young guys have got lots of energy, generally grow out of it. But now they're all getting drugged, so they'll sit in school and just drool and they don't cause any problems for the teachers. Boys are different from girls in school. I know that because I was, I've been a boy, you see, and I can remember what it was like. And you had to get rid of that energy, and have multiple breaks, etc., to run around the place and burn it off. That's the difference. So the mental health industry is trying to get back to get more folk on it, it says…

Half of Australians have been bullied at school or work, major study finds amid warnings the country is facing a mental health crisis - dailymail.co.uk / 23 Feb 2019

It's interesting, the particular group they're using to say they're getting bullied at school, because it was actually for a different purpose, as you all know what it is. But this is what they're trying to hit back with for putting so many people on drugs, [Alan chuckles.] so many students and so on. Because it would be so bad, so many bad raps recently about the amount of children taking antidepressant pills. It says…

Australia's mental health crisis deepens as the number of children taking anti-depressant pills doubles in just six years to 100,000 after spate of youth suicides - dailymail.co.uk / 22 Feb 2019

So, children are killing themselves now. Do you wonder why? When all normal, normal purposes, which used to be, whether you liked it or not, just very straightforward, you know, you grew up and you did certain things and you ended up generally having a family and you worked, and they gave you purpose and so on, they've all been taken away, folks. By design. By some of the folk I've been mentioning tonight and many others who worked in the same organizations. When you lose that you become nihilistic. You can't see a purpose anymore.

'Struggling to cope': child suicide rates may rise as intentional self-poisoning rates double - theguardian.com / 20 Feb 2019

The electronic systems that are meant to spy on everybody and really control everybody, are just that. They're not your friends. Electricity is not your friends here. They can't supply you with the virtual real person, you, a friend of you, it won't happen. And to have real people in the world is becoming less and less, probably able to actually find any who can be real friends with people anymore. They're all rather screwed up. It's not their fault. They are truly the victim, they're the targeted people. Everybody's been targeted for total change. And with nihilism too, it's easier to bring in euthanasia, isn't it? They're already doing it in some countries, since they introduced euthanasia, and they want to give them to people who are just fed up and depressed, so make it legal, you see.

You see where it's going and where it's meant to go? [Alan chuckles.] And then life becomes cheaper and cheaper and cheaper and eventually they'll sterilize even more folk, openly. Openly, not just in the ways they've been doing it on everybody so far in the West. They want efficiency, as they said, as Huxley said.

Children deliberately overdosing on antidepressants and antipsychotics
smh.com.au / 21 Feb 2019

(A: It's astonishing.)

People born after 1997 are most at risk of self-harm poisonings, according to the study published in BMJ Open on Thursday. Girls were much more likely to overdose than males, at a rate of three to one.

(A: And it's mainly…) . . . prescribed psychotropic medication . . .

Quite something, when children, and at these ages, can find no natural excitement to be alive, and purpose. Do you think this is coincidental? Do you? Also, the mental health industry is trying to get more, well we've got to deal with this, you know. No, I think they helped cause it along with the culture industry, folks. Don't you? And that's really what is happening, isn't it? The people really don't know what's been done to them. They think they're, again, in a painless concentration camp because they can play, play, play until they're geriatrics in fact. Just play, play, take drugs and play. Don't think about anything serious, which keeps you out of the picture of doing anything that may alter the future. Just play until you're in an old folk's home and maybe they'll euthanize you, if you become too expensive and a burden on society.

They've got people in Australia, professors, who've come out and said all that kind of stuff. They see nothing wrong with it. In fact, one of them got lots of airtime, naturally they always give them airtime, you understand, because it's the system that wants it. And one professor said that. And it gets him all these little clicks on the Internet, all the clicking, clicking, clicking. You can't do anything naturally now, you've got to be sensational about it. But he said that the older folk who were in their 60s could maybe just die off, meaning voluntarily die off, and leave more jobs for the young folk.

So what I'm saying isn't some conspiracy stuff. It's from their own lips. There's also an article too I could put up. It's from 'conspiracy theory', where the CIA came out with the idea of it in the 60s to try and ridicule folk who were asking questions about JFK at the time. They said, we'll start labeling everybody a conspiracy theorist. Even though conspiracy is one of the biggest crimes in the US, they all start off with conspiracy theories in court, where they're called conspiracy theories, when they go after different people, they find out certain things. Someone did a survey recently in the US court system and they found out there were 10,000 initial, on the first search that they did, current conspiracy theory investigations going on right now for court purposes. So it's an accepted term, and always has been, in the court system.

But when they want to ridicule you, they call you a theorist. Mind you, counterintelligence for the same one system that runs everything gives you, you're almost clones, they'll come out there and say the same things you've been talking about, because they grab it all and then they bring in aliens and different kinds of weird strange beings to try and lump people like myself into that group. Even though I don't talk about the strange beings and so on that drink blood and all that nonsense. But that's what they do. That's called counterintelligence. You bring out the leaders for that, heavily finance them. They're not out there by chance, folks. You have no idea of the scope of the war that you're born into. You have none at all. There's very little if anything at all in the system left to chance on behalf of those who rule, with all the financing in the world to do it all with since your tax money pays for it all.

Anyway, I've got to go out I guess and check my roof now and see how it's doing, if it still holding up all right. But as I say, I never prepared anything really. It's just that we're living through amazing times. And for those who are thinking about getting depressed, believe you me, if you get through life and you have 3 to 5 friends, maybe one or two good friends, consider yourself lucky because Plato said the same thing in his day, that's about the average of what you might get, if you're lucky. You might only get one, you know. And you might only get one for a little while because people do change. And that's another talk too, mind you.

The hardest thing for people who are really searching for what's happening is to find others who are of like mind. And even then you've got to be very, very careful, folks. Because there's a lot of frauds out there and con folk out there too. And lots of, as I say, counterintelligence people who are put out there intentionally to waylay you on your search. So don't get depressed about things. There's lots in the world to be fascinated about, in the world itself, that hasn't been touched by those who rule it all. It truly is, that's where true life and humanity comes from, is watching other things, even animals and so on, is from that kind of thing, and from the occasional incredible decency that can break through from people in times of crisis. It's those things that you'll remember.

But don't get depressed. Because if you still have your thoughts, you can still keep them pretty well to yourself, and at least to understand why things are happening in the system, in this tyranny. And it is a tyranny. We're going through a phase of it where it's becoming more of an open tyranny where you're going to be punished for thinking what they claim is the wrong thing. They have other terms for it, they used to call it subversive thinking and treasonous thinking, or revolutionary thinking. All the things which are not in vogue right now, which is opposition to tyranny. [Alan chuckles.] That's the crime in itself. Or refusing to be told what to call different things with new terms and all the rest of it. These are forms of tyranny. From the top down, not from the bottom, folks. Nothing happens from the grassroots unless is authorize from the very top.

Anyway, for myself from a very cold, still cold Ontario, Canada, where it's possibly going to be an awful lot of, about eight hours of hail, hailstones, and that's a lot of hailstones and ice, and then followed by rain which will freeze on top of it, it's a very slippy, no doubt, good night. So I'll say good night, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, may your God or your gods go with you.

Elliott Abrams, Special Envoy to Venezuela

Mar. 3, 2019 (#1710)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 3, 2019. For those of you who are still getting whacked by winter as I am here in fact, my sympathies go out to you. Because it's been a long, long winter this year. It has really been, physically, a long winter. Because here it started in September with snow, which didn't disappear right up to the present time. And I'll still get a lot more snow yet, I'm sure, going into March, April, and maybe even beyond, who knows. Because this happens once every 20 years or so they say, it's not that unusual.

Although of course with geo-engineering going on and all the testing they say that they're doing across the planet, from official statements from universities that are involved in the geo-engineering projects that, who knows what normal is anymore when it comes to weather control. Because that's the purpose of geo-engineering of course. It's like that statement the U.S. Air Force put out years ago saying, Owning the Weather. Look it up for yourself. It's been happening. So this is the whole thing today, you're living in a system managed by experts from top to bottom, of every aspect of your life, literally. Literally. [Alan chuckles.] Even physically. You're managed by experts from birth to death.

That is the system that was dreamed about for centuries, actually, before HG Wells came along. He was one of the recipients of the knowledge to do with this world… that people wouldn't, they'd be hard-pressed to even define. You see, the whole idea of left, right and all this kind of thing, and capitalism, communism, is all strategy of systems, all owned by the same people. Experiments, if you will, too. And from the communist experiments, which is just collectivism on steroids in a sense, which is what we have to go into again, a more advanced form of it. You won't even probably have a name for it… they'll keep the same names, oh, you're living in a paradise, a democratic paradise. But in actual fact it's a managed system run by scientists, those in academia. Again, planned and discussed and written about copiously for well over 100 years.

You can get the books on it by many of the participants at the top. Or at least near the top. And even the ones [Alan chuckles.] near the top like the Huxley's and so on, admitted that they were not at the top, there was still a dominant minority who controlled everything and owned everything basically, who ran the financial systems. Because everything, no matter what plan you have in mind has to take into account this strange thing called money, or means of transactions and exchange and things like that. Whether it's the state that appears to be in charge of it, which it never is, or its private groups that are in charge of it, which is more true I think, then we find that they did all these experiments to find out how to control the whole planet better.

They kept talking about, like I mentioned last week, about necessity and efficiency. Aldous Huxley said it'd probably come about because they have this drive for efficiency. He's not talking about tying your shoelaces or doing away with shoelaces and putting Velcro on. He's talking about efficiency from those who saw themselves in charge already of the world, and if they can get more control over every aspect of every individual's life, like a standardization process, they would achieve their goals much more readily and easily. So that's where we are today.

The creation of what appears to be a thousand different fragments of the system, all pretending they're different, are really the parts of the thousand points of light. This is what they call it in the occult, they've always called it that. George Bush Junior called it that too. So did George Bush Senior, a thousand points of light. Very occultic. Working to bring about this utopia on earth for themselves. For their own progeny to control. As the rest of the unfit gradually die off. And they admit in their writings that they have all the time in the world to do it.

Because our lives are pretty short. They arepretty short, really. By the time you hit 40 you might think everything's just crawling. You wonder, you might be bored stiff waiting for it to pass quicker. [Alan laughing.] A strange thing to say but it's true. And then suddenly it'll all just go on a roller coaster until you wonder what happened to all the years since. But the thing is, our lives are short and because they're short, we're very short-term planners in a sense. Most folk think to the immediate future, especially men. And it used to be basic, very simple. It didn't always work out, but the fact is, it was simple. You are young. You would get some kind of work. You would get married for one reason or another, and that was the way for a long, long time, for centuries. And once you are married you got on with it and you'd have children because there was no contraception at one point. And once the children came along, both the man and the woman would get stuck in. They were young. They were healthy. They were able to cope with it. And that's true enough. When you're young and healthy there's less problems for the woman having childbirth in the first place. And coping with it because it takes a lot of energy, as you know, to bring up children. So that was it, there were no great expectations beyond that.

And because you weren't working 12 to 14 hours a day, generally, by then you'd already had big, big mass demonstrations and strikes to bring in shorter work weeks, into a stage where you actually had time to go home and say hello to either your relatives or your wife or your husband or whatever happens to be. You had a chance to converse with them for a couple of hours before you hit the sack and slept, to get up early in the morning for the next work. So that was the whole idea of it.

Before that you didn't have much time because under laissez-faire capitalism as it was called, the capitalists who owned all the factories, and they owned the country in fact… And they own the armies. The armies didn't see it that way, but that's how it was. They were used for private corporations' businesses, on behalf of the crown as they call it. And that's the way it was. You can criticize all you want but that's the way it was. Lots of folk would join the Army when there was no work. That was standard as well. They were often given simple reasons for the wars, the Empire and all that kind of thing. They would believe in the propaganda, very basic, you bring civilization to whatever it happened to be.

But in reality, it was for the benefit, in hindsight we see it all, it's always in hindsight you see things. You see, it was for really very wealthy, incredibly wealthy [Alan chuckles.] managers of finance based in London who ruled the whole system and the Empire. They used the Empire, really, and the whole idea of what Britain was, or the UK and so on. But what it was, was actually a private enterprise for big, big, big business. Because once it started collapsing people saw the devastation in the country. There was nothing set up for the people, who literally were in poverty. They were demolished by high taxes. They were demolished by malnutrition from countless wars, one after the other. They didn't even have safety nets, social safety nets to finance the people when they were sick or dying. There was no National Health Service, that's something that the people got a hard time to… You got to bite on it at times and chew it, don't you, it's nasty. But that's the way it is.

Indoctrination is a tremendously powerful thing. And it doesn't take long to indoctrinate people if the experts are involved in indoctrination. That's the saddest, scariest thing is that it can be done to any generation for any purpose that the masters require at the time. Today it's just too perfect with psychologists and behaviorists and all the rest of it working full time in big, big panels, with government, like big marketing companies, how do you put ideas across to the public? Like the Behavioral Insights Teams, all psychologists. psychology, remember, was dreamed up to control the public, folks. That's what it's for. That's what it's for. Psychiatry was going to go a step further by bringing in drugs with it. And don't forget, the first drugs that Freud kept prescribing, to even to his friends, and himself [Alan chuckles.] was cocaine. And they had no problem with heroin and so on too.

So this idea of using drugs on the public, this Soma idea, was nothing new. You find Huxley's Brave New World as well, it hasn't gone away. You see it today bigger than ever actually with the legitimization, or legalization I should say, of all drugs. It isn't just marijuana that's to be legalized. They want to go the whole gambit. Because society is now literally to go over the abyss into the big depopulation program by those who control. And this is not conspiracy theory. It's not theory at all. I generally just quote by their books that they put out themselves, by authors who are in the big foundations that bring all this about. They're in the big think tanks that work with all governments advising them on policy generation after generation.

That's the beauty of it, getting back to your short span of your life. Every foundation has a list of its own agendas to accomplish and work out, including to create more and more nongovernmental organizations, to even recruit and train children to be the future leaders of these organizations in 20, 30 years, 40 years' time. And that's not conspiracy theory either. You can see it on their own websites. And they do this constantly. All the leaders you see getting churned out in front of you were picked a long time ago and trained for their positions. It doesn't even mean that they even believe in them themselves. Because you don't have to tell them all the facts involved, where you want to go with agenda.

You don't even have to tell political parties what their whole agenda is. Political parties generally don't want to know. They just want to get in and to fill their pockets. And they get rewarded mightily, they all know this, mightily from so many sources if they nod and go along with the policies that are put in front of them. By people who are unelected. That's the reality of life. The school systems are such an amazing [Alan chuckles.] system, really. Because it's got nothing to do with education. It's indoctrination of policy by those who own you basically. That's what it's for.

The reason that Aldous Huxley had no problem, as I talked about last week, about his agenda, the agenda that he saw for Brave New World coming into being where the folk would float through it step-by-step, float into it, with no real reaction against it. And eventually it would be there. It might take 100 years or 200 years, but it would come. I see it already, really. But it would come. Until everybody would fulfill their function in their strata of society, all the different types, all the way from the alpha plus all the way down, for the division of labor for their hive community to work efficiently. That's what it was all about. And that really is what it really is all about. And that's what he meant by efficiency, it would come about by efficiency.

You can go all the way back into Plato and all the other philosophers of his era who talked about life in general. These people had no real problems in the world, like Plato and Aristotle. They were all of the leisure class who could sit around and drink their wine and indulge in different things that maybe, well, at one time people were horrified about. But the thing is, they could speculate, their whole life was about speculation and humanity, and humanity's role and place in this universe of theirs that they saw. And they studied everybody. If you want to control nations, including just even your own nation, you must understand how people work. So you add, they add in every generation all their observations on humanity, and all segments of humanity and genders and everything else. That's what they did.

So you find that Plato talked about efficiency and necessity. He also had his book put out called The Republic where he, that became almost like a Bible in esoteric circles. And for those who don't understand esoteric circles, or esoteric lore, it isn't anything to do with vampire slayers on television. The 'occult' is simply 'hidden', it means 'hidden'. Those who wanted revolution to destroy the old, the old power structures in society, like the Catholic Church, were often people from a different belief system who would maybe want to dominate as well. You'll find all plays down through history, don't believe that everyone's just either a winner or a loser. There's competition, there's always power plays between every group out there, even today, in all strata, even in the left-wing, power plays galore and this need to satisfy what you think is your right to dominate others.

So you find that the occult has always been used to overthrow or try to overthrow existing power structures. Even those who are the recipients of history and power, within ruling organizations, like the long-established churches, because they had incredible knowledge going way back, right up to the present time, of real history as it happens, by parchments and scrolls that were sent back and forth all the time. Just like ancient Egypt as well. You had, a lot of them haven't even been opened yet apparently, even in the Vatican. There were so many coming all the time from all over the world. But they have them. And it was the same with Egypt. In fact, some cities in Egypt were built as centers for the origins of much of the Empire's scroll making, going back and forth, back and forth from all the different parts of their empire. We have their own histories of this too. There are still remnants of the histories of... And it was surprisingly efficient. It wasn't like haphazard, oh, it will come back in a few months with information on this outpost out in so-and-so. No, the Egyptians had it within days sometimes or a week. Very efficient.

So you understand, humanity and this ruling over other people so that a minority can live like kings and queens is not new. You had the minority at the top that was often called royalty. Then you had a priest class in ancient Egypt that were, they were a specialized class in different areas of ruling different segments of society. They lived better than the peasants who had to till the ground and do all the hard heavy work and supply all the things and make all the things that kept everybody else in luxury, the small minority. Nothing changed for, really, thousands of years when you think about it really, right? Nothing really changed until maybe the 20th century.

When into the 19th century, you definitely had the Empire idea of, say, Britain. It wasn't the only country of course, France had it too. And other countries, Holland had it for a while too. Even Belgium had colonies across different parts of the world, including Africa, the Belgian Congo. But you've got to understand that these colonies really were to do, as I say, for big business and resources for big businesses. The ordinary people even in their home countries didn't benefit from it much at all. Life would go on as usual for ordinary peasant classes. We forget that in Britain, for instance, nothing would've changed if it hadn't been for the plagues, the great plagues. It killed so many of the serfs off. And serfs were bought and sold with the land, they were the property of the owners, the landlords. It's a nice term, rather than say they're slaves, isn't it? But mind you, too, they could get branded if they moved off the land, if they were buying and selling it, if they actually moved or ran away, they got branded.

So we've got to, again, come back to reality and say wait a minute here, what about this free ancient society? As I say, before the Normans came in with this massive organization really that came with it, of social management and Lords and feudal lords and all the rest of it, it was a bit different. And a bit more, I would think more easy to comprehend as a more humane tribal system. But anyway, things go the way they go. And out of this drive, this drive for quotas and guaranteed incomes for Lords, that would pass up their income to the one above them, to the one above them, up to the royalty, up to the King eventually, that's how it worked, then they wanted more efficiency.

That's really why even with agriculture more efficiency came in over time. Not because they wanted to feed more people and keep them happy. Because most of the peasants, 60% I think it was, of the produce was taken from them for taxes. And out of the 40% that was left they had to pay any higher labor that tacked themselves on to them, and they had to pay for their foodstuffs for their animals, and keep themselves alive and so on and for clothing, etc. So, I cannot look at the past and think it was a sort of wonderful time. Although in amongst it all I'm sure everybody, in little moments of their, or even on a holiday… One thing about the churches, they gave them holidays, a lot of holidays at one time and festivals. And during those times, we all being human can appreciate a nice beautiful day and the things of nature that stick with you. Like an instant of timelessness, as I always think of it. And that's what we… These are the things that really make life more precious, I think. If it's all hell, then that can lead you to a different road altogether.

But getting back to the occultic system. The occultic system is multi-layered, always. One by the ruling classes for themselves. Another one for the helpers, the professional classes as you call them, who manipulate it all for efficiency's sake on behalf of the owners, the dominant minority. And then there's even lesser ones further down who believe in certain things to do with the occult. But they all believe in one thing for sure, is that you never tell the complete truth to the general population, the peasantry. That's never changed. Never will change. Never.

It's like, I think there's been different people in time made the same statement, and I think Roosevelt was one of them, FDR said it too. He said, for everything that happens there's a good reason, that's the one given to the public, but then there's a real reason that's never given to the public. It's therefore the same with those who are put in front of the public view who have some kind of power as a helper. The Al Gore's, that strata, who give little statements here and there, which you can pick up on and understand, really, if you understand much at all… That they're giving you two different messages, one for their own group and one for the general public.

And for the true believers who are brainwashed at even much lower levels, lower strata, to do with the environment. Because the 'environment and sustainability' is the mantra they picked on because 'eugenics' got a dirty, dirty name causing World War II. Those at the top still believe in eugenics in a big way. And they have never ever changed their opinion on it, that they must change society. Hence your Brave New World scenario of genetic alteration and eventually the creation of the proper types to run the world, and work in the world, and live in the world. And not this haphazard idea of the old-fashioned way of simply passing on groups of genes, some of which might be, they claim, defective. So that's the whole idea of it.

Like all movements, way down, really all movements of revolution are a continuation of the same group, by predecessors, and often related in fact, of the same people and families, not always, but some of them certainly have been. You go way back into the Middle Ages and find out the different retaliations of certain segments, for the ruling oligarchies of their days, especially the churches. Because they themselves, they had a separate religion, and the religion was couched in occultic language for their own safety. That way if they were ever caught, they could always say that they meant something else and if no one had a dictionary of translations then they couldn't be prosecuted. It's always the benefit of the doubt there, you see.

Albert Pike said the same thing. He says, we never speak so plainly as when we do in public. And what he meant, but to other brother masons. Because the general public wouldn't catch on to what they were saying. You find all talks by Manly P Hall which are kind of fascinating. He was a very old man talking at one of the philosophical clubs he belonged too and organizations. And that was a popular thing too, the philosophical clubs as they couched it too. He does go on about what had to be done, and he almost breaks beyond the boundaries of acceptable speech. Because he's adamant on the fact there's too many of the wrong kinds of people in the world. Eugenics. And they always tied it in to, long before Al Gore came along or any of the rest of them, but they always tied it into the same things, eugenics. If people out breed the ones who should be allowed to breed, if the general masses out breed them, they'll use up all the resources. That was an old thing going way back into the 1700s and up to the present day. It hasn't changed.

So, how do you get the people to stop breeding? Well, you create the problems, you see, that promiscuity, promoted promiscuity will create, which is unwanted pregnancies. And then you say, oh my goodness, look at this, oh dear, dear, what do we do? And then you introduce the National Health Service systems and then you perform abortions. So you must create the problem first of all, and then say, well, it's no longer a problem now. And they make it normal until people think, well, there's nothing, you know, this is the normal thing to do when you get pregnant. So you can fulfill your goals with the general population by introducing that. It's been awfully successful.

Because from the 50s and running into the 1960s, and out came the pill, and the miniskirt at same time, and promiscuity. Once you do that, then you are on the way to destroying the need for a family, the man and the woman and children, and you can go on from there, you see. They say it's been awfully, awfully successful in the West. And where you always find this dichotomy, there's a paradox in a sense, of excuses, is where they conflict with each other. The ability to hold two opposing opinions in your head and believe in them both at the same time, as George Orwell said in 1984, is doublethink. Your own governments across the world have spokespeople who come out and tell you there's too many of you, way too many of you, we can't go on like this and sustain the country, as though they're supporting you, hm? I mean, you're supporting them, on a lot less money than they're taking off you, but facts don't matter. So they're telling you this and at the same time they're telling you, because they say there's too many of you, then they're telling you there's not enough to pay taxes that we owe, or the money that we owe the banks, so they've got to open the floodgates for mass migration. And that's the excuse for mass migration and the elimination of borders.

You understand what I'm saying here? Which one is it? You think they'd be quite happy with folk dying off and getting fewer and fewer and fewer people. Hm. Do you really think they would risk their own elimination and disappearance at the top, do you really think they'd do that if it was purely because there's not enough folk to pay taxes? Do you really think that? So which… If they're not afraid of millions coming across Europe to add to the population, if they're not afraid of having to support all of them and what they're consuming, getting taken out of sustainability programs, why would you at the same time say there's too many of you? Which one do you want, less or more? less or more? Simple, isn't it. But you'll never get a straight answer because they have no straight answer to give. Again, there's always a good reason and then there's the real reason. You'll never get told the real reason, you'll have to dig for it yourselves.

The elimination of borders is an old, old idea for those who gave you eugenics. They are alive and strong and well through over a thousand think tanks and foundations all working together. They're on their way to getting what they want. The elimination of national boundaries. A standardized society. They don't care about different colors or peoples or ethnic groups. If they can standardize them all with the same speech, the same understanding, the same new culture, that's what they hope to bring in eventually, then they can dominate and control all of you and then bring you down population wise. Or sterilize you like the West, already going down the tubes with sterility as we know. It's one of the main problems that they have.

It didn't happen by itself. And they'll never tell you, either, why it is happening. [Alan laughing.] You're in a eugenics program, that's what I'm saying, and you were in it before you were actually born. In the future a lot will be more so in it because they won't be allowed to be born. That's part of it too. You have politicians coming out saying now they are reviving the old idea that came out way back in HG Wells' day, oh yeah, and his cofounders too like George Bernard Shaw, about the need to even have permission to have children. They're back to that again, you see. But again, don't forget, under eugenics you serve the world state, as they say, then you see your reward, you'll have lots of rewards but one of them will be to have the right to pass your genes on into a new child, for a new child to be born. This has always been the same goal.

That really is what's amazing to me is with under this mass confusion, that appears as mass confusion to the general public who don't have the time to go into all this stuff, then they can really rush ahead with their agenda. Which they are doing of course. But also, their indoctrination techniques are so politicized and spread through all communication, all movies and books and novels, and probably ads on television too, I don't know, I don't have TV. So there you go, I mean, it's through everything. By design, and not because it's just chance or coincidence. If you go into, as I say, the old occultic stuff you'll find the discussions really of eugenics, and even reincarnation, that was a big thing that was often couched in reincarnation, for those who don't know, the idea that, oh, you're being reincarnated so many times.

Plato talked about it, didn't he, when he and his friend supposedly in a little talk that they had, Plato says, why do you think we understand basic mathematics and geometry and things like that, you know, and others don't? And they give us an example of children and he says, well, come here boy, and he gives him a little puzzle. And the little boy figures it out and says there you go. And he says about this little boy, why does he know that, where other little boys won't know this, how to do this or how to do that? Because we've done it before, he said, we've lived before. So that was their way of justifying why they were superior. Superior is the word, you see. That was it. That hasn't changed. It really hasn't changed.

And under that doctrine, I don't care what you want to call it, is a doctrine or a religion. Hmph. Secular humanism is a religion too, you know. And for those who say they believe in nothing, except existentialism and humanism, they're in a religion. Because strangely enough, their mind will go off, they might not, if they can't, as long as they don't have a name to brand it with they're quite happy, but they'll give you the same signs and symptoms of any other religion. Marxists were the same. You need an awful lot of faith to believe in that. Awful lot of faith. Because supposedly it was so complex only the great leaders who designed it understood it. Ha! Isn't that beautiful?

You'll find the same thing with occultism. It's often used, and always was in polite circles, as a technique of communication of superiority of class amongst themselves. For those who don't quite get it. And also remember too, that even with the Hellfire Club you'll find that Benjamin Franklin belonged to, some of the clubs in those days, and these, they weren't, these Masonic clubs were not for the average person. They were for masons, sure, but at that time masons were generally people of dignity, they were called gentlemen. Sometimes called Gentile men, but gentlemen. And they often had a prostitution brothel attached to it as part of it. And you think, well, I guess they're just indulging themselves, hey. But it was more than just that. It was to do with selective women who had what they called quality and character, and intellect and health, that they could mate. Again, that was your privilege, you could get mated with one to have an offspring with, out of wedlock, who would be trained then as a form of, many names have been used for, even Alastair Crowley called it the magical child, the magical child, etc.

Today we can read about it in the foundation's writings, as I mentioned before, they select children. They don't tell you who bred them. [Alan chuckles.] They select children and they train them to be rulers. And in a whole bunch of different areas which govern us all. We don't elect any of them. Because most of our governance today are unelected organizations. In this farcical thing called democracy. Anyway, I could get really into depth with all this stuff again. [Alan chuckles.] But really, you have to, and you've got a chuckle too at the nonsense of it all, you know, how we believe, and I get people all riled up about, democracy. And by God, do they really get riled up, don't they? Democracy. Democracy.

Here's the thing too, for those who belong to these organizations, they hate it, and still do hate the general average low educated working-class, they really hate them. Despise them with a passion. HG Wells said it too. He says, you know, look at the people, he says, the poor, what do you do?He says, you can help them, you can help them get over their sicknesses and illnesses. And he wasn't just talking about Britain, he was talking about the rest of the world, through charities, etc. at that time. And he says, you can vaccinate them against diseases, and even throw money at them. He says, what do they do?He says, they breed. Folk thought, well, I guess he's talking about Africa.

Because Africa, they're always throwing money at Africa and they couldn't see the results from it, that they couldn't see it. Because most of the money wasn't getting there obviously either. The corruption's rife in a lot of different nations too. Every nation has got corrupt… The groups that rule you are legitimate because theyconquered and slaughter folk thousands or hundreds of years ago, and through time they become respectable.Every country is the same. That's how it is, folks. Those who take the chances, they're bold, knights are bold, they slaughter other people, they do things that you wouldn't do, they take the chances, they're the ones that win. You see? That's how it works. And we're taught that that's, somehow now they're nice and clean and superior hundreds of years later, their offspring. Really. That's how it happens. Every country is the same. Every country.

So HG Wells and many of his own ilk were really disgusted with the working-class. But he wasn't talking about the other countries, he was talking about folk in Britain. [Alan chuckles.] Yeah, he was. The great HG Wells, 'eh. And he talked about how rulership of the air, you know, a Masonic brotherhood of the air, a secret society, who would rule through science the general population, in Things To Come. So that's really how it's done. He belonged to all the societies too. And cofounder of the Fabian Society that would achieve its goals for this planned system. It might take them 100 to 200 years, it depended, to achieve it. Well, they've done pretty well to the present time, haven't they?

And don't think there's a separate organization from what was called the far right of its day, those who'd ruled Empire. It's just different branches to serve different functions, and to con and use different societies within, and populations within its Empire, that's all. It hasn't changed. Eugenics. Eugenics. Eugenics. And here we all are, well, really, the end product of it. They're even harvesting, and we know this, they're harvesting, it's been in lots of top magazines and newspapers with the harvesting of children's organs for sale and different things like that too. We know all this stuff. For stem cell research and longevity projects, etc. etc. etc.

That is true too by the way, that they've always been, I've said it for the last, oh, 25 years or more, that there's always been three levels of reality existing at the same time in any profession or field of science including medicine. Basic medicine that's taught in University for GPs is the lowest form of it. There's another level above it that's given to people who work for the system tirelessly and got really well rewarded for pushing it all, and they'll have longevity. Then there's another level above that too, where they can do amazing things to rejuvenate the body to fight all kinds of disease, including cancer and infections. So when the working peoples at the bottom are told about a new system to fight this or fight that or even cancer, it's actually obsolete in the second level and third level, or the ones above them. So that's really how it works in this system. The same with knowledge and everything else too.

Today finding the truth in this day of mass, mass communication is almost impossible because there's so much sensationalism going on everywhere, to get hits as they call it, and click, click, click, click bait, etc. That's how they think they're successful, by getting lots of clicks and so on and stirring emotions. And of course, those who rule the world have stacks of massive foundations working tirelessly every day on the Internet with all kinds of pretended reasons for existing for what they do, so it's pretty well impossible now, I hate to say it, but it's true. And I knew this would come a long time ago.

Now, let's look at this big organization that was based in London, still is, of course, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, a private organization… that anyone who's anybody in history for the last few hundred years belonged to basically. Even before it was called the same… it was called different names before that. Winston Churchill was bamboozled about it. He knew it existed, it was a covert thing, he'd get whispers of it running the British Empire behind the scenes. He made a speech in Parliament about it, how it's disgraceful how, because he wasn't in the loop at the time, of how it was really running the whole affairs of the Empire and creating wars for its own gain, etc., for its own purpose. Although it would seem probably during his speeches, he was certainly well aware of what it was and he was part of it with the Roundtable societies and so on.

But it has different levels. It has an inner party and an outer party. And had foreign branches that tried initially to hide themselves by giving different names to themselves. But it's the same organization for world Empire that I'm talking about tonight. As I say, all these different aspects of it is part of the same system. The US took over a big, big part of the active participation of funding it across the planet since just before and after World War II up to the present time, under the guise of the CFR and another specialized branch called the Trilateral Commission where the technocrats that do the real signing and drafting up of plans and so on with think tanks and getting them signed without any votes going through, they're the real movers and shakers. Including the guys who really manage the central banking system that's part of it too across the world.

So we're run by agencies which most folk are completely oblivious of. But it's the same organization, very old, with the same agenda, working tirelessly through foundations as they hire, work and retire, and recruit and train and retire for generations. They can always achieve their objectives. Getting back to what I said earlier, we're short-term thinkers, foundations are not. They don't have to be. Hmph. And this is where we are today with it all too. But it's really so sad, the people for the last hundred years worked and died, worked and died, worked and died and went through often wars and everything, never knowing that this was behind everything that was happening in their lives. And all the topics, even for gossip for the papers, was dished out by them too. And entertainment as well, what kind of entertainment, what's embedded in the entertainment. That's how all-encompassing this happens to be.

So in the US they had, they made the Rockefeller family the movers and shakers. It was a big, huge branch for America. And they would go under the guise of philanthropy, naturally. But they would take over, as they always do across the planet, resources, number one, for different guises and under different reasons, but always take over resources. Always to help the people, of course. But also, education as well across the world, standardize education, promote all agendas for sustainability, etc. etc., to the present day. And finance all the top players and train them, again, from children who were under prominent, in sciences and social sciences and academia, etc. And in politics too. And this is no conspiracy theory, it's a fact.

In the US there's a really good book put out in fact about the Rockefellers. It's about social control and the Rockefellers. The book is called…

The Rockefeller Foundation's Molecular Vision of Life— How the Aims of Eugenics, Social Control, and Human Engineering Shaped Molecular Biology and 20th Century Science
cholesterol-and-health.com / 16 Jan 2009

A Review of Lily E. Kay's The Molecular Vision of Life: Caltech, The Rockefeller Foundation, and the Rise of the New Biology (Oxford University Press, 1993)

Is the molecular biology we have inherited from the twentieth century merely a product of the scientific method, an inevitable set of conclusions spawned by the cumulative impartial deduction of theoretical principles from objective observations? Or was it molded, shaped, and directed by an elite establishment that had aims much broader than the pursuit of science?

In her 1993 book The Molecular Vision of Life, Dr. Lily E. Kay, whom a 2001 MIT News Office obituary referred to as "one of the outstanding historians of biology of her generation," argued that the "new biology" was largely created by the Rockefeller Foundation and its subsidiary program at the California Institute of Technology (Caltech) through a consensus between a scientific elite and a business elite whose broader aims centered on eugenics and the need to create a mechanism of social control and human engineering:

The new science did not just evolve by natural selection of randomly distributed disciplinary variants, nor did it ascend solely through the compelling power of its ideas and its leaders. Rather, the rise of the new biology was an expression of the systematic cooperative efforts of America's scientific establishment -- scientists and their patrons (Alan: That's interesting, you see, every scientist is backed heavily by patrons, hey.) -- to direct the study of animate phenomena (A: Now, animate is everything that moves [Alan chuckles.] including people, right…) along selected paths toward a shared vision of science and society.

(A: By the way, this name they give it, molecular vision of life, it was a third version. They already had eugenics before, it didn't go down too well, and another name too, so this is the third one they used on it.)

The term "molecular biology," in fact, was coined in 1938 by Warren Weaver, director of the Rockefeller's natural sciences division, to rename for the third time the program originally known as "pscyhobiology," the aim of which was "the rationalization of human behavior."

The model Kay uses to describe this historical process is one of "consensus" that does not necessarily require the active complicity of all scientists. (A: Now this is beautiful too, how they can use everybody, who are willing, they're not really quite dupes, they're well paid for it. They know what, they probably suspect they're dupes in a sense but they're well, they don't care, most scientists don't care as long as they get well-padded wallets.) Many of them did not share the goals of eugenics, social control, or human engineering. Many of them, even at the elite level, were interested in the pursuit of "pure science," even though they were certainly aware of the goals of the business and administrative elites within the Rockefeller Foundation. Scientists and Foundation elites needed each other, however, and the end result was that the "new biology" would not be an open-ended investigation of "the riddle of life" but would rather be a directed investigation to answer specific questions in ways amenable to the goals of eugenics and social control.

The Rockefeller Foundation, Caltech, and the New Molecular Biology

The Rockefeller Foundation, founded in 1913, poured $25 million dollars of support into (A: …this investigative study, you see…) the molecular biology program of the United States between the years 1932 and 1959.

(A: And they ended up with Nobel prizes, etc. I think they said there was 18 Nobel prizes to do with eugenics and the manipulation of humans and so on and 17 of them were from the Rockefeller Foundation themselves and funded by them. So they also would direct, you understand you can direct where science is going to go, including how to create infertility in people if need be. I mean, there's a whole bunch of different areas if you are directing the sciences, to do social policies, 'eh. Anyway, it says…)

World War I ushered in a new political and economic ideology of "cooperation" that departed from nineteenth century individualism and stressed interdisciplinary projects, "team players," and coordinating managers. The Rockfeller Foundation stepped in during this reorganization of science and played a critical role in shaping it.

(A: They went into agriculture, a whole bunch of biological studies and so on. Food, food, food. How do you manipulate people, folks? It's all in here [Alan chuckles.] It's in here too. It also mentions…)

Caltech produced many of the "founding fathers" of molecular biology. These include Thomas Hunt Morgan, Max Delbruck, George Beadle, and Linus Pauling. James D. Watson, who with Francis Crick discovered the structure of DNA at Oxford, was a disciple of Delbruck; his investigations with Crick were largely based on Pauling's paradigm of molecular structures, and he later joined Caltech.

(A: So they talk about the 17 scientists out of the 18…)

In the dozen years following the elucidation of the structure of DNA in 1953, 17 of 18 scientists awarded Nobel prizes for research into molecular biology were fully or partially funded by the Rockefeller Foundation under Warren Weaver's guidance.

(A: And it goes on and on. But it's really fascinating to talk about at one point it was to do with social control.)

The Rockefeller Foundation and "Social Control"

(A: Social control, folks, most of which would be completely a mystery to those that were being controlled. They'd never figure out their whole reality pretty well was shaped for them, everything they thought about, even their topics of conversation. They have no idea. To the present day it hasn't changed. It's everything, isn't it. And says here, they could train the whole world basically, and that was the point of it too, to train the whole world into this new system.)

John B. Watson wrote his "Behaviorist Manifesto" in 1913 as well, in which he promoted a new psychology whose "theoretical goal is the prediction and control of behavior."

And this goes on and on and on and how they could train out and maybe even breed out different traits which were undesirable in human nature and put other ones in. It went really into the fields of genetics. It isn't just purely psychological indoctrination, although that's a big part of it too. But it's everything else as well, how you can, you can create whole fads. And you can get, it's true enough what other members of this organization, they knew about, like Bertrand Russell. They knew there's nothing you cannot do if you have total control of what becomes the reality of the general public. The complete reality, you understand. If everything you look at has been designed for you to look at, if every question you're going to, is going to lead you to questions, so everything, every question that will appear in your mind to do with, is from what they've given you already, to make you run in circles and circles and circles in preplanned answers and preplanned questions… endlessly. You understand what I'm saying here?

This is way beyond just the realms of sci-fi. Because to hold on to your sanity, as I mentioned before, is a very difficult thing. I said that when 9/11 happened, because I knew this whole agenda was going to unravel very quickly and be implemented, and the whole war system and the total observation of every individual on the planet was all part of it too. War was the excuse, the necessity, that word again, necessity. But I'll put this up anyway. It's a good article to read. This is a review of the book. You don't have to read all this stuff yourselves if you don't want to, but you can certainly read the reviews of it. Because most of this stuff is real nice, the condensed versions because there's so much to read in this day and age. As I say, circles within circles within circles, within questions within questions within questions, all planned for you to spend your life trying to do. The peopleinvolved can't read all the stuff themselves, it's too much. They know this.

Also I'm going to put up…

PETER HITCHENS: ID cards are great... if you want to spit on liberty and be a serf - hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 6 May 2018

He goes into this push in Britain, it was a great testbed for all this stuff is Britain as they come out again last year and try to push for the ID cards for everybody. Under the guise of mass migration coming in, we've got all kinds of criminals blah, blah, blah, so let's get everybody IDed with cards and so on and so on. But you can't, as he knows, because he knows history and he knows you can't go this route. And he also knows that there's other reasons for governments wanting to do it on everybody. Come on. Come on, folks, you know it all. The same governments that wanted the wars, the same governments that knew mass migration would follow from the countries, because it was planned that way. It all comes together, no national borders, at the same time. You can't get a world system of a new world culture created unless you eliminate nations. Simple.

Oh, they'd never. They're doing it, what d'you mean they never do it? Of course, they're doing it. William Pitt the Younger, he also, he mentioned, he was a British politician in the late 18th century and early 19th centuries, who said, and he was Prime Minister for a while too. He talked about it as well, about basically safety for security and all that kind of stuff too, and necessity. He mentions how necessity, like Peter Hitchens and others too, and I've said this too, they always use the term necessity for taking your rights away. They say, well we have to do it to keep you safe. Oh, we have to ID you to keep you safe. Oh, we have to have cameras everywhere to keep you safe. Well, how come worse and worse things happen all the time, and we're, oh, it's getting worse not better when it comes to safety? Because safety has got nothing to do with it, is it.

Whereas Pitt talks about it too. He says, it's the cry of every tyrant, every tyrant, is safety. Hm. Plato said it. Everybody said it. And I think Milton even said it too. But no, you can't have any safety.

William Pitt the Younger
en.wikipedia.org

"Necessity was the plea for every infringement of human freedom. It was the argument of tyrants; it was the creed of slaves."

Said too, and with necessity, the TYRANT'S plea, excused his devilish deeds. That was Milton of course, Paradise Lost. But that was pretty well, said the same thing, and by Pitt himself, he said…

"It was the argument of tyrants; it was the creed of slaves."

The same thing too. Oh, you can't go on like this, folks, you know, give up all your rights, you can't burn fuel and fossil fuel and stuff, oh, you can't drive cars, oh no, Agenda 21 for the 21st century, we've got to save the world. This necessity. Necessity. Total control. Remember, total control of every individual, it's always been the agenda of this secretive but very huge society in the world.

Another part of it too is bring down the populations. Sterilization. We've had all the talks out by different professors in different parts of the world saying, oh yeah, older folk should just take the pill and kill themselves, you know, and let younger folks have jobs. By these cushy nothings that have never worked a day in their lives telling us this! Do you think they're all just spontaneous, coming out by themselves? Of course they're not. They're getting paid to do it.

And, oh, stop eating meat and stuff. Remember I mentioned last week too, the energy, and food as an energy. And without food you have no energy, you're dead, people die. All been discussed, it's not speculation either.

Vegetarianism led to my mother's premature death:
Prominent NHS cardiologist claims the meat-free diet played a 'crucial role in her suffering' - dailymail.co.uk / 3 Mar 2019

Good article to read actually. It's part of eugenics, folks. It was said they would make food very expensive, especially meats and proteins. Over and over. And here you go. Oh yeah, these animals give out too much methane, my goodness, etc. etc. etc. etc. etc. M-hm. Endless, isn't it. And also too…

War on superbugs . . .

I've read this article. This is a repeat of the same thing. Because there's more to it than meets the eye. There's a good reason and there's a real reason, hey?

War on superbugs is putting elderly people at risk of dying with SEPSIS
dailymail.co.uk / 27 Feb 2019

General practitioners are under too much pressure to stop doling out antibiotics.

(A: Now, what they don't mention in this article is the nudge units, the Behavioral Insights Teams that every country employs now to brainwash us all, it's all through the Internet, they're rushed into use in every country. I read the articles months ago where Britain and the British government pays them to try to convince doctors, and prompts them, NOT to give out antibiotics to the elderly now, or even children. Huh? M-hm. Elderly and children, reduce population, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, m-hm. Anyway, here's the thing too, it says here that…)

It revealed that elderly people are readily being denied antibiotics for infections.

(A: This is Britain. This is the agenda, folks. I hope you wake up to this and demand you get what you need. You'd better, or you're dead. This is deliberate. It's not a mistake. It's not some vague opinion that they're trying to push upon you. No, this is their agenda. So it says…)

National Health Service offers health boards payments if they slash their prescription rates.

(A: …you know, if they stop prescribing so much, they give them bonuses.)

A study published in the British Medical Journal suggests this pressure may be putting vulnerable people at risk.

(A: Of course, it is. That's the agenda, isn't it.)

The NHS offers local health boards additional payments if they bring down their prescription rates, and doctors are in turn pressured to give drugs to fewer patients.

(A: Well, you'd better demand your rights, folks, because you're getting killed off here. I hope you understand. This is not just in Britain. I've seen the articles in Canada too, and they'll be pushing it on the same people. So when you see your smiling doctor, folks, of who you've been trained to worship unfortunately, you'd better maybe start to put on a grim face and a grimace and maybe a bit of anger and say, I really demand my rights here, and demand that you get your proper antibiotics.)

(A: And the proper length of time. Another con of it too is everybody in the medical profession knows this, everybody knows it, and they used to tell every patient too when they prescribed it. They would give you about seven days sometimes to ten days of antibiotics and they would tell you, you finish that whole course, don't ever, even if you feel better, keep it to the very end to make sure that that particular bacterium that's destroying you is killed off. That was the purpose of it. If you had a few and you felt better halfway through the course, you see, you'll find that that bacterium is not quite, there's a few left there and they'll rebound and they might be resistant to it the time it hits you again, and you notice it, and it's resistant again to the antibiotic and you need a different antibiotic to kill it off.)

(A: They know all this. This is standard, old, old stuff. So if they're giving you a few days course, by prescription, it's not the same thing as, you know, taking a whole course. You understand what I'm saying? Legally it may cover their asses, and they know this, they know this, folks, that's the reason for it, but it's not going to kill off the infection. So they're saying in Britain here in this article, all patients sometimes have to go back to try to get more pills because it isn't killed off. Well by that time it would be too late, it says it here in the article. It says…)

GPs have been repeatedly told they risk creating a 'public health catastrophe' by doling out too many drugs - and at one point in 2015 they were even warned they could be struck off for overprescribing.

(A: I guess they can prescribe you marijuana now, though, hey. At least you can die, I guess, in some happy haze. I hope you're understanding what I'm saying here. I really do. It's not my opinion, folks. This is just fact. It says…)

The findings suggest that older adults (especially men aged over 85) should start taking antibiotics as soon as possible after diagnosis to prevent serious complications.

It reveals elderly people are regularly being denied antibiotics for infections, raising their chance of sepsis eight-fold and doubling their risk of death.

Well, start the lawsuits, folks. You'd better start lawsuits because if you don't, they'll go through the motions of giving you too few pills to do any good to you. That's the purpose of it. It will depend on who you are of course in this so-called classless society. Believe you me, those who are important [Alan chuckles.] won't go through any arguing to get what they need.

Also part of it too, again, the war, you see, it's all to do with necessity, if they can't get a war on this and the war on that, oh, it's a war on humanity, man's causing death to the planet, oh my goodness, hey. The climate change…

Paris Climate Agreement: Everything You Need to Know - nrdc.org / 12 Dec 2018

I'll put that back up again for those who don't quite get it yet, what it's about.

And those who've been trained for their positions, and promoted to the top, who as you know too, they don't have to be a genius. They're far, far from that in fact. I'm surprised they scrape through some of them. But it says…

Ocasio-Cortez Poses 'Legitimate' Question: 'Is It Okay to Still Have Children?' - freebeacon.com / 25 Feb 2019

Do you think this is all out of her own mind, folks, of what I've been talking about here? They train them for years and present them to these characters. They get well paid for it all too. Well-paid. Doors just open. There's lots of them out there in every country. As I've said before, this is not conspiracy theory. It's fact, folks.

Liberal Party study claims household energy bills could soar by HUNDREDS of dollars(A: Again, energy bills, energy, energy…)under Labor's plan to reduce greenhouse gas emissions - dailymail.co.uk / 2 Mar 2019

This is Australia. The same as every other country, though. Because isn't it strange that they all pass the same rules at the same time. And you've got less money to buy necessities like food, or good food, which is important food, hm, the really important stuff like protein.

And again, eugenics, eugenics, eugenics…

Chinese government may have funded disgraced scientist He Jiankui to create the world's first gene-edited babies, report claims
dailymail.co.uk / 26 Feb 2019

(A: Old stuff, old stuff. This is how it is.)

•Documents show grants were issued by three government institutions in China
(A: The same as every other country of course.)

•It is not clear whether the institutions knew how their grants would be used
(A: Ha-ha. Ha. [Alan laughing.] That's the same as saying that the doctors didn't know if half the prescribed dose of antibiotics would do any good. Ha-ha. Ha-ha. Hm.)

•Scientist modified the DNA of twins to make them resistant to infection with HIV
(A: That's the excuse that they gave for it. I'm sure every country's done the same experimentations, or experiments elsewhere in laboratories you don't even know exist.)

But of course, they've had lots of articles over many years about gene editing and the creation of new human beings. Of course they have. You know, in the 70s they actually put human genes into pigs and the American Department of Agriculture and livestock or whatever you call it was involved in it too, by the way. And after the experiments, where they put them into these particular pigs that they bred, they released the pigs into the rest of the pigs. So human genes were, after the experiment was over, they put it in, and they ended up going through the population of pigs in America, human genes, 'eh. It was like turning us all into cannibals.

The things we don't know would terrify us. It's bad enough we get terrified by the few things we are told. Well actually, there's not, there's hundreds of things we know that terrify us, really. That's why most folk don't want to hear about them. Really, that's the reason. You would collapse if you looked at it all. You would. Yeah, it's quite amazing.

And Facebook…

Facebook is 'actively suppressing posts from conservative media, whistleblower claims - dailymail.co.uk / Feb 28, 2019

Then you have, maybe I'll do another part next week on this. Because really, there's just too much to put out there. Most folk don't want to hear it. Most folk think I don't sound distressed enough when I mention these things. But if you get distressed you're either faking it for different reasons or you're not fit for it. Because you have to be fit enough to understand the truth.You have to fortify yourself to understand it. And when you've known it pretty well most of your life, what's going on, because only from the books that you read, not the ultra secret, secret stuff that's not published obviously. But what is published is phenomenally copious, as I say, and that's bad enough.

But I've always found that whatever they publish about what they're going to do, it's called different names, like the socialist policy of, or the futurist societies programs, or the staggering amounts of articles put out by universities on socialism and socialist policies, etc. etc. Well, you'll find that they will always, no matter how long it takes, achieve their goals. You find all the top capitalists are on board with this, without exception, as far as I can see. Which leads you to a different whole thing together. Are the top capitalists all part of the same club? And is that how they became the top capitalists, because they promote their own into being that?

Well, actually, that is true. I really don't believe that the big figures they put forward to you, like child geniuses that end up owning big parts of the Internet, are what they say they are. I don't think it's that at all. I think they're all fronts, well-paid fronts, incredibly well-paid fronts but fronts nonetheless. You know the CIA has stacks and stacks of legitimate big corporations that produce real things. So does Britain, MI6 and so on, and various Crown corporations as they call them.

But don't believe, because now is the time these people who turn out to be philanthropist from being geniuses supposedly, it's strange how they're all on board with the same agendas as philanthropist, depopulation and a whole bunch of other things. It's always the same things, isn't it? Isn't that rather odd? Why would you get the same darn thing from all these supposedly different individual people? There's only one system here, folks. It doesn't stand any competition. It really doesn't. It won't tolerate it. It never did.

That's why I can do what I'm doing without breaking apart. Because you've seen the cons that are out there. You've seen the fakes that come out that just grab information and destroy credibility for other people by acting farcically. Or even getting laws changed to stop people even putting out good information. I've said before, they give you your leaders. They do.

And why are you, how come you've been trained into believing you can't think and speak for yourselves? I wish everybody could get that and they'd start to work on it. Why do you need people to say, I feel your pain and speak for you. Why? Who trained you into this behavior of conformity? Conformity, standardization, the trained society. You'd better start thinking about it.

Anyway, for those who wanted to buy the books and discs I have @.comlook up the website, take note of all the official sites I have there. You can get the books and discs there and you can also donate. It tells you were to donate to as well, how to do it. I hope you get a lot of what I'm saying.

Because this is, this war was on the go long before I was born. But we really have reached a crucial time. Since 2001 you've seen this massive rampage of the unfolding of the whole agenda at breakneck speed where everything is to be made anew. All society. All definitions. All reality is, in fact. And you're living through it. Even with the force of law where you're being told what to say, what to call things that you see, and how evil you are if you won't follow and go along with it, and you can't see how many fingers that O'Brien is holding up. Think about it.

For myself Alan Watt from a very cold, still very cold northern Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 10, 2019. At the moment I've got a bit of a, well, ice snowstorm coming down here, again, in March, and the 10th. It's been one awfully long winter. It still going on, obviously. Because it's just snow for the next day or two maybe and ice pellets too mixed in. So it's quite something to have snow beginning in September, and no thaws basically, all the way to the present time, and the snow is just building up and building up and building up.

Of course, they'll tell us once it's over, by the time June rolls around that it's been the warmest winter in history. Because we live in such nonsense today, don't we? That's how bad it is. Because it's a big, big agenda and the folk literally, the people have no idea, have no idea I mean really at all, even the ones who think that they've looked into it in any kind of detail, they have no idea how old and how all-encompassing this agenda is. It's everything for the ones who control the world. It's going for broke basically. We'll be broke and they'll win. But that's how it all works out, you see. Very ancient agenda.

They couch it in all different kinds of terms… world orders, and globalism, and global governance, and global government even. There's even articles in different papers talking about, is it time for global government. They keep floating the trial balloon and getting you used to the idea. It's quite something to see, actually and to live through it.

But folk have no idea, because we we're taught just to accept things as they are. Anyone who knows what's going on, who doesn't belong to the elites, are obviously conspiracy nuts. That's what they call you, you see. That term itself was put out by intelligence agencies after the death of Kennedy back in the 60s to ridicule anybody who just pointed out so many inconsistencies in the Warren Commission's report. It works awfully well.

The public, it's so sad isn't it, how things work out so uniformly repetitively well for the elite. It's like the mob in ancient times, or the Middle Ages, say, when someone was going to get their head cut off by royalty for some reason or another, like Henry VIII for instance. The people would go to it. It was kind of like a fair thing for them because that was the most entertainment they generally got in their lives. There would be jesters going around the crowds like jokers. They would sell things at these fairs basically. They'd all see the blood and guts and go back, ooo, aaa, ooo, just like a horror movie. It was just too easy, too easy for the proclamation read by whoever it was speaking on behalf of the crown, reading out the sentence as to what they did. Even though, even the public in their subconscious knew these people didn't do anything like this, whatever it happened to be. But that was good enough for them.

And nothing's changed. Today it's just, you're a conspiracy theorist. Who says so? Hm? Someone in authority of the government says it's a conspiracy theory. But that's what you get, isn't it? Because you've got counterintelligence, which is counter to intelligence, that's what counterintelligence means. All the spy agencies have them. Your government has internal and external agencies dealing with that, and internal ones deal with the people inside the country. It's astonishing, but just like the crowds and ooo, aaa, ooo as the ax comes down after the reading of the verdict and the reason for it, they're just the same today as they were then really. Well, yeah, a conspiracy nut, you know, huuuuuuuu.

That's what they label anybody who comes out with, even if you're reading official articles from the government. Isn't that astonishing? Isn't it amazingly astonishing, you can read them from the government's own websites and departments and agencies and people will still class you as a conspiracy nut. Because you've made a strange inquiry into finding out in the first place, that means you're a nut, you see. Because they would never think about looking in the first place. They'd rather not know. That's the difference.

So anyway, this is part three, it really wasn't going to be a three-part thing, on eugenics and the plan, the big agenda. It is a big agenda. You hear Bush Senior at the time when he was the president talking about a New World coming into view, a new world order. His son said the same thing about 10 years later, exactly. It's quite fascinating to live through this and watch it and hear at all happening, in coding that the public don't understand. What do they mean a New World Order coming into view? You know? Coming into view… Who's view? Who's world order? Who planned it? And even with terms like, it's ancient and things like that, ancient plan, what ancient plan? Did you know you were part of some ancient plan? Did you know that?

It's really something, isn't it. So, this is going to be part three as I say, because last week I covered a lot of stuff from eugenics too, and touched on geo-engineering and so on, and the different humanistic so-called sciences that are part of this agenda as they train the public into behaving in certain ways, and believing certain things too, which perhaps they shouldn't. So this is part three of Witness Signs ofHuxley's-Blair's Ultimate Revolution, Using Geneticists, Bio-Chemists, Scientific Collusion. This week is part three I suppose and I'll try and wrap some things in.

As I say, these last three talks, I haven't had time really to work much on them, a lot is from my head and all the rest of it because of this awful weather. I spent more time, honestly, during the day shoveling snow. And clearing the driveway. And chiseling, literally chiseling [Alan chuckles.] really thick ice at times off my vehicle in order to get it out. It can take an hour and a half sometimes when it's so heavy with ice and snow. And sometimes two hours with the driveways completely covered as well because I've got a long, long driveway. The rest of the time you're trying to get snow off even the pathway at the back at the house so I can get in and out of the door. At the moment I'm kind of walking down a slanted snow slope to get to the door. That's how bad it is.

And trying to get the snow off the roof as well. Because there's been a lot of damage as I say this year, this winter, to people with even flat roofs of course, naturally they get leaks all the time, other people with strong roofs too if they haven't managed to get the snow off it. And then you get ice, and then you get snow and ice, like sandwiches of multilayered snow and ice all the way until it's about three or four feet high. Or even higher. As I say, no thaws, it just keeps building up and getting heavier. And eventually the big kaboom happens and that's you. And I've had some kabooms here at night with the temperatures being -25 Fahrenheit, -30°F, many a night actually, all the way through this winter. It's pretty regular this entire winter. But at night, yeah, incredible temperatures once you hit about four in the morning, five in the morning. Then during the day most of the time too, you're lucky if it hits 10 Fahrenheit, +10 Fahrenheit, and you're really lucky, and still way below the freezing mark, or the freezing point I should say.

So then anyway, that's our weather. But as I say, it would be fantastic to hear that it's been the warmest on record and that we've got to give up all our rights and freedoms to save the world from global warming. So that's what we're living through, farcical systems of control. But as I say, the big boys planned this a long time ago. As I say, this is like months and months now I haven't had time to even work on much at all, on the intellectual sphere, it's mainly on the physical sphere of clearing the snow.

You've got to understand what we're living through, a big agenda. It's all around you. It's in all the symbols. It's always written symbols. Because at one time when religion ruled in, say, the Western world and people were religious, which gave them their culture and the way of life, so that they could at least help each other out when you didn't have welfare systems and welfare states, and you had famines and things like that and bad crops, people helped each other out. It was utterly necessary to have a cohesive religion with its commandments of helping each other out basically and looking after people as you would look after yourself basically.

Of course, the enemies of all of this, that use different terms, including reason of course, cloak themselves in societies, behind societies that would use terminology that would sound vague, vaguely religious, sometimes they would sound religious, as though they'd taken things from, say, the holy books and so on. But in reality, they've got their own version of what it all means and you'll find down through the ages that Lucifer is the hero of course of the particular groups that all flourished from the same one group long ago. Lucifer really stands for intellect, intelligence, reason. Today secular humanism too of course, it's the same kind of thing. But it is a religion, a belief system that man's ability, through his brainpower, his intellect and so on, he can make utopia on the world and run things the way that it should be run. According to those who want to rule it all. And who pretty welldo today in fact.

Under the guise of science, they tried to validate all the different things that they have to rule over you with, by using all these different sciences, and using academia that you don't vote into any office of course. We're living in an age where everything's appointed over you, it's appointed by governments that pretend that they're yours but they've got nothing to do with you in fact. Except you pay them. Too much in fact. But that's the way it is.

But in the Middle Ages and even beyond, right up to not too long ago, they had to couch their terminology so that they didn't get found out as subversive of a system. And don't forget, up into the 1800s, especially in America, the people would turn on anybody who, it wasn't… blasphemed their religion… Blaspheming. It had a bigger attack basically, focus on your whole culture, everything that kept you all working together and surviving together, that's really what it was. Bit by bit it's been chipped away and chipped away, especially through the 20th century. And with massive wars, and causing massive slaughter, they would achieve many goals for those who were taking the world over. Because they had to put you into shock. They had to make you ask silly questions like, why does God allow the wars to happen? Well, if you've got free will, man, man can be guided into wars quite easily by those who are… rather evil.

But free will is free will. If you didn't have free will you'd be a robot. Which is what the other group want you to be actually, a completely brainwashed robot. Like Bertrand Russell wanted, someone who you could train as a child and indoctrinate every belief, every thought that they had would be indoctrinated into them perfectly with scientific technique. And well documented, all my old talks have got the stuff in it. And remember, you can go into my archives section @.com. Because it goes way back, and every other talk show host out there who covers any of these topics goes into my stuff all the time. Including all the big shows. Because why do the work when I've done it already? And they just reel it all off. And even the recent stuff annoys me too because within the next few days you hear the top ones, the top ones parrot off the stuff I've just put out a few days before.

But in my archive section I gave lots of talks on what's called the 'occult', which is just 'hidden' of course. And even in ancient times, they had on say Hebrew accompanying literature, they didn't just have it in their writings, they had many other writings too that accompanied the ancient traditions and ancient happenings. Myth, partial myth, what is myth? Myth is generally something you can't validate anymore. But so is most of history, isn't it? You'll find I think it was Oxford University Press put out a good book on Jewish Myths and Legends, it was called I believe if I remember right. They had awfully good stories in it if you really waded through it, and some of them were humorous of course.

Other ones touched on strange rituals that happened within certain sects that developed in the old Judea area. Where one of the sects was pretty well exactly the same as the sect which developed in the Middle Ages in parts of, well, especially in France, parts of France to do with the old Knights Templar stuff and all the rest of it that's been lumped into it. But they did have the same accusations, that families and members of these groups would all go into these caverns or caves or underground passages, like a labyrinth thing, and they'd go through a ceremony. And lights would go off, they would get blown off, and they literally have sex with whoever was next to them. It didn't matter what gender it was either, supposedly, or even if it was their own kin.

That was the same, same accusations that you find were given to not only the Knights Templar groups that eventually moved into parts of France, almost exactly the same in fact. You find the rituals were so similar, very similar to the Albigensians that lived in southern France at one time too, and various Gnostic groups. They had very similar creeds of belief and behavior and culture in their systems, where the world was pretty well evil, which a lot of folk can't doubt that. But they actually said in the Albigensians that they should attempt to dissuade children from having, growing up to have infants. And that can lead from one thing to the next until you have the ancient Greece philosophy basically, the Greek philosophy had infanticide. So there's a lot more to it naturally than meets the eye. Even though different groups are always stigmatized by powerful groups, who win eventually over them down through time, and it's the same right up to the present day, but it doesn't go into who started it in ancient times or whatever. But it was fairly widespread across that area long, long ago.

You also find old passages that were taken, maybe not taken out of the Bible, in some versions it might still be in them, where 'those that take oaths and wink', you find it in actually the Old Testament, 'and shift their feet'… Because it's a symbol of the right angle, when you move your feet, you're putting together a right angle, things like that. Ancient, still used today of course in Masonic rituals. It was actually a warning about them, those who wink and shift their feet in certain angles and so on. Then they talk about the ephod, the ephod can mean a basket, but it can also mean an eye, a symbol of an eye. All old stuff. Anyway, I did that years and years and years ago. Maybe more than 20 years ago.

To show you that there's definitely organizations that come down through time that hide what they're up to from the general public. And at every time, every stage in their evolution you might say, or existence, because it's heretical in all age and all types of cultures as to what they're up to. [Alan chuckles.] Which is the overthrow of the current systems, especially the established religious orders, and in all cultures by the way, in order to destroy it all and bring in their secular humanism with themselves and selected people who have tested on IQ levels, no kidding you, and those in academia and specialists and so on who rule over you.

That's the perfect world that you find even in Things To Come, the story of it from HG Wells who was into all this stuff, eugenics and population control. And he hated the rabble, the working-class rabble, etc. All his kin did too, all his friends. And the agencies that he belonged too, associations. So it's never changed. They have to get their goal through. Now, the organization at the top already owns the financial systems of the world. That was one thing they had to do was create a universal financial system, and central banks of course. All the central banks now are connected to the World Bank, and the International Monetary Fund and the Bank for International Settlements.

These were all set up from the one organization. They did set them all up across the planet, same thing. Any country that wouldn't go along with it has recently been bombed out of existence. Because you must borrow, you must borrow to be a part of the organization. And through the borrowing comes the demands on payment and to get the money that you're trying to borrow for your nation, all the demands that you must implement, social policies, which have caused even a bit of chaos in Africa over the years when they start telling them what they have to decriminalize, you might say, in their society and on sexual areas, all that kind of stuff.

It's no longer, and never really was, the idea of we'll just lend to people of different countries that don't have much money. No, no, it's a social change policy for those who don't quite get it. And it's directed from the West. The World Bank of course even has ex prime ministers from Britain working in it now. So this is their system of control. Ireland too is in the same boat, southern Ireland. Because they were encouraged to borrow like crazy from the EU bank, the central bank there, you see, knowing it was all going to collapse on them. The guys knew years ago it was going to collapse because that was the plan. Then they come in with the IMF branch to demand the payment and they take over your system and they tell you how much you can spend on healthcare and all that kind of stuff and all the cutbacks you've got have. Austerity, in other words, at home, that's what it's going to be, and they dictate your social policies, you see. Maggie Thatcher had them in, the IMF in helping run the country when she was in office because of the massive debt they accumulated by different governments before her too. So this is the system.

Now, it is a secretive society naturally at the top. Because you'll find out that none of the public voted for any of it. Ever. You never got a chance to vote for any of it. The League of Nations was set up as a form of word government, that was the agenda. HG Wells wrote about it praising it, praising it saying that the nation-state is dead and now we could have bureaucrats from the nation-state directly working with the department's in the League of Nations. Because you would have the equivalent apartments in the League of Nations for everything. But it didn't quite pan out. People weren't ready to give up their sovereignty. So they had another world war. And he said that, he says, we need another war because they haven't given up their sovereignty. So they use wars and everything to achieve many goals. And to take over much resources. Because the guys at the top of this organization do believe they've got the right to manage all the resources, and even own the resources of the planet. [Alan chuckles.] And they do, pretty well, through wars and conquests. Nothing's changed there.

But anyway, they use the terminology of their goals, the new secular world order, and expert run world order. You'll find the same terminology in all their writings from the Fabian Society group, which is just a branch of the Royal Institute of International Affairs. Whatever your following out there, they run it. It doesn't matter what side you think you're on. I've gone through in the last couple of weeks some about the Huxley's, George Orwell and Huxley, through the letters that they corresponded with between each other. Because George Orwell that was living through an amazing time, the 1930s, where literally everyone was so sick of this farce of either, a kind of monarchical democracy, which is a farce in itself, they're completely opposing systems, can't have both together. Which tells you that one rules and the other one doesn't, you know.

They were so sick of it, and the massive debts from World War I, and the debts imposed on certain countries because of World War I, that everything was falling apart. And it's true, the Paris Treaty, where they, and the Treaty of Versailles, basically the Warburgs drafted up that Germany would have to continue to pay reparations to every nation, in other words, pay off all their debts for the war to the year, I think it was 1979 and 1989. That's what they originally had a on the particular agreement. Well, it wasn't an agreement because the Germans weren't asked to agree to it, I mean, they were just told. It was a complete farce.

Top reporters at the time for world newspapers said that this will lead to another war. Because obviously Germany can't afford to pay off everybody's debts. Nevermind the fact that, believe you me, all the debt wasn't incurred by the countries just for the war either. It all went into big, big pockets at the top. Because we live in a crooked system. But anyway, they'd have to fight their way out of it, they said, fight their way out or just get starved to death and die. That's exactly what they said.

I was reading a diplomat, his biography, he was a Scots guy, but he was, he became really the top negotiator in the 1930s and 40s and onwards, even up to the integration of the EU, part of that. But he was picked because of his fluency in languages. They got him into the right societies and of course the right oaths, etc. and so he knew the agenda. But it was fascinating to read bits of his life because any big, big meeting at an international level for foreign affairs, he was, they are in charge of it generally for most of his life. It was astonishing to see that, how they worked feverishly, never stopping, all the different organizations, that you never vote for, to push their own agenda through for leading to world government. The same word government that Karl Marx talked about, a unified Europe, as a trading block under a single parliament. And a unified Americas under single a parliament. And that was discussed during the NAFTA meetings, by the way, the last NAFTA meeting. Not the last ones, but the ones quite a few years back. I kept the articles and I read it on the air when I was on my radio show.

Anyway, Orwell's idea was that this incredible militarization during the 20s and 30s, because the governments were all falling apart, and the nations were falling apart through poverty and reparations. And not just Germany, every country was pretty well. Britain had massive taxation on the public because of the war debts. Because you always pay for everything for the elites, you know. You pay for their costs. You put railroads in across the world, as an empire. The public pay for all that. They staff it all. They pay for the armies and so on. They get the bills for everything. But they get nothing back to actually save profit wise for themselves. But the ones at the top certainly do, this oligarchy they call it, whatever it is that runs your government, above the government of course naturally. And that's how it is.

So Orwell brought 1984 out, published I think 1947, 1948. In it, it was mainly because at that time the Soviet system, the Soviet system really was a test, it was 'the second experiment' they called it, the great experiment. The first one was 'the American experiment' to see if they could govern themselves, the general people that is, the public. That was the idea behind it. And if they couldn't, then a society that formed would rule them secretly from behind, you might say or above them. They wouldn't know it, they'd still think it was the same kind of government if they failed to manage to look after themselves.

Well, it's easy to destroy a culture so they can't look after themselves and point to all the problems they've got and say, well, see, see, see. And then they start appointing agencies to manage you. So they end up in the same, eventually they end up the same way as the Soviet Union. What we're living through today is actually the proper Soviet, you might call it. Because they ironed out all the problems by observing all the things that went wrong the first time with the Russian one, the Soviet Union.

Remember, Soviet means 'ruled by councils'. And their theory, which never worked out, but the theory was that you could bring in a system where all departments for labor would have their own counsel, their own panel to run it, you see. And all kind of unions would have their own governments as well. So Soviet means 'ruled by councils'. But in reality, in the Soviet system, naturally, the head couldn't have any competition, so they appointed the heads of the councils that were all party members and were bought and paid for very, very well. That's human nature unfortunately everywhere, it's too easy to bribe folk off. I've seen it happen in all countries actually, bribes getting put across. So there's no shortage of folk who will take the money in the bribes, and really, do the dirty on their fellows, the ones exempt from it.

You'll find too that, you see the Soviet system was to be, to use science. They couldn't ever get to that stage, but to use science and proper scientific indoctrination in Pavlovian style, conditioned responses and all the rest of it, where they'd all feel guilty when they were told to feel guilty, even if they'd done nothing wrong. If you were to say counterrevolutionary to anybody, anybody, immediately they'd go into almost a paroxysm of it, and turn all kind of colors, it was instilled in them, they're terrified of it. So language is very important. That's why they use language now, and we’ve got language police in North America and across Europe where now you’re getting forbidden to say certain things, the same thing. It’s all Orwellian. Orwell’s saw all this happening in his day. And so he saw this stage, at least for 1984, a stage where you would have the spy system, everyone would get monitored, spied upon constantly.

As it got more and more authoritarian they would demand that you turn up for, and I mentioned this before, you will eventually have to turn up for your community meetings and community parades and community this and community that. That you will eventually and if you’re not there you will get a knock on the door and you’ll get dragged out or fined or something. That will come in this system, that’s part of the system that were going through right now. There’s no doubt about it. In Britain, the police are contacting people who’ve used words they’re not supposed to use anymore and they’re getting warned about it. So they’re giving you a warning now. Well, that’s a threat, you see, your government agencies are threatening people. So you’re already under tyranny obviously. And it’s not going to stop there.

It’s not to stop there because you see, your idea of freedoms are all delusions. Complete delusions. You really haven’t had them. You really haven’t. Because most of the things you do and say already, they were given to you to say and do. [Alan chuckles.] There’s nothing out there, there’s not a movement out there that doesn’t have leaders that are supplied to you. Believe you me. That’s how, that’s why the system has never failed. It’s never fallen apart. But if you go into this for instance, here’s an example. World government, ‘eh? There’s so, so many articles, even from government’s websites themselves, about world order, like, a new world order, a new world order, all that stuff, the stuff the general public will laugh at because you say it. You get it from the government websites themselves and articles.

But also, world government, ha, ha, ha, we’re probably talking about world government, hey. Well, the Carnegie Council, these big, big foundations that run the thousands of nongovernmental organizations, that manage you all, that’s the Soviet system. That’s the new Soviet, you see, the perfect Soviet. You don’t elect them. They all have the same goals in mind, but they have specialized parts of their agenda for themselves. They’re all funded by and paid for it and even have pension plans by the big foundations, tax-free foundations, for the Carnegie and Rockefeller, and many others, there’s stacks of them out there. Because it’s one big club, one big club across the planet. And they have…

The Resurgent Idea of World Government - Ethics & International Affairs, Volume 22.2 (Summer 2008) - carnegiecouncil.org / 7 July 2008

Oh, conspiracy theory. Whereas it’s from the Carnegie Council publication. It’s all there, you see, so they have an idea of world government, you see, it’s maybe time for it. You find the Financial Times had it in it too…

And Now for a World Government - ft.com / 8 Dec 2008

And you’ve got Foreign Affairs, world government and …

The Illusion of World Government - foreignaffairs.com / April 1949

Talking about they’ve not achieve the goal yet, there’s just too many little arguments they’re having to have the world government. So here it all is, ‘eh, from their own websites, world government, world government. You’re used to, you’ve been used to for quite a few years governance, world governance. Meaning, oh that’s not the same thing. Well, of course is the same thing. You don’t even need a building for world government. You just need to have organizations all working together, especially now, with the Internet, and ruling your life, quite easily. Quite simple, isn’t it.

It’s well on the way of what they want at the top. And it’s always been this agenda, always the goal of taking over the resources of the whole planet, running it properly. What they actually say is, finishing the creation of the builders. So, they’re the builders, they say, that take the material that was left unfinished and it’s their job to complete it and perfect it all. So they have symbology of the Tower of Babel of course.

Tower of Babel E.U. Parliament Building, Strasbourg - youtube.com / 22 Mar 2016

And of course, we also know that’s one of the main buildings they rebuilt, [Alan chuckles.] the ruined tower, for their annual EU meetings of course. Or, actually, they have it about three or four times a year at that particular building. It's very symbolic. I mean, you couldn't get more symbolic than that, could you. But it's also the world itself, this deity left the world unfinished. He didn't perfect man. Or maybe he made him immortal but then he changed his mind with the curse basically, you see. But anyway, they claim the world was left imperfect. And so, they want control of the weather. Control of everything. Control of the general population. Control of the numbers of the populace. Control of what they'll need, and the elimination of that which they don't need. That's basically eugenics right straight there, you see. It's all right there, there's nothing to guess out at all.

The same organization, that runs every other major organization, they created, this one organization did create the United Nations out of the League of Nations. They still want that to be a world government. They created the World Bank. They created the IMMF, the Bank for International Settlements, across the whole planet. And basically, they're privately owned banks, but funded by us. How is that again? We pay for everything, this public-private idea, they take all the profits from everything. Because it's their right to do so because they rule the world, you see. And you don't vote for them. We've got no votes to create the United Nations. We got no votes from the public. Nevermind the wars they give you. You ever get a vote for war, do you want to go to war? No, of course you don't get that. Never will either.

Because the wars have different functions than the ones you're trained to think that they have. As I say, HG Wells mentioned one of them and that was to bring every country to its knees through mass slaughter, so we're so fatigued and terrified and horrified of the mass slaughter, and fatigue at the rationing that will come out of it and half starved, which happened by the way, that in came the United Nations at the end of World War II. And they had all these articles, you see the old articles, old newspapers and so on, where they were planning to just establish themselves as a world government. But they still didn't get to it, there was too much opposition from the general populace. And Wells said, again, they need another war to bring them to their knees, on behalf of the Fabian Society and the elitists that he worked with.

But Barry Goldwater also talked about it. And he himself was a senator for, whoa, most of his life, I think. And like all politicians, there's corruption, you can't touch politics without corruption. So, I don't trust any of them. At the end of his time, once he retired from it, he became left-wing and went along with all the left-wing agenda. All of it. You know, all the taboo things at one time, he went along with them eventually. Rather strange if you really have any principles. But he did say, he talked about the Trilateral Commission, which is a specialized branch that came out of the Council on Foreign Relations, this big branch that runs most of the world now. It's parent company in Britain, which is the Royal Institute of International Affairs, that used to be called the Lord Alfred Milner group. Because they ran the Empire, this group, the secretive group, when there was an empire there.

Then they passed the torch to America with the bigger tax base. They had already plundered Britain until they were impoverished and malnourished with wars and rationing right up into the 1950s, until most of the population, the working-class had rickets and goodness knows what else, you know. I'm not kidding you. Then they passed the torch to America with the bigger tax base, now that they had created a tax base in America. That was all done with the establishment of the Federal Reserve in 1913, all getting set up for World War I coming along, and along with it came the right to tax the public, you see. So, they could borrow whatever they wanted from these private bankers and private banks and then the taxpayer would have to pay it all off, all the debt. That's the example they've taken across the whole planet, starting in London, to America, and across the whole planet. The same organization.

Goldwater did say in his book, With No Apologies, he said the Trilateral Commission that really broke out into existence to the general public when Jimmy Carter came in, he was surrounded by them for the first time, and people said, well, who are these Trilateral groups, what is this commission? This private group, again. It was a private, they're all private clubs. The CFR, you don't vote any of them in for anything but they're running everything. The Trilateral Commission really is the technocrats that are just placed everywhere to actually get jobs done. Whether they're are elected or not, they're just appointed everywhere across the world, including the central banks. Two of them were appointed to look after Italy when they bankrupted Italy. Another one for Greece. Amazing, hey.

So they can override every country's, or at least what they, they're not supposed to, but they simply do. I mean, who's going to stop them? They're appointed to take over your country when you're bankrupt. Again, by the same banks that they work for. They're the movers and shakers. They're ex-prime ministers, ex-presidents belong to it. Bush Senior was one. And they're not beholding to the public for anything. Anyway, here's what Goldwater said in the book. He says…

Barry Goldwater (1909-1998) US Senator (R-Arizona) in his book "With No Apologies"

"The Trilateralist Commission is international...(and)...is intended to be the vehicle for multinational consolidation of the commercial and banking interests by seizing control of the political government of the United States."

(Alan: …by seizing control of the political government of the United States. Hm. Is there some part of that you don't understand there? You don't elect these people, they're appointed. Everywhere. Until they are running your governments. And they are in all parties. Because the parties are all a joke. Anyway, he says…)

"In my view, the trilateral commission represents a skillful and concerted effort to seize control and consolidate the four centers of power - political, monetary, intellectual, and ecclesiastical."

"The commission emphasizes the necessity of eliminating artificial barriers to world commerce. (A: That's taxes and trade all the rest of it and import duties.) What it proposes as substitute is an international economy managed and controlled by international monetary groups through the mechanism of international conglomerate manufacturing and business enterprises."

(A: What he's talking about here is what Quigley talked about, a new feudal system basically run by corporate CEOs, etc, hm. This is, I think 1979 that Goldwater wrote that.)

Freedom, spiritual, political, economic is denied any importance in the trilateral construction of the next century. (A: That's the one we're living in now. So remember, this is written about 1979. So…)

Freedom – spiritual, political, economic – is denied any importance in the trilateral construction of the next century. What the Trilateral's truly intend is the creation of a worldwide economic power superior to the political power of the nation-states involved. They believe the abundant materialism they propose to create will overwhelm existing differences. As managers and creators of the system, they will rule the future.

But of course, I should say this is my own words, but once they've done all that, which they've pretty well done, that's what the whole free-trade system is about, that's why they get the GATT treaty on steroids and brought China up and made them the manufacturers for the planet. China didn't do it themselves. So, there you go.

And the 'overwhelming existing differences with abundant materialism'… So, materialism would put you all to sleep basically. If you tie that in with the lectures and the talks that Aldous Huxley gave where he said that, you know, the people would be willing slaves basically, kind of happy slaves, contented slaves. And it's through materialism, you see, shop-till-you-drop, etc, credit cards, blah blah blah blah blah. And once they change and start withdrawing the surplus from the materialistic system and bring you into austerity, you'll still go along with their system. As long as you get little freebies here and there and little cheap things here and there too you'll still go along with it. But in the process initially there'll be no complaining at all, as they take all your rights away from you. That's already happened. Basically. So the last part, again…

Freedom – spiritual, political, economic – is denied any . . .

So you have no economic freedom, right, for anybody or any nation eventually. Or political system different from the universal one they're bringing in. And the spiritual one, they're going to have no, no credence to any particular religion eventually. They'll use them, they'll use different ones to be the top, top ones, that will appear to be the top ruling religions for a period and then destroy them, naturally. Because this system has destroyed the religions of the West quite successfully, didn't it? They brought in the sex, sex, sex, sexual revolution, right. In the 1960s they brought in abortion for everybody so don't worry about the fallout from the sex, you see, the state will take care of it. Until marriage, one of the goals, the goals… Isn't this strange? You think it's strange, it's not strange at all, that the goal of Marxism was the destruction of the family unit. Hm.

And for most folk eventually the destruction of private property. Read Agenda 21 for private property, folks, the agenda for the whole 21st century, hm. The 2030 is just parts of it, segments of it, as they go through it and what they must achieve. But the thing for the whole 21st century has all of that in it too, hm. It's all on track for this new improved system.

The same thing will happen even with Islam too, down the road, that's what they hope for. Because once a culture that's had so many taboos about certain things, for, to restrain themselves into a workable society, and you bring them into the West… And if they can keep that going, the massive deluge of sexual images you're deluged with from childhood right through on television and movies and everything, you know, that will work with everybody, it doesn't matter who they are, until they fall apart too.

So again, like the old song of the Rolling Stones and tribute to the devil basically, Time Is On My Side. They don't care if it takes them 20 years or 30 years or 40 to bring a particular people down. It will be interesting to see if Islam can, will really push against all that stuff and try to keep the family unit intact and the systems intact. Or will they, I think already a lot of the young guys are already falling into the temptations and it's been well noticed by those, by their elders.

But we're living through this massive system of incredible control. We really are. And the West has been through all the different revolutions thinking it was all fun. Isn't it amazing how they, how it's all fun, you know, in the 60s, yeah, just do it, yeah, take drugs, do it and have fun, fun. Yeah… as they destroyed it all. And here you are, folk can't even get a friend for more than a month or two, you know. The genders are all screwed up with the relationships because they can't get anybody to stay with them pretty well. Or if they initially do, they'll get bored with them, if they keep watching television and movies, their whole job is to make you unhappy with what you have. [Alan chuckles.] It's a war strategy, you see. Most war strategies and revolutions are bloodless. But incredibly effective.

Anyway, that's what Goldwater said in I think 1979. So, the Trilateral Commission place all these technocrats in all these positions of control. They're not responsible to the general public or to complaints of the general public. They do what they plan to do, then they get on with it, they're not answerable to the public. Maggie Thatcher said that, that she was in, once she retired, she said, she now belonged to a group, and she was talking about the group, same group actually in Britain under the Royal Institute of International Affairs group. And she says, I know all the ex prime ministers and presidents across the world and top bureaucrats basically, and says, we can get things done without being responsible to the public. There you go.

You get all the clues all the time and folk miss it because you are trained to be a child and to stay a child and to leave your thinking to what you're trained to think of as your betters, these special names and special people on television that speak with authority, you know, and they're built up like superstars and they speak with authority. That's why they kept anchor men and women on television for their entire lives, as they were falling off the chairs as geriatrics. Because people grew up with them. It was so evident in the US. And Britain was the same. There was a particular guy in Britain who spent his life in the BBC, and anything important that ever happened in that whole time he was the one to tell you in a stern way what was happening, in an official manner. It was like his law.

You had the same thing in the US too. Of course, in the US they were all members of the World Federalist Society, these characters. And, that's just the way it is, you know, the ones they gave you your news, that's the way it is. Yeah, all in it for an agenda the public were completely ignorant of, but the public would take their opinions, that were given to them and just parrot them without thinking. Who would lie to you? I mean, how trusting a child are you? Have you looked at the history of the world? And of every nation? The histories? They're all so similar. It's astonishing.

And I'm prattling on too much because the time just runs out here. And I'll have shoveling snow to do shortly. I've just put up the one on world government, some of the links for world government from the official sites, from government themselves. [Alan chuckles.] And we can have all that there too.

Also too, they give you your superstars. I can remember it was one of the Brandt guys who was targeted by the Unabomber, and the Unabomber mentioned, really, why he was targeting this particular group. This is part of the group that was bringing you the new culture. They worked with the CIA. The guy Brandt, he said in one of his talks that part of his job was to make scientists, the ones who would lead you, into superstars, so you'd follow them and you'd follow their opinions. Can you think of any today? Of course you do. These guys make, it's the same machinery of making a nobody into a pop star or rock star or whatever, the same thing. Zuckerberg, another one too. Oh yeah, he just… [Alan chuckles.] …a front man.

Zuckerberg outlines 'privacy-focused Vision - dailymail.co.uk / 6 Mar 2019

That's to do with all the, well, anybody who still uses what they give you, you know, you know what they're doing. Do you want your little child monitored by big brother? That is your right to do so. And also, last week I think or the week before I mentioned too, it says…

Deepfakes explained: How technology is masking reality
ctvnews.ca / 23 Feb 2019

The scope of high-tech deception keeps growing and experts say deepfakes could become the biggest threat to truth.

A deepfake is when an AI (A: …artificial intelligence…) algorithm -- a neural network -- generates a video that never happened(A: …it never happened…) by either swapping one face for another or by allowing someone's motions and voice to be mapped onto another person.

"It's a video that has been created by essentially feeding in a computer algorithm lots of images of a person," said Andy Grotto, a national security expert and professor at Stanford University.

"It could be video, it could even be audio, and you feed it enough of that content and over time the algorithm learns how to mimic that content."

The technology that powers deepfakes is only growing more sophisticated.

(A: They give you examples of where it is now.)

Initially, the videos weren't perfect. Early deepfake videos looked obviously doctored. But BuzzFeed produced a frighteningly realistic example last year by having actor and director Jordan Peele make a PSA about deepfakes as former U.S. president Barrack Obama.

It goes on and on and on. To show you this is how they're going to give you the fake trials that are going to come down the road when, did you say something!? Like it was in 1984 where you're pulled into the Ministry of Truth, you know, and the Ministry of Love will ask you all the questions as they torture you. We're here, folks! And then they'll bring out the deepfake's and say, this is a video of you saying that I've been here or saying that or whatever. And the public will go along with it because the authorities said it, the authorities said it. Quite something. Quite easy, isn't it?

To do with eugenics too, now, don't think that China, as I said before, does things by itself. It was created by the West, the same group that runs and owns the West now, the same uniform system. And really, China is their shining example of the perfectly ordered socialist system, run scientifically. The West helped them and set it all up and given the expertise and the money. We even put our factories over there. We paid for our factories to be uprooted, dismantled and put over there under the free trade agreement. And we lost all the jobs at home. Nobody was given a vote on that. Just these technocrats, again, and your governments all signed on to it and that's it. They never ask your opinion for anything that matters, folks. Never will be either.

So…

Chinese government may have funded disgraced scientist He Jiankui to create the world's first gene-edited babies, report claims

dailymail.co.uk / 26 Feb 2019

Documents seen by medical news site STAT suggest that Chinese scientist He Jiankui may have received money from three separate government institutions in China.

Now, China's not the only country, every country's been doing this gene editing. India's been doing it for quite, quite some time actually and they've had documentaries on the TV years ago on that, where they actually talk to some people who had their babies designed basically, genes removed and other ones replaced, etc., for height, for looks, etc. It's odd too, the different cultures of what they go for first, whether it's high, high, high intellect or looks, etc., or height, you know. It's quite interesting to see what they go for. But every country's been doing this. And every nation, because they had articles years ago in all the top magazines and newspapers about the British, and then the US military especially, making the new robotic type soldiers, that we basically cloned. So, don't think that by some silly little bit of paper that they've all signed that they don't do it. Of course they do it. The same with biological warfare, it never stopped with all the treaties. Never did. So, you can't blame China. And it's interesting, though, that they put it across there, making you, getting used to the idea that this is coming. Just like I've said before, like the movie Gattaca with the expertly run society of course.

You'll find the trained front people, and they really do, they pick them as children and train them for positions of leadership. You'll find the big NGOs have ads about that and they'll say in they're 'about' thing and 'what they're up to' and so on, they tell you they'll pick youngsters with the aptitudes and train them for positions of power and leadership. They all do that. So, so much for spontaneous people appearing, who just appear out of nowhere. No, these people are all trained and selected. And they are devoted, believe you me, to the agenda because that's all that's been drummed into them their whole lives long. And they're well rewarded for it, as they mislead you and lead you up the garden path. All of them do that. So, you don't have a free society. You never get anybody who's genuine who's going to talk for you. It ain't going to happen, folks. No way.

I mentioned last week too about Ocasio-Cortez, the so-called Democrat who came out as they put her up to be a star, the star machinery again, a little nobody, who, oh, is it legitimate it's for young people to ask if it's okay to have children, you see.

Ocasio-Cortez Poses 'Legitimate' Question: 'Is It Okay to Still Have Children?' - freebeacon.com / 25 Feb 2019

Because you see, don't forget that they floated the idea too in all their socialistic meetings for well over 150 years, about limiting the people having children. And using the China model. But also, before even the China model came along in fact, when they were still not communists, they were pushing the same idea in the late 1800s in Britain and into the early 1900s George Bernard Shaw said the same thing, he was all for it. He says, we'll decide if you can have children or not, according to your IQ level, etc. That's all part of it, folks.

Breed out all the bad folk, all the general public, you see, the commoners. Because they're awfully snobbish, believe you me. The Democrats, liberalsand conservatives, they're awfully snobbish at the very, very top. They all are. Because they all belong to the same clique. They don't send their children to ordinary schools either, folks. It doesn't matter if they pretend to speak for the working classes. It's like Britain, none of them, none of the ones that are pushing and telling you that the education system is fantastic in ordinary schools in Britain, none of them send their children to them. All the politicians for Labour I think are at all the best private schools. Because [Alan chuckles.] you know, they're going to make sure their children are going to be the winners. Of course they are. The big agenda's on the go. But they give you the leaders. They certainly do.

When I was going through the eugenics movement, about Julian Huxley for instance, a big player in it, a big player. Incredible, the man was an incredible… He voiced everything I'm saying here, openly in his big speeches. Eventually he was up there with Planned Parenthood of course and he was a member of UNESCO, the head of it for a while, to create a common culture by indoctrination of children across the world. That's how you do it. You're given the topics, you brainwash it into them, oh, the sky is falling, too many people, oh sustainability, yada, yada, yada, going way back to the early 1900s, folks. It's nothing new.

And at the same time, about 1950 and so on, they set up all the ecological organizations, as far back, and at the same time that Julian Huxley, he was involved in them all. That's the one that eventually uses the big stick, oh we're destroying the world, Gaia will kick back at you and it would just shake itself, and you'll all die because you've mistreated her, you see. They've tried everything they can. So, sustainability and the sky is falling is the one they chose and they've stuck to. Now it's their religious mantra. Basically, they've trained a generation of children to quote the mantra. What was it that Lenin said? We shall win by slogans. Slogans about it all the time. Look at these rallies, dit-dit-dit, dit-dit-dit, their slogans, that's what they, you know, it's literally a three worded slogan, it's repeated over, dit-dit-dit, dit-dit-dit. Yep. Just like Orwell said, four legs good, two legs bad. M-hm. Mind you, today I guess you can have as many legs as you want, it's your choice to do so.

But it says here…

Ecological Society of America
en.wikipedia.org

(A: It really started in Britain too, you see. They've got a branch in every country now.)

The Ecological Society of America (ESA) is a professional organization of ecological scientists. Based in the United States and founded in 1915, ESA publications include peer-reviewed journals, newsletters, fact sheets, and teaching resources. It holds an annual meeting at different locations in the USA and Canada. In addition to its publications and annual meeting, ESA is engaged in public policy, (A: Do you vote for them? No, you don't. Of course not.) science, education and diversity issues. (A: Isn't that interesting?)

ESA's 10,000 members are researchers, educators, natural resource managers, and students in over 90 countries. Members work on a wide range of topics, from agroecology (A: That's all your food supply.) to marine diversity and explore the relationships between organisms and their past, present, and future environments. (A: You have to understand what they mean by organisms and their past, present and future environments. That's a topic in itself, that they're all brainwashed into, all these organizations are. And eugenics too.) The Society has over 20 topical sections and seven regional chapters.

That's quite interesting, as I say, the people who are all members of it, and at the beginning, etc. You'll find in the branches in Britain for these organizations, they shared the same offices in London at one point for most of them. You find that Julian Huxley was up there as members of them, of the boards actually. It's quite fascinating how sustainability, eugenics, etc. are all tied together, in this one organization's mindset, that rules the world and where they're going with it all too. You'll find…

The Rockefeller Foundation's Molecular Vision of Life - How the Aims of Eugenics, Social Control, and Human Engineering Shaped Molecular Biology and 20th Century Science
A Review of Lily E. Kay's The Molecular Vision of Life: Caltech, The Rockefeller Foundation, and the Rise of the New Biology (Oxford University Press, 1993)
cholesterol-and-health.com / 16 Jan 2009

Getting back to this molecular vision of life, how the aims of eugenics social control and human engineering shaped molecular biology in 20th century science. It's interesting. But you have to understand what they're talking about, the molecular vision of life, and how it all ties in with eugenics. And how the Rockefellers literally funded it all and put it through Caltech. It says, the rise of the new biology, of how you would now look at humans and everything else and your place in the world. It's like a species, like any bacterium in a sense, and how you can manipulate it all. Control, that was function of it, of training so the people would believe it all, and it would give them social control and they can go into human engineering by teaching them a kind of slanted version and a way to look at society and people as molecular constructs rather than actual complete human beings. It's quite fascinating to me anyway. It might bore you, but it's fascinating to me.

And Julian Huxley, it's astonishing all the things he's been involved in. Absolutely.

‘Julian Huxley and the Continuity of Eugenics in Twentieth-century Britain’
ncbi.nlm.nih.gov

(A: Very good article.)

The life and ideas of Julian Sorrell Huxley (1887-1975) represent not only considerable contributions to evolutionary theory but also to eugenic thought and social planning. (A: I haven’t mentioned anything about, yeah, if he was elected to anything by the public.) Huxley’s career history was complex and disjointed making him an international and very much a public figure. (A: They made a star of him too. The same thing, standard machinery.) This paper sees Huxley’s peripatetic career as linked to ideological agendas, not least of “a new world order”. The problems addressed here are, first, the extent of continuities in eugenic commitments from his interwar views and, second, to determine the contours of Huxley’s post-Second World War eugenic thinking. Huxley emerges as a crucial bridging figure from what has been referred to as “old eugenics”. . .

(A: …up to Germany and Nazis using it in World War II, and they copied it all from the West by the way, and especially from America. [Alan chuckles.] They got slammed for that. So Julian Huxley reinvented it, you see. Under different terminology he kept it alive and well. And was all for the phasing out, he wanted to breed only the well-to-do upper-middle-class types, and to gradually cull off basically in one way or another all the rest of the public that they didn’t need anymore. This guy, his testbed was the British public. Don’t think these people ever stand for you and see and relate to you as their own. They do NOT do that. Never have done that, folks. Never have. Never have. But it’s quite an interesting little article, and of course they don’t condemn the guy either. If anything, they make excuses for him. But it’s interesting to see them, they go into the Galton Club formed at the college, you know, at Oxford.)

. . . a Galton Club was formed at the College, and further debates took place at the Oxford Union. From 1919 until 1925 Huxley was Fellow at New College, and the population geneticist J.B.S. Haldane (Huxley’s former “fag” (A: …they call it…) at Eton) was Fellow from 1919 until 1922. Huxley’s students included the cytologist and contraception pioneer J.R. Baker who was undergraduate at New College from 1919-22, and the population geneticist E.B. (“Henry”) Ford. These bio-social theorists represented a political spectrum from Haldane on the extreme left to Ford and (a later Oxford recruit) the botanist Darlington on the extreme right: they all continued to exert influence on questions of biology and society on into the 1960s. (A: Actually, beyond that too.)

So these movements with their philosophies are a very old agenda, folks, very old agenda. And it’s still going on today. Bertrand Russell of course was a good friend of them all and worked with them too. He was quite blatant about them, by the use of diet, injections and injunctions we can reduce the population. Russell also said you could really dumb the people down when you’re doing all that too. He was quite, quite blatant about it, through the same kind of methods as well apart from just bumping them off. It’s really fascinating to see different characters involved in this and their complete connection. How they even use by the way, and Julian Huxley did it too, they come in as supposed zoologist. They start talking about wildlife to get all the young children on board and do all the talks on wildlife and their little furry animals and stuff. And you don’t realize you’re getting brainwashed as a child into, well, I guess that applies to people too, you know, if there’s too many you must cull them off. Every country’s been given their favorite zoologist who all talk about the same things, and too many of this population and too many of that, and then eventually as they get older, they start talking about too many of you. [Alan chuckles.] There you go.

Political and Economic Planning
en.wikipedia.org

(A: There’s another one, a PEP group as well, to do with eugenics in Britain that Julian Huxley was involved in. All the top ones were too.)

Political and Economic Planning (PEP) was a British policy think tank, formed in 1931 in response to Max Nicholson's article A National Plan for Britain (A: …national plan for Britain… eugenics, right…) published in February of that year in Gerald Barry's magazine The Week-End Review.

The original members included (A: This is a private organization, again, right, that belong to all the other top organizations…) Nicholson and Barry, the zoologist Julian Huxley, the agronomist Leonard Elmhirst, the financier Basil Phillott Blackett, the civil servants Dennis Routh and Sir Henry Bunbury, the research chemist Michael Zvegintzov, and Israel Sieff, a director of Marks & Spencer. Sieff was Chairman in the 1930s, followed by Elmhirst in 1939 and by Nicholson in 1953. It was a non-governmental planning organisation financed by corporations. (A: …to do with eugenics on the general public, folks, and too many of them, etc.)

This prolific organisation was influential in the formation of (A: Guess what?...) The National Health Service, . . .

(A: So, they helped draft up stuff long before came in, right. But remember, the National Health Service, to the general public, now it's just like today with all the cheaper goods from China, oh wow, it's great, you know. What's the real motive of it all? I've already read it to you. I don't want to overwhelm you with, oh, it's fantastic… as they start taking rights away from you. Oh well, we've still got all this free stuff and cheap stuff and you know... There's always an, oh well, so what. And as I say, with National Health Service, don't forget the agenda of the eugenicists was to bring down the population. [Alan laughing.] By all means possible. And what's their favorite technique? Even Ronald Reagan talked about it, the most fearful thing the citizens can hear is from officials coming to the door saying, we're from the government and we're here to help you. Because you'd better be on guard.)

(A: The National Health Service, inoculations, and in no time at all, within a span of maybe, you know, less, under 20 years, they were doing abortions, the National Health Service in Britain. So again, eugenics, depopulate, etc., yada, yada, ya. And once you have a National Health Service then you simply have your abortion days. And they do have abortion days, every hospital over in Britain has them, that's all they do, you know. And they couldn't do that without having a National Health Service. And now with the National Health Service they don't have the money, they've got lots to do with all kinds of strange things, the National Health Service, and strange operations and stuff, but for really essential things they claim that they're broke.)

(A: So you've got to say, well why isn't it doing the main things it was really, that you thought it was designed to do in the first place? Well, maybe you thought it was designed for something else in the first place. They always give you candy to begin with, right? And then they substitute the candy for something else as time goes on.)

. . . War II and post-war planning, and the development of the African colonies.

(A: …as well. They were heavily involved in programs for the African colonies.)

After the war it shared the offices of (A: …listen…) The Nature Conservancy in Belgrave Square, London, . . .

(A: Right. So here is the Eugenics Society and National Political and Economic Planning committee, all private, all private NGOs, hm, that formed for themselves, on behalf of the real rulers of the world of course, with financiers and everything there and bankers and everything there, right, and it says here…)

This prolific organisation was influential in the formation of The National Health Service, War II and post-war planning, and the development of the African colonies. After the war it shared the offices of The Nature Conservancy in Belgrave Square, London, producing reports such as Opportunities in Industry (1957) and Advisory Committees in British Government (1960)

(A: So here again, advisory committees, you see. What do you think the Council on Foreign Relations is? It says on their website, advisory committee, they advise governments. Well, do you elect them to advise government? No, you don't. No.)

In 1978 PEP merged with the Centre for the Study of Social Policy (CSSP), (A: You see. Now, social policy covers everything, folks.) And became the Policy Studies Institute (PSI). (A: Isn't that is interesting, 'eh?)

(A: …advise governments on social policy. You vote them in? No. Nope. Not at all.)

(A: But it’s got, as I say, a research chemist. Interesting, a chemist, hey, was on the panel of the first board. Civil servants…)

The original members included Nicholson and Barry, the zoologist Julian Huxley, the agronomist Leonard Elmhirst, the financier Basil Phillott Blackett, the civil servants Dennis Routh and Sir Henry Bunbury, the research chemist Michael Zvegintzov, and Israel Sieff, a director of Marks & Spencer.

(A: The zoologists were members of it too. Again, eugenics, you see. They used animal behavior, but really to apply to humans, study them. Because humans, they say, are animals, you see.)

Anyways, Julian Huxley, remember, who said himself that their job at UNESCO, he said in a speech, was to knock man off his stool, you know, his high stool as the supreme being on the planet, and they would train the public that you’re just another creature, and maybe an inferior creature. You see what I’m saying? This was the whole agenda here. And when you look at all these characters that are into it, with ecology, sustainability, too many of you the wrong kind of people etc. etc… And here’s what the Nature Conservancy, you see, that they are allied with, right…

The Nature Conservancy
en.wikipedia.org

The Nature Conservancy (TNC) is a charitable environmental organization, headquartered (A: …for the US…) in Arlington, Virginia, United States.

(A: Is there anything else in Arlington, Virginia, folks? Do you think? M-hm. A massive charitable environmental organization… Hm…)

Its mission is to "conserve the lands and waters on which all life depends." (A: Interesting, ‘eh.) The Conservancy pursues non confrontational, pragmatic solutions (A: They mean, brainwashing the children…) to conservation's challenges working with partners including indigenous communities, businesses, governments, multilateral institutions, and other non-profits.

(A: Well, did you get a vote on that? Oh, no. It’s interesting to even just read that kind of stuff here…)

The Nature Conservancy now impacts conservation in 72 countries, including all 50 states of the United States.

(A: Most of the folk wouldn’t even know that themselves.)

The Conservancy has over one million members, and has protected more than 119,000,000 acres (48,000,000 ha) of land and thousands of miles of rivers worldwide. The Nature Conservancy also operates more than 100 marine conservation projects globally. The organization's assets total $6.71 billion as of 2015. The Nature Conservancy is the largest environmental nonprofit by assets and by revenue in the Americas.

Interesting, ‘eh. And they’re into landgrab’s all over the place too under the guise of conservation. I’ve given the talks about the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Philip, oh, he’s the head of so many organizations in the past. He’s given profound statements, right in your, I mean, there’s nothing hidden about this guy, he runs all these different world wildlife funds and all the rest of it, too many people, when there’s too many animals you have to cull them all off, and really, you have to look at people much the same way, etc. etc. etc. One of his main speeches in Switzerland he talked like that, in fact, quite openly about it. So, all these conservation things are really very false. They have a mission, and so much of the best farming territory across Africa and so on, belong to the world wildlife fund and all the other organizations he’s head of. It’s the best farming areas. They can’t allow folk in to farm. It’ll be the same elsewhere too, folks. Interesting, ‘eh.? Also I’ll put up…

Opening remarks at the World Government Summit
António Guterres

World GovernmentSummit. That's the guy they put in charge of, I think it was the United Nations eventually. And they have the same speeches too when they go to the World Economic Forum.

Again, getting back to Facebook, how they're basically going to give you no privacy.

Facebook Reveals Its Privacy-Focused Vision For Social Networking
Facebook.com

(A: …privacy focused vision, which you can reverse that if you want. But if you never learn folks, it's your own fault. Hm?)

And confirms that What's App and Messenger and Insta Gram messaging will be merged on a single platform.

Well, there you go. Do you really think they're different private organizations out there running it all? It's one massive organization with many faces, with the Internet. Hhhhh.

And as you watch, now, I sometimes read a story just to give you a little start and shock into life, 'eh.

Real-life child-snatcher reveals how she is paid £15 per abduction by Philippine gangs who set her a quota of two a week and sell them to paedophiles with prices determined by their looks
dailymail.co.uk / 28 Feb 2019

(A: This is one person who was caught, right, in the Philippines. £15 per abduction, that's a lot of money for the Philippines.)

A female kidnapper has revealed sickening details of how gangs abduct children in the Philippines to sell to foreign paedophiles - with bonuses for how pretty they are.

Lilibeth Bustamante was caught trying to walk away with a ten-year-old girl in Paranaque City on February 20.

She was playing in front of her house when Bustamante took her by the arm and told her to come with her to the store, but a neighbour intervened when he noticed the girl asking for help.

(A: So, she was caught and spilled the beans…)

Lilibeth Bustamante was caught attempting to abduct a 10-year-old girl in Paranaque City on February 20 and later told police horrifying details of the criminal gangs who sell children into sex slavery.

Now, this will be across the world too. I'll bet you. And they put them into all these different movies, the sex movies. And there will be a waiting list of these pervs, I'm sure, wanting to get first go at these children. And you think you can let these children live, that can recognize people, folks? You'd better understand what's happening in the world here. And no one cares because you've been taught, you've been taught that life is cheap by those who rule you. They've trained you step-by-step, like Huxley saying, knocking you off your pedestal. That's already done. And people have been taught they're, oh, so what, you know.

And your daily fare is getting towards pedophilia if you watch the television and the stuff they're pushing on it. And by the way, eventually, I've said before, that eventually the agenda is to knock the pillars down, step-by-step. The next step is for, they call it intergenerational sex. There will be no such term as pedophilia. And there will be no crime either, as they normalize it. And they normalize it when society, the society is no longer a strong society with strong cultural morals. That's when they do it. And we're already there.

Look what the folk are watching. They’re stuck on, they’re addicted to, basically, pornography. Even the stuff they show on mainstream television as entertainment is just the same kind of stuff. Even in the ads. So articles like this should, at one time you would have mass movements forming to stop this kind of thing happening. Not anymore. Because there’s no opposition. And that’s where you’ve been brought to step-by-step.

Now, sorry to prattle on too. As I say, haven’t had time to work out anything in any way at all. I generally try to talk from the top of my head which is what I’m doing tonight. I hope you understand that everything you’ve been trained to believe is, as it is, is completely different. They have different agendas. That’s why George Orwell showed you what the Ministry of Love was. It’s the opposite. And the Ministry of Truth, and all the other ministries, are the opposites, folks. But they trained you to believe, to believe in the name itself. Oh, that’s wonderful, that’s wonderful, they’re here to take care of us. M-hm.

Well, for myself, I’d better get out and do some shoveling shortly, I’m Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, and it’s good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Mar. 17, 2019 (#1712)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 17, 2019. The weather up where I am is still basically winter. Well, it's not basic, it IS winter. [Alan laughing.] And it's to snow again on and off for the next few days in fact. I had an actual partial thaw, not long but a very short one, a few days ago there. At least it got some of the snow off the roof which certainly does help. But it's going to snow, as I say, on and off for the next few days. One day hopefully I'll wake up and it will be in the permanent thaw. I just have to hang on and hope for it… because everything else is hanging on and hoping for it too, including the animals out there. It's pretty bad. Long, long winter. Snow from September right to the present time. And it hasn't disappeared, it's just accumulated more and more and more. And if this does have a fast thaw it will be murder because with so much snow around there will be floods everywhere, all the side roads and country roads, etc. because there's so much deep, deep snow everywhere. Astonishing.

But that's what you get in times of global warming, you see, longer and longer winters apparently. And in everything that happens, actually, it doesn't matter what it is, it's put down to global warming. Because that's the mantra for the new religion, to bring humanity together across the world in a kind of war situation. We fight, we fight the big thing, the threat from out there, that big threat, you see, that they talked about so many times from different prime ministers of Canada back in the 50s and 60s up to the present time. That's what they said, they'd have to have an enemy to unite the planet, you see. What could it be? They thought of all weird things, like, oh, aliens or you name it. They've had all the movies, it's in the movies too, you know, oh, asteroids, we'd all come together and blow them out of the universe, etc. etc.

But then they settled on climate change. First of all, of course, they were going to have an Ice Age, back in the 1960s, that was the mantra then from all the scientific puppets, that are well, well padded puppets, mind you. They were prattling on about the coming Ice Age, we'd all freeze to death for goodness sake. Everybody started buying heavy clothing, you know. But it didn't happen. Instead, the weather went the other way a little bit. So they settled on global warming. Now, global warming's is actually easier to cause if they want to cause it. You can get man-made global warming by the very methods that they've said they'd spray the skies to make it happen. [Alan laughing.]

When you look back at all the old scientific studies, they had all kinds of particulates they could spray in the sky. Even, literally, make it cause sunlight that would pass between them, hit the earth and go back up, and they could bounce back down again off the particles. So they thought about everything, really. They can make the appearance of anything happen. And the heavy spraying of course, geo-engineering, so many studies, so many patents over the years. But so many university articles churned out too by participants, because a lot of universities get paid to do all these different studies. In fact, most folk make any decent money at all today in the new type of, the new perfect Soviet/Capitalist system, it really is off the public trough, isn't it. That's where the money is. We pay for everything. We pay for private businesses, big corporations that is, not small business but big corporations, we pay for their setups, etc., big factories and all that. It's called public-private partnerships. The private corporations own the big businesses once we've paid and built them all for them, all their infrastructure. So it's quite a system we live in, really.

It's so amazing, really, that, I guess it's true. I mean, you've got to congratulate people who noticed that the right kind of terminology and scientific technique applied to particular areas, and mind you, it's not that hard if you've got total command of all media, and education, you can make the children believe anything, and they'll grow up believing it. So, why wouldn't they want to believe, who would really think that there are people creating this big massive religion, taking years in the making, in order to control the whole population of the planet and bring it down and so on? Why would you think that?

But then again, it's all out there that that's what they thought up. That is what they thought up, the whole idea, there's too many people --- they've got all these studies, oh, each person born will consume so much of this and so much of that of the earth's resources in the time that they live, and even to keep warm and so on, all this energy. They've got all these estimates and statistics thrown at you to try and say, well, that yeah, I guess… I guess we should all just commit suicide, 'eh.

You know, I watched one of these terrible end-of-the-world scenario movies about a comet or something. No, it was a meteor. There's a whole bunch of them over the years, they keep churning them out, the same story, really. But they bring in situation ethics with them too. You don't realize you're getting programmed all the time. Situation ethics. This particular one, the Deep Impact one, maybe that was the name of it, I don't know. Again, they get well-known actors in it, number one. Put a big budget into it, number two. They have the scientists warning everybody on what we have to do yada, yada, ya. And all the authorities go into action. Everybody must believe that the world's going to end. But at the end they get a kind of lotto for the general population. They've already picked, you know, about a few thousand of the scientific types that, the really educated types they'll need to run a survival system underground, on their base underground. And a lotto for the ones that are left. And of course, anybody over 50, in the movie version, you'll be out of the picture anyway unless you were a scientist and important. But anybody over 50, or anybody really with medical illnesses of any kind, well, you would be expendable. You would have to go up there and get a bottle of Scotch and get sozzled as it comes in and that was it.

But that's the situation ethics and you're being trained all the time through entertainment. And your entertainment is never static in propagandizing different agendas that you're living through today. In fact, you've probably, if you're about 30 you've had a real heavy indoctrination from day one in the classroom. You've got to remember how many politicians over the last 50 years or more came up with the same statements about threats from outside and we'd all come together and as a unitary planet basically to fight some enemy, a common enemy. And then you find Ronald Reagan too took up the cry of, oh if there was a threat from outer space, from out there, we'd all have to come together and use our resources and our initiative and our intelligence, and be basically one to fight it off. And then you'd get peace too, of course.

What they're literally talking about is, how do you get the public to give up all their rights and freedoms in a wartime situation, because in war you accept it readily you're going to get protected, and you're all at risk so leave it to experts to rule it all, and it's the military at that time, to run the system while you go through this war. That's what they do. Henry Kissinger said the same thing too. That if some threat hit, say, California, then the people would welcome UN troops in for food, etc., to keep the peace and to manage them in a big disaster, whatever it happened to be. He said, and the people would give up all their rights and freedoms because of fear, fear of starvation or whatever else that they needed at the time. He gave that speech as well. So it's well-known from those that sit up at the planning stages of war strategy about what can be used to get the public together, for other agendas, for the real agenda.

The real agenda is, and Kissinger was a part of that too, was overpopulation. You go way back you find the same thing with the two Huxley's, the brothers. And even before them you had their granddad Thomas Huxley, you know. He really was Darwin's bulldog as they call it. You'll find that they were always prattling on about overpopulation of the wrong people. Right down to way, way back even further from the days of Thomas Malthus. They had taken the idea from another philosopher actually. And not an economist, a philosopher. Because the idea has always been there.

You've got to understand history. History has horror shows if you really open the old books. And they really are real books, there are real archives that certain professors will admit to. Not everyone gets access to them. In the Middle Ages, a natural thing that they did was to occasionally, if they felt there were too many people, or if they heard… Because you always have what they call in Britain, or Scotland, a clipe, you get a clipe. A clipe is somebody that will be all pally with you, lives amongst you, you think it's one of you, and they go off to the boss, the boss man, the Baron whoever it happens to be and says, the people are getting restless, they claim there's not enough food being left for them, you've taken all the food off of them that they grow, they're getting restless. So there's always, when it gets to a particular number of peasantry they might not control, and they had advisers, good advisors, just like they always do, in all ages, they would decide to basically starve certain folk off. Or if the plague was coming in, they'd simply burn down their houses, the winter would come and they'd freeze to death, they'd have no food and they'd starve. That's how they'd reduce populations and they talked about it quite candidly.

This idea of the nice society is a pretty recent figment of the imagination put up on the public. Again, through the new education and the new propaganda that uses electronics, radio, television to the present day, all different gadgets and gimmicks. But the fact is, before hand it wasn't quite as easy to control the public. I've given talks before on how even London had thousands of spies all through it in, say, the 19th century for instance, probably into the 20th century, but literally on a contract basis, who lived amongst the people, walked amongst them, lived on different streets. They put in reports every so often and the reports went up and up and up to those who manage the big, big city and the government. They would find out who, all different factions that were complaining about different things, so they could stave them off and stop it from happening basically.

Today of course we're all monitored. It's much easier. But we're monitored for our safety, it's called terrorism, you see. And so, with anybody being a potential terrorist, you could be one tomorrow, you could wake up as one! Like a disease, you know. You know, you might wake up tonight as a vampire, you see. But that's what they've sold you as the reason for giving up all your rights and freedoms. It's astonishing, it can take centuries and centuries of combative roles, and wars, and mass slaughters of the peasantry, who rise again hopefully in another age to demand their rights again. It took forever to get these rights of privacy. And just for the few free, oh, if you take two of these and one of that and let us snoop into this and that, then you know, it'll be cheaper, etc. And away they go. That's all they should've done. You wouldn't have needed all the spies, you know. You know, fill out what you're doing this week on this bit of paper and hand it to the boss man.

It's quite astonishing, isn't it, how conned we are. But you see, society runs on con-ology, the art of conning people. And that's a really, really high, high degree if you get one, in conology. Believe you me, the higher laws of good conmen out there, and women… But the guys are a bit more practiced at it, you see. Children are good at it, you know. Children are natural good con people. Ah, did you spill that milk on the table? No, I didn't. You know, as they stand there with the glass there, it's right in front of them and it's all over the place. Ah, he did it or whatever, or the puppy did it, you know. But it's the same thing as Eve, you know, the devil made her do it. The same thing.

So your owners, you see, see you as a wild beast and so they've got to train you… train you to be subservient. And to be subservient you must have something in common with other people. And what you have is survival, you like to survive, it's quite nice actually. And if you can survive and eat, and keep warm in cold climates and things, well, it's pleasant to survive. You can go through hard times too but some days are quite nice and that's really how it is, you see. So they go through all this trouble to convince us that we are the problem. So the Club of Rome, just like the Prime Minister's and all the rest of them before going way back to Malthus says, there really is too much of you, you see, the general peasantry. You might think you're middle-class at the bottom, but you're not. You're really, Julian Huxley was quite adamant about the people who thought they would get in to be saved and to procreate their own genes in the future. He says, how mistaken they will be. [Alan laughing.] There you go. So if you help them, yeah, you might get financially, be better off at the moment. But eventually it will hit you too.

So depopulation was always a problem, going all the way back to the Middle Ages and before. It was quite natural at times too for nobility to get a group together and just go slaughtering pleasantry. There were no laws against it, you see. Petitions could be handed into kings and queens and all that. And sometimes when they handed, like it happened in [Alan chuckles.] England once, and the people, the peasants handed a petition into the King. And he rode out and had a little chat with them, then he rode back in again. Then once they split up to go their different ways, back where they came from in England, they were divided, you see, they sent out the Army and they slaughtered them. So just to teach them all, because obviously if the King says, oh, you're quite right, you're quite right, you really do need a bit of bread extra, maybe a loaf amongst the 10 of you once a week. And if you get that, you see, you might want more, 'eh? Well, where would that lead, 'eh! Where would… less profit for the King and all the futile overlords, etc. They can't have that! Can they?!

So anyway, that's really what's always been a problem with those who rule. It's to do with rulership. And don't ever think that you're living in a better time. You're better controlled today by the leadership that are scientifically trained in techniques, with a long, long study of techniques that use, as I say, incredibly well documented testing on society, and studying of society, in all kinds of societ-ological behavioral situations. It's so precise. Even more so now with instant studying, instant in real-time studying of, are you copying the meme and chatting on the Internet about blah blah blah blah? In real-time. They know exactly what works and what doesn't. And what will tweak you, get the emotions going. When the emotions get going you forget logic, you see. And then you're at their mercy.

So as I say, you know, that's what the Club of Rome said, and in a beautiful way. Rather than aliens and all that, they thought, what will humans believe? And I tell you, I tested it out myself on people. Even from one year to the next, just casual, you know, casual acquaintances and stuff. And you'll say, remember last summer or last June or July or whatever? And you know, people can't remember. Especially winters, they can't remember. Because with climate control, going from their house to their vehicle to wherever they work and then back again, they're seldom outside the vehicle in the cold. And as long as the infrastructure keeps plowing roads for snow and so on, then they won't take much notice of things. It's really astonishing how we adapt to artificial systems. And very quickly adapt. And you never think about it, most folk don't think about it.

So this is all well understood. So the Club of Rome came up with the idea, and in a beautiful dialectical approach as well, hey. So rather than get just an enemy from out there, because you have to fight something like an alien, there's so many old Sci-Fi's about it, aliens invading Earth, etc. Who would want to come here? Huh? 'Eh? So aliens invading Earth, and you get humanity all coming together to fight the aliens to save us all and we all become brothers and sisters. And it's all utopia, that terrible word utopia that always is a horror show in reality. And we become one. But mind you, they don't give you a sequel to show you how it all divides as soon as someone else takes your loaf of bread and runs away over there with it. But that's the idea behind it all.

So they hit upon the idea, the Club of Rome, that man would be the problem, no, the enemy out there. No, man is the actual enemy. Isn't that wonderful dialectic? That throws folk off… Oh, I didn't realize I was the enemy, oh my God, I didn't realize I was the bad person here. So really you end up fighting yourself. And so you pay taxes, and carbon taxes, and you'll do what you're told by the commissars, the climate czars, the new priesthood, you see. They'll reduce the population as well. You've already had children coming forth over the last few years asking to be sterilized to save the planet. That's their indoctrination at school, you see. And it can work, you can train them to do anything and believe anything with enough well placed propaganda under the guise of education or whatever you want to call it. So therefore, that's what they hit upon.

But isn't that wonderful? I mean, rather than having to fight that enemy, we're fighting ourselves. Isn't it wonderful? It's like a great… It really… You've got to hand it to them, 'eh? They know their stuff, don't they? Because the whole problem has always been, how do you get them to give up their rights and be managed? By science. That's what socialism is all about. A world run in the super Soviet system of scientists and professionals. And you'll do what you're told. You might not even get born. They might not need you to be born. In fact, they've said that too. The Georgia Guide Stones, oh, take the population way down, we don't need all these people. But isn't it wonderful that they get a good chunk of the population, living off our tax money, and training us, who pay them all, so's they can brain washed us and manage us like animals? Isn't that wonderful?

And we accept it. Without question. But mind you, if you get them young enough there's nothing they will not accept. Bertrand Russell said it, because he had an experimental school way, way, way back, to try different things on the children, you see. He wasn't the only one. Other countries did it too. It really, he said, you can make children believe that snow is black… and you can persuade them to do anything if you use the right technique. He's talking about technique, when you say that word technique, that's what they're talking about is techniques of manipulation, coercion and getting people to obey you basically, without realizing that they are being ordered. You see, you're the bad person, there's too many of you, do you really want to pass on your genes, hm?

And so they sterilize you in one way or another. Chemically… Russell talked about it, different ways to do it. You can put stuff in drinking water, as an example. Put it in the food, as an example. You can make it prevalent, like biphenyls, for instance, through everything, and you start getting folk to drink out of plastic all the time, etc. This has all been tested, they've known this years ago, what it does, before they gave it to you. But they'll always, again, when it comes to, oh, the crazy conspiracy theorists, 'eh. Hm. Well, I'll put some things up tonight about it. Hhhhhh. And again, the conspiracy… well that's old data, that's like five years old, for goodness sake, that's antique. You see what I'm saying?

The agenda has always been, how do you get them to give up their rights, be advised, not just advised but completely managed, and of course into, they bring a whole bunch of different so-called branches of the sociological sciences, like freedoms, positive freedom versus negative freedom. And they've got all kinds of, always a positive and negative, you see. Tony Blair was an advocate of this too, how can you manipulates the people, take away their freedoms, can you have a sort of a bit of both at same time? He went to see Isaiah Berlin about it who was his mentor and got advice from him on how to manage the public. Tony Blair was not, you've got to understand he was not what you call a British politician. If you have a British politician, standing for Britain, the people make the mistake of thinking he's one of you and he thinks about Britain the same way as you do, because he's living there, and nothing is further from the truth. Your whole concept of what countries are, and nations are in this day and age are completely, completely at odds as to what they really are. Your politics is a fiction. This word democracy, iy, at one time they would go through a pretense occasionally of listening to the public, once in a blue moon. They never do that, I haven't seen that done for about 50 years, at least. And the couple of times they give you a show of democracy, oh, we'll let you have a vote, they never fulfill it.

I can remember Toronto when they were doing the United Nations megacities, and that's what it is, is the United Nations policy for megacities and super cities. And way back, going, you know, way back, years and years ago in preparation for the smart city, you see, before you even heard the term smart city… Things are worked out 50, 60, 70 years ahead of time. Always. They talked about that, oh, there's a lot of little or small townships, it would be absorbed into this thing. And the local councils would be demolished as well. A lot of people didn't want it. Because if you don't have control over your little area you don't have any control at all. That's what government is really for. Your own little local government, your counsel looks after the problems in your area. And you can go right to them, they won't live far away. And they can come to you. But once you put them somewhere else then it becomes abstract, a very abstract thing altogether. And eventually you give up and you're governed from afar. As they centralized government, the old Marxist idea for total power.

You really are living in a fiction of what you think reality is and what governments are and all the rest of it. And governments never stand up, really, for the people. If they do be very wary. Because it's a con, it's for something else, you see. They'll take rights away from you, under very good guises. You can say, oh, I'm for that, I'll vote for that. Then away you go, and bang, you just lost a bunch of rights before you even thought about it really. It's like driving licenses, you know, they started off to be voluntary. The folk never thought of driving licenses. And then the next thing you know, it's insurance. With snob appeal. Do you have insurance? No, I don't bother with that. And they say, well I have it, I've got a quite good policy here actually. Well, you can afford that, can you? Oh yeah, yes. And that's how it's done. Hm.

Snob appeal works awfully well amongst the public. That's why they wear brand names, they advertise brand names on their clothing and their shoes and everything, 'eh. On everything. Here they are buying an overpriced piece of junk, whatever it happens to be, and they've got the brand of the thing to advertise for free. What a fool. What a fool! Honestly, you can make people do anything, 'eh. At one time they used a higher billboard guys, you'd see it in the old movies, sandwich boards, a sign on the front and the back to advertise a café or something. Now they do it voluntarily. They pay… you to do it now, I'll buy that. Never ever under estimate the stupidity of humans. Never do that. Never ever do that.

The proof is there at the beginning of every winter. Go to your favorite, if you got a café somewhere in the town or city, go there at about 6 PM, or maybe 5 PM as they're all coming from work and watch them try to stop on one of the first little snowfalls they've had. It could even be an inch or two of snow. You see them flying along and they can't stop and so on because they're going the same speed as they always go. The white stuff everywhere doesn't seem to compute. People are, we are, honestly, we're pretty awful.

That's domestication, you see. Look at all the stories about animals. And talking about sheep, hm, and how they just panic. They bolt in one direction like a school of fish. If there's one out in front they'll all follow it. But that's what happens, you see, animals that you're going to consume or whatever are bred to be domesticated, subservient basically, obedient. Their wildness, their natural instinct is taken out of them, bred out of them, actually, bred out of them. Now in this day and age, mind you, where they can literally induce sterilization through various means including chemical, you'd better be, start thinking about things, hey. Start thinking. Because maybe we're not as swift up at the top here as we like to think we are.

I've read the articles over the years, out loud in fact [Alan chuckles.], to do with even the UN studies they've done, the WHO and so on and different departments for education, talking about the IQ dropping points. Things like that don't happen by themselves. It doesn't happen by itself. It's an innate thing in you. But it's dropping. And we don't seem to worry about it. Maybe it's because it's gone past the point, their intellect can't grasp it, and we just give up and say, oh well, so what. So there you go, it does work, doesn't it?

Let's look back at one of these articles here to do with, something you're fed up of hearing because you've heard so many disputes about it and so many, oh, conspiracy nut cases, etc. etc. etc. on the studies done about it. And it's to do with fluoride, for instance, something that so many folk consume. And don't forget, go into the history of fluoride, and for instance in the Americas here there' a scientist, or a dentist who literally lauded it. I'm sure he was well padded and paid for it, to push it at one point. And he read all the studies. Later on he came out against it and said that he was deceived, etc. etc. But they went through the problems that it causes, not just in your bones. And it does cause problems in bones and your teeth, you'll see little specs where it will accumulate in the teeth, etc. You've got to go into history of it and the countries that dosed their public with it, or even countries they conquered and put it in the… because it made people more passive.   Think about it.

Now, let's do one of the many, many studies, that are professionally done, by scientists. This particular one is from India. It's from the Medical and Allied Sciences, is the name of the journal actually for India. His original title was…

Neurodegenerative Changes in Different Regions of Brain, Spinal Cord and Sciatic Nerve of Rats Treated with Sodium Fluoride njmsonline.org - National Journal of Medical and Allied Sciences
Posted by FS Editorial Manager | Dec 9, 2011 | Neurodevelopmental Disorders

(Alan: It's got the participants here and they were from…)

Department of Zoology, University College of Sciences, Osmania University, Hyderabad 500 007, Andhra Pradesh, India.

(A: They go into the abstract here, and this is 2011 I think it was.)

Abstract

Fluoride is known to cross the blood-brain barrier and alter the structure and function of neural tissue.(A: And there's a reason you've got that blood-brain barrier, for many reasons, actually. So fluoride goes across it with no problems.) There are few authoritative reports on neurodegenerative changes in hippocampus, neocortex, cerebellum, spinal cord and sciatic nerve in fluoride intoxication. We report the alterations in the structure of neuronal tissue after chronic administration of sodium fluoride (for 60days) to rats.

(A: And they had their control groups, two groups, you see.)

Twelve male Wistar rats were divided equally into two groups: one group received 20 ppm of sodium fluoride (NaF) and the other group (which served as a control) received tap water for 60days.

(A: And this is what they found. You know, this is a properly… Don't forget, they dissected every single part, little tiny slices of the animal afterwards, as they do with people too by the way, for the folk who think it's just with animals. But they understand all this stuff. But anyway, yeah, they go through amazing tests of tissue tests and so on and chemical tests. Anyway, it says…)

The body weights and organic somatic index of brain in the sodium fluoride treated animals were significantly reduced, relative to the control group.

(A: So, actually, the organic, the brain and so on becomes lighter, hm.)

Tissue fluoride levels of hippocampus, neocortex, cerebellum, spinal cord and sciatic nerve, all increased significantly in fluoride treated rats. Electron microscopy of the hippocampus, neocortex, cerebellum, spinal cord and sciatic nerve showed neurodegenerative changes in the NaF treated group compared to controls. Axon deterioration, (A: That's your nerves, into your nerves and so on…) myelin sheath (A: That protects the actual little dendrons that come out of the nerve itself…) degeneration and dark cells with scanty cytoplasm were observed in spinal cord and sciatic nerve in the treated group. Other distinctive morphological alterations observed were: vacuolated swollen mitochondria in neocortex, hippocampus and cerebellum; myelinated fibers with breaks in continuity (A: You'll actually find these, you know, it's interesting too, you'll find a lot of this with the effects in the mitochondria, with multiple sclerosis for an example, it will harden too but these are actually, they're actually cracking in the sheath that protects things of the nerves.) (axon partly preserved and partly vacuolated) in hippocampus; myelin splitting and vacuolated schwann cell within the cerebellum and sciatic nerve respectively.

Anyway, this is quite, it's a good report, one of many, I'm sure. And there's no mystery in this, is what I'm saying. This is the stuff that's in your drinking water. To help you. Everything, you understand that this term to help you is used, it's a horror show. It's a horror, don't ever forget that. It's always used. Or, it's necessary to take your rights away, or it's necessary to do that to make your teeth better. Necessary. Necessity. That word. It's always used. It's necessary to take all your rights away from you and make you live in your overcrowded cities, because of global warming, yeah, and sustainability. It's necessary. It's necessary to sterilize you because there's too many of you.

If that was the problem, if that was the problem and there's too many of you – and your own populations are dropping like a stone, according to all the studies that they've done over the years and I've read out on the air in fact. If that's the case, why would you have mass migration from relatively large family type of societies and bring them in? Why would you be doing that? You see, when you see, when something doesn't make sense there's other reasons for all of this, you understand. All of it. All of it. And the people are left to blame each other, and different groups will blame each other because you've got the consequences of it all. But the ones at the top, obviously, have planned all this for reasons that you'll never figure out.

Because that's the real agenda here too, is, there's always a good reason then there's the real reason. You know, for the public they try to keep you as far away from the real reason as possible, that they really disguise it so well. But this is a good study for those who have a bit of patience. It's detailed in the proper scientific breakdown and examination of the test groups. And they're young too by the way, it's been important too to see the offspring and the like… Very like Soya. Remember the whole thing with soya on the rats and mice that were used in that and various guinea pigs, etc. that they use for it? That the first generation, their fertility dropped a fair bit. The children that were born to them were maybe half, by that time half of them could reproduce, the others couldn't. The third-generation are sterile. And that's what they force on the public, oh, it's healthy, it's healthy, soya, it's going to be a savior to the world. And they made a big, oh, it's so healthy too, it's so healthy for you. Millions and maybe by today there's been billions spent on promoting all that stuff.

So anyway, in this study here with the fluoride, they go into, all it just really is, you can actually put it together with people, about the problems with the mitochondria and so on…

… and cell shrinkage (A: …of the brain, etc.…) has been observed in renal cells (A: …in the kidney cells, 'eh…) of young pigs treated with fluoride.

(A: So pigs as well.)

The molecular basis of fluoride action is mainly concerned with cellular enzymes, especially antioxidant enzymes. High levels of fluoride in drinking water (112ppm) affect central nervous system directly without first causing the physical deformities of skeletal fluorosis.

(A: So there you go, hey. So before you see the signs of skeletal fluorosis, you'll find the central nervous system has got problems. It goes straight to that first before it affects anything else.)

Distinctive alterations in the brain have also been observed with the chronic administration of aluminium Fluoride (AlF3) and NaF9. Histological changes in the brain of young, fluoride-intoxicated rats have been reported by Shivarajashankara. (A: …the ones who studied it.) However most of the studies have so far been confined to the whole brain. This study reports the neural changes with respect to the different regions of the brain with emphasis on hippocampus, neocortex and cerebellum of the brain, spinal cord and sciatic nerve by using transmission electron microscope (TEM), in rats administered with 20 ppm NaF for 60 days.

So, yeah, they've used, it's really quite amazing, and right into the neurodegenerative changes and how they examined it and found it all and so on. Very well-done study. So there's no real, I mean, I'm not shocked by these findings because I've read them for, oh, many, many years. Not from conspiracy sites either but from various medical journals and scientific journals, who all know this, they know what I'm talking about here. It's really not new but it's good to see it reaffirmed by people who've still got the guts to publish it. If there's big agendas in the way of course, you're always going to find, [Alan chuckles.] opposition to try to silence it. That's the way it's done, isn't it? Isn't it, really.

There's another one, too, it was from India as well about the aluminum they're finding in the soil from the geo-engineering. If I can find that too I'll put that one up as well. A good interesting study. Again, it's not a makeshift thing, it's well done.

Aluminum poisoning of humanity and Earth's biota by clandestine geoengineeringactivity: implications for India - nuclearplanet.com

Of course, we know Monsanto came out with aluminum resistant seeds that can grow in heavily contaminated soil that's got aluminum in it. Everything's understood at the top what they're doing, and of course that's one of the main particulates in the geo-engineering spray is aluminum oxide. And you breathe it in too of course. And also, barium and various other, they're even testing out, I think it was sulfur particles and other things too mind you. Which are really nasty to be breathed in for any period of time at all.

Necessity. You see, you've got to save the planet, you've got to give up all your rights. Don't complain, it's necessity. And just take their word for it that the climate change is what they say it is. It's interesting. You understand, if you get a vehicle and it's a fairly new model of something, a motorbike or a car or whatever it happens to be, you'll start to see it, when you see the same model passing. Now, you could have been driving for years but you never saw, you never noticed that thing before, not until you get one yourself, a particular model yourself, and now you start noticing others. It's the same thing when it comes to climate, because you just accept things, it isn't until a big problem is made of it that you actually notice anything. So it can sound, oh my God, terrifying, hey, my God, I didn't realize it was going to rain today, hhhh, I didn't get my raincoat with me, oh, goodness me. And it's true.

So don't forget the articles I read years and years ago from all the top NGO groups that are financed to propagandize this into existence, to terrify us, actually saying in their own articles, the leaders and the CEOs of these groups and so on and government departments, that we always put out scary terrifying scenarios because the public won't take notice otherwise. You see? That's what you do. I'll put up…

SPICE - Stratospheric Particle Injection for Climate Engineering spice.ac.uk

The SPICE Project

(A: They've got different universities…)

. . . collaboration between the University of Bristol, the University of Cambridge, the University of Oxford and the University of Edinburgh which began in October 2010.

(A: That's what they use our tax money for as well, to brainwash us, you know. And the characters they use are departments now for, oh, it's, you know, ecological departments and so on because that's where the big money is going to be from the taxpayer. They talk about the project, what are the names of the project and how they're going to achieve the spice project. Well, what does it involve? It's got three parts that they break it down into. And geo-engineering and governance, you see, what is geo-engineering and how is it governed.)

What are the aims of the project?

What does the project involve?

We've broken the project into three main parts to explain what we're looking to do.

Geoengineering and governance

What is geoengineering and how is it goverened?

….right. Well, it's not by the public, that's for sure. We just breathe it in and do what we're told. Now, that's what they give you, isn't it? That's exactly what they give you. And another one too…

US5003186A - Stratospheric Welsbach seeding for reduction of global warming - patents.google.com

United States patent and it's got the number in it here now and all the rest of it. I think it's at 5,003,186. And that was from 1991, this US patent, this particular one. So there's, oh yeah, there's lots of it there. Because you're living, whenever you see something emerging, they've been planning it an awful long time ago actually. And here's an article to go with it.

Climate Geoengineering Governance
geoengineering-governance-research.org

Welcome to Climate Geoengineering Governance, a research project which aims to provide a timely basis for the governance of geoengineering through robust research on the ethical, legal, social and geopolitical implications of a range of geoengineering approaches.

(A: Well, there you go, 'eh. But is it Democratic, do you get any say in it? Nooo. And it's got all the different universities again here too…)

The Climate Geoengineering Governance (CGG) project is a collaboration between the Universities of Oxford and Sussex and University College London

Why won't the UK make the sun shine for the Olympics?
bbc.com / 18 July 2012

With the British weather threatening to put a dampener on the Olympic games, why doesn't the government just make the sun shine?

At the risk of sounding like a mad scientist (A: …blah, blah, blah…) unveiling a doomsday device, it can be done. In theory at least.

The Chinese government seeded clouds ahead of the 2008 Olympics opening ceremony to create a downpour elsewhere and keep the stadium dry.

(A: And they told you how they did it. It's old stuff actually. And they were using the old technique but it's still effective.)

It is also possible to "over nucleate" clouds with many particles so that they hold in their moisture until they have passed over the target area, experts say.

(A: So, you can carry it away as well. You can make it happen. You can disperse it if you want and it won't rain. Or you can move it to where you want it to rain. This is old stuff. It says…)

Cloud-seeding is used around the world to prevent fog at airports, stop hail damage in cities or to boost snowfall at ski resorts.

(A: And on and on it goes. This is important here too and it says…)

The UK has had a chequered history with the technique. Thirty-five deaths in the 1952 Lynmouth flood disaster were linked at the time to RAF rain-making experiments over southern England a few days earlier although nothing was proved.

Well, with Britain, [Alan chuckles.] whenever they do something, they never ever tell you the truth, they'll always deny it. But they were actually, it came out that they were doing the cloud seeding at the time to make it rain. Everything else they'd tested on the public was done clandestinely too, including the spraying by naval ships off the East Coast. The spray went across the coast and they monitored the particular nasty substance, that can be carcinogenic. And it was done with, again, with impunity. Again, nothing comes out of it except, oh well, they would never do anything to harm you, would they? Isn't it wonderful the way that they train us all?

And…

U.N. urged to freeze climate geo-engineering projects
reuters.com / 21 Oct 2010

The United Nations should impose a moratorium on "geo-engineering" projects such as artificial volcanoes and vast cloud-seeding schemes to fight climate change, green groups say, fearing they could harm nature and mankind.

The risks were too great because the impacts of manipulating nature on a vast scale were not fully known . . .

(A: They know, they know it's going to kill us all off. And they've been doing it. They know how many folk are coming down every year with terrible bronchial problems that often lead to death, and recurrent infections and so on from it. Because it makes the lining of your trachea and your bronchioles inflamed and bacteria sets in over and over. They know this. And that's acceptable, the death rate is acceptable to get the agenda through. Because after all, you see, if there's too many alive, they claim… Especially if they manage to breed, so they claim, as they flood the West with more and more and more people. Because there's no satisfying them obviously through logic. If people breed then there's going to be problems, they claim. That was the biggest problem that faced the world according to all the eugenicists including Julian Huxley, quite open about it. Anyway…)

Envoys from nearly 200 countries are gathered in Nagoya, Japan, to agree targets to fight the destruction of forests, rivers and coral reefs that provide resources and services central to livelihoods and economies.

But they said that, yeah, this stuff could have terrible effects on the public. They're actually more worried about what will happen on animal life… [Alan chuckles.] because they're greenies, hey. There you go. They don't really like humans too much. And…

Developing an International Framework for Geoengineering - cfr.org / 10 March 2010

International organizations involved in it, different universities, University of Maryland, Carnegie Mellon University, etc. etc. etc. All old stuff, but it's all still going on. There's just no end to it if you really care to look at it. And it's odd too, if you repeat the same stuff from their own sites you'll be called a conspiracy theorists. So it's all, as I say, that's the big, that's instead of the aliens invading the earth, this is, here's your enemy, the climate is fighting you and you're fighting the climate, so man is the problem. Isn't it beautiful? I mean, you've got to admit it, you've got a hand it to them, they understand psychology, 'eh, and how to put it across. It really is, you've got to admit it.

Mind you, with endless tax money, all these different organizations, the big foundation money too, and big paychecks for the CEOs of the NGOs, they actually have huge buildings some of them, these NGOs 'eh. We don't vote for any of them, but they decide policy for all of us. You see, that's how you're really governed. Folk can't get their head around that. You think you're voting and that's everything you have to do. But you don't get to vote for all these private organizations that really… So that's how you're really governed is through private organizations, that most folk are ignorant of in fact.

I'd like to just mention too something awfully important. And I've mentioned George Orwell many times. He's a bit of an enigma man. He went off to fight for socialism against what he saw as really the fascist system, and he was very passionate about it. In his era people had witnessed the massive marches to London, for people who just hand in big, big charts, for people who were protesting, hhumph, utter poverty before World War II started. The reason for it all was the massive taxation, in an empire system where only this strange city of London and may be a couple of hundred families seemed to profit from it all. Maybe it'll be a lot more than that, but not that much. People on the outskirts who help the Empire, they profit awfully well. But the vast majority of the public pay for it all. They pay for the wars, they pay for infrastructure across the planet in all the empirical countries, they pay for the railroads, they pay for the military. But they get nothing back from it except the bills. There you go, you know, that's the truth of it.

But that's what Orwell was really about too. And when he found out what real communism was, he says, it's nothing like what he thought, his idea of what socialism would be. So he became it's enemy very quickly. Anyway, he says…

George Orwell - The Freedom of the Press - Orwell's Proposed Preface to 'Animal Farm'
orwell.ru

(A: If you think, you see, it's not new, suppression and censorship is not new. It says…)

This book was first thought of, (A: …the actual book Animal Farm.) so far as the central idea goes, in 1937, but was not written down until about the end of 1943. By the time when it came to be written it was obvious that there would be great difficulty in getting it published (in spite of the present book shortage which ensures that anything describable as a book will 'sell'), and in the event it was refused by four publishers. Only one of these had any ideological motive. Two had been publishing anti-Russian books for years, and the other had no noticeable political colour. One publisher actually started by accepting the book, but after making the preliminary arrangements he decided to consult the Ministry of Information, (A: The Ministry of Information is real, we all have Departments of Information, certainly today. Because we're under this strange terrorist thing, the terrorist have just spontaneously come out of nowhere and so we all are under your corporate type management, you see. Anyway, getting back to the article…) who appear to have warned him, or at any rate strongly advised him, against publishing it. Here is an extract from his letter:

(A: Anyway, this is what the publisher got I guess…)

I mentioned the reaction I had had from an important official in the Ministry of Information with regard to Animal Farm. I must confess that this expression of opinion has given me seriously to think... I can see now that it might be regarded as something which it was highly ill-advised to publish at the present time. If the fable were addressed generally to dictators and dictatorships at large then publication would be all right, but the fable does follow, as I see now, so completely the progress of the Russian Soviets and their two dictators, that it can apply only to Russia,

(A: So that's why they wouldn't, didn't want to publish it. The same thing happened of course with 1984, which was published I think in 1947, 1948. But this one here, Animal Farm, he wanted it to get published during World War II when of course they were in bed with the Soviet system. Don't think the Soviet system can't… Forget the fact it was Russia. That system can be put anywhere. In fact, I think there was, more communists were actually living in the US right through that entire period right up to the present time. And because you don't use the word communism anymore it doesn't mean that's not what they are. Often, it's soo tragic that folk have to be given an actual name to identify something. If you don't get the name, you see, they just, they're not thinking about it. And that's why those who control you use names awfully frequently, they label you, you see, and they can get you to hate somebody or whatever it happens to be, or a group or you name it. That's what your governments do. Anyway, it says here, this is from his own publisher…)

to the exclusion of the other dictatorships. I think the choice of pigs as the ruling caste will no doubt give offence to many people, and particularly to anyone who is a bit touchy, as undoubtedly the Russians are.

(A: This is Orwell again…)
This kind of thing is not a good symptom. Obviously it is not desirable that a government department should have any power of censorship (A: Now this is awfully important for folk who... Unfortunately, we get overdosed with data every day and most folk don't remember it, hm. That's why you have to be selective in your thoughts and selective in what you're thinking and selective in the topics. Everything else is just bubblegum. But back to this article he says…)

Obviously it is not desirable that a government department should have any power of censorship (A: Hm.)

Is not desirable that a government department should have any power of censorship (A: And he says…) (except security censorship, which no one objects to in war time)

(A: You see, that's what I've said before. Well now it's terrorism, you see, you can see that, you see how we work as a, you suddenly become like a super tribe basically. It doesn't matter how many cultures are involved, you become a super tribe when you think you're under threat, ooo, ooo. Yeah yeah sure, yeah, you can ration me, you can do this, you can do that, okay, you know. But it says…)

over books which are not officially sponsored. But the chief danger to freedom of thought and speech at this moment is not the direct interference of the MOI (A: Ministry of Information.) or any official body. If publishers and editors exert themselves to keep certain topics out of print, it is not because they are frightened of prosecution but because they are frightened of public opinion. In this country intellectual cowardice is the worst enemy a writer or journalist has to face, and that fact does not seem to me to have had the discussion it deserves.

Any fairminded person with journalistic experience will admit that during this war official censorship has not been particularly irksome. We have not been subjected to the kind of totalitarian ‘co-ordination’ that it might have been reasonable to expect. The press has some justified grievances, but on the whole the Government has behaved well and has been surprisingly tolerant of minority opinions. (A: Except for the folk who didn't want the war, they locked them up, 'eh. [Alan laughing.]) The sinister fact about literary censorship in England is that it is largely voluntary.

(A: This is so important, government likes you to go along voluntarily, but you know, there'll be consequences if you DON’T. You see, that's what the lawis actually. It's always coercion.   There's obviously something going on here, you're kind of coerced along, you know, but if you say no, that's when you get force applied, you see, that's how it all works, you get punished or your license gets withdrawn or whatever it happens to be, you name it.)

Unpopular ideas can be silenced, and inconvenient facts kept dark, without the need for any official ban. Anyone who has lived long in a foreign country will know of instances of sensational items of news — things which on their own merits would get the big headlines-being kept right out of the British press, not because the Government intervened but because of a general tacit agreement that ‘it wouldn’t do’ (A: …as they say, ‘it wouldn’t do’…) to mention that particular fact. So far as the daily newspapers go, this is easy to understand. The British press is extremely centralised, and most of it is owned by wealthy men who have every motive to be dishonest on certain important topics. But the same kind of veiled censorship also operates in books and periodicals, as well as in plays, films and radio.

(A: You understand what I'm saying before? It isn't just me saying that. Your propaganda is embedded as well, not just things kept out, but propaganda they want you to believe is put through children's books and movies and everything that you see. You don't realize how brainwashed you are, as you think you're enjoying yourself. [Alan chuckles.])

At any given moment there is an orthodoxy, a body of ideas which it is assumed that all right-thinking people will accept without question. (A: You see.) It is not exactly forbidden to say this, that or the other, but it is ‘not done’ to say it, just as in mid-Victorian times it was ‘not done’ to mention trousers in the presence of a lady. (A: You couldn’t even say lady anymore though today, you know.) Anyone who challenges the prevailing orthodoxy finds himself silenced with surprising effectiveness.

You see here, groups can be trained very quickly to turn against someone who is thinking outside the box. And they really do. People like to huddle together like penguins in their little groups and sects and whatever it happens to be. Remember the studies I read from, again, university studies on peer groups and propaganda and indoctrination? They found the different groups, from working classes, and different man, woman and so on, and they found the ones who were middle-class, basically middle-class, who socialized, they adapted to all new policies very quickly. Very quickly. They talk about it with their drinky-poohs as they stood there and chatted to each other. And they'd all have the same books, the recent ones that were suggested.

And suggestion, you see, it's like an order. Oh yes, I've got so-and-so's book. Isn't it…? Yeah. And you see, they've got all the right things, etc. And they wear the right things. And they all drive the same things and yada, yada ya. They're very conformist. So it's easy to manage them. Very easy. And when anything is said from professional bodies they immediately parrot it without thinking. They'll never question it. The folk who had less education questioned things far, far more. So education domesticates you more and more and more until you can't, you can't really retain any natural survival instincts. This is not my words, this is the studies that they've done, you see.

But anyway, I'll get back to Orwell's little article here. He goes through different parts of how different countries kept down free speech, etc. etc. etc. Well, look what's happening in all our countries today, where you're being told what to believe, about everything, if they turn everything upside down, and even they can put you in jail for not going along with what you're told to say. What you're told to say or what you're told to call something…. You're in trouble, folks. We're all in trouble here. This is a scientifically controlled society if you haven't figured it out.

Also too I'll put up, I have a whole bunch of stuff as I say…

Geoengineering Governance Research - geoengineering-governance-research.org

Oh, there's just too much of it actually...

On the regulation of geoengineering - academic.oup.com / July 2008

...etc. It goes way, way back, all this stuff. It's too much to even go over. I've read it all. But most folk can't be bothered or have the time. But that's what you're living through is a massive system of control.

And then you have, let me see here, what else have I got here... I've got… Let's go back to a guy who definitely was hailed, they always give you your heroes, even though they're monsters some of them. But it is interesting to read, and remind yourself of things, people who really were part of what was called the Empire, the world Empire system, it's still on the go, big time, it's closer to it than ever before. Bertrand Russell who talked about…

The Impact of Science on Society – Bertrand Russell

You've got to try to remember that, you know, don't overdose yourself with data. As I say, there's so much data, conflicting data thrown at you all the time. But understand what's important. To you. Most folk don't care. They really have been domesticated and they believe that, well, there's always specialists taking care of us. Well, when did that become part of democracy? You know, specialists taking care of all your… of everything? Really? Is that what you are, a perpetual child, you're being taken care of? Did you give them permission to have all your rights to take care of yourself taken away from you? Every statement demands a question. So here we have, what he said, what Russell said, right. His whole agenda too, was there was just too many of the wrong people, blah blah blah blah blah. Same thing. On page 50 he says…

The Impact of Science on Society, page 50 – Bertrand Russell

Fichte laid it down that education should aim at destroying free will,

(A: I'll repeat that for the hard of thinking...)

Fichte laid it down that education should aim at destroying free will, so that, after pupils have left school, they shall be incapable, throughout the rest of their lives, of thinking or acting otherwise than as their schoolmasters would have wished. But in his day this was an unattainable ideal: what he regarded as the best system in existence produced Karl Marx.

(A: I'd actually say it produced more than just Karl Marx, hm. Here today we're told what you see isn't real, it's something else, and you'd better go along with it. Hm. Anyway, it says…)

In future such failures are not likely to occur where there is dictatorship.

(A: You see, you're really under a form of dictatorship. If you don't have a say in anything, and you'd better obey, obey, obey, and don't say what you think and don't say what you see, you're forbidden to... you're not in a democracy, folks. So he says, really, it's a form of dictatorship. Of course, it is. It doesn't matter if it's an oligarchy or whatever of scientists, it's still a dictatorship type of system. It is dictated to you, ordered. You see? And they'll use…)

Diet, injections, and injunctions will combine, from a very early age, to produce the sort of character and the sort of beliefs that the authorities consider desirable, and any serious criticism of the powers that be will become psychologically impossible. Even if all are miserable, all will believe themselves happy, because the government will tell them that they are so.

(A: You're happy, aren't you? Look at all the ads on TV, smiling faces everywhere, hm.)

A totalitarian government with a scientific bent might do things that to us would seem horrifying.

(A: Then he goes into the Nazis who were eugenicists, and they praised Britain and they praised the US and the Rockefeller boys and so on and the Cold Springs Harbor science labs, etc. They used all their techniques, actually put them into effect, [Alan chuckles.] openly, more openly, I'd say, and eugenics of course.)

The Nazis were more scientific than the present rulers of Russia, and were more inclined towards the sort of atrocities than I have in mind.

(A: That ‘I have in mind’… This is, in other words, he's thinking of doing, right? [Alan scoffs.] So…)

The Nazis were more scientific than the present rulers of Russia, and were more inclined towards the sort of atrocities than I have in mind. They were said — I do not know with what truth — to use prisoners in concentration camps as material for all kinds of experiments, some involving death after much pain.

(A: By the way, if you… It's amazing how they always hammer on Germany even though the Germans copied it all, as I say, from Britain, and the eugenicists, and the Darwinian groups too, that are still on the go, the actual eugenics groups that change their names, they're still on the go, and the groups in America. It's just astonishing, isn't it. So, the loser always gets hammered. And Julian Huxley had to reinvent the term for eugenics because he was, he didn't even hesitate to carry on with the whole eugenics agenda after World War II.)

(A: So anyway, he says that the Soviets didn't have the same kind of scientific abilities or whatever, but he says, that's what they would use. As you're all, think you're happy, because a totalitarian government will tell you so... Do you understand, you are in a sci-fi? If you haven't read Acres of Skin you should read it. It's pretty, it's a modern book about all the prisoners used in American prisons and elsewhere for medical experiments. They injected cancer cells into them and all kinds of things. It's quite, quite a read the for those who can handle it. And this is in so-called peace time. So he talks about all this experimentation on humans in camps…)

They were said — I do not know with what truth — to use prisoners in concentration camps as material for all kinds of experiments, some involving death after much pain. If they had survived, they would probably have soon taken to scientific breeding. Any nation which adopts this practice will, within a generation, secure great military advantages.

(A: I mean, they're talking about literally genetic manipulations and eventually what they used to call test-tube-babies and out-of-the-womb children and all this kind of stuff. And it says here…)

. . . secure great military advantages.

(A: So you would create... What do you think all those X Files and stuff came from, hey, just somebody made that up? It was about all the possibilities that scientists had envisaged, long ago, as they sat there on their big tables discussing things they could work towards. And how could they create the super soldiers? There's lots of articles over many years about super soldiers, how to create super soldiers… and even how to take away their complete, any kind of fear they might have, just literally silence that part of the brain where fear resides in them, things like that. Remember, the whole point is to win, for those who rule.)

(A: So he talks about 'great military advantages.' I'll put up an article too about China, that's been more open I think really, has gone ahead with a lot of this kind of testing of, they created a purpose-made person basically. Again, I could go on forever with these… EACH area I'm talking about here is just almost endless with data now. But it says here…)

The system, one may surmise, will be something like this: except possibly in the governing aristocracy, all but 5 per cent of males and 30 per cent of females will be sterilized.

(A: This is the great Bertrand Russell. I mean, he was all for this kind of thing.)

The 30 per cent of females will be expected to spend the years from eighteen to forty in reproduction, in order to secure adequate cannon fodder.

(A: Breed youngsters for military, for war.)

As a rule, artificial insemination will be preferred to the natural method.

And of course, Brave New World was already written before that, I think, before this book came out. This is just one little excerpt from it, his book, Bertrand Russell, the great Bertrand Russell. The guy who literally said that anyone who was selected to join the ruling groups of scientists, for instance, and you wouldn't leave if they were from a lower-class… He was pretty quite open about how he saw people. If they wouldn't leave their own class behind them, and families and that, and become one of them,and meaning secrecy and working towards something, he said they'd have to be literally eliminated because they'd have the understanding of what's going on and the ability to communicate to other people. Russell was a vastly different person than… Again, why do you think they become such a hero for… a hero for what? Because he was against nuclear war and so on?

You see, the elite always say there's too many people, these are the causes of war, that's what they say. It goes on and on and on. And it's well understood that the countries that were reducing their populations, very successfully, don't get any thanks for it. And your own governments have pushed it for years and years, and generations, just opened up the floodgates now to mass migration. So obviously there's something else at work here, isn't there? Obviously. Of course there is.

It's an old agenda. They're rather open about it at the top, you're the problem, all of you. And they're dealing with it as far as they're concerned. Again, they take 10-year plans, 50-year plans, 100-year plans for different parts of the project. The UN does the same thing if you notice. And of course, the Soviet system used the same technique for different aspects of their policies to be implemented. That's how it works.

So you're living through an incredible system that the public have a hard time understanding because they are so brainwashed, incredibly well brainwashed. You can do more effective brainwashing to a five-year-old's mind by showing them videos, altered, of whatever it happens to be. Even a deforestation or a clear-cut thing that was done in the 1940s and say, oh well, this is what they've done yesterday. And nothing, oh my God, they're destroying nature.

And the music is behind it and there's a woman's voice, generally, narrating and it's soft and ddhhh-ddhhh-ddhhh. And the music comes in and the music is bom-bom, bom-bom, bom-bom. And you're sitting, chewing your fingernails. And that will never leave them, the imprint will always be there. And they'll do anything to save the planet because they just saw the whole planet didn't have a tree left on it, you know, in this video, hm.

It's just too easy. The emotion, emotional impact, using more senses than ever, you know, they've talked that they can even add the smell to video, not just auditory and visual, things like that, it has more of a fixing of the impact in your mind and it fixes it in your mind.

Anyway, I've prattled on about too much and I didn't even want to go into that area. But it's still eugenics, as I say. Everything that's happening now is to do with eugenics and the big, big plan. It's very old. It's talked about quite openly in their own groups and clubs and so on. But as I say, whatever you're given for reality is nonsense. It's nonsense. You're never getting the real reasons for anything, never. Because you wouldn't be happy and you might protest. And if you want to manage animals, you don't spook the animals, do you? A shepherd doesn't go in and say I fancy some mutton tonight and just grab one of the sheep in the pen there, you know, and kill it in front of the rest of them. He'll try to get it out as quietly as possible and far away from them. That's how you manage domesticated animals. It's quite easy.

Anyway, I hope I haven't been too depressing for you. Remember, you can buy the books and discs @.com or donate to me. You'll find out how to do it on my website. Remember, my websites are the official sites and that's the only ones you can actually order from. Anyone else doing it, it's not my site at all. So, for orders or donations definitely go to .com. Because I've had con people doing that before, using my name [Alan chuckles.] and doing amazing things. It's quite a world we live in, isn't it? But there you are. So you can help me tick along by donating at least @.com. You'll find out how to do it there. Remember too, you can use checks, or cash even, or the various other methods to send a few pennies here or there.

So take care of yourselves, from Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 24, 2019. I hope you're still all ticking along okay and surviving the massive changes that are underway. Because it's in the air. You feel… I always go by the observations of authors down through time basically, and some of them like HG Wells, that worked for the big system of course, he did say that when World War II was coming along, he said it was in the air, you could feel it, everybody could feel it. You get the senses of change. It's almost like you suspect there's whispering going on somewhere... or you might sus… Or you don't hear it but you suspect it's around you somewhere. It's almost like that kind of feeling you get when the big changes are happening. Because we move through life now in planned stages and these stages are really, really, incredibly well-planned.

Getting back to the old revolutionary ideas of Albert Pike and he said, they never start a premature revolution. You've got to prepare the groundwork. You've got to get everything planned out. You get all the different contacts, the people involved, and support of all kinds, all done beforehand, before you'd even start the first move. It's quite something when you go into al the characters down through time that are all connected. Because Pike supposedly trained Mazzini for the World Revolutionary Party. And Mazzini was a good friend of the mother of Bertrand Russell. Isn't that something, 'eh. She had a lot of these people as visitors to her home often. It's just astonishing how they all... It's like a small world in some places, isn't it? With perpetual forms of revolution.

But getting back to what I was going to say actually was, this thing’s in the air. We do see the big massive changes. But they come in chunks in a sense, almost in chunks, planned chunks, and you suddenly notice things that maybe you should have noticed over the past few months or year or whatever. But you'll suddenly see them in front of you. And you'll see the memes of course and the themes that are pushed by media.

And the media is so centralized today, they all have the same stories. And the stories are just opinions generally or else they're soap operas. But they all have them at the same time. We've had that for years, of course. But it's a centralized form of media control. Whoever controls the media of course controls what you're going to hear every day or read every day for news. And news of course doesn't mean it's the truth. It just means it's information. And you can make up a lot of gibberish and it’s still information. It might be gibberish information, but it's information. Data, in other words, I've talked about this before, we’re getting more and more and more of it all the time now. Because it's like a distraction as opposed to… And it is a distraction. It's meant to keep you away from looking into what on earth is really going on as we go through these massive changes.

Well, we’re global, we know that, we know we’re global. And we know we've been global for quite a long time. And we know that our vote really hasn’t counted at all for...I would say my whole lifetime. [Alan laughing.] I don't bother voting anyway. But we get clues of it down through time in our own lifetimes too. We get the clues from big players actually that help with the culture, of where it's going to go. And it's not because they have a crystal ball there and they look into it and smoke some pot and start imagining things. They are part of teams that help to plan the future. The future… You go into the futurist societies and you'll see the incredible funding they get from the same well-established foundations that fund so many armies of nongovernmental organizations, that they even write the curricula for different universities and schools and so on through UNESCO. It's astonishing how they're all networked, and there's thousands of organizations, well-funded. Like a super bureaucracy you might say across the planet. Massive.

I always thought, well, that's really what true socialism is. Remember, it's ‘rule by councils’. And under the utopian type of idea of what even Marxism, they would have rule by councils. ‘Soviet’ means ‘rule by councils’. It never happened to work out that way in the Soviet Union. But behind what they told you they were all about… Of course, they had a more totalitarian system, which always comes through a centralized governmental system that has to ram its agenda down the throats of everybody. They don't tolerate time, they don't bother with time to condition you. They get it done fast with threats and fear and all the rest of it.

We've been living through the most successful form of it for... before you were born actually, before you were alive, and before you were gleam in your daddy's eyes, they say, we've been living through this system. And the system has many different names. Just like Winston Churchill when he came out in Parliament and lambasted what he called ‘this group’ that had been running the British Empire for a long time, and interfering in its affairs, and even promoting different wars and skirmishes in different countries and things like that. What he was referring to was the Lord Alfred Milner group because they use different names even then. And it's hard to... They had a lot of different clubs belonging to it, you see, specialized groups, but they would keep their own name pretty secretive. So if you would talk about one, you didn't realize it was connected to all the rest. Interlocking circles, you see, and it's your circles of friends and you're circles of acquaintances and circles of clubs, as professor Quigley talked about too.

So you see, this system runs all sides of things. The dialectic. Some of them, their writers even boast about it. I've mentioned it before, you can't get change without taking what you want to change, knowing where you want to take it, so you create its opposition. Then you have the dialogue between the opposition and what exists. Then you have your synthesis. Thesis, antithesis, and then synthesis. And from there you go on to the next stage. Now, the synthesis is the problem and you want to go to the next step, so you get opposition to that to change it again.

And it'srapid change, some of them called it rapid plans, or accelerated evolution, of everything, society, everything. And it's pretty well been happening your whole life long. Planned that way. To let things happen by themselves in society, it will probably never happen actually. Or if it did, it would take many more centuries to happen that way. We live in a very, very planned and organized society. As I say, you go into the futurist’s writings, the incredible money that's thrown at them. Because they have members that are the tops of so many think tanks, of education, psychology, behaviorism and so on, and they all advise your governments across the planet. Working together. I can remember too that Quigley said so many times that they’re often mistaken, his group that he belonged to the CFR/Royal Institute of International Affairs, they were often confused with communists and called communist, and he said that, it's because our goals are so similar to it. It's a planned form of socialist control. A scientific socialism, it's better to call it that. The step the Soviet system never quite could get to, scientific socialism.

...the kind, really, that Aldous Huxley talked about because he realized very early on actually the way it would go with Brave New World. That's why he wrote the book. He thought about that whole thing for many years before he wrote the book in the 1930s, of the planned society where literally everything to do with society, the division of labor and so on, was scientifically managed. Human beings were genetically engineered and born from artificial wombs. All the supposedly defects were brought out of them. And defects could be argumentative behavior, for instance, that would be all removed by selective genes. Of course, they would have their perfect blueprint basically for subsequent generations once they perfected one and you could just clone them and clone them and so on, then have them born in test tubes. That was the idea of it. Or mixed in test tubes and born in artificial wombs. [Alan laughing.]

So anyway, here we are. We look at all this stuff... and I've got so many articles I've saved over many, many years, of artificial, starting with artificial insemination of course, then the gene manipulation. Many years ago. And every government’s been involved in this kind of stuff for so long that they'll never ever disclose all their works until, for another 50, 100 years. Because that's how things are done, in 100 year’s time no one cares. And what you'll be in 100 years, you have completely no interest in anyway, you'll be so far beyond here, beyond the now.

But anyway, Huxley saw all this coming in. He knew that the division of labor, that's one of the big things, you see, in a socialist society, the intelligentsia should manage the system. Huxley referred to a dominant minority at the very top of his system in his talks with Mike Wallace and other people. He said that, there's always been a dominant minority and he didn't see any reason why it would ever fade away. So you'd have a dominant minority, but amongst the minority he's talking about, you have the monied managed system. In Brave New World there was no mention of money or anything like that, there was maybe little extra perks and so on for your status. But everybody was fed. You had your drugs supplied, your Soma, to keep you happy. And no one was really bored, there was lots, there was nothing you couldn't have material wise. You could have everything, all the toys, fun and everything else. And no one worried about it. So it's pretty well been heavily managed. But the thing was, because you were created to be a worker of some kind, under the alpha plus type, you would still be programmed basically through genetically programing for a specific function.

It's really fascinating to see it, because this is an ancient, ancient, ancient idea, going way back, thousands of years. And the socialist system itself is the same, for those who don't understand it, the perennial philosophy as they call it and so on. It's the right of those who understand, or those who know, meaning in the groups that they've joined, intelligentsia too, that they have the right to rule over the lesser beings. Plato talked about it an awful lot. He came up with his book The Republic, and in The Republic he had a stratified society of experts, basically, who would breed, for themselves. This is the precursor to Brave New World but it's been a kind of handbook and something they've toyed with for many, many, many centuries.

Because Plato said in The Republicthey would have a guardian class at the top, who'd only breed amongst themselves. Then you'd have ones down below and you'd even breed your soldiers, they would mix women and men, awfully interesting, really, and here we are today with the same thing going on. And there's way more. I think if they breed at all they might even get eventually grants, if they do breed in the military with other people in the military and have offspring and so on. Until you have a military class. So you had all these different classes, specially bred in Plato's Republic, and how to manage them all, etc, etc.

Then you jump to today where you have, you're still living with Brave New World, and we're going through it rapidly, rapidly so with the centralization of all the systems. We have our specialized classes that we don't vote for who are going to be more scientifically tyrannical, humph, than the previous classes. Believe it or not.

I look at history differently from most people. I see the beauty amongst people themselves. In all generations. Everywhere. Because it's the little moments alone or with a few people in the country or whatever, or on a beautiful day and you see the grass going, it's these kind of things that stick in your mind. Not concrete buildings. At least it is for me. And these things are just, they're just fantastic, you know they're fantastic, they're very… you can almost put them in the category of being holy because you'll never forget them. You open up to something way beyond yourself. And you don't need a TV to do it, you don't need a computer. You just open your eyes and smell the air and listen to the birds and look around, and that's it, you see. But these will stick with you, even if you are dumped in a concrete jungle eventually.

So what they're doing in the managed society, they don't see you as an individual. They really don't. Even though I've got stacks of stuff from them themselves from the educational departments on the fact that they admit amongst themselves that they have problems... Because under, by really ramming home, and that's what I mean by big leaps forward all the time that you suddenly catch on to, and it's all around you, it's in the air, it's actually getting manifested… You're seeing, like, for instance, the huge move for getting children, across the planet, all organized of course by adults [Alan chuckles.] to appear on television everywhere, we demand this, and we demand that, and sustainability and nature and vegetarianism and all these things and so on. And that's all done by adults and special groups way above them. Of course, it is. But it also takes complicity of the media that's centralized as well, and probably owned by the same people eventually at the top and run it all. But it's to convince everybody else who's an observer, a passive observer, that this seems natural, and well, if they all agree about, well, maybe it should be that way, you see. It's so easy to do, isn't it?

So easy to do when they can show you anything, tell you what to think about it, and then you come to the conclusion that's already been designed for you to come to. Marketers have professionals, and behaviorists and psychologists, working with them in linguistics, who know exactly, and psycholinguistics, they can take you exactly, lead you through step-by-step through a little conversation, until you'll definitely, definitely arrive at the conclusion they want you to have, maybe even for life.

But no one… You see, if you had a truly free society you would be taught this very thing. And you would be taught to be awfully wary of all stuff out there, and to question everything. That would be a free society. That would be freeing up the individual, truly. Wouldn't it? So you don't fall for everything.

Huxley said it himself, that there are techniques of persuasion being used, or sciences he's talking about, and he said, who could persuade people to do things that possibly would be unwise for them to accept. If they really understood it, you see. So we’re going in, we're in basically that system already. You can't listen to a lecture today on history, in any country, that doesn't have the same persuasive techniques of making everybody in every country guilty for things they never did. And maybe more in some countries, because that's the technique now. In every profession people will sell out to keep their jobs. But then they become a change agent. You are change agents when you're not teaching a science anymore. You're actually doing social engineering. And making people feel guilty about things is definitely social engineering.

It's really so top-heavy that you couldn't get up in the ranks of anything, in the taxpayer-funded system, and that's the key to it really too, this super massive bureaucracy, a real Soviet living on the taxpayer, living awfully well off the taxpayer, all these different professions, and managing us all. You couldn't get up there if you had any opinions contrary to literally the religion of socialism, this new scientific socialism that they have the right to tell people what to do, what to think, what to say, what not to say, what to even see. That's where it is already.

And it's so sad, that, to see people cave-in. It doesn't surprise me, I've seen people cave-in before. I've seen in whistleblower situations where people will back off, people that you know, because they're terrified of losing their job. And you become a leper, until you're exonerated, and then you're a hero for a little while, then they're all around you. But they would never come near you to back you up at the time. That's human nature, you see. And I understand it, I understand what fear is. Fear is a terrible thing. And power has always used fear on the people. Always. The past is a horror show as far as I'm concerned. Most of it. Not all of it, as I say, there are the occasional moments when you're in the country or whatever it happens to be, they're fantastic.

But the rest of it, when you look down through history, it's a horror show. Absolute horror show. At least it was in Britain. For me. It was just a particular age group, and 10 years later the system changed again into the kinder system as they called it, and then I think in the 1980s they started giving credit cards out for the first time amongst the people and they could start buying things they could never get before. But up until then it was just... austerity. Right through from really World War I right through. And I think before World War I too. The people really didn't have much. They still had poorhouses, you know. They didn't have a welfare system.

And they had the free-trade system going by the same people, [Alan chuckles.] meaning clubs and agencies like the Royal Institute of International Affairs, before they called themselves that of course. But they had the same, it's the same group, with free trade. And of course, the people in it all were members of big corporations that happened to profit awfully well off free-trade, and they helped planned society and the whole future of the world, right to the present time.

Again, going back to Plato, the division of labor, and then you get into Brave New World where you literally have, it's beyond Marxism, you literally have the creation of the types of humans for each type of labor, until you have the ones at the very bottom that aren't too bright at all, bred that way specially for their menial tasks and repetitive, boring tasks. So we're in it. We are in it.

But when you read academia, through their papers and lectures and so on, it's so in-your-face, there's no hiding it at all, really. And because it's all, all the terms you're hearing, sustainability, global warming and then climate change, and all the other things they brought into it, overpopulation, it's right out there, they're saying it all now, saying it all, and the borderless society, etc. To take the heat off the countries that are, I mean, heat, overpopulation of the countries that are flooding out, they say that 40% of the world's food supply, that's what they say, will have to be used for Africa, the whole of Africa in a few years time. All the scary scenarios, you see.

So the borderless world... Planned. No one got to vote on it. It just happened. It's like it was a page turning, though, wasn't it? And then you're wondering, why mass migration? But no one says, this is the change. Well, from officialdom, from government that is, no one has said it's to change the whole of society. The whole system changes. It's a new system we're in obviously. And I mean we are all in it, it is global. And it won't be giving preference of any kind to any group eventually as they flatten everything out down through the years.

But it’s planned that way. It was planned before I was born. And that's the key to it, they needed world wars, they said that. HG Wells said it, they needed the big wars to make nations give up their sovereignty. They said that. And then after World War I, he went on a roll, he boasted about the League of Nations and he says, oh, this is so wonderful now, bureaucrats in departments in Britain and France and so on and all the countries can all talk to each other and bypass the politicians. So the bureaucrats could all run the whole planet and the politicians would be eventually phased out, that was the idea of it. And when it didn't, when folk weren't quite ready to give up their sovereignty, he said, we need another war. Another war. And they got it.

So you've got to understand, there are, there have been people for generations at the very least and probably even older, but for generations who've planned this. They're often mistaken for communists. And they work with communists. That is, again, Carol Quigley said, as long as they're all on the same agenda, the same role, the same general role, they'll go along with it all and they'll all work for it.

So all sides are controlled, as I say, by the same capstone it seems. But it's astonishing to see it all manifest openly in writing, and what they're teaching them in universities in all specialized departments. Right down to psychology departments where they talk about the necessity of accepting a form of difference between individuals. You see, they don't want to see you as individuals. You're lumped into IQ levels basically and socioeconomic status, etc. That's how they lumped us all in, categorized us through polls and God knows what else. All through your life, from the day that you went to kindergarten, all the way through your life, the data on you is extraordinary. And terrifying, really.

But now they're realizing, because to get all this agenda through amongst the, who's the heaviest targeted group in globalism at the moment with sustainability and global warming, climate change and the death of millions of species, blah blah blah blah blah, of animals and plants and all that propaganda? Who has been targeted? Because they have to be the future leaders. The children. So in academia they have, they're admitting they have to treat it a bit differently with the children. Because the one thing that they didn't figure out when they're indoctrinating all the children, that there will be a future generation that will never question global warming or sustainability or climate change or anything, is that their hope... And the destruction of religion by the way, in the Western countries, definitely for the traditional religions, gone. Eventually I guess they'll catch all the other ones too. It'll take a little bit of time but that's what they plan. But what they've got is nihilism now.

They didn't count on nihilism being… They thought all the alternate gadgetry and the transfiction and addiction to cell phones and tablets, etc. would keep them going. But they found out there's nihilism now, with all the bad news of the future, oh my God, overpopulation, and everything is dying and all that nonsense. Which it isn't, you know. Then you find that, yeah, you got nihilism and depression amongst children now. And suicides. So they're coming out with all kinds of strategies under various categories and one of them is called hope, trying to get, instill hope, along with the propaganda, to keep the children going, so they'll grow up without being totally nihilistic.

And they themselves, by the way, once you give them reasons that, almost like a religion, it will overcome, it can overcome all these problems but remember that humans are the heart of the problem… Well, I tell you, I can see they'd be utterly ruthless, those children when they grow up if they're given this kind of hope. [Alan laughing.]   Because it will be a religion then and they'll be ruthless to anyone who doesn't tolerate the propaganda. It's already in the air, again, in this day and age, as we know. It's way past the point of dissuasion as far as I'm concerned because most of the public have never even been informed that this has even been going on, this big war type propaganda battle by a very old agenda.

And I can see different sides of it too. I understand why so many people after world wars jumped on the bandwagon, like Bertrand Russell on his side to ban war. Because of the incredible destruction, incredible destruction of human life and everything, and resources, for mass slaughter, it's beyond comprehension. Really. And it does make you wonder why on earth would they go on so long? They definitely had, they could've stopped the World War I very quickly, actually. They could have avoided it, in fact. And even the overtures to end it within about a year were all ignored. All ignored. And then after World War II, the same thing.

And Britain had rationing, official rationing with ration cards right up into the 1950s, 1953 or 1954 I think it was. And then after that they didn't have the money, after all of the massive taxation for the debts, to even by a decent food or anything. So that whole generation born in that time period have got all kinds of health problems. And their children too. The next generation are taller and a bit healthier looking. But the ones who went through the rationing from World War I right through, the Great Depression, and into World War II and beyond all suffered incredibly.

This is all part of a big agenda. A big agenda. Do you understand? And so is the slaughtering of people across the planet a big agenda. So don't be fooled, for goodness' sake, by the wonders that will come out it once we make peace on the planet. At what cost? They went into Gulf War One, remember, and they plundered the oil fields, the same people that sat on the big boards of these big agencies that I'm talking about as CEOs and top contractors, etc. There's always another side of whatever you are fed. Always. And most folk never think of flipping it over to see it.

But as I say, when I go into these different groups basically that are getting so heavily funded for behaviorism and psychology, it's terrifying to look at, just one after another. It isn't just papers one after the other by so-and-so and so-and-so. It's the study groups and the think tanks they end up belonging to and working with, with governmental departments and faculties… and again, this strange phenomenon, which again came out of the same group, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the World Bank, the Bank for International Settlements, the IMF, and all the other power structures we have across the planet, all the central banking systems… and technocrats of course from technocracy, that are appointed over everything. This is what technocracy really was to be about, appointing people over social control systems. And money is a social control system. And the lack of it is too. [Alan chuckles.] You soon realize that when you don't have any. But it's also a tremendous power policy because those who lend the money can deny it, in any country across the world. Even if they're starving or in famine or whatever, they can, it can be denied… unless they accept specific social policies that are mandated to them along with the loan. It's power, isn't it. It's all power.

But again, that's what George Orwell knew. He was a, he fought on the socialist side in the Spanish war. He caught on that, what they thought the brothers that they had, because the propaganda in Britain was awfully good, they were brothers for the Communists that were coming in, and when he realized what the Communists were really like, eventually he was hunted and he got out just in time. Because they were assassinating competition, they didn't want what they called British type socialism, they wanted their own communism running the world basically. That was the idea behind it at the time. So he escaped it. But he understood the dangers of even socialism. And when he got back and told them what was happening, in socialist clubs in Britain, they turned their back on him. He'd been a hero beforehand and now they turn their back on him. Because he literally showed a different side of it than had been informed to the public, and they really didn't like that.

And they also complained, even right to the present you find so many academic writings about Blair/Orwell right to the, and Huxley too, in universities. Because they're always churning out more philosophers or whatever it happens to be, or different world manager types, really, who all do their little papers on these people of the past. And they're forever ever breaking down the enigma of Orwell because he wouldn't go along with the sexual, the open sexual new morality of the socialism they wanted, the abandon, the old idea that HG Wells was about, what was free love everywhere and the state would take care of the problems. But Orwell wasn't for that. He still had clung to a traditional form of having a mate and family and all that kind of stuff. So they thought that was just terrible. In other words, he wasn't a true socialist or he would be the same, you see, that's what they thought. So they tried to pick and pick and pick, if you just don't conform completely to what they want. It's never changed.

But you'll find the same, you don't need the terms even in academia of people saying they're a socialist, you can tell by the fact they're going along with it all. The whole world agenda is to be controlled by experts and they decide what an expert is. And they also can decide what a problem is to have the experts. Yeah, oh, there's a problem, we need experts for this problem. So they create, or they say they creates the problems and that's it. It's just too easy to propagandize their agenda without ever explaining to the public the other side. There's always another side of everything, another side, like climate change. Obviously. And climate change, they've said over and over, is their excuse they jumped on basically to force the public to accept the need for them to be in charge of it, specialists to be in charge of it all, and give up all your rights and freedoms. It's fascinating, really. But as I say, it's scary. Meanwhile, what you're given as an antidote to it all, is just the propaganda from the media. That's not an antidote anything. It's gossip.

If folk haven't figured out that this incredible farce in Britain with BREXIT is literally a soap opera for the public. Will she leave, won't she leave, will she leave, won't she leave, back and forth back and forth. For how many years now? And it’s still going on. And then you have Donald Trump, did he collude with Russia or not collude with Russia, back and forth back and forth, for what, two years now? What a soap. What a soap. And I know that there will be a massive, the final push, it'll be a push for sure, because they want to get into a few enemies left in the Middle East there. And they've been building up the soldiers and reserves and so on, and quietly training, quietly training and strategizing, etc. Of course, it has been, they've been doing that, because he promised to do that, he'd get rid of it all.

But the thing is, you're getting a soap, aren't we, we're getting an incredible soap opera... that you can't believe… you hope you don't believe it. Do you really believe they took his cell phone away once because he kept tweeting? Do you really believe this rubbish? Do you? He doesn't even do his own tweets. None of them. They're not sitting hooked to the phone like the rest of the population, like the children.

Anyway, we are being managed awfully well now. But in academia it's fascinating to see how each department, each topic is now sanitized in certain ways. And often even the good stuff is taken out, the decent stuff is taken out and padded with stuff to make people dislike other people. It really is, it's weaponized. Getting the truth today is like what George Orwell said, even speaking the truth, it can be taken as an act of treason. It really can. He said something, just to paraphrase, something like, to say the truth in a time of universal deceit is akin to, could be taken as or is akin to treason basically by the state. And we're pretty well there now.

You can see the intolerance if you simply question, just ask a simple naïve question, without an opinion behind it. You want to know something, you ask a question, you can actually sense that you're not supposed to go there, by an angry type of, it's almost like, schoolteacher techniques that you maybe remember from your early schooling, your primary schooling. Because that's how they would be at times. You'd be quite naïve about things, and if they didn't want you to ask questions in a certain area, it was a hostile face and a grimace they'd put on at times.

You understand why adults would act to children that way, but why would adults act towards adults that way too? That doesn't bode well. It really doesn't. Because as I say, fear can motivate people who want to keep their jobs, and who will be placed over you. Fear can motivate them to be really nasty to you. Really. As I say, it's just like whistleblowers where they'll dessert you, all your friends, if you're right. And if there's any threats come from whatever force it is, they'll dessert you. It's a fear, terror technique used by authorities down through the centuries, many centuries. Many centuries.

You know that in Britain, the same in Scotland, for instance, as an example, they had these dingy prisons. Dingy. And you can be locked up in prison for anything at all, really. You had, you are in a system where they already had monopoly power, from merchants. Everything the people needed went through the merchants. The merchants would also be town mayors or city mayors and they would give out licenses for even selling and retailing stuff. They controlled everything. For those who don't understand it. The ministers, they would appoint the ministers, their own ministers to the local churches to keep the people behaving themselves, for instance, if they were getting a bit restless or too many grievances about... starving, for instance. Everything was so controlled. They don't teach it much in the history books either, but when they had the Irish famine on the go, or in the same period, and they were clearing, already clearing, it wasn't just the Highlands of Scotland, they were clearing the lowlands too and exporting folk across the world.

But yeah, if you were accused of anything a justice of the peace, an appointed justice of the peace would have you condemned basically. You were put in a dungeon with no windows. Someone would have to, some charity or whatever would have to find a couple of shillings to get you bread. And if you couldn't get that you starved, in the prison you starved to death awaiting trial. And then you had your brief little trial, back to the JP again and then whatever the sentence was, it was just carried out.

It was a horrific system. The guy who is in charge of, the jailer type, he got extra fees and bribes for feeding the prisoners, from passersby, by relatives and whatever. The hangman, each town and city had a hangman. And sometimes called the staffman, because he was given a staff for his power, that was his symbol. And he would also nail people, if you were a bit deaf and you didn't hear someone order, he could do anything with you, he could put a nail through your ear and nail you to the wall. That's the cruelty that existed in the 1800s right pretty well up to the early 1900s in fact, into it, actually, and it certainly did.

So it was a horror show. Absolute horror show. Most folk had very little or no education at all. So it was easy for a centralized clique of educated to rule things. Very simple. And live in a very luxurious lifestyle. Because as I say, everything that you needed to survive was monopolized, from raw resources up to finished products by monopoly powers. And in the 1800s they had their weavers that basically, there were head weavers and small cottagers that had their livelihood depending on wool, etc. Then the big boys would import this stuff from other countries and dump it. Because free trade has always been used by those who monopolize and if they can get it cheap somewhere else, they'll dump it on you and things like that. So everybody can get put out of business, agriculture and so on. But when they had the corn wars too, and folk needed decent food, and they had no money or hardly any money, they refuse to allow it basically into the country at one point, from abroad from America that had charitable organizations, in the 1800s. The British government would have it stopped because they were getting lobbied by the big, the merchant bankers.

And merchant bankers in those days had colonies across the planet. They exported a lot of the prisoners as slaves to Botany Bay and different places. And guaranteed to die. And the Americas too. So crime did pay for those who run the system. They invented lots of crime, like starving, you steal a loaf of bread to feed yourself. There was no compassion back then, that was it. It was just horrible. People who are in the same classes of them were terrified to help them. Because it was almost like contam... if you were seen with them you'd be under the same scrutiny, you see.

There's even a church in Scotland, it's a famous church, when they were clearing people off the land in the 1800s. And they had, they were, over it, replacing it with sheep! Literally, you know, that was part of the clearances. It was cheviot sheep that were bred down in the borderlands that could withstand the Highland climate. So they were just moving folk off and off and off. And it's so horrific because in the Highlands they had genocide, for those who don't know it, there was genocide, ordered genocide after Culloden in 1746. The troops went through the whole of the Highland's and anybody connected to anybody they claimed was involved in it, whole families were wiped out, children and all. There's been no inquiry about that, ever. And then the rest of them that were left, they use for the military. They gave them, let them wear the kilts. They even had a big manufacturer open up in Britain to supply the kilts, by the way, for Scottish regiments which they created, and they became the shock troops. So the abused end up getting used across the planet to fight other wars that they didn't get anything from. It's a horror show. Absolutely.

But believe you me, what I'm getting at too is, the fact that people who are terrified won't come to help. What are you going to do when you see families living in a church yard, whose home has been burned down, to clear them out, and this is historical record, and even the minister won't let the families into the church to live while they find somewhere. You see, everyone was so terrified. If you help them, then they still have this memory, this recent memory of being classed as a terrorist and therefore these people were, they were nothing, they were scum, they had no money, blah blah blah, no property. People will condemn them and call them names before they'll come and help them. That's a fear reaction when people do that. And it's so that they don't get connected with them and possibly they get their home burned down. You see?

Horrific history. Truly horrific. And people have been used and abused, used and abused right up, and they're still getting... I mean the troops today are living on a cocktail of drugs. Because they can't give them even validation of a just war anymore. In the past there had to be a semblance of a reason for invading and fighting a people. But they can't even really put that across anymore, it's just so invalid. So they give them all kinds of drugs afterwards... when they start to come to, and they're not in it anymore, and they're trying to figure out what it was for. And all the visions and pictures are literally engraved in their minds, come back to haunt them, all the people perhaps that they... well, they never knew them... all age groups and so on.

And how you going to live with that, hey?

So they come up with even, remember the articles a few years ago, they could even put viruses into specific parts of the brain of the troops in the hope to eradicate literally the memory in those particular areas. This is scientific tyranny we're in, folks. We're in Brave New World. We are. And it's not finished. It's going to be a long show before it gets anywhere near completion. Technically it will never be completed, there's always the next step and the next step, and more progress, as they like to call it. And population reduction of course.

But we're not run by what you think are your politicians. That's kind of obvious when you really, really look into all the big global meetings. The World Economic Forum, what on earth is the World Economic Forum? Look into its website. It's through there that a lot of the funding goes to all these specialized areas of creating tomorrow's leaders, in all areas of life. Well, you're all taught to believe folk just sort of evolved themselves into leadership. No, they don't. They pick them for all areas. And that means they are trained and propagandized perfectly for the one agenda. But do they have minds of their own? Nope. They're completely, they'll see one avenue only and that's all they'll see. They're guaranteed, they are the closest thing you'll get actually to a specially designed human being. At the moment, perhaps.

Now, I'll rush through a few stories here that might tie and might not tie in. Again, if I've prattled on again, I didn't mean to go this far with it all. But it's better than just reading off stories, isn't it? But, here's one here, as an example, to train you. A few years ago you had children coming forward from school, young children saying that they would volunteer to be sterilized rather than have children and be a problem to Mother Earth, etc. And now it's, the pole system, awfully interesting, the poll system. They are constantly, constantly checking all kinds of things in society, even have all the links to the organizations that are paid massive money to do it all for the universities and for advising governments. But one is called...

No Thanks Cupid - 51% of young Americans are single - more than ever before, survey says
dailymail.co.uk / 22 Mar 2019

More than half (51 percent) of young people in America do not have a steady romantic partner, (Alan: Well, we've known that since about the 60s, because it was pushed that way.) according to new survey data.

It marks a significant increase since 2004 (A: You see how... This is done every year, these studies, over and over and over, you see. And it allows the ones who are pushing the cultural agenda insight into whether it's working, or whether they have to tweak something and so on, according to changing your opinion and your behavior and so on. That's how it's done. Anyway, it says...) when 33 percent of 18-35-year-olds reported being single, and slightly since 45 percent said the same in 2016.

The report, by the (A: Now, here's an interesting, this is where you go for all these studies...) General Social Survey, found it was the highest number of unattached people in that age group since the question was first asked in 1986.

(A: They actually did it long before that for different organizations, not the same group though.)

Among all age groups, 35 percent of Americans said they have no steady partner, up slightly from 33 percent in 2016, according to The Washington Post.

'Most people my age aren't married, and I just have an outlier (of couples) in terms of my social group,' Ford Torney, of Baltimore told The Washington Post.

The 26-year-old said he does want a steady partner, but hasn't met the right person yet. In the meantime he sometimes feels left out in his circle of friends, who are mostly married or in long-term relationships.

(A: Then they have other ones on women, what they think about it too. And they're the same of course. And they call it...)

. . .'waithood'

(A: ...they're just waiting, waiting. It's like Idiocracy, always waiting for the right one and so on. And it will never happen.)

American women who remain unmarried well into their 30s are in good company – and part of a growing global trend, (A: You see, it's across... Everything that happens is global and pushed from the same organizations.) according to researchers.

From Indonesia to Egypt and everywhere in between, anthropologists and other experts (A: You see, experts, Russell said, we'll train the public to believe in experts and not even think unless they have an expert opinion.) are hearing from women who are delaying marriage for a variety of reasons – including educational and career aspirations; financial hardship; and a desire to have more life experience before settling down.

The result could be shift in the way humanity thinks about love and commitment, according to QZ.com.

The delayed marriage phenomenon is called 'waithood' – a term coined in 2008 by Diane Singerman, an associate professor at American University in Washington D.C.

(A: And they mention too, the high cost of marriage and, you know, etc. etc., blah blah blah blah blah.)

But anyway, that's all planned that way of course. Of course it is. Of course it is. And it's very hard now of course too, for anyone even to stay together. The more partners they have... And they know this. They've known that from studies way, way before they even gave the sexual revolution in the 60s, from previous surveys in other countries like Germany and France of course in the roaring 20s, the culture was getting pushed then too. They know exactly, the more partners they have the less likely they'll ever settle down with anybody. So there's nothing they don't know, really. Or how to even make something happen as well of course.

But they do mention economic reasons too. And of course, the economy is a reason they've pushed, even from the United Nations and different departments, UNESCO, that they can always put people off on having children by making it too expensive. So economics is a factor always, you see. But you can also make people want material things instead of having children. If you don't have children, and I think it's very true, I think it's true, everybody's learned that, that didn't have children, marriages tend to fall apart too. It's a binding thing. It's more than just two people. And I think it's, well, it's nature, isn't it? It is. For humans.

[Alan laughing.]   I had to laugh...

'I am with you': President Trump signs executive order on free speech at college campuses - usatoday.com / 21 Mar 2019

I won't even go into that. Because college campuses have been denying free speech for [Alan chuckles.] it's getting worse and worse for over the last 30 years, I think. And I'll put up a link to the...

General Social Survey
en.wikipedia.org

(A: ...to do with what they're up to.)

The General Social Survey (GSS) is a sociological survey created and regularly collected since 1972 by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago. It is funded by the National Science Foundation. (A: You have to connect all these things together because they're all part of the control system for the planet.) The GSS collects information and keeps a historical record of the concerns, experiences, attitudes, and practices of residents of the United States.

But they do it for across the world too, of course. It's quite interesting. But yeah, they've always got to check us and study us.

The millennials who REFUSE Marriage, Children
The millennials who REFUSE to ever get married: Woman, 26, insists she'll never wed her partner in protest at 'sexist tradition' - and brands having children 'most selfish thing you can do' (A: So THERE!)
dailymail.co.uk / 22 Mar 2019

And so they push this kind of thing. And it will never work, the relationships will never work either, you can just tell it won't. It won't. It can't. They tend to fall apart. And there's many reasons. And they know at the top why they fall apart, it's not my opinion on it.

Now, a lot of the stuff to do with our food, and the altering, and the kind of bioengineering some folks say of the humans, because we're definitely changing physically, and shape wise and everything else. And it's what we are eating, it's one part of it for sure. We've had the bisphenol A scandal going on for years and years and years, then they changed it to bisphenol B I think now. And they say it's less dangerous and all that stuff, but I don't believe it. It's all the same. There's all kinds of phytoestrogens and xenoestrogens, etc. that you have intakes of. And these things really work like real hormones, and even worse than real hormones because they are synthetic basically a lot of them. Many of the other ones you take too, I mean, beer has got a lot of hops for instance. Hops is one of the highest things for artificial, for a natural substitute for estrogen. For those who don't know it. For all you guys that are drinking your beer all the time.

Anyway...

Weedkiller is removed from DIY store shelves after US court rules in cancer link case - dailymail.co.uk / 20 Mar 2019

Of course, that's Roundup. And it won't really matter, it's not really won or anything. They always come back. And Monsanto was bought over I think it was by Bayer, so they now own what's called, what was called Roundup, a series of herbicides and so on for agriculture. We all knew that for years. Plus, you can't get it out of the ground, for years. They found it in the grounds up to about 8 to 10 years after it's been applied once in the same areas. It's just incredible.

But yeah, this is not by accident, where big corporations go ahead and just push the stuff on us. And here's the other thing with Monsanto. I remember all the articles at the time reading them all, they refused, remember, to allow any independent investigation or any other science lab take apart their product. That was… And the government backed them on it! So you had to take their word all the studies that were done, were by them themselves, oh, it was perfectly fine. We allow that! We just... We put up with it though, don't we?... oh, they'd never give us anything to harm us... We're trained as children, hm. Weedkiller is removed from DIY store shelves after US court rules in cancer link case… I don't think they'll actually win it even though they say that.

Another thing too, by the way, is monopoly power. You can't have monopoly, when you got monopoly, I mean, even any kind of monopoly, even education, because they'll monopolize opinion until you have no other opinions but what they say. But here's insulin, a lot of drugs are going out of sight and different kind of medications.

What's behind America's insulin crisis
theweek.co.uk / 18 Mar 2019

The price of the drug has increased exponentially, forcing desperate diabetics to ration supplies.

(A: How can you ration supplies? It's not, you're not overdosing on insulin, you have to be awfully precise about it. Hm? If you ration it you're in trouble.)

Politicians and patients are demanding urgent action be taken to tackle America's growing insulin crisis, which has seen the price of the lifesaving drug triple over the last decade.

(A: It's actually worse than triple, actually. Because now it's an incredible monopoly.)

Insulin - a hormone people with type one diabetes need to survive - was invented nearly 100 years ago. The patent was sold for just $1 so that everyone who required the medication could afford it.

(A: …that's why it was initially done.)

Now, retail prices in the US are around the $300 range, according to the BBC's Ritu Prasad. "Even accounting for inflation, that's a price increase of over 1,000%," she says.

Remember, they did the same thing too with the particular anti-toxic shock drugs that people would carry with them for bee stings and so on. They did the same thing too with that, remember? And the woman who ran the company, who took it over, gave herself a massive pay increase, off the misery of others. Isn't that incredible, hey? Really. Don't ever think the world's getting kinder, folks. Don't do that. Don't fall... As Huxley said, the techniques of persuasion to persuade you to do things and accept things that perhaps it wasn't in your best interests to accept. We're so easily fooled, especially today.

But anyway, I'll put this article up too. It's just amazing. An article on human beings and healthcare, as they're pushing the next step of it too...

Why AI will make healthcare personal - weforum.org / 14 Mar 2019

Digital assistants to provide 24/7 helping hand, etc, and how they're tying in technology at Amazon's Alexa and Apple's Siri using AI to handle routine tasks. So everything's coming together. Google of course is at the top, and their big, big building they opened up in London some time ago there, they had big surveys out, already granted by the British government, to give millions of people's medical records to them for supposed testing on these new programs. So much for privacy, hey! It sounds wonderful, again, precision medicine to personalize treatment. Sure! Sure. It all comes down to cost and what is your standing in society, do they need you, do they not, that's it.

A priest in Montréal was stabbed the other night there and it says…

St. Joseph's Oratory stabbing, people will come to pray for father Grou - montrealgazette.com / 23 Mar 2019

A guy just got up, and they won't say who he was I think, and whipped out a knife and stabbed him twice. Broke the blade too in the process apparently. I very much doubt, with a massive, massive vitriol and targeting of Catholic Church there'll be any, I really don't think there'll be anything much said about it at all. It's sad that the decent people, and there's lots and lots of decent people in these churches, that are definitely not pedophiles, are all lumped in with the sins of the few basically. Isn't it? It's tragic, that. But again, the Catholic Church has been a target of this social system.

It's astonishing to me actually when you realize the complexity of even the top revolutionaries like Orwell who literally had a hatred, absolute hatred of the Catholic Church. And of course, in the true socialist doctrine they want the elimination eventually of all religions, except their own religion which is their socialism. Their pure reason and humanism certainly comes in, will run the show. But without the spiritual aspect, as I say the children end up getting depressed and nihilistic, and suicidal, hm. They always forget that.

Aldous Huxley himself was all part of it too, and he was anything but rational, etc. He had a few experiences himself that he couldn't help... If you get a kind of what is sometimes termed as a spiritual experience of some kind, outside your control, or even desire, you have to question what the heck happened there and what was it for. And if you weren't taking drugs or anything, and you didn't have some kind of hallucination... And especially if it was meaningful, for instance, and purposeful, then it's going to change you, tremendous change.

Bertrand Russell, who again, was an advocate for pure reason, eliminate religion, they saw it as a poison of course. Because people who obey a deity are a problem to the government. I hope you understand that. It's a power thing. I think it was HG Wells said it better. He said that the family union is a small tribe, people will stand up around an individual when the government is after them, and defend them. He said, they want to eliminate the family so's the government can talk right down to you personally when they want to do whatever they want to you, and no one's around you to help you. Again, terrify everyone around you and your deserted, right.

He was quite blatant about it. And so was Bernard Shaw. You find that all socialist doctrines of totalitarians want that, to eliminate the family unit, and they want to eliminate religion because religion makes people, it gives them, it's like the big idea that Mao Tse Tung talked about, he was terrified of a big idea, nothing else. A religion, people will die for religion. They'll die for it. Or they become martyrs for it.

Like the Covenanters they had in Scotland too when they were taken over and united with England, basically. You find that when Charles was there it was mandated that everyone convert to Anglicanism. Instead of the free Presbyterian Church. And the folk thought that was horrendous because the head of their church was God. They could lambast the ministers all they wanted to if the guy went off the tracks. Because he couldn't take the place of the deity. But here you have a king who is the king of the country, temporal, right, and also King of the heavenly. And they wouldn't have that. It was a betrayal.

And they didn't have, you know, they were rounded up, thousands of them, and thrown in a place in Edinburgh, Greyfriars's churchyard, imprisoned there, and slaughtered. They were the real martyrs because they, that's where that saying came, you know, there'll be no king but Jesus, is where that term came from. But no, they've always been after the elimination, because religion is a nuisance to them, an awful of a nuisance to them, when folks say, no way, I'll obey my deity or my laws or my religion, that's how it is. So you can see why they hate it, right. And don't forget that Marxism in itself is a religion, the way it worked out to be anyway because you need an awful lot of faith to believe in it. Incredible faith.

Whenever you read articles that just appear, like teacher says that she had to wash the toilets in school, it's underfunded and yada yadayada, in Britain, again, as an example, but it's all over the world. And she goes through this whole thing. And there's an article in the paper that led me to it. Because someone caught on to the fact that the woman belonged to a certain organization that's attached to the union. But it turns out that, everything's so incredibly formatted today with bureaucracies in the system, isn't it, of propaganda and marketing, there's a company, it's called Outlandish. It says...

Outlandish
outlandish.com

Award winning campaign (A: This is the propaganda.) that helped change 795,000 votes

An award winning* interactive data tool to show how your local schools are being de-funded.

(A:It's a propaganda thing for the teachers to USE. And so they bash the conservative government…)

In 2016, the Conservative government was strongly influenced by a campaign called "the F40". The aim of this campaign was to redistribute schools' funding away from over-funded regions . . .

So they give you a technique of how to alter the votes and change perceptions and so on. Everything is, you can't believe anything you read anymore! Anyway, this particular teacher said she had to, oh my God... It turns out she got a massive pay increase before all this, and she was already getting a good huge sum. I'll put the articles up for anybody who's really interested in it. But yeah, Outlandish, she's actually a member of this group too apparently. It's quite something to see.

The World Economic Forum is the International Organization for Public-Private Cooperation - weforum.org

The World Economic Forum Global Agenda - weforum.org

The World Economic Forum... this unelected self-made group, that calls itself a nongovernmental organization, that funds all kinds of futurist societies and agencies to do with psychology, psychiatry, indoctrination, the whole agenda, sustainability, blah blah blah blah blah, this massive bureaucracy that most folk are oblivious that even exists, and on their own website they're talking about creating the future world leaders in all different areas. So much for open democracy, hm. Hey? So much for that.

And all through universities and colleges you'll find these articles...

Building Brave New Worlds: Science Fiction and Transition Design - researchgate.net

The terminology is so bureaucratic. Have you noticed that, you have to learn bureaucrateze, everything is bureaucratic terminology. It doesn't matter who is speaking, nongovernmental organizations or whatever, it's all socialistic nonsense. It really is.   The first thing you do in a pretended science is create a language that most folk can't understand. That's why you do it, right? [Alan chuckles.] That's it, that's what all these people do, once they're in university, once they get a grip on the terminology they can prattle it on and... impress each other with... apparently the same stuff.

There's no individuality in universities. Really. Honestly. And that's again what some of the top writers even pretend they admire at times, and sometimes hate, like Orwell and Huxley, that there's no originality in universities for them. They all parrot the same, in all their writing papers they all quote different, this is by so-and-so, and they'll give blah blah blah, somebody's name and the year blah blah blah, or the book whatever. It's just one after the other, they can quote quotequotequote, they have no brains of their own. Really, it's astonishing. Astonishing. Scary, actually. It's like robots.

Another thing too with the whole sustainability thing too that all the children are getting pushed out, yeah, we demand a worldwide campaign, yeah, they're doing it all themselves, hey, you know. [Alan chuckles.] And who’s putting the money out, hey? But it says, and this is from a couple of years ago…

China signs $300m deal (A: $300 million.) to buy lab-grown meat from Israel in a move welcomed by vegans independent.co.uk / 16 Sept 2017

(A: Because the whole thing now is veganism, they're all pushing it. Again, it's all the World Economic Forum and all the rest, the same group, all connected.)

For many environmental and animal rights groups, lab media seen as a positive move away from the slaughter of billions of animals.

(A: Well, no one will disagree with that. But the fact is, this is big business we’re talking about, and it's CONTROL. When you give control of your protein to a monopoly, and that's what it ends up being, right, you're in trouble.)

China has signed a $300 million deal to purchase ‘meat’ grown in a laboratory in Israel in a drive towards less meat consumption in the country.

(A: And that's the point too, is to reduce, reduce, reduce.)

(A: It’s also called…)
Lab meat – also known as cultured bio meat – is grown in the laboratory using animal cells making some vegans opposed to the concept – but several environmental and animal rights group have welcomed it is an exciting development.

You thought Frankenfood was bad… We're way beyond that, you know. But it's monopoly power, for those who haven't figured it out, it's monopoly power. Monopoly.

It's astonishing, I can't do much in the time I've got, but look into futures, as I say, to do with sustainable futures, and the futurist societies. It's astonishing what you're going to find. If you're interested at all. It's completely all connected with sustainability program, depopulation, over the whole planet, veganism, as you're going to get sicker and sicker. And of course, there's a whole history of veganism there too, how it's pushed and why, etc. I don't have time to go into all of that.

Association of Professional Futurists - Most Significant Futures Works - apf.org

But it's a sad thing, it's very, very sad. I feel terribly sad when I look at the massive superstructure overlaying society that the public are oblivious even exists. With all those in academia involved and churning out millions a year across the planet, like armies. It reminds me of the saying that Al Pacino said in the Devil’s Advocate when he says, how do you think we’re taking over this world, he says, speaking as the devil. He says, it’s through college and universities, we're churning out, he says, we’re churning out millions of lawyers, armies of lawyers. Well, now it's armies of all kinds of scientists and psychologists and behaviorists. And they all speak the same, like robots, same terminology, same buzzwords and so on, the same in-group type language linguistics. M-hm. I bet they sound almost less human all the time. That's really what it is, isn't it? It is. It is less human. M-hm.

You know, if you were on drugs for a while, even prescribed drugs, for a long time, or even a short time taking certain ones. But they give them like Ativan and different ones for troops, to alter their emotions. And it can flatten your emotions. So even if you watch a good movie, where there's a tearful part in it, you won't feel, you won't feel a thing, it won't affect you at all. They're so precise, these things, of what they actually do. But the public again are oblivious of it. Well, that's what these people who are trained to talk in this, this neuro linguistics nonsense, they lose part of their humanity. They don't see humanity, outside of themselves. They see you all as a different species, a different class. They're educated specialists, you see, controllers, world controllers. You don't even speak their language. So, they can't communicate to you. They won't even try. They won't try. That's the ultimate, the ultimate snobbery of elitism.

It's like a doctor, and there's lots of doctors out there, that literally don't have the patience to even attempt to explain properly what's wrong with somebody. They take a look at you, oh, you'll never understand, and you know, you're like a lesser creature. That's what you have in academia.   You really do. They think they're on a crusade and they are in the right. And that's brainwashed into them by the way. So, the scientific tyranny dictatorship that Bertrand Russell was so all for, and he said he was all for it, he said it would be ruthless and horrific and merciless. So, it's not a good thing with all of its wonderful goals that it pretends it's going to do for you. Nothing is free, folks. Nothing.

Anyway, sorry for babbling on like that. I had many, many more things I wanted to say but there's no time. For myself, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, where it still freezing, and lots of snow out there, because of global warming, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on March 31, 2019. The snow outside is still pretty deep but at least it's beginning to thaw a bit and sink a bit. I hope, in fact, and we all hope in this area that we don't have too quick a thaw because then you get flooding, like crazy. And where I am in the country you have culverts on these roads, especially the dirt roads and they get washed out if it's too much of it fast, especially when you're in a bit of a valley [Alan chuckles.] and it's coming down the hills as well on both sides. But that's the way it is.

And hopefully I'll be getting a bit healthier weather soon because now it's so damp, soo incredibly damp. I think everyone around has got bronchial problems, as we all know, from different reasons of course. I always think about the incredible geo-engineering which you can find lots of articles from the universities that are participating in the studies and so on. Even before they really started to spray back in the 90s they talked about the different effects it would have on humanity, with health effects on the lungs and so on, different age groups too, young and old, and those with compromised or asthmatic systems or something. So, you really are seeing it of course in this day and age.

It's astonishing. I mean, I remember when I was really small, [Alan chuckles.] pretty small, really, I mean really small, looking at different statements that came out into newspapers. One of them was to do with the theme – today we have meme's and themes but back then it was more kind of like a theme – and how it was to do with the politicization of medicine, for instance, as an example, where they'd have their fads. Those organizations that push themselves as being scientific really do have fads. And yet we're all getting trained to just go along with the present fads. Back then it was the same too. When anybody back in Scotland at that time, and I'm sure most of England too, with the National Health Service, got a sore throat around the age of four or five or whatever it was, you are pretty well booked into the hospital and you had your tonsils and your adenoids whipped out just like that. The theory at that time was because evolution was kicking in, you see, and oh, we are descended from the apes and because we're walking upright instead of walking on all fours, your sinuses get blocked, you get infections and it goes down into your throat, etc. etc. So, the answer was to just whip them out.

It was the same for appendix of course, oh, it's a vestige left over from prehistoric times pretty well. It's amazing how they just came out with this rubbish, you know. Really. I mean, you've got no proof of anything really except hey, this little gland here or whatever it is, has got an infection in it. That's what you have to treat. But when it comes down to, well you don't need these things anymore because you've evolved… Now everyone of course that got the problem, that got them all whipped out, your tonsils and your adenoids, are very prone now to all kinds of bronchial infections. Because that was one of the first lines of defense, it caught the problem and hopefully most of the times it could actually deal with it, with a good immune system, it was almost like a trap. A good chunk of your immune system was taken away when they took them out. [Alan laughing.] You forget that too.

But yeah, the so-called sciences go through amazing fads. And that's just the way it is with them. And when you get politicized... And it's so manipulative politicized events happening, and themes and all the rest of it, especially to do with control and social control and global control... And they found their enemy to bring humanity together of course. They did away with the alien one that Lester B. Pearson talked about. Because that's what they were hoping for. They churned out so many Sci-Fi's. I've been thinking about that this all week, so many Sci-Fi's, way back in the 40s and 50s, where nobody really was into anything like that. But they churned them out like crazy. That started to give folk the idea, well it's maybe plausible, it's maybe plausible. But they couldn't pull it off. They couldn't get the technology to simulate a full-scale invasion pretty well. So they hit on the idea that global warming, famine and the like, pestilence, and plagues and so on, that would fit the bill, you see, the Club of Rome. It's quite fascinating because just before that they had in the 1960s, early 60s, you had really cold weather and deep winters for... We get these, this is normal, back and forth like that. It's not… And you can get 10, 15 years of really cold winters and then it'll be a bit milder for another few years. Just up and down, you see. We're not in a clockwork universe at all.

They really banked at the time on ‘the coming Ice Age’. All the big ones that were pushing eugenics, for the same group actually, the Club of Rome. [Alan chuckles.] They had Paul Ehrlich with the Population Bomb. That was all tied together, completely tied together, too many people, and there'll be even more too many people down the road, therefore how do you deal with it now? Well, we've got to have an enemy. The people are the enemy, and therefore, let's start taking over control of what people do, and take away their choices of what they do, and then you can direct the future. That's the idea. And Ehrlich, I think it was Paul Ehrlich’s wife, I think she was on the board, the actual board of the Club of Rome as well. And when that didn't pan out then they hit upon ‘the global warming idea’. Well, that's kind of died off in the West in all countries too, so it's just turned to ‘climate change’, it's just like, how's the weather today, that's good enough. That's how we're manipulated with these agendas.

And there are definite agendas. Everybody involved, and I can see their point, you can see the point of course. Everybody involved in working together and planning the future, who churned out the books on it, from eugenics, all the way down to Julian Huxley at UNESCO and his brother Aldous Huxley, Aldous Huxley was quite open about the fact that that was his biggest worry in the future was overpopulation. And everybody in his class and his ilk were of the same mindset of course. Hasn't changed.

During World War II, they had a meeting in London and the king presided at the time, before he died, over it. At the time they weren't killing enough in war. Like Bertrand Russell said, you know, it hasn't killed enough off, if only we could have plagues every so often it might keep the population down. That's what he said, Bertrand Russell, this wonderful hero of eugenics and socialism. But folk don't stop to think what they're hearing sometimes. And many folk at the bottom actually agreed with them, not realizing that just because you have a little flag that you wave for whatever party you join, means that you are going to get spared either. Because George Bernard Shaw said the same thing, you know, you'll have to come to us and explain why we should keep you alive when we are in control. Literally. You see, you're taking up the world's resources, hm.

And you've got all these articles, oh, each child, in statistics and so on, each child that's born will consume so much of this, that, and that, and that, and so much will be necessities just to say alive and other ones will be, not necessities but it's what they want. And they have all the statistics, etc., what we're all costing the planet. And as you turn everything into, what? Into energy. Because that's the real currency, is energy. And that's why you're seeing all the talk about energy and cost of energy. It's also to do with everything that you need to live. Not just heat and cooling or whatever, or keeping your meat cold in the fridge or your vegetables or whatever it happens to be. It's also to do with what you are consuming, you see, your cost to the planet in energy terms.

That's where everything eventually, they hope, and I can see it happening... I don't think there's anything they plan, the big boys plan at their big panels at the United Nations and UNESCO, that they cannot do… given enough time and enough propaganda, total control of the school system for indoctrination. As Jacques Ellul said, you've got to get them, indoctrinate them early, from early years, and then subsequent propaganda will take very well with them, they won't question it. He was a hero, Jacques Ellul, of even Kissinger, he put out accolades about him. He simply knew his stuff. He was a real philosopher. And he knew human nature and he knew the history, enough folk could be manipulated into following a certain path. It's quite easy.

And all, ALL tyrants in the past have gone for the school system first. It's so imperative that you get the school. And then you get young children. Russell said it himself in one of his books. He says, we used to… And 'we', I love the 'we' part, who's the 'we'? We used to think we’d have to take children from the parents at birth and have the state rear them, in collective nurseries basically. And they did try that in some countries by the way, for those who don't know that. What he said, we found if we get the children young enough, through scientific indoctrination, he said, then the children can be completely, can go to school, they can get their indoctrination in school, come back to the home and because of scientific indoctrination at schoolany input by parents would be completely ignored, it will not take, it won't take with the child. So therefore, the state will give them their culture and their belief systems and their education, and the parent will simply be an economic supporter, they'll pay for everything. That's what he said. And that's what's happened, isn't it?

For those who can't stand back and see it, you understand, you don't need things to be spoken at times, as you go through it and live through it, you take it for granted. And all the studies they show today, very few people, actually [Alan chuckles.] there's even fewer and fewer people, as I say, that are actually parents, like together for any real length of time. But most of them, if there are parents there, have the children go off and do their own thing as soon as they get into the home. They've all got their own Internet system in their rooms, their TV channels in their rooms. And so are the parents. So everybody goes and does their own thing. So true enough, the parents generally tend to be economic providers and the state gives them their values, their new value system that's drastically different from, say, grandparents.

Parents now are already so far along the road that they accept the changes much quicker. It's all a formula. And it's not speculation on my part, this is from their own journals and so on that I'm talking about, in psychology, etc, and behaviorism and sociology. It's all done, the piles of data, especially now with Internet with the constant data collection from thousands of sources, it's astronomical, and it's pretty precise once they have it all on every individual, they can predict pretty well most of the things you're going to do in life. They really can. Even the question mark factors. For instance, you might have a gene that will come to the surface and you go towards alcoholism, for instance, or you're really into the cannabis and more so than other people. And don't forget, there are people that are addicts to different things. Some are addicted to alcohol. And some of the folk, when alcohol, don't even touch cannabis, vice versa, and other ones will do both. So there are addicts, and they can actually equate that into, it'll put into the equation of the personality types, even down to when it might hit them, and it will affect their performance in life and so on.

It's quite interesting where everyone's categorized and put into little slots basically. And every day more data's added as you put up your data up online, etc. Or even if you look at different things online. They say that YouTube is one of the biggest collector of data, for those who are analyzing you, according to what you watch. Right down to the algorithms that decide, well, they watch this, therefore, maybe they'll watch, then they'll put all that stuff down the side there expecting you to watch it. They don't really give you a choice eventually, they are deciding for you what they think you should... Well, you can imagine how they can guide you [Alan chuckles.] along.

When you realize too that even articles you look up, ‘people who looked up this also looked at that’, you're being guided along a certain path. And maybe some people think that's great, I don't know, it's tended to analyze you and is deciding what you might want to watch. On the other hand, it might want you to watch something else, if you are being a test subject. They do have test subjects, you understand that. And test subjects don't know they're test subjects. Or, as they say, that which is being experimented upon will alter what it's doing because it knows it's being observed. That's basic science, so they don't let you know if you're being experimented on. However, they could certainly send you data, couldn't they, make you paranoid. And have you follow through with some crazy data. That's true as well. And all the ways you're being studied of course.

I remember years ago looking at articles put up by the Pentagon of the US and, again, whatever the US does everybody else is doing at the same time pretty well. But they did say that they did have different kinds of viruses they could send live online and alter, they actually said, [Alan chuckles.] and whether it's true or not, they could actually kill somebody. The idea being that... And we don't… Again, it's so clever in the weaponization of things, how you can study things, again, you'll take for granted and you won't think of. You take the pixels in the computer and it said that by sending little clusters of pixels in colors and so on they can literally break through the visual input that you have and go straight to different parts of the brain, like a program. Just by manipulation of certain pixels, etc., to the side of your direct pupil, the center of your pupil and things like that, and swirl them around or whatever it happens to be, and consciously you'd be kind of oblivious of it, but they say they could actually program you.

And it is true that when your heart is beating, the initial beat comes, the signal for the beat comes from your brain. That's what happens in heart attack. Often in heart attack you'll find that that little nerve there to the heart gets damaged and the signal doesn't get through. But the heart will go into automatic block, it calls it, where it will beat about 40 beats a minute to try and keep you alive until, you know, you can get hospitalization or whatever. Anyway, that's getting off the topic. But the fact is, they claim they can actually stop your heart in certain cases. Now, I'm sure the very fact they said it, even if they hadn't done it, ha, if they tried to do some breast-beating to the rest of the world of how great they are, I'm sure that got the rest of the world motivated right away to try it. And so we'll never know if these things are successful or not. I do know, and so do the studies out there, that the Internet definitely is affecting our minds, for sure. And maybe our psychology as well, like all data does.

Today we have so much data getting thrown at us. Most of it’s nonsense or just trivialities or even repetition. But it reminds me actually this week again of the same articles you would see when they were doing studies about television and how much television per week the children were consuming and how it was affecting their performance at school and life in general.   We know too for instance, that the children, if they're given a lot of TV, especially restricted television, will throw off the old rules of social interaction, in different sexual ways, for instance. They might be more promiscuous. Or, more hyper addicted in a sense to something which is a drive. Drives are like eating, well, necessities like eating, or sexual drives and so on can be highly, highly, highly addictive. Obviously. And hyper-sexualized especially, very easy to do with the constant repetition of the same kind of things over and over and over on the brain. It's understood.

And it's not healthy because... And I'm getting off the topic, but I thought I should really say it before I do forget it. The same thing with the Internet because there's so much pornography out there on the Internet and children have access to it. If a child in the home doesn't know how to do it, somebody at school is going to show them very quickly on their iPhone or whatever it happens to be. And they all have their phones, isn't it?

But you've got to also remember an article I put up a few years back and it was from a Canadian newspaper about a Canadian psychiatrist who worked with the prison inmates that have sexual problems. He had to quit. It was an awfully good article. He admitted, he said, the stuff they were showing the prisoners, for instance, repeat offenders on that type of sex and all kinds of things, he says, affected him as well until it was affecting his relationship in the family. And what it is, it becomes addictive to you. You'll have these odd thoughts that'll just jump in your head at the wrong times and dominate the rest of your thoughts maybe for an hour, for the day, whatever it happens to be. Or until perhaps you act out on them. And then it's destructive, you see.

So there are certain things that all generations going way back into the dawn of history have always known. Certain things had to have rules or you had chaos, personal chaos, family chaos, and even tribal chaos. They didn't have welfare systems back then. It's only recently you have any welfare system. People are really counted on to decide what they want to do and if they made the wrong decisions you took the consequences. That included male and female for pregnancy, so they would get hitched up and look after the child. Because the tribe didn't have, as I say, extra, welfare, they couldn't look after extra, extra, extra, so that whole point was always pushed and promoted. And of course, mistakes will always happen, but even then, at least the tribe would often take care of them, of the effects and the excess children. But everything in the past was done for a reason. Naturally. If you had chaos-chaos you'd never get out of chaos and you'd have perished long ago as a people. Basic rules developed because, and the taboos about different things developed too because certain things are detrimental to the unit and to the tribe. Of course they are.

But on television, and children, and the Internet and so on, it truly is, especially now. [Alan laughing.] The whole, we're living in an era where there's just so much pretense about how free we really are. Hm. But are we really? We live in the most surveilled society that's ever existed. And it's getting worse all the time because they're putting more and more money out on more surveillance, even deeper surveillance. And any rights that you had pretty well are gone long ago because of all the stuff that's happening. Anything that's left, you won't have that either.

Right now it's kind of semi-voluntary to even take out what they call loyalty cards at grocers and things like that. They look upon you as crazy now, in no time at all, a few years, and now you're crazy if you don't have one, what's wrong with you. And every other store you go into is the same thing too. So you're being nudged out of making your own decisions in order to be accepted by those around you, obviously. It's all understood by the nudge groups that I've mentioned before, that have international groups of professors and behaviorists and psychologists working to nudge you to make what they call ‘the right decisions’, about everything, including what you think about different things too. Without your knowing about it.

So you've got to treat all information and those little devices that bring information to you, and take it away from you too, and new information away from you, you've got to treat them all very carefully. Because there's way more than you just having fun somewhere and deciding what you want to do on that machine. As I say, TV was bad enough. And TV, again, brought in, eventually towards the end, especially, had a very debased culture. That's what they show you. I put out the links ages ago on Adam Curtis. He put awfully good documentaries out there to do with how the TV industry, and the radio industry in Britain, for instance, used to put out very staid patriotic kind of stuff, and it was all really propaganda. Like Ellul said the same thing, Jacques Ellul, anything to do with police or hospitals and healthcare that you're watching in drama format is pure propaganda to make you really believe in it all, that's what it is there for and so on.

You got to go back to the Communists. Stalin was very open about the role of the police, and the role of the military that could also work alongside them. He said to keep total power over the people you've got to have these organizations. To keep power over them. Not to control, just to control, but to keep power over them, that's the reason. And he also said teachers too, you couldn't keep the system together and indoctrinate the people without getting them as children and the teachers were awfully good, that was really their function, was indoctrination.

But all information that's put out there for little documentaries and entertainment by the BBC at one time was pure propaganda. Curtis shows you little shows like Dixon of Dock Green, Sgt. Dixon, that was his weekly show. It was a drama. And he was a really good guy, no matter what happened, he’d be awfully lenient to young people and things like that. But he'd, you know, go after the bad guys, etc. And so, you had things like that happen all the time. Then you had programs in Britain, and other stations when they eventually got other stations coming in, to do with Emergency-Ward 10, what happened in the hospital. And that made you obedient to the staff and it made you worship the doctors. And that's the function of it. [Alan laughing.] And like Bertrand Russell said, that everyone will believe that they have the best healthcare system in the world, because the government keeps telling you so. Hm.

But yeah, so Curtis went through that. Then he went through the change into the 60s, because they decided to alter the culture, reduce the family unit and the power of the family, and promote promiscuity. That's what the sexual revolution was about. For those who don't quite get it. It didn't happen by itself. It was literally promoted from the top, from the top down. Through all entertainment, from the top, in Britain especially in the BBC and so on, it was a government institution run by the people from Eton and Cambridge and so on, for the government. So I'm sure every other country went the same way, at the same time, with the same format, you see.

So getting back to, number one, you create a problem by promiscuity. But it's not a problem, is it? You're reducing marriage because the more sex people have with the different partners the less chance it will be of staying with a partner to have children. That does it very well. You also brought in abortion, because you had to deal with the fallout from unwanted pregnancies which became very common and so on and so on. And at the same time you put out a music like Bob Dylan telling the parents to, don't stand in the hallway, you know, get out of the way basically, the times they are a changing. That was a revolutionary song. Supposedly coming from young people, supposedly, to the older generation and the adults. Get out of the way. You can't criticize what you can't understand. Think about the wording of all that kind of stuff. Hm? Meanwhile all the children were depending on their parents for money and everything else. But you're going to have the children dictate to the parents? Hm? And they rapidly changed society.

I've mentioned it many times, even the last little while, about psychology and why do you think marketers use psychologists and behaviorists to sell products? Because they understand human nature and they understand the different milestones that even children go through all the way up through adulthood. And that's why all the candy’s stuck in the checkout counter in stores and supermarkets and so on. Because the child's going through, they know, through countless tests that moms and dads or anybody with children are anxious when you're in a line, because of a natural tendency, you don't want to be in the way and hold up the line behind you. And the child will start acting up as they grabbed the candy, it's all within their reach, and you'll automatically pay for it, okay then, just to get out of that lineup and away rather than cause a fuss. Psychology. Psychology. Psychology. You see.

Well, that's what sex is when you say to young folk, when they're dispersed into their hormonal range, go and have sex and do what you want. And the state will take care of any problems for you, and even any fallout from diseases, and if they can treat the diseases they will, you see. So children, it's like candy to children, isn't it? That's what they give them.

And out of it they hope, literally, they can do the same across the whole world. Because they were awfully successful with the experiments across Europe. Very successful. As the country's population started to plummet. They keep incredible data, awfully accurate data everywhere on population reduction from the native populations. On marriages even and all the other programs they brought in too. So different types of groups won't have children at all. Children are coming out of school, with the slogans, like you find that that's what Lenin said they'd do, we shall win by slogans. Everything today is a slogan you'll notice. So they're prattling on, don't eat meat, and also, don't get married, no children, no children, save the planet, sustainability. And it's all mantras. It's all these little slogans that they've got given to them, by adults of course. So the future's already planned for them.

But here we live in a society and we pretend that we have rights. And we pretend we’re in democracies. I've never seen in the so-called democratic country the people’s advice taken, I've never seen it happen, or even what they want to happen, in a vote. I can remember when the United Nations came out with the super cities idea, they want us all into super cities according to this governmental system called the UN that we don't vote for. They wanted to amalgamate all the rural areas and towns and so on, that used to manage themselves awfully well because only in your area do you who live there know what it really needs done, right, and the further that part gets away from you, the less likely you're going to even get noticed down the road when they are complete. Just like the EU parliament, it doesn't even see the other countries, really. And so, they amalgamated lots of countries.

Then Toronto was the same in Canada. And they actually gave a vote out for people who really objected. They didn't want to lose their little areas and little places and place names and so on, and to be into some huge incredible, again, centralized system, Marxism again, for the economists and those who run capitalism. [Alan laughing.] It's all one thing, folks. They gave them a vote and it came out pretty overwhelmingly to leave it as it was. So the counselors down in Toronto in Queens Park and all the rest of them, the local politicians and that, they said, well we know we gave it to you and all that but we can't really follow through with it, we've got to go ahead and basically ignore your vote, because we didn't have to give it to you anyway. That's what they said in the papers anyway, [Alan laughing.] we didn't have to give it to you anyway, so it doesn't matter. [Alan laughing.] And they ignored it. Something like the Brexit thing too in the UK.

Because you truly are living through big global agendas. And they are global, obviously, because what happens in one country generally happens across the planet at the same time in other countries. Even all the different laws they keep changing. In fact, it's mandatory that you adapt to the changes that happen, say, in Canada and the US, before it happens anywhere else, it's mandatory, across the world, you must adapt and do the same thing. You can't get a loan from the World Bank without going along with a bunch of demands on social changes, that's how it's used today. And it's not to do with just giving food to the poor across the planet. It's implementing social changes. They have the people across the planet shaking their heads, like, what?... hey... what?

So you're already under a form of governance, as I say. But nothing happens by itself. There's nothing, honestly, ha, you can do electronically that isn't just monitoring you. I've got to laugh to an extent at this incredible, aahhhhh, brush with China, Canada and the US, over Huawei, the electronics company and communications company from China. Because all the top companies, and even TELUS too, have used modules and so on from that company. And it was okay up until now, really, pretty well, until the US started to get a bit of a spat going with China. They've got a thing with the China Sea now and China's influence, etc. over there… interfering with the US over there too, you know. Everybody's, like that old song, I love that song, Everybody Wants to Rule the World. It's good to play that every so often just to remind you what's going on. And all sides are doing it.

But remember that China was built by the West. For those who can remember. It's not ancient history, this. Through the 90s all through the trade deals that were all signed too, the GATT treaties and different treaties, and World Trade Organization, they brought China up to full blast as a manufacturer for the planet pretty well. Just like Karl Marx talked about, having one country make all the top goods for the world, you know, even one factory for this, one factory for all shoes in the world, and one factory… And that was the Marxist/Communist idea.

So the big boys, the CFR/Royal Institute of International Affairs that are behind all the big moves to bring the world together into one system, and to rule it by the way, and who talk about the invisible government, [Alan laughing.] which is their members across the planet, including the Trilateral Commission as well who are the real technocrats. But anyway, they built China. We gave them the money. We in the West watched our factories melt away as they were uprooted, and we paid for them to move to China under the Treaty. I lived through it, I watched factories close down one after. I even knew folk in them who jumped, sometimes they would move to three factories over a period of about five months, and they'd all close down, boom, boom, boom. They'd be moved to China. And we paid, we paid the companies and corporations to move to China. We paid for what they would claim might be losses as they set up there and got into full swing manufacturing, we guarantee to pay them for 15 years, they'd have tax-free benefits too over in China. And if they claimed they still hadn't made what they thought they would have made, had they stayed in the original country, we would give them tax-free for another 15 years or more help too, financially. We paid for all that as we were left unemployed. I remember it very well.

We've got to remember then that everybody is not meant to work on computers and so on. For me, computers are boring things. I really don't want to get into the why's and wherefores and how it works. I really don't care how it works. Honestly. It's a machine and if it can do the basic things I need it to do, that's good enough for me. I said years ago that the only reason I got one, eventually, was because people asked me to do a show. That's the only reason. I didn't have one up until then. Because I know what it is. And I enjoy a good book. I enjoy the ability to go through a book and contemplate what I've just read and walk about and think about it, you see. I don't need to just go through distraction after distraction after distraction, click, click, click, click as I'm being profiled, you see. That's for me, personally.

And of course, it's a great boon for people in business because they made it impossible to exist today without having them doing it, you know, for business. You see, your choices are being taken away. That shouldn't be, you know. If you're free you have choices in things. And they're being taken away bit by bit. By a definite program. By, as Quigley said, the new feudal system will be the CEOs of international corporations. That's the system they were bringing in, said Quigley. And they'll meet at the World Economic Forum. We didn't set that up either. We'll probably put funding towards it, I bet you, through our money from the countries. They really constitute the big mechanism today, along with the big foundations, working in the WEF and planning it and working the future and training children and future leaders and so on. They're probably one of the biggest ones out there running the show. Your governments go along to them. And we don't elect them in, as I say, those systems. And all the CEOs of corporations attend. Well, here you are. The feudal system. The feudal system. No one wants to think about it.

Again, I keep jumping back to some of the excellent seers of their time who were quite dead, on about the future, and that was Aldous Huxley, Brave New World and George Orwell with 1984. And really, 1984 and Animal Farm too, where he predicted a world in Animal Farm, so much of it is coming true right now by the way. And read the actual book, don't just look at the little cartoons and stuff. Read the book and you'll find all the things he said would happen. And here they are today. Yep. If you understand it all, the analogies, etc.

Now, don't think either that I'm bitching about something and bemoaning the loss of the past. The past, really, as I've said before, had its good and its bad points. But really, it was also a horror show for most people, I think. For most folk especially where I lived. And it was always tension. People didn't know even then if there'd be work again. Britain had been through countless wars, that's what they use the people for, countless wars. And they had been literally starved from about the early 1900s through World War I, and through the Great Depression and into World War II, and rationing continued up until the 1950s. The folk, you can see it in the generations what happened to them, ill and sick and all the rest of it. That was a horror show.

Plus they signed deindustrialization pacts with Eisenhower and others, of course, the Royal Institute of International Affairs was all in on the act. Germany was to be set up as the industrial power for this new idea for Europe. All quietly and secretively, they admit this now, so much of it was done in secret. The public were not to know, but this economic trading deal wasn't just a trading deal, it was to eventually unify the whole, all the countries. Isn't that awful. These democracies, 'eh? [Alan laughing.]

So no, I don't bewail the past. Some of the past was good, where you could have good friends, who did more talking, more than one, and real interpersonal talk without computers or phones or anything, you just talked, and you met and you talked. And you laughed, you know, and things like that, you would have those times. But a lot of folk literally fell by the wayside because they were written off by the system that really didn't want them anymore. All they had was, when they brought on the drugs in the 60s, was drugs or booze, basically, that was alcohol. That destroyed so many people who saw no future. And again, when Thatcher came in in the 80s, well, in the 70s through the 80s, she said, there's a generation in our lifetime growing up in their lifetime who will never see work in their lifetime, get used to it. She said that in a speech, that's the plan. So you'd better start taking, I would think, some notice of the system in which you live. Remember too, that Aldous Huxley said to Wallace on the interview, he said that the people will come to love their servitude. That's what he said he was afraid of, because the techniques are so perfect.

Youngsters today think it's just fantastic, don't they? They've never had the whole world at their fingertips really with the gadgets. And it's all paid for by mom and dad, or somebody’s paying for it. They're entertained to death pretty well. They can have all the fun they want in life to party and sex and so on, it's all… That is the norm now, that there's no hush about it or even being quiet about it, it's all just promoted everywhere you look. Therefore, you're in a different system already, you see. It took, I don't know, 20, 30 years to bring it to this stage from then, you know. But it's all here. And there's no embarrassment. In fact, it's rather, it's probably risqué to even invite folk over today. If you have a couple, and another couple, they might be just kind of wild and just too, well, a bit disgusting and not polite talk, put it that way, you know. And when you hear that kind of talk in company, someone's making a play for somebody else, maybe next to you. [Alan chuckles.] That's how it works. But everybody knows this.

Canada’s $27B canola market could lose $2.7B over China’s import block - globalnews.ca / 29 Mar 2019

Now, getting back to the Huawei thing in China, as an example, for instance, of what we see as a kind of farce as they go on. Canada apparently, on behalf of the US, with whom they have an extradition treaty, had arrested basically the financial officer I think they call it for that company, who is the daughter of the man who created the company, that Huawei. An order to extradite to the States, I don't think she's been extradited yet. But really, I mean, that she might have been, or, the stuff might have been spying in the States, this is the excuse they're using.

China's been manufacturing pretty well all the computers since about, since, phew, 2000. What's wrong here, 'eh? Come on here. Well, they might have backdoors, they might have backdoors, etc. into different... Well, hey, we've lived through countless stories actually over the years put out by our own governments on all the backdoors that they mandate must be in all our computers. So it's just a fight over who can spy on us or something. I mean, if we're sharing all your data in this global system, what's wrong, why are you excluding China, hm?

And since China is often making the computers, most of the laptops have always been made in, I think it's one factory that makes all the different brands in China for us all. And hhhhhh, as I say, I don't think there's anything out there that can't be hacked into. I really don't. In fact, so many articles over, that's about all I know about computers, really, is that they are all easily hackable by those who understand what they're doing. We've had different whistleblowers over the years who've gone into it in great detail, all the different backdoors that are already built-in, in other words, to come in to your computers. And also you have the same thing with updates on the normal systems that you have too, and authorities often hijack them and jump in on the same time. You can't stop it.

So, it doesn't make sense. I don't think it's to do with what they're telling us. It could be, certainly, that someone that's after the whole market is either an American company, or a friend of America, or something like that. There'll be some other reason why this is happening. Because it's big, big money for business, isn't it? And of course, China retaliated by cutting the importation of Canada's canola oil, as an example. I think 40% of that canola oil from Canada was always deemed for sale to China. So this is how it goes when it comes to big business and power plays and all the rest of it. But as I say, I'm not quite convinced yet that what the authorities have said is the reason is actually the reason at all.

I'm going to put up tonight too, an awfully good article on Huawei.

Huawei--Fake European town for 30,000 workers - dailymail.co.uk / 27 Mar 2019

I was very impressed by the, it's almost like college campuses they're putting up across the world for those to study, people to study and students to study. But so well laid out. And they've copied old architecture, which is user-friendly. I can't stand these monstrous modern monstrosities of glass that folk are stuck into. There's nothing I can relate to in them. But you take the old buildings, and they've been awfully, awfully, put up awfully good. You've got to hand it to them, they understand psychology too. And they certainly can, I'm not praising China, I'm just saying they understand psychology over their own people too, don't they? And they understand what works on their people works across the waters everywhere else too. Of course it does.

But yeah, everybody wants to control everything about us. And don't forget that China was picked, and the UN said it itself in countless documentaries out years ago, lauding China and how it really picked itself up by the bootstraps and so on and how it was the model state for the world, according to the United Nations. Well, nothing's changed. And whether we like it or not, the whole world is planned to be completely unified in a single system. And if it takes 10,000 knots to make it happen, rather than just one big one, they'll certainly do it, it takes a bit longer. Or they can bring it along with threat of destruction, etc. Or, again, sustainability, sustaining the planet, oh we're all here together, oh, where all humans must come together, we're not fighting UFO invasion, we're fighting for climate change. You see, that's what they chose.

Now, let's go to some of the articles here, very quickly of course. And I'll put these links up remember for those who want to follow it. And that's all I do, is for those who are asking the questions at least I can give them the data as to why things have happened and why things are the way they are. How did we develop until now? What made it happen? What are the organizations that made it? Where did the planning come from, etc? How do they implement it into society for changes, etc.? That's what I do.

And it stops a lot of people, I hope, from having to go through the hell of killing themselves, youngsters especially with active brains knowing something's just wrong with the way things are presented to you. And they don't kill themselves with drugs or alcohol. Because that's what will happen to a lot of them if they don't. And there are people who need to know things, it's just their minds are different, that's the way it is, they don't just accept things and say, oh well, you know. They want to know. And that's a good healthy thing.

It's just like with the Old Testament. The Old Testament too, had people who studied history, of course they did. And the so-called old profits used to go up to Kings in the Old Testament and dress them down for doing wrongs and so on. Because they knew these wrongs would end up no good for the people. You need these old characters, you know, once in a while that come along and say, wait a minute here, we better think about this, this might happen, etc. You really do. But we are being trained to believe in experts, like Russell said they would do, until most folk literally, they're brainwashed by pretended experts who are just really as blind as everybody else. They're the blind leading the blind. But they're well-paid to lead you along preplanned paths for their masters. Obviously.

Anyway...

BirthStrikers: meet the women who refuse to have children until climate change ends - theguardian.com / 12 Mar 2019

No Thanks Cupid - dailymail.co.uk / 22 Mar 2019

I'll put that up tonight. And for those who want to see it, this is your propaganda, you see, and you're going to save the planet, and sustainability, and all that kind of stuff, etc. It's all fodder for down the road for social work departments and psychiatrists and therapists who will deal with the people who are just living in hell and depressed because they missed out on things that later on they'll find they might have enjoyed, or needed in fact.

Again, it's a good cop out too, isn't it. And an article about them, you have twins being studied. Twins are always studied for different things because you can get so much information from genetics and so on. But it says...

How being TOO KIND can lead to emotional burnout!
Two twins with contrasting lives reveal the secret torment faced by millions of women
dailymail.co.uk / 30 Mar 2019

...and has some of them are just crashing in the work system and other ones are doing okay, etc. etc. Because we're under so much stress to succeed into things perhaps that are really irrelevant to us. We're told to have status, you see, approval and status. But when so much is piled upon you, maybe it's time you start serving yourself sometimes. Otherwise it will destroy you. It's not for everybody. Also...

Psychiatrists 'must ask (Alan: ...children, they say 'kids' here, bit kids are young goats.)
kids about social media use' (A: It dehumanizes them, naturally, the terminology.)
news.sky.com / 30 Mar 2019

Psychiatrists must consider the impact of social media on all the children they assess for mental health problems, experts say.

(A: Again, EXPERTS say. You know, this priesthood of experts always tell us these things, you see, how we should think and all that. But it's true, they know all this stuff. They know what's going on. They know how we got to where we are actually already. They know this stuff.)

Cannabis, the wonders of cannabis of course, everybody's into it, you can't listen to any news anywhere on radio or anywhere, or on TV I'm sure, without the cannabis, oh, how wonderful it is. Because now the big multibillionaire companies are involved in it, and big big wealthy folk that are involved in it, and are advertising it everywhere, aren't we? Hm? Now it's good. And smoke from that's wonderful. Tar is thicker than cigarettes but don't... they say it's wonderful, the experts, so it's wonderful. There you go. That's your reality today.

Member of Parliament Victoria Atkins...

MP Victoria Atkins accused (A: This is quite an interesting little story...) of 'hypocrisy' over legal cannabis farm
bbc.com / 14 May 2018

(A: This is a member of Parliament in Britain. And she's a Drug Minister, hey! It says...)

Drugs minister Victoria Atkins has been accused of "hypocrisy on a grand scale" over her husband's involvement in a legal cannabis farm.

Paul Kenward - who is married to the MP for Louth and Horncastle - is managing director of British Sugar, licensed to grow non-psychoactive cannabis.

(A: Well you see, once you get that you can get the other one, too, you see.)

The Home Office said Ms Atkins declared the fact in parliament when she was appointed minister in 2017.

(A: Now, she was picked for that position because she spoke out about drugs. [Alan laughing.]   But once they started legalizing it and everybody gets, suddenly, oh they have a change of heart, you know, just a... Oh, I've given it more thought, you know. [Alan laughing.] It's amazing how money can just change opinions very quickly.)

She has previously spoken out against the Class B drug.

Peter Reynolds, president of Clear, Campaign for Cannabis law reform, said: "It's not just a conflict of interests, it is hypocrisy on a grand scale."

"The reason she was appointed is Theresa May was looking for someone who was a hard-line prohibitionist," he said.

(A: Well, she had a change of heart, as I say, when her husband said, you know, we can make millions here. Just, you just, it's very persuasive, you know. [Alan chuckles.])

There you go. So that's one article on it too. And this is another one, this is quite amazing.

Tory Party (A: That's the conservative party.) deputy chairman’s dancer-turned-barrister (A: …which is a lawyer in Britain.) cousin (A: So, this deputy chairman's lawyer cousin, but he used to be a dancer… [Alan chuckles.]) buys 4,000-acre farm in Sierra Leone to grow and import cannabis after obtaining licence to make drug for use in medicines

It's medicine, for goodness sake. It will be dancing on naturally too, I'm sure. But, ha, sometimes… I used to give talks about things you couldn't believe. It's like someone, I've been asked before about Osama bin Laden and so on, you know. I think the man supposedly, and different articles and different papers over many years said he was dead. About 40 times. At different times too. Including the early one when he died because apparently he had kidney failure, bad kidney failure, according to the French at the time. He used to go there to get renal dialysis done and so on. Anyway, I said I don’t believe everything they tell me I said when they explain to me... In the US and Canada all you got, all you got for all those years was, Osama bin Laden, Osama bin Laden, Osama, Osama, Osama. And then they put in a guy as the president's in America called Obama. Obama versus Osama. I mean, you can't make this stuff up, folks. You really can't, can you? You can't! Hm, what's the odds of that, what's the odds of that, hm?!

And then you have Tory party deputy chairman's, right, whose cousin buys a 4000-acre farm. Well, the politician, this politician, James Cleverly, the MP, this guy, that's his cousin, right, James Cleverly, Clever as in clever, Cleverly, right, he's a member of Parliament for, hold on to this, he's the MP for Braintree. Mr. Cleverly is the MP for Brain-, as in brain in the head, right, -tree. Who makes this stuff up, hey? Hm? And his cousin has been awarded a contract, because I don't know if he's dishing out the licenses, but it might even be for Britain or other countries too, but is for medicinal use only, you know. So there you go.

It's amazing, all rights are wrong, and all wrongs are right, and this is the age we live in isn't it. And that was all again part of, I think, Revelations, wasn’t it, in the Bible. And people scoffed at it. We're living through it. [Alan chuckles.] Wrong would be right, and right would be wrong, etc. etc. Isn't that something, hm?

And the governments that we're taught to fear, don't forget we're taught to fear governments, that's how it runs, everything is fear, can just change their mind when it suits them, and the first one who always get on in the act are those who work for governments. The same in Canada, one of the big cannabis boards and so on. Hm. But there you go. Mr. Cleverly's cousin, Mr. Cleverly was the MP for Braintree, yep, okay. But it's only for, his cousin’s only going to have it for medicine, so you know, that's what it's for, medicine.

US officials order Chinese company to sell the popular gay dating app Grindr over security concerns
dailymail.co.uk / 27 Mar 2019

(A: So, it's a Chinese company, I didn't know that either. I don't know what these apps are but the fact is, they are afraid now... Or maybe it's already happened, we'll never know. We'll never really know. Because I know intelligence agencies try to get everything on folks' sexual habits, for blackmail purposes, that's what they have always done, hey. But it says...)

•Beijing Kunlun Tech, a web game developer founded by Zhou Yahui, is being told to sell the dating app over fears the Chinese government could access user data

(A: Everybody could, I'm sure, every agency on the planet could probably access the user data from it, I'm sure they could.)

•The Committee on Foreign Investment envisioned scenarios where personal information could be used potentially to blackmail defense contractors
(A: …interesting, hey.)

•The company paid $93 million for a 60 percent stake in 2016, acquiring the rest two years later for $152 million, and is looking to get twice the price they paid

So that's the excuse they're using for it. Very old tactic is blackmail, of course. By all countries, they all use it. They'll threaten to expose you to whatever, and that's it, you know, okay I'll do whatever you want.

Acute Illness Associated With Cannabis Use, by Route of Exposure: An Observational Study - annals.org / 26 Mar 2019

Andrew A. Monte, MD, PhD,
Shelby K. Shelton

(A: ...and whatever their letters are behind it of course, and they're qualified people. They put an article out.)

University of Colorado School of Medicine, Aurora, Colorado, and Rocky Mountain Poison & Drug Center, Denver Health and Hospital Authority, Denver, Colorado

(A: Stacks of folk took part in this here it says. And they got the grants for the investigation.)

Grant Support: By a grant entitled “The Adverse Health Effects of Edible Cannabis Products” from the CDPHE.

(A: But it says they were...)

Disclosures: . . . tasked with reviewing the scientific literature related to the public health effects of cannabis use and exposure

(A: So they're all getting paid to read, what they claim, this is such a joke, is they don't have enough data on it. They've been studying this stuff since the 40s, you know. Literally. They know exactly what it does. And even on postmortem and autopsy they, you can actually see the stuff actually goes into the brain, hey, into where the cerebral spinal fluid will go up into it, and they can actually see the tissue is brown, it stays brown forever. And they can actually widen as well, dilate it too, with it, because of it.)

(A: Anyway, it says that they're really investigating it on a big scale because there's so many problems coming up already. Which they have to, they could probably get more pills out like they always do with any drug, they bring out stuff to deal with side effects of different drugs. Well, there'll be a whole new industry when folk get odd side effects, etc. too, you see.)

Background:
Little is known about the relative harms of edible and inhalable cannabis products.

Objective:
To describe and compare adult emergency department (ED) visits related to edible and inhaled cannabis exposure.

(A: ...because there's a lot of problems with it. It says…)

Results:
There were 9973 visits with an ICD-9-CM or ICD-10-CM code for cannabis use. (A: These are crisis occurrences.) Of these, 2567 (25.7%) visits were at least partially attributable to cannabis, and 238 of those (9.3%) were related to edible cannabis. Visits attributable to inhaled cannabis were more likely to be for cannabinoid hyperemesis (A: That’s vomiting, excessive vomiting.) syndrome (18.0% vs. 8.4%) . . .

That happened in some people because of cannabis. So they're breaking it all down, you see, trying to find out what's causing this in them. The only antidote really so far to this problem they've got is stopping altogether. Once it starts, you'll get it every time you take cannabis. They've got a lot of money involved in this too, for the big, those involved, the people involved.

A mysterious syndrome that makes marijuana users violently ill is starting to worry doctors businessinsider.com / 15 Feb 2018

A new study documented a sharp rise in emergency-room visits linked with marijuana following legalization in Colorado.

One of the key drivers of the ER visits was a mysterious syndrome characterized by severe nausea and repeated vomiting.

(A: So the only way to cure it is to stop using it. They say they're still not sure what causes it.)

The only known way to cure CHS is to stop using marijuana. Researchers still aren't sure what causes it.

(A: And it gives you, some people who end up literally getting uncontrollably sick, and they go into a bath and scald their skin and so on, they don't even feel it initially. And one person has done it for the third time in a row. And it's because of marijuana use apparently. Some folk are having seizures with it, nausea and so on and dizziness. Very similar to minor strokes for some of them in fact.)

In 2004, a team of emergency-room physicians in Australia detailed her experience anonymously alongside a handful of similar cases in the same region that year. In nearly all those cases, the people described an illness that cropped up suddenly, often after decades of normal marijuana use. Piping hot baths were their only relief.

(A: And some of them, for the feeling, you know, that they had with nausea, it says…)

Piping hot baths were their only relief.

(A: Interesting, ‘eh. Anyway, they’re calling it…)

The Australian physicians dubbed it "cannabinoid hyperemesis syndrome," or CHS.

(A: …-emesis, I suppose, is to do with the whole syndrome, including the rashes and so on, well, and vomiting. They also get stomach problems, nausea, and then permanent pain some of them in the stomach area afterwards.)

Yeah, there you go. Anyway, there's some articles, I'll put them up for those who want to read them. Because it’s, and if you're using it's good to know, at least you can watch out for it. Or you might be able to see it in other people, or your children or friends or something, if anything happens you can always put them in the right direction if it starts to happen to them so they can get help. So, mysterious syndrome in which marijuana users get violently ill, blah blah blah, I've got two or three articles on it.

Another article I wanted to put up too, with, you've all heard about the ‘pay to get into universities’, top universities and Ivy League and all that, to set you up there. I'm surprised they even bring it up, it's so common, that, it's always been common. And across the world it's very common in some countries. I think it will get actually worse as more of a rising middle class in some countries appear. They won't think twice about bribery and so on and payoffs to get their, all the qualifications in the right universities they want. But there's an article here too, about, I mean, you can pay for whatever you want going to university, if you've got money, big money. Here you can get your thesis, your PhD thesis written for you too.

EXCLUSIVE: We'll write your PhD thesis... for £6,173! British students cheat their way to doctorates by paying companies to write their dissertations
dailymail.co.uk / 30 Mar 2019

•Three 'essay mill' companies told a reporter posing as a student that they would write PhD theses from scratch for between £2,559 and £6,173

So there you go, it's pretty widespread across the world, I'm sure. But Britain, British universities are stacked with people from across the planet too, with money, big money. As I say, there's a rising middle class and they've got money to spend. So, there you go.

The rise of robot authors: is the writing on the wall for human novelists?
theguardian.com / 25 Mar 2019

It says robots now are involved in writing novels. I knew for a while, ages ago that they were writing small stuff, you know, small stories and stuff. Now they say they're making awfully good ones for stories. But you take that, right, that's computers, and getting back to universities...

I felt guilty when I got my results: your stories of buying essays
theguardian.com / 28 Feb 2017

(A: Politicians called...) Ministers want to get tough with students (A: They'd have to get tough with the ministers who also bought it.) who by custom-made work from ‘essay mill’ websites. Readers share their experiences

Tens of thousands of students are believed to have bought essays online and submitted them to university tutors, a practice known as “contract plagiarism”.

Last week Jo Johnson, the universities minister, called for new guidance to be issued for the next academic year, including tough penalties for students who buy essays and strong warnings about the consequences.

So they're trying to get experts to study them now to find out if they can spot if these are written by, for the people and so on. There's a lot more involved in all of this stuff. That's the way it is, 'eh.

Now, back to this China/US spat basically. Interesting, you'll see the rah-rah articles too of the US. It says…

US Air Force deploys B-52 bombers to Europe in message to Russia edition.cnn.com / 21 Mar 2019

Washington (CNN) — The US Air Force recently deployed six nuclear-capable B-52 bombers to Europe for "theater integration and flying training" exercises with regional allies and NATO partners -- a move viewed as sending a strong message to Russia . . .

So that's the European part, right. And then they talk about the B-52s. But the B-52s have been going forever, you know. And apparently, they're going to use them for another, up to at least the year 2050, that's the big agenda, big plan there. Interesting, because they’re amazing. They must be awfully well maintained all the time. Naturally. But another one...

U.S. Air Force B-52s participate in large exercise over Norwegian Sea - usafe.af.mil / 29 Mar 2019

They put another group back in Britain, into an RAF base in Britain, again, when they had all been taken out a while back, now they're back again. Kind of semi-permanently perhaps, who knows? I'll put that article up too. And also…

Stratofortresses (A: Stratofortresses, that's the same ones, right. It'll be the B-52H Stratofortresses they call them.) fly sorties over South China Sea, first since November - airforcetimes.com / 6 Mar 2019

So again, Russia and China, Russia and China, Russia and China. It's big corporations obviously. Or maybe not so obviously. It might even all be a farce for us to believe in, who knows, hey? I was very skeptical of the so-called Cold War in Europe to be honest with you. But big corporations make a phenomenal amount of money-making missiles and weaponry. Which you never have to use, so you don't have to prove that it's worth the billions that each plane will cost you. Or the missiles for that matter. Which is great profits for the companies that make them, they never had it so good as they did during the Cold War.

Anyway, so there you are, they got the articles to do with flying over near China of course and the South China Sea, over Norway to warn Russia apparently. And we're, it's almost a new cold… I remember one of the first talks I gave years and years ago and I was asked about Russia that had suddenly just given up. Just like Blast From The Past, you know, and at the end you have the dad saying, oh… Because he'd been living underground in a shelter all those years, and he was told that it was all over with, Russia, they'd forgotten about communism and dropped it. He says, oh, so they just gave up and went home, hey? So the dad was told, oh, it's all over, it was finished, they just gave up. He says, they gave up? …just like that?Just like that, he says, yeah, that's what happened? And of course, the dad starts pacing out on the surface the plans for a new underground shelter. [Alan laughing.] But I said in one of the first shows that if they need an enemy they'll just resurrect the bad bear again, you see. And that's exactly what's been happening.

Governments tend to lose, especially corporations, they start losing a lot of hold over the public. Remember, one of the things that they tell you, why you need government is, yeah, you need to keep the peace and so on. If they would all follow it themselves. But they don't. There's a different reality for those up there as to the ones down here. You find that they don't follow the rules that they make you follow. Never do. And yet they want you to believe in democracy. Hm.

And don't forget the Plato said it himself, he says, there's no such thing as justice, there's only the appearance at times of justice, you know, you must give them a show but there's no real justice. I think of the generations that have been used and abused by governments down through time and it's horrific, absolutely horrific story. When you look at, for instance, and how bureaucrats at the stroke of a pen can change thousands of family’s way of living, for instance, traditional way of living. Like the farmers across Europe, when they did that with the EU Dairy Compacts and all the rest of it, putting them all under. They put them all under, families that had been maybe 5th, 6th, 7th generation all went under because bureaucrats decided they couldn't sell the milk and so on where they normally sold it, or butter or anything like that. That's bureaucrats for you. And it's rather sad.

So government is really a different creature than what you think it is. But one of the big holds they have on you, when it comes to nations, is, we're here to protect you. Without that big threat, you see, they lose a lot of power over the people, who would start to almost demand more freedoms. Once it’s peaceful folk will demand more freedoms of different kinds. So you've got to keep something going to frighten the public in order to say, we've got to protect you. And they always find something.

So I hope we're not in for another 40, 50 years of the Cold War, tit-for-tat kind of trade deal… and spite, you know, they're all spite-ing each other. It's better than smiting each other, certainly, but they certainly spite each other. And it's not a good way for being. It really isn't. And we’ll never get told the real reasons behind it. But I think it's partly control. And I think it's also big bigbig business, obviously. Kind of sad.

And it would be fantastic to live waay in the future, just to see how everything across the planet really works out eventually. Wouldn't it? As I say, you won't stop it because it's planned this way but at least it’d be good to document it, just to see it, it would be quite interesting. And life should be interesting, shouldn't it.

For myself, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Apr. 7, 2019 (#1715)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on April 7, 2019. As always, I wish all the best to those out there who tune in all the time to listen to the talks, and have been tuning in actually for many years, many of them. There's always new ones coming in too, new people, and younger audiences as well looking for different things and explanations to really what it's all about basically, like the old movie said, what it's all about, Alfie.

While I think everybody goes through the same phases and stages of trying to figure out, underneath the massive deluge of data that's dumped on us, and education too, under the guise of education often because even history changes all the time as well, you'll notice, that we all ask the same questions of what's going on? Why does it go on? What really is the system we're living in? ...which goes through different periods of transformation although it pretends it's not, and all the different techniques and tricks that are used today to create the illusions of mass demands on behalf of the public to change, really, the system according to a big, big plan.

They've always said that the rich people rule the world, and of course it's very true. Not just myself but many before me have talked about that, all the way back and before even Aldous Huxley, that the dominant minority have always existed and they always will, he presumed at the time during his interview with Mike Wallace. Of course, you have a much, much larger academia than ever before across the planet all working together, different departments and so on, and communication in a global system of Internet, etc., so they really do have tremendous power and they work as the force that brings forth the changes. They even raise the children according to what the need actually is, isn't it? It's according to the need of those who rule and manage the system. They raise the children to be the advocates of whatever is needed 10 or 15 years down the road when they'll bring in different things. That's actually how it is. It's pretty efficient that way.

Over the last few weeks too I've talked about articles by people like Jacques Ellul who talked about efficiency and how efficiency would be used to change and modify the whole, all cultures, all systems, all thought forms basically that we are so used to living in. They are already changing of course and have changed. So basically efficiency and the drive for efficiency, naturally for those in power, the real powers that run the system, overrides any human element, or even catastrophe that is the fallout from their agendas. And they always have lots of agendas of a course. Other philosophers too have talked about necessity and how under the guise of necessity, which is often the excuse that they'll settle on to make the public go along with something. They use necessity... We have to do this to save you from a war, or from yourselves and climate change, and yourselves and man-made global warming and so on, anthropogenic warming.

So they've got it all figured out, and at least hopefully there'll be a few folk down the road in the future who will at least know and they've lived through some of the changes, the mandated changes, and they'll be able to maybe pass them on to some, to anyone else who wants to know down the road. Because that's all you can do. A long time ago I said that there are so many people turning to self-destructive behaviors because they can't find purpose in a system that's fed them all the wrong reasons. You know it's fake and the reasons are wrong for the way things are and the way they're going to go, etc. And you get frustrated if you can't get into the old books, if they're still around that is, to find out what really, really happened at different times, then you'll never understand that the problem isn't yours. The problem is you suspect and probably know certain things are all wrong, you just don't have all the information to put it together to keep your sanity.

Because many people just don't swallow the answers they're given. There are people out there, the more psychopathic, more closer to... And they'll say that everyone's got the psychopathic traits, they're like exaggerations of different tendencies we have in a sense. But the more psychopathic people will naturally gravitate and jump on the bandwagon and start parroting all the nuances and politically correct messages that they're given. They understand what they're for. They understand there's a system that now puts this ahead of everything else and does away with even their opposites and things like that. That's how fast things can be changed, but they'll immediately jump on them. Just like Orwell said that, you know, who are we fighting today, in 1984. Because they kept changing the target in a sense, but you're supposed to not notice that they always change the target, even though you'll adjust your talk to the new country or the new area that you're supposedly at war with. It's the same thing.

It's all well understood at a very high level. Those who belong to the Marxist groups, those who belong to the socialist revolutionary groups in the 1920s and 30s, like George Orwell, they understood that they were well trained. Where they fell out was when they realized that the communistic system really was destroying or wanted to destroy any competition. They didn't really want a parliamentary, you might call it a parliamentary form of socialism. They wanted a more dictatorial form of it. In fact, they didn't believe it would work if you had different dissension groups within a governmental system.

That again was further explained by HG Wells. Because he again was a founder of the Fabian Society with Bernard Shaw and others who were quite open the fact that they had an open channel, physical channel, all the way to Moscow to the Kremlin, and Trotsky was in touch with them all the time. Trotsky was always saying to them, you know, your way won't work, you've got to have an instant revolution. Whereas the Fabian socialists wanted step-by-step change until you simply morph into the new system. And that's really the perfect technique because it's so perfected today you can morph into it within a matter of a few years quite easily from one to the next, without really knowing that you've actually changed [Alan chuckles.] and the system has changed.

It really is wonderful to see it in fact, because it's wonderful in that you understand the power, and the powers of those who've studied us and who can then implement the techniques to make us think and work and behave towards a certain goal or many goals. It is fascinating to watch it. And we truly are, we're living through amazing times when everything that governments once stood for, supposedly stood for at least [Alan chuckles.], have been turned on their heads and are upside down. And now they're, with the same authoritarian techniques of putting it across to the public, they're mandating that the public go along with, really, contrary everything, systems, opinions, directions.

It's quite fascinating to just sit back as almost like an alien being and watching it. And it helps to an extent to understand what they talked about by alienation. Because in sociology and in socialism too and in Marxism they talked about this term of alienation. I mentioned it to someone, and we were talking about it the other day there, what they really meant by alienation.

In the Marxian version it was that, basically those in the lower orders, when studied in the 1800s and much before that too, they literally, especially in the cities, they literally felt they were drifting. Because you're such a low class of unimportance, that's how it was put across then, you really had no rights at all. You might get casual labor, occasionally if you're lucky. You had no healthcare of any kind. You had no welfare of any kind. You were disposable by employers, literally, physically. Because I mean, people died of incredible conditions in factories during the Industrial Revolution and things like that crammed into terrible places. So that's how great the nation was when it was empire in Britain, for instance. And we forget, we're taught to forget it. We come out with this mushy notion of old BBC plays and things where it's all carriages and wealthy middle-class from London or something. That was not the country at all. And even in London, there's a complete other side of that too.

But what I'm getting at is that we're so well studied. Marx did it too. Because they all knew it. Remember, the whole idea of Marxism was eventually revolution, and supposedly the workers at that time, they always presumed they'd always be laborers and workers, that they would supposedly, theoretically, ideally, utopically [Alan chuckles.], run the nation and the world. Which never really emerged of course. It was certainly used by others for their own advantage elsewhere, of course. But the idea, the symptoms they were describing are dead on. Because those who lived in squalor, as they say, because they worked it out in different categories, it's squalor that's the problem. Not squalor as a symptom of the poverty. Then the frequent changes of employment, even, were often because they were getting fired. Or if they were getting a bit older, they'd get fired immediately. Because it's easier to carry someone who's cheap and new and younger, you see. That's never going to change either by the way. And on and on it goes.

So the alienation came because people literally felt, with the conscious mind, you're adrift in the world to an extent. I understand that, you can feel definitely adrift in the world. And if you do understand, and I understood it when I was young going through a lot of some of that too, just understanding what was happening, and things did not make sense. Big, big moves were underfoot, were underway I should say, big moves to change the whole system.

They brought in, they had to bring in actually, because of promises to get folk into World War II and to fight again, since a lot of the promises they'd promised in World War I were not fulfilled, and they gave them a bit more Council housing, primarily Council housing for working-class areas. Then they brought in eventually health care system. Which of course they were dismantling about 30 years later, [Alan laughing.] they were dismantling it as well, and still dismantling it and changing it.

Whatever's done for any, under any pretext or any legitimate reason, generally is altered again to suit, once again, efficiency for those at the top. Years ago, years and years ago they had the big discussions about the common market, they called this little meeting place where they'd just meet and discuss things. Just like the United Nations nonsense, same thing, it was always intended to be much, much bigger. But they fooled the people. They lied to the people. They disclose the fact a few years ago they'd lied to the people from the beginning because they couldn't handle opposition and they'd never get their United Europe through if they did. So, they lied and lied up to the bitter end.

But the public in Britain didn't know it. They were not told. They were not to be told. They actually had that in the memos when they set it up, what its real function was. But I can remember even the farmers who were told to borrow, borrow, borrow, borrow, borrow, this European free trade deal would be such a benefit because they could export even more stuff, etc. etc. And they got loans. And the government encouraged it all, they got loans and put their farms down as collateral. And when the EU came in with its big, big strong hand it had already decided how much of a quota of milk and cheese and butter and so on that you could sell and export. And it was actually cutway down. So farmers were literally told what they could produce, what they couldn't produce. And so many of them went under.

You've heard this before, of course, or other things since then when they did the same thing in other countries, including North America. It's the same con that goes on, borrow, borrow, borrow, big money, don't worry it will all get paid back with these deals. And bingo, there you go. You have literally faceless bureaucrats deciding how much you can produce, who you can sell it to, etc. That's what happens. So there's not, there's no real freedom to decide your future in certain areas, in all traditional areas, put it that way.

With mass unemployment in the West, and again, back to Margaret Thatcher's day and era in the late 70s and into the 80s, she said, get used to it, there would be unemployment, get used to it… To the youth, she says, and,some of them will never see work in their lifetime, a whole generation, she said. Well, that, you understand, they can actually write off all the teenagers who were alive at the time of that speech, and people even younger than that, completely written off. From a system that wanted you to vote for them. And the system that want you to trust them and so on. What an incredible…

But mind you, the techniques of controlling the emotion are so well understood, including anger. She did away with all the old pub licensing hours, for instance, to keep them open all day, etc. And she said, it's better to have the youngsters spending their unemployment or welfare money in the pubs getting drunk then having them protesting on the streets. Which of course, and they'd have to be kind of sober for that one, so. They did that kind of thing. And of course, they deluged the media in movies and that, you got lots of sex and all these different places. Sex and drugs of some kind or another, you see. Alcohol is a drug actually. That was to keep folk from demanding a say in the future of... of their ownfuture, actually.

Now, I really don't think it would have mattered which party was in, personally. I really don't. Because you always find the same agendas go on and on and on. The same thing happened in the US. Same thing happened even when Cameron was Prime Minister of Britain. I mean, folks from outside and inside the country didn't know his policies were the same as the far left Labour and liberal. They all have the same agendas. They all have the same the same agendas because they have to have the same agendas. They are obviously going to fulfill the mandated agendas, cultural, every way, financial, you name it. They all do the same thing and that's the bottom line. The bottom line is, that's what Carol Quigley said too, eventually all the parties will say the same things and strive for the same things. Because they're all being backed by the same rich rich men of the planet basically.

It's the same with, you think of the old Marxist ideas, and communist ideas, and socialist ideas when they talked about the means of production. Well, our own governments, if you can even call them our own governments, really, you know. But the governments all agreed in the West through some strange, we know what it was too, what groups they belong to, and the big movements that back them up and decide things and plan things for them, the think tanks and so on, they know what the agenda was. So they all went for deindustrialization and giving most of the production over to China.   And they did it so slickly. I remember living through it, watching it happen. What got me, in Canada they played it very well, low-key. Folk almost didn't comment on the fact everything was coming, the same things were coming in, the same names and logos on things they were purchasing, but they would say in small print, made in China. You see.

Of course, India now has got big money flowing into it from the World Bank, etc., which we all pay into, to get them really highly developed in industry. And no one complains about other countries coming up. But the fact is, what was given for the West to replace their employment? And it's a real puzzle to me, honestly, as to how, especially young people, are managing. Certain groups went into technology, might be doing awfully well, 'eh. But not everyone is cut out for that kind of work. And we don't have all the factories we used to have where they could lose themselves in manufacturing and creating objects and things and repairing and fixing, are pretty well all gone. And lots of people really enjoyed that. And they had a good employment from it.

So there’s nothing really was put out to replace it. So I really would love to have the government studies on [Alan chuckles.], real percentages of the youth into adulthood and the statistics to see who's working at what and the different percentages, etc. How many are still living with their parents, into the age of 40 or more even in fact, some of them. Or a parent, in fact, single-parent families too to see how they can survive. Because none of them, or very few of them will be able to actually own their own home down the road. Or even today.

Because for most folk now, in this global system, the price of real estate has just gone beyond, around the, it's out to outer space and around the moon and back a few times, I think. It makes no sense to do with reality. But because there are so many people who are now billionaires and trillionaire's at the top, then they decide what the policies and prices are going to be on pretty well all the things, especially things like real estate. Some countries are basically, almost, they're churning out like machines these multimillionaires and billionaires and so on and no one can compete with it even to buy the homes. But then that, again that ties in with the future of a world where you simply won't have private property, for the majority of the public. An elite will have. And it will be accepted.

Interestingly enough too, I was thinking, through all of this, about those who see certain things often in their own time and put it across in some way or another that you can actually analyze it and see how much they knew, or what they'd picked up on. And I was thinking about, there's an awfully good writer who worked for television in Britain. He's a journalist as well as a fiction writer. He's called Dennis Potter. He died about 1994. But he'd lived from the 30s right through the 1994. He was in on the writing game early, as they say, especially with the BBC and so on and he bemoaned the change in the BBC for... what he was literally… when the BBC was promoting promiscuity in the 60s.

Now these are, everybody in the BBC at that time had come from Oxford and Eaton, right. That was pretty well, you couldn't get in and work there unless you did, for most places. So they were a government run agency that worked on behalf of the government. It promoted the Cold War naturally for MI5 and MI6 to keep us all in the state of, well, you know. Because we tend to forget. I mean, you wouldn't even know the war, a Cold War was going on except declarations that you were so poor. Because you were paying off debt from World War I and II, and plus added money we were borrowing to pay for new defense systems for the Cold War. This is how you’re kept under, there is no extra cash, in those days, really, to me.

But they gave you, again, the BBC, it was pop, they call it pop music. And drugs suddenly became available everywhere, you know, LSD, everything, you name it. And these were not getting made, LSD, by little science guys in the basement. [Alan chuckles.] That's another story. However, they gave you the pop music, drugs and sex, you see. And about the mid-60s or so, or the late 60s early 70s they came out with the pill, I think it was the 60s anyway, but the National Health Service could. So really, that's a great way to divert your attention from your future. All you’re thinking about is what you want at that moment, and it might not be that good for you. [Alan chuckles.] But the thing is, youngsters always go for the same things, same temptations and so on when it's put right in front of them. But it took them away from the old staid system of getting married, a lot of them anyway, and having children, and continuing. They want to break the continuity of the old system, that was the whole point of it.

So the BBC promoted it. They got the guys on who were interviewed, stoned out of their heads on live interviews. And it was like a tee-hee laughing matter, as opposed to, isn't that terrible, do you want your children to emulate these characters? I mean it really was, some of them were falling off their seats, for goodness’ sake and talking gibberish. They were so out of it with heavy drugs. But that's what was promoted. At the time too they even put a lot of movies out by the British, they still had a kind of movie system for making movies. And they were ahead of the US with nudity and so on. So that's what they give you in terms of poverty and transition, and the transition is not going to bring you more money [Alan chuckles.], just more poverty in a sense, and debt of course. But it's a great distraction.

Also, aiming towards the children trying to say, you're part of something. There was a revolution they were pushing. Now, here's your governments pushing this cultural revolution during this time period and Dennis Potter who was an icon with the BBC for a while for his awfully good productions, different, novel way of putting different ideas across, he got knocked a few times when he went into a form of, what they claimed was an obnoxious way of putting the sexual content across. He himself apparently was sexually abused when he was about 10 years old by someone he knew, and maybe this had a lot of impact on him. It actually did have a lot of impact in his life. I think in some interviews he actually admitted the horrible effects it has from childhood on for the rest of your life. So, he was putting this seedy side of human nature in his movie system too.

But he also went through vast changes. His dad was a miner, he saw the vast changes in the system. He saw the unemployment right through the 60s, 70s into the 80s. He was acutely aware of what was going on too. But he put some good movies out there, television movies, and one was called Blade on the Feather, about the recruitment of the big spy rings from, they were taken from Oxford and Cambridge. Very good, because he had a lot of contacts obviously in the right places. If you listen closely to that one, if you get it, listen to the little quips in it, they're awfully, awfully telling of the system at the time. And the pretense of who's who, are they really who you think they are, in any position of power, especially politics. He also did interviews when he was dying, just before he died actually in 1994. He did an interview live and was quite frank about the system. He even called his tumor, cancerous tumor, Rupert, after Rupert Murdoch, whom he hated and loathed for, he called it, for destroying and creating a new trashy journalism style for the media, that persists to this day obviously.

He definitely put a lot of things across about the system in almost a covert way, about the seedy side of human nature, and also the truthful side of those, of daydreams mixed with the seedy side of life too which come into it. Because we're, he always said that we're made of opposites basically, that life is opposites. And that Angels, remember too, have opposites tendencies, including Lucifer, for instance, was an angel of light, hm. So, you have opposites in life and there's opposites within humans.

He definitely was rather angry at the destruction of what was called the British press at one time that was, maybe had more ability to say things than later on. And definitely they don't have it now. They don't even attempt to have it now. You have opinion pieces in a lighthearted kind of jocular vein and that's as far as they go. And that's not really news. But it's safe, isn't it.

Now, in the last few weeks of his life, really, he hurried to complete another, his last two plays basically, or movies you might call them. Karaoke was one, which has a lot of himself in it as a writer as the character with the cancer and what happened. In a very clever way he put into it, the death of the character has to be tied in with cryogenics. That led to the next and the last one he wrote. And he said he wanted people to understand and to get more from his work than just enjoyment and pleasure, etc. He put so much in, ha, to the final one which was called Cold Lazarus. It was to do with the head of the writer that had been frozen for many, many, many centuries and then they managed to tap into it eventually, stir memories and so on, from the scientists. But the future he put into it, in the 90s when he wrote that, was where we're going.

He had a world system of the top, almost like star quality CEOs and owners of massive international corporations, living in a life of luxury, which is into the sci-fi realm, you see. Literally. They have the group of scientists working on the head, getting a grant to work on the head, by a woman who owns probably trillions of pounds worth at that time of businesses across the world and investments. So everybody who works, and even if they have degrees and scientists and so on, they still have to work for these very powerful calloused, because as time goes on you lose your old civility in the system where money/power is rather blatant. All the niceties are out the window now, they're incredibly nasty to people if you're employed by them. It definitely is the real class system that's come, that's pretty well here actually, where they create heroes for you to follow that are really just businesspeople, who's often for the businesses are heavily funded with the public-private partnership deal. Because that went through worldwide at the same time from the big institutions. Because what they claimed at the time, again through necessity or efficiency, we've got a have the taxpayers' money for these massive projects.

But in the future in Cold Lazarus everybody works for these incredible magnets. They also have superstar wealthy people who are superstars because they simply, because they are wealthy, incredibly wealthy in what they own, holding companies across the planet, etc. There's no nations as far as I can tell anymore, they have quaint names for regions and that's about it. You'll find too that it's a world where everything's monitored. Remember, this is before 2001. Everything is monitored. All calls. Cameras everywhere. Very Orwellian too of course. And nothing is missed, everything is kept that's transmitted by any kind of electronic means at all, forever. And this is, again, before much of the things that have happened in the West.

The police/military group are all clad in black, naturally, and they're armed to the teeth. They're everywhere in the streets and so on and outside apartment buildings where folk have to rent, etc. They've got heavy, heavy armor on themselves too. The cars that you see in it are driverless. They're kind of hovercraft, they don't go very high, just maybe a foot or two off the ground. They're electric in some way or another. Also they have, there's no driver in them, so driverless cars, automatic. You can't own them, although the ultra wealthy elites can own cars. But the people just have to call up like, almost like a taxi thing that comes to your door. But everyone's got a number and everything you do is a purchase by that number. An order for a taxi, everything goes down as your... So they've got a complete record of where you went, why you went there, etc. etc. etc. Everything is pretty well there.

Potter I think knew a lot more [Alan chuckles.] than you would imagine. Because he got it pretty well spot on, even people who run a global entertainment business, and you know, huge consortiums of TV channels across the planet and so on, are superstars just by the fact that they own it all. So he got it all pretty well down pat, it really is. And the cultural changes too, it's all done there.

We're living through a planned agenda, obviously. Your rights get stripped away under the guise of necessity because you see, there's all these terrible things going on in the world, so everyone has to be monitored. Because you can't trust yourself anymore. They've got to keep tabs on everything that's happening. Understand, under a tyranny, any kind of tyranny, those at the top, no matter what they call it, they can call it utopia, or heaven even, you know, under any kind of tyranny they're always going to try and keep you safe and they do it by using necessity for having to know what everyone's doing or thinking in order to keep you safe.

That's the excuse, you see. Well, you wouldn't want to be unsafe, would you? ...so we've got to tap in and see what you're thinking. Do you know, I looked at this week in fact, I think Google, it's Google or some other group out there are actually going forward. And it's funny, I was just talking last week to someone on this thing too. They're going to the next step too, they want to literally have, to tap into your mind, your brain. Now, that's an old idea. Once in a while they float old ideas again as they go through more experimentation. They're always experimenting, naturally. But they want to intersect with your mind, even without a chip in your head, if possible. Although that might come, it may be more efficient. Again, under the guise of efficiency, right. There you go.

And with the incredible power around any, the computer, especially even the monitor, you'll find it will knock regular a.m. stations of the airwaves if you put a radio near it. That's the power it gives off. And it's not really safe. I personally don't like sitting within that field, I'd rather get as far back as possible. Because it's not safe. I mean, electromagnetic waves, these are very powerful waves, affect the cells in your body. We know this. This is not disputed. What they dispute is how severe it is and, you know, that's what they dispute.

But yeah, I mean a few years back too, remember in the airports they had little documentaries put out there, articles in newspapers about throwing grants... again... You see, whatever is used for necessity, or even terrorism, is great for big business. They had articles in the 90s, in the 1990s that, what are the companies going to do that create all the war industry if there's peace? This is mainstream general big newspapers across the world. What are they going to do, it was a massive income and so on. Well, they said that they were going into surveillance and security systems. And that's exactly what they did. Well, now they're getting the Cold War revived so they can have it both ways. It's so lucrative that you can't give it up, you see. So you couldn't not have a peaceful world and have all these institutions continue, and being so strong and powerful as they are.

And money is powerful. The big billionaires, trillionaire's, and there's trillionaires in the world, there are. They have a lot of clout, an awful lot of clout in society and when politicians are backed and given massive funding from different ones, they are naturally obliged to listen to the funders before they listen to the people who supposedly elect them. Naturally, that's the way it is.

We've got to break out of the shell of pretense that everything is wonderful and everyone out there is honest about it and so on, right. For those at the top to feel safe they must have the data on every single person in real time, by the minute, by the hour, by the day. That's how you stay safe. Because they'd really, I don't think… Power never trusts the general population, it never does. It never has. It never has done. You find from the days of Walsingham and the spy industry from Queen Elizabeth 1st time, they had spies all through Britain, paid full-time spies. Thousands of them checking up, and ones even going through places like Scotland taking a form of census on the population, their health, their manpower strength, even the health of their horses and stuff like that. Quite amazing stuff. Defoe was part of that too later on, you know, that's one of the jobs that he did going through Scotland. So anyway, that's always been the way. And of course, spies too were literally, during Queen Elizabeth the 1st reign and afterwards, they'd watch for Catholics, you know, they'd watch for Catholics. And when priests were forbidden, Catholic priests, they hung them if they found them in the streets. And spies everywhere. I mean, you've got understand that, as I say, history is a horror show, really. It really is. I really don't expect it to be, I mean, you can get…

Today we're so calmed down with a more perfect way of governing us, that they can do it so well without overt force, all of the time. All of the time. It's almost like stroking your mind, 'eh, with, oh, this is okay, look at the happy little bits of these stories you get everywhere, you open them up and all the cat and dog stories and stuff like that, wonderful little things. But you aren't going to get told anything that really matters. News has changed, really changed, in the last 20 years especially, I'd say. And before that too, according to Potter. But in the last 20 years it's definitely changed big time. And people want their paychecks, Potter mentioned that too in a big, big talk that he gave at MacTaggart Center to other journalists, about the fact that they were all pretty well, they're the propagandists, the journalists are the propagandists for the rich and wealthy.

But for those, as I say, that want to understand it, at least a bit of what happened in the past, and how the best of intentions can get used as well, to get the people to go along, there are always those who see incredible profits in times of crisis. I always think of the Council on Foreign Relations. I can't remember which one it was... was it's, Hart, was it Gary Hart at the time, or… who came out in the newspapers and I think at the time of 9/11, 2001, and he said, how can we use, and it's a favorites thing they say, how can we use this crisis to our advantage. He was talking about their global agenda, for instance, and that's what they mean, to our advantage. He wasn't talking [Alan chuckles.] to the general public. To our advantage. And you've heard it since then by top business people and so on, how can we use this crisis to our advantage, and, why let a good crisis go to waste and so on. It's even in the movies now that kind of thing.

Because that's the way it really is, isn't it. That's how it really is. So the whole idea that they've settled on, united with the mantra of global warming then turning into climate change, and as the Club of Rome said, famine, plague, desertification, all that kind of stuff, droughts, meaning overpopulation, that's what they really mean by it, that would fit the bill, man was the enemy. So, we've got a war on humanity itself. There's too many of us. We're all consuming. We are the enemy of the planet, we're the enemy of those who control it all, so we've got to stop them, be ruled by those who are... who will rule us from birth to death.

Down the road it will happen, you'll go into the state where they'll decide, they're already talking about it again, but they always float the same ideas in top sources in universities and professors and all that, who all belong to, again, the big global CFR type system, and they say, well, you know, we should really have people licensed to have children. Then they'll say... And lots of folk will agree with them because there's an awful lot of terrible parents out there and horrible parents and so on. But you can't take the complete rights from the people under the guise of the minority do it. You can't do that. It's too easy to demand the wrong things or demand what controllers want you to demand. To your detriment, really, if you look at what the controllers are doing to even children and what they're indoctrinating them with at the moment, by law. [Alan chuckles.] You can't keep falling for the same reasons that they give you.

But they also have said that eventually, I remember reading about in the future... Because way back in the late 60s they had articles in the newspaper about the coming utopia. I'm not kidding you. They had the big global meeting, the Council on Foreign Relations/Royal Institute of International Affairs held in Britain, when they even decided what countries would be basically tourist countries, like Scotland, they were going to turn it into a tourist country, it would be totally deindustrialized. Well, they did that, that's true enough. And other countries too. Nothing was put to the vote for the public. These are private institutions that run the world. They are the establishment, on behalf of the ones who own it all.

But anyway, they also said that, yeah, and they had drawings of people in togas, Roman togas, where they'd have conquered the climate and they could create climate, and you'd all walk about in these Roman togas and sandals on your feet. All your needs would be given to you, and managed, because everything would be so automated, etc. And those that needed, humans that needed to give employment will rotate, they'll rotates a certain class at the top who would volunteer to work, and it would be a privilege to be accepted to volunteer to work for the system, this global system, as they walked about in Roman togas. Which must mean in Canada and some other countries they've eliminated mosquitoes, I'd suppose.

But anyway, this is what they floated around, and they were telling folk how wonderful it was going to be. Then when they totally deindustrialized and they cemented the European Union and did their quota system on production of even dairy products and food, and decided who is going to import what from whom, and they cut out all the mutton and so on from New Zealand and Australia, things like that, and then they dumped stacks of butter and dairy from France onto Britain, put other folk under. This is their utopia.

You understand, they give you such incredible lies. Remember, the communist revolution was going to bring in utopia, that was the idea. And under the guise of bringing it all in, you would have a system of giant giant supermarkets, like we have today, where you can get everything, BuildAll center types, you get all your, what you need for hardware, everything. But people would go in and with a cashless society, they wouldn't even eventually need cash, you might get credits, you see, and tokens given to you, like Russell said. But you'd only get, take, they would have no staff there, you'd pick up what you wanted, automatically it'd be I guess check out or whatever. But the people would be so well-trained and decent that they would only take what they needed, not any extra. That was their incredible utopia.

Well, in that case you're going to be talking about changing the choices of humans. Because even the bad choices come from a human trait, and many traits actually, even survival. People often will shoplift because they're terrified of whatever. There's a good documentary up there of a woman who was, one of many women that were sent off to the terrible Soviet gulags in Siberia. Awful stories, incredible stories of them. And when they come out, they're alive some of them, and they were alive then anyway back in the 90s, maybe or 80s. One of them, literally, she showed you her house. Big big trays, baker's trays of loafs of bread. She said, I can't eat them, she says, but I can't stop myself from ordering them. The fear of the starvation she went through is horrifying to her. That will never change.

There are many traits that are just natural traits that become exacerbated and amplified. But terrible Pavlovian situations and reflexes, as she's got now, she just can't stop, you see. What a horrible, horrible outcome. That was their utopia, you see. And if you disagreed with their utopia you were put in the mental hospital. Because you had to be mentally ill to criticize the Soviet system, that was what they diagnosed you with. Since it was a perfect system, right, so you obviously, you're psychotic.

I see unfortunately the same techniques being rolled out under a thousand different guises throughout society with what's now called politically correct mandates, and as Orwell had, thought crime and all that kind of stuff. Tyranny really is fairly continuous. There's different strengths of it for different periods, but it's the same techniques that are always used to silence people.Because Tyranny does not like something that's so important, and that is the ability to speak. Whether you like it or not, you have to have the ability, it doesn't matter if a person is stone crazy, the fact is, they've got the right to speak. Because after all, it's someone else, someone's deciding he is stone crazy, right. But he’s still got the right to speak. Or she, it depends, you know.

But the thing is, tyranny always silences it, under guises that they're mentally ill or whatever it happens to be. And don't believe the same tyrannies, that back in the 80s and 70s started dismantling all the psychiatric hospitals across the Western world, at the same time, by the way, and in the States as well, and putting them out on the street. They really care, 'eh? [Alan chuckles.] You'd better start thinking here, hm.

The old saying, if it walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it's probably a duck. So, you see the same symptoms arise in society, it doesn't bode well. When you see well-trained massive mobs, well organized mobs being allowed loose on streets by your governments, this isn't spontaneous, this isn't just a happenstance flash mob, spontaneous. These are, this is obviously authorized to get something else through. Even the clashes they're creating everywhere in the world. And I really think there'll be a lot more to come. I really do.

Because I can't believe in this age that governments are going to stand back and just let it happen. They're getting something out of it. It's a mandate down the road. And I mean, all kinds of them too. I mean, there's even ones now that are attacking farms in different countries. And now they've got an international, they want international groups to do it all in the same day, etc. As an example. What you're seeing, getting back to the Soviet system, when there's no tolerance, you've got an intolerant society. And when it's mandated, things are mandated by law, then your governments are obviously intolerant. How can you be Democratic? How can they be? They can't be. They're one or the other, which one, which is it?

The whole idea of democracy is something balances the other. That's why they had the idea of extremes in government parties. Well they don't, they're all the same pretty well, aren't they? And it's a dangerous situation. Eventually they hope to wither away the governments, as the state would wither way according to Marx, you know. And we all accept this form of being governed, or really, ruled. And even though we're ruled at the moment by forces unseen, and massive think tanks across the world that work privately and dictate to governments with the same, because governments certainly use them all the time, we don't vote them in, then we are run by a very mysterious system at the moment, aren't we.

So as I say, I hope down the road that even the newcomers will stop blaming themselves for everything they think is wrong in their life. I do understand what they mean by alienation for a lot of folk who feel it. They feel despondent. They feel they don't fit in. There's no purpose down the road for them. And believe you me, there's reasons why you're like that. And very possibly, just informing yourself of the past and getting into the societies that we really live in, and the systems that control everything, it's very, it's all out there actually if you want to dig for it. There's no conspiracy stuff involved.

Because the big think tanks publish so much of this stuff themselves, and universities that work with them publish a lot of articles about how control is used for what they call peace, etc. It's awfully interesting too that even, and I always remember the old saying that the Soviets said, that their struggle would be over when there's peace. Because they kept pushing peace and it got awfully hard for the West to, young folk in the West, they say, well, they want peace for goodness’ sake, you know. But no one thought to... You see, definitions are so important. And what they said was, peace, when they really, really pushed, peace is the absence of all opposition. That's what they meant.

Khrushchev said something similar too in his talk, I think it was in the US in the 1960s. He said that,you're all worried about something you shouldn't be worried about. He says, your children will all grow up in a socialist, he's talking about a Soviet type socialist system, and it will all be quite natural to them.But they'll do it without struggle. They'll do it without any terrible, terrible consequences. He says, they'll grow up in it, naturally, never knowing that it was literally designed for them to do so. That ties in with the Reese Commission, and that's another story again.

However, I've prattled on long enough tonight. I didn't even mean to go this far. I meant to just touch on Dennis Potter's Karaoke. It's entertaining. It has the system inside of it, and it has his own story inside the story, as he's got cancer, he's actually in a sense like the character in it. And then Cold Lazarus with the future. That's even for the budgets of the day they did pretty well I would say in showing you a future that's still, it's more apparent now than it was even then.

So before I just sign off here, I'll put up some articles that will tie in with what's current. Because it's hard to find current stuff now. It's all, there's very little real news anymore, it truly isn't, you know. Things that are important we're not really told about, that way agendas can go forward from government and we're simply oblivious of them. But there's one here, I've mentioned it before, about the freedom of the press. Awfully good.

George Orwell - The Freedom of the Press - Orwell's Proposed Preface to ‘Animal Farm’
orwell.ru

Orwell explains once again, I'm going to put that up, he explains why you must have different opinions about everything. You must have it. If you give in under one topic, you'll give up with all the rest of them too. And you won't like it down the road.

Also, got new taxes, new tax, bad news for those on the land and so on. We're getting all the carbon taxes coming down.

Isn’t that interesting, hey. [Alan chuckles.] So I mean, the guy who said, you're all stupid f'ers, he said, you know, is now saying the government has to come into it and help controlling it. There you go. It's… And I understand a lot of the stuff, folk can't even be decent on the Internet. But then again, you don't know what the bots are, and there's government agencies got stacks of bots they can turn loose on anybody, that they'll put out the real hate stuff and hate speech and all that. Of course they do. There's nothing, you don't know where any stuff is coming from that you read.

New synthetic biology programme makes use of natural capabilities to gather intelligence

One day, like Prince Charles who talked about talking to his plants, you know, they'll start talking back to you.

Also too, again, how they keep changing names when the public start to catch on to the news, in their conversations, like NAFTA, North American Free Trade Agreement, and all the terrible things to do with it, and so they changed it to USMCA, which is more of a mouthful. But it's really just NAFTA rebooted. But also, the TransPacific Partnership deals too that everybody was complaining about at the time, are all incorporated apparently into this new USMCA. I'll put that article up if anyone really cares to know about it and so on and check it out for themselves. You've got to find out for yourselves.

I haven't gone through it all to see, but that wouldn't surprise me at all. Because they already did the free trade things for the Pacific Rim negotiations, separately as well, they had already signed these things in. And the public were completely oblivious, or ignorant of what they are, aren't we? And do you have time to read thousands of pages of things? Of course you don't. Neither do the politicians, they don't read them either. They don't. I mean, that's not being facetious, it's true.

USMCA: A NAFTA Reboot? - thenewamerican.com / 3 Oct 2018

And then another one too, this one here on France cited as a source of largest number of wealthy migrantscoming in, I think, or coming and going actually. And Canada, it says…

Estimated 8,000 millionaires immigrated to Canada last year, report says France cited as source of largest number of wealthy migrants
cbc.ca / 23 Feb 2017

Canada attracted just under 10 per cent of the estimated 82,000 millionaire migrants who changed country last year, according to a recent report.

(A: It's a breakdown into the wealthiest, well, the countries where they're moving to, mainly for safety and so on, you know. It says…)

New World Wealth said the inflows into Canada were boosted by large-scale migration from China into Vancouver, and from Europe into Toronto and Montreal.

Canada the second most popular destination for wealthy Chinese emigrants

A South Africa-based market research group, New World Wealth said the overall number of millionaires on the move last year around the world rose to 82,000 from 64,000 in 2015.

(A: Now, what they claim here is…)
Improved education and higher personal safety were the main drivers when those wealthy people sought out a new destination, Andrew Amoils, head of research at New World Wealth, told CNBC.

So that makes sense too, they want to get into the US, the big Ivy League universities they want to get into, that stick with them for life. They'll meet the people they'll work with down through life as CEOs of corporations, and government. Like Maggie Thatcher said too herself, with Britain when she started to use the taxpayer's money to fund the private schools and universities and so on, and university system. The class system is alive and well and believe you me, class doesn't care where you come from as long as you've got the money. And you can learn, you delve into this new, I think Jacques Attali called them, the new nomads, they go across the world, and where the money is is where they go. And they'll move again if they need to. That's how it's to be for the future, nomadic life existence.

Australia has the fastest growing number of millionaires on the planet – and you'll never believe the countries we beat. - Dailymail.co.uk / 29 Sept 2017

It's interesting, this all comes out at the same time. It may put a different spin on different things, they may come in with lots of money, but will they benefit you? And I very much kind of doubt it. Most of these big wealthy people have international investments in the same stock markets and stuff like that, you know. So it's just the way it is.

Also, I'll put these articles up regardless anyway. But let me see now, oh yeah, the carbon taxes. A whole bunch on carbon taxes. Again, the private organizations, the think tanks, even some of them labeled as charities are driving and pushing it all. A lot of Washington DC based conservative think tanks that are charities, or labeled as charities, are promoting the carbon trading schemes and so on. Years ago I gave talks, because I listed all the companies, international companies that were all for bringing in carbon taxes. And you're thinking, oh my goodness, it's going to cut back on… No, they're not. They're going to make a fortune off of it because they trade the carbon, it's like a stock market. They were all for it. Because again, how can they let this crisis go to waste, you see. So you create the appearance of a crisis, then you get the public to fund the beginnings of the kind of carbon credits to trade with – we did, I read the articles at the time – and then they get them for nothing and start trading with them. And they can get billions off of it.

Well, what a… We just... We don't… We're not… You either have that gift of following that kind of technique or you don't. I, when it comes to money, I just don't understand it at all. Honestly, I have no interest in this or that or investments or how things are done. To me, it goes over my head, I kind of shut down for it. Since school I've done that pretty well when it comes to numbers. But the ones who have the abilities to catch this stuff, they can make fortunes. And they do, naturally.

And...

At the same time as they dreamed up the whole idea of blaming us as being the problem, too many of you. And they're going to get awfully even more rich from it, from their carbon exchanges. Remember that Al Gore was involved with literally “Blood and Gore Carbon Exchange” to begin with, 'eh. [Alan laughing.] So he got all lot to win from pushing it all.

Anyway, I'll put these articles up for those who care about it or are vaguely interested. We're all going to pay regardless. Nothing's going to change it. And then getting back to...

So we'll have to wait and see what's going on there. I don't know if it's just to keep his name in the paper.

Because it's true enough, when the limelight is off is when the wolves... And the wolves have plenty of time, they can wait. Just like they always say, tribute to the devil, time is on their side. They wait and wait and then they pick you off when they think no one's looking. And it's true, every regime has done that. And they will always do that, I suppose.

And also…

dailymail.co.uk / 4 April 2019

•A UN department for sustainable development teamed up with Oceanix, MIT and the explorers club

•The partnership plans to build a prototype that will be open to visits by members of the public within months

And that will be the multi billionaires [Alan chuckles.] that we're reading about here because they'll end up getting investments in it. They'll get backed at least dollar for dollar by the governments using tax money and so on. Interesting, hey, how things go.

But believe you me, you're never going to have a static system, that's what people think, often wish they had, a static system. They even had articles out many, many, many years ago about, stop it, stop it, you're changing too quickly. You don't have time to catch your breath, things just, even buildings that your parents could refer to are no longer standing, they just knock them down in no time. So you can't even relate to people that are just a few years older than you. Everybody, again, this idea of alienation, hm, it's all part of a technique too.Sad.

Middle-aged treated like 'second class citizens' - telegraph.co.uk / 4 April 2019

We're given no choice in the things and no say in anything either. As I say, at least you have the supposed, supposed system of a democracy where opposing viewpoints are supposed to be discussed. Believe you me, if you don't, if you don't have that you're, the elite themselves will bring you into the Cold Lazarus system in no time at all, with no opposition. Then you can never go back to having a say in anything, or even a pretended say in anything, or even some other people that you vote into speak for you, it won't happen.

The public are a nuisance, an awful nuisance to those who want to rule and promote and guide the world. That's why it's far easier to go this way, ween you off of even the involvement in what they're up to and getting you used to being simply governed, until you stop asking questions or even asking who's governing you, you see. Then they can get things really done quickly. And that's the agenda folks. That's what it's about.

Anyway, sorry for prattling on. As I say, I was only going to spend 10 minutes on just what I've said here. But I think it's important because I think time is running out. And I feel it in the air. I feel it. I feel there's big big changes happening. There's definitely something. It's almost like a switch being pulled or switched on or off or whatever, but as you go into this new system of more intolerance. And it's rather sad that. I don't think it bodes well at all.

But that's the way it is, folks. So, I hope you get something out of it. I hope a lot of the young people get something out of it too and realize that life is not just fun and games and the occult. The occult just simply means 'hidden', remember. We truly are in a sense in an occultic system, most of what the public thinks that they should know is, they don't know at all, they're not given. Secrecy rules and governments of course say that they must run things in secrecy or they'd get nothing done at all. There's a partial truth there too, you'd always have so many objections, nothing would get done or fixed, the roads or whatever, that kind of thing. But it goes too far when folk get off of what the rules are, you know, or they throw the rulebook out the window, which is a terrifying thing to contemplate.

So for myself from a still really end of winter, there's a thaw going on but a lot of snow to move yet and get down before the grass shows here, for myself, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on April 14, 2019. I hope you're all ticking along okay and surviving the storms of life because we certainly have lots of them don't we. And if you're aware of the basic things that are happening in society to do with change, big change, when you realize that big change is planned and authorized long before it manifests, then it's interesting to follow it and be prepared mentally, if nothing else, for the various onslaughts to your sanity which are going to happen. Because we truly are living through vast, vast planned incredible changes.

Things the people would have laughed at 40, 50 years ago, even though we had many top players back then even in the culture industry and the guiding of the culture industry coming out with their books, people who belong to the big think tanks and organizations that plan the world type society in a socialistic system, with all the banks working along with them basically, there's no real secret there. It's just that at the time when they write these books it takes a good 40, 50 years to manifest it all, and by that time no one really cares, that they've been led like sheep into the pen. And sometimes the pen is quite cozy. And that's what you find by the system that really rules us.

Again, I always referred to big, more well-known players because they're popular, they could write in the fictional form about a society that was to come. That was what was debatable about things, could you actually make that kind of society happen, like Brave New World. At the time, naturally people thought, no, that's silly, it's science fiction. And yet here we are. We have a system where everything really is being planned from birth to death, to manage billions of people across the whole planet. And you have massive, massive tax funded investigations into the alteration of various human genes and artificial conception, all of these kind of things happening. And they definitely are testing, have been for years testing, literally implanting fertilized ovum into artificial wombs and things like that. Just like Brave New World. It's always been a goal, it seems, of those in the scientific realm.

As you live through it, naturally, you find that whatever generation you happen to be in at the time, have already adapted, and been guided to adapt because you're always guided to accept things. Because most folks don't really have deep opinions on things that seem kind of outside of them, oh, that won't affect me and so on. Therefore, they don't really have self concluded opinions. They are brought to their conclusions by little bits and bytes of information by experts, very well calculated to bring them to the proper decisions, you might say. So we adopt opinions as opposed to actually arrive at them by ourselves, by your own reasoning.

And let's be honest too, in a life where you have struggles, and with finances, jobs, all the things that come with being alive, then naturally too you don't have time for all of this. People really are kept in ignorance because they're kept running. I can remember years and years ago when they had the first big layoffs from the middle classes, to do with executives and people in office employment and so on. When they said that there's just too many people, we don't need you like we used to need them all the time. And they started laying them off at 40. That was a big big thing at the time, lay them off at 40, get younger folk in. Then they said that the days of having a lifetime job were gone basically. At that time there were people alive whose parents were coming up to retirement, often who'd worked in factories their whole lives, sometimes the same factory their whole lives, and that was all gone of course with the big agenda to deindustrialize a lot of Western countries. And it was written about at the end of World War II in fact, they would bring in deindustrialization of certain countries in the West.

So you live through the big big plans, but to most folk they live through them, they don't know what's happening behind it, why the causes are there. They don't know why they're now told you'll need about four or five jobs, maybe even more, for your entire life, a lot of part-time ones. So and people are doing this, and life becomes more uncertain. You find that you don't have the time, you're too busy running to get by, just to get by. Especially those in the cities where you've got huge rents to pay if you're renting. You've got to have a big income to maintain [Alan chuckles.] just your lifestyle basically, or even just, just somewhere to keep you dry and warm from the elements.

So you can't blame the people for not knowing the why's and wherefores'. A lot of people do, and I understand it, I understand those who've been following this very meticulously, how they become full of disdain for those who simply don't care. But I think also that it's part of human nature, it's my opinion. Because we're not the first people to study humans. It's been going on forever. And those who, I call, owning us basically have been studying us forever. And they do own us. When you read the scientific, really, the studying of human nature, going way back for many centuries in fact, they understood so much about basic human behavior. Especially the crowd. Even the book called The Crowd too is one of the earliest ones that was allowed for the public to read.

But it was understood well, well before that by those who advised Kings, Queens and royalty and all kinds of governments long before that. The advisers understood the sciences of human nature. So you always have this thing called the silent majority, that's the more modern term for it, those who really don't have strong opinions about very much at all. Then you have something similar, when you look at those that Karl Marx... who also had great data. I mean, he used the London library at the time, the big library there on the reference sections, etc. He had fantastic data on human nature. He called the general population, and even those who followed, who would go for, they would follow anybody, if any dictator came along and took over the country they'd follow them without a qualm, and whatever system came in they'd follow that system with a qualm. He called them the lumpen proletariat, the ones who really didn't give much thought about anything at all as long as one day could be much the same as the day before. That probably is, there's probably a truth to that too. Most folk really stay out of that side of things; they just go along with the flow. They also know that most folk will take the path of least resistance, which is the easier way. It's understandable too. Who wants to have truncheons bashed on your head every so often or be cattle prodded? Who wants that? So it's quite understandable, folk will go along to get along basically. Well understood.

The problem is always with those who know a bit more about what's going on and who cause a bit of a stink. And they are generally dealt with too by a system which has many ways to disable a nuisance. Many ways. Very old techniques and new techniques all combined. It's a traditional thing. A good example of that is for instance with, if you take Julian Assange and the recent blitz of media with their handouts given to them. Just condemning someone, in the standard technique of defamation of character, they assassinate the character. When they don't have really any facts to put across there it's the character they always go for. Standard, standard, standard. So when you see people who've been taken down by, the person was dirty and unkempt, you know, and a narcissist... I mean, this is what he got the first day when they went in and got him.

It's standard, right out of the book of trying to... Because most people... Again, the vast majority of the people fall for the simplest propaganda. Which is, the guy is dirty, oh, he's filthy, he didn't wash his dinner plates. Well, that's a good reason to send eight cops in to arrest him, 'eh? Or, he smelled, hm? And this is their claim of course, you see, and you get a handout too, all the press showed a bathroom that was spotless, the one that I saw. So, there's a bathroom. Well, there's a spotless bathroom. But apparently, he left it soiled at one point. Hm. Stuff like that, you know it's just ridiculous. For anyone who wants to think about it, it's just ridiculous. Things like that. So it's meant to turn folk off and say, well I guess he's just, like a dirty tramp or something.

Julian Assange branded 'narcissist' by judge as he is found guilty of breaching bail conditions - news.sky.com / 11 April 2019

And then you find an article that comes out, supposedly, from the dating site from years ago where he'd called himself a pigheaded something or another. In other words, bring a sexual angle into it if possible.

Assange sold himself as sl*t' and a 'pig-headed intellectual' in 2006 OkCupid profile, claims dating-site co-founder following his arrest
dailymail.co.uk / 12 April 2019

And it should make folks think too, if they're putting [Alan laughing.] stuff up on dating sites, if it's true, right, if this even exists as a real dating site, you're an idiot if you've got your data on it, if the people are handing it to the press. Hm? Hm? [Alan laughing.] Like, really? [Alan laughing.] But regardless, everything is just, rather than face what the guy is supposedly have done, being a narcissist or someone accusing you of that, out of the blue, is not a crime, to be a narcissist. Hm? And leaving dirty dishes in the sink is not, is not a reason to storm a person, raid them and lock them up. Hm? Even if he did, who knows, we'll never know, if you put up some ad for whatever on a dating site, so what? Is that why you arrest people?

So the first thing is, make the person seem like a degenerate in the public's eyes rather than face any real charges there, what he showed the public. You see, they don't want to reiterate what he's supposed to have done by showing the public the different nefarious things that governments were up to. And what big businesses were up to too, big big businesses. And how your reality is a bit of a fiction in fact. Nevermind the spying they're doing on the public. They don't want to go into the reality of it all because they don't want to dredge it all up and make the public aware of it again. [Alan laughing.] You see? But anyway, that's what they do.

And don't forget, don't forget there's a person in the States who's worked with intelligence services who said that the intelligence services has got a thousand ways to get you. And they do, they confabulate and so on, that's part of their job is espionage. You see. And of course, it gets worse and worse until they do a lot more worse things than that. But the thing is, once you become isolated, and once they can get you out of the public eye, no matter how long it takes, then the wolves move in. And they hope to just eliminate you with no fuss, you see, because there's no public support around you at the time. Always remember that. Always remember that. So if anyone suddenly disappears and you've got all these terrible stories coming out, you can pretty well guarantee it's a set up. And that's just a standard way that it's done. And they'll be the worst people, that you like, would end up being the worst terrible monsters that history ever could come up with. That's just how it's done, folks. Standard stuff.

But yeah, anyway, as I say, that was the first real kicker was when the judge supposedly, and the handouts just handed to the papers too just printed the stuff. Gleefully, because they got nothing else to say these days, the media, you know. And of course, the media too happened to be shown up for years with what was called alternate media and exposes of those who were showing you stuff that the media wouldn't even touch. Because they're all bought and paid for and they serve the interests of the Masters, don't they? Don't forget, the media, the general media, and it's admitted too, have always been an essential part of government. They help govern the people by deciding what you're going to think about, what they decide you're going to 'know', and what you're not going to be told about. That's essential, you see.

Remember too, a long time ago I was on a show in the late 90s and I said, the Internet, really, with its free… And at that time I noticed, I didn't even have a computer at that time, but I knew enough about them by what I read in the papers and so on. I did read about the big debates that government agencies were having at the time about keeping control of the nations in an age, if there was any possibility where people could communicate directly with each other across the whole planet, and they also, since government really depends on secrecy, then they were terrified, really. Because a whole new system would have to be developed basically to stop information getting around the world, and this is across the world in no time at all, without their permission.

They had articles about information warfare was the big upcoming thing and how they were preparing for it in advance. And I knew, I knew, even though a lot of the techies at the time, and even those in Silicon Valley thought it would be a great thing, they thought they could bring in their world of freedom, a form of freedom which the public had never had before, by sharing information, again, which the public had never had before, and giving them the ability to communicate across the world with it all very quickly, they thought it would be a champion for the righteous cause. Of course, at the same time, the establishment who runs governments were setting up the opposition already to make sure that they would be in charge of it. Because they could never allow the public to be in charge of, or in control of data in fact, for that matter.

Power is a very intricate thing and it's very, very deep, there's many layers of it. And they decide, those in power, what you're going to believe and have for truth basically. Very complex thing indeed. But then they said, yeah, they'd have the warfare, and they would go through it and they wouldn't lose. So they'd have a little reign for a while where the people thought, yeah, yeah, for the first time we can say this, we can say that, we've got this data about this, that and the other, and various scandals, etc.

But I knew then, in the 90s, on a show I said that,you might get 20 years out of it but it will be all reined in. And I said at the time too in the 90s, they'll leave you with one thing that everybody knew back in the 90s, and those who were computer illiterate basically, like myself, but they would, they said, oh, everybody knew, and the papers made sure that you knew it, that there was lots of pornography on it. That was to get, to make folk get in and get the darn thing, get computers, you see. Lots of pornography. And sure enough, you can see youngsters going into libraries on their break time and commandeering the new computers that were put in there. I remember asking, I said, my God, they're really enjoying them, they must be really handy for education. They said no, they're coming in to try and get into pornography. And I have no doubt after the children went in, then the adults went in too, you see. So everybody knew what it was about, that was the big selling point, to encourage folk to use, get computers.

And sure enough, you got maybe, almost 20 years of, well, even less than that in fact. I mean, once 9/11 happen in 2001, then that was part of the excuse to come in big time on forms of censorship and spying and all the rest of it. But yeah, 20 years later basically, almost 20 years later you're down to watching your p's and q's. They have agencies involved now to try and pick up anything which would be offensive to anybody. Which is pretty well impossible, you know. Today they've pushed this nonsense about people being offended to a level which is definitely a massive psychological warfare technique that's being used on the public. To train the public into something the United Nations, I talked about this years ago too, talked about, where they said they would train the public to be self policing, you'll police your own thoughts. That's part of what they'd always talked about, training you. That goes back again to the old Marxist philosophies too of training the public and ensuring they train themselves too. So it’s pretty well all here today. You're left with vague topics that are safe, at the moment, you know.

But don't ever think that the government is a passive servant of the general population. There's nothing further from the truth. Government is power. Power is never nice. Power sometimes can be awfully nice and putting on good faces towards the public, but behind the smile there's still that power of authority. And again, the system you're living under is run towards ambitions that are not from the general public. They're from those who already have power over those in power, you see. And it's something, if you're not a psychopath yourself and you don't like having to always beat people at games or whatever or always win, always. When, if you don't like that, then you'll never figure out the mentality of these people. They're addicted to control. Absolutely addicted. And power really is control. Ultimate power.

But that's the way it is. And it isn't just a recent thing as I say. Long before 9/11 happened we already had Omnibus crime bills in Canada passed in the late 90s, before we had all these terrorism things happening. It was basically an anti-terrorism bill, and everybody was scratching their heads at the time saying, why is this getting passed, nothing's happening, everything's fairly peaceful, you know. Because governments knew what was planned in the future and the public were not, you see.

Government is like any big business. Big businesses have to plan how to hold on to control. Governments do the same thing. Business and governments are very similar that way. And they have goals. Like the United Nations has its communistic type goals, 5-year, 10-year, 50-year plans for different parts of agendas. The Communists used that. They declared them very openly. And the Western countries are just the same. Big business is just the same. How many shareholders do they expect to have by the year so-and-so and blah blah blah? That's how they do it. And plan their distribution areas across the world, and areas of influence. That's how it's all done.

No one's sitting by and we're just stumbling down through space willy-nilly by itself. It doesn't happen like that. Anymore than the sexual revolution, which often gets affirmed as being back in the 60s. But really, they were doing it in the 1920s. I mentioned it before, it didn't quite work quite well because they didn't have the pill, they didn't have ways of dealing with the outcome of it all. They didn't even have penicillin back then remember. Once they had what they wanted, they went back to it, launched it back, with the miniskirt and all, just like the Charleston outfit, miniskirt.

So, things come back when they're ready to be implemented. And out of it comes, and it's lauded openly at the time too by those in what was called the communist circles and socialist circles as a good beginning to the end of the family unit, was free sex, etc. It would be the end for the need for marriage.   Which it pretty well has, hasn't it? And folks who get married today are kind of looked down upon, so they're... [Alan chuckles.]   By the media, again. Which must tell you a lot about media, what its purpose really is, you know? It's a tool for those who own the system.

But again, I didn't mean to go into all this stuff tonight because it's just too intricate and you can go on forever in so many different parts of it. There's no point. The point is today, or tonight is simply that those who understand what's happening have to always keep a hold of their sanity. That's the point of it. Everyone's very prone, I think these days, I think any thinkers are very prone to perhaps get down, or even depressed. Because you're living through a system of agendas basically and when you realize that, really, there's very little choice given… When you're under tyrannies of different kinds you don't get choices, that's the point. You get monopolies. You get a monopoly of pathways, authorize pathways of what you can do.

For a simple example is a cashless society. Well, many folks don't like cashless. They like to have cash for basic stuff. That's being phased out by those who own the system. Obviously. They give you a thousand reasons why it's better, blah blah blah blah blah. But you all know when you're dependent on another power, another power, you see, the power being that of ATMs, etc., and computers, and when they go down, you’re stuck. Well, those who own the intermediaries like computer systems for banking and so on, have had a tremendous power over you, they've got leverage over you. So you should always have choices, in every area of life if you want to think you're really still free.

Now, I've mentioned many times too that it's easy to go back and read the writings of Francis Bacon. I call them his resumes, really. The point is of showing off his ability to understand human nature of the general populace and how to govern them, in something he drummed up for one of the kings of the time. He was trying to impress them. Just like Machiavelli did with the book we call The Prince. How techniques are used and understood by advisers to those in power, those who have the power on governing human nature. An awfully good one by Bacon but I always have a good chuckle, because [Alan chuckles.] I mean, you have eternal truths, and again, all basically founded on experimentation on the general public, even centuries ago and probably even longer, maybe even it might be thousands of years ago. But he said, to impress the King he says, when you want, when you need so much money for, extra money for the treasury, he said, don't put a big tax out there for a big increase on anything the public need. You see, it's always on what you need. That's where they get you. It doesn't matter if it's food or, they'll do it in one way or another, even though you think your food isn't taxed, there's taxes behind everything, for those who even grow it and what they use to grow it, now they have to even by their seed. They can't even keep their own seed half the time anyway, since it's modified terminator genes so they have to go back, it's a monopoly right there, you see, those who control the seed now. Anything that controls anything you need is a terrible power, has a terrible power of monopoly. It is monopoly. And they give you no choices actually.

But Bacon said, he said, so rather than put a big increase on something, the folk will grumble and may have occasion to rebellion, you see, he says, just put a penny on this item and a penny on that item. That was a lot of money back then, mind you, and a penny on… And scatter it so that the people, it simply confuses the public because they're not buying all of these things at the same time, you see. But over the course of the year they will get, let's say, the 5 pound extra or whatever they were after in those days by the pennies here and there, you see. That's how it's done.

And we get it too. They scatter it all over the place. It would be a full-time job even trying to keep track of it, all the different hidden taxes, hm. And now they're putting carbon taxes on everything. That also will go along to every item made because then they'll say the carbon value to make that thing, and that's put onto it. So you'll end up paying a lot more. I gave the talks years ago about that and folk wouldn't believe it. At least some of them wouldn't believe it. Because I said, everything's going to increase dramatically, the talks that they'd had at high level at the United Nations and all their affiliates, and I said, was to do with austerity, government said they'd bring in austerity. Which is a form of poverty, really. And you'd be living austerely, very simply, with all your extra spending money ending up eventually on basic necessities. That's where they want to bring you in a post-industrial society. And through the taxation of things. And again, to save you all they're going to tax you into the grave basically. To save you from climate change. Because it's all your fault and all that stuff.

It's a power technique to reduce the population, bring you into austerity. With austerity comes the choices that are given you. And the class system, very much Brave New World with the different varieties of humans, you see. We're already going into that. So that comes with austerity programs, and your value to society, your age group and so on. Especially you'll see it when you get into hospital. You'll go on The Pathways, and do not resuscitate this one because they're just a nobody basically and they're poor. Someone else that is some kind of politician is going to get top treatment, even if they are older, because they have a higher standing in the society and they're necessary for whatever it is. Anyway, that's how it's all done, you see. We're there. And now they want to bring you into austerity.

So, we don't just end up somewhere, we're guided along the pathway, into the proper pathway for what you've been designated according to your status in society. And believe you me, ha, even if you've never been sick yet they've already got your present conditions, they have point systems of what pathway you'll be into if you end up in hospital. I hope you understand that. No kidding you. And I've had examples of people on it in Canada, for instance, who've had to argue to get simple operations. Right down to, well, you know, someone's father it happened to, and a minor problem really, who needed a little parts of the colon chopped out. It's a fairly common operation, it really is. And they tried everything. Oh well, he's too old and he wouldn't survive it and all that nonsense. So this fella knew enough to argue and press for it. And they got it done, the guy is fine, the father is fine two years later. But if he just caved in and been humble, you know, okay, okay, you know, and that would've been it, no one would have been the wiser that he could've been saved. Because life now, according to who you are, can be awfully, you're awfully, your life is cheap, it's not worth it, you see. That's how they see it.

You're in a eugenics program and that's what eugenics is also based on, is your economic value to society. Back in 1910s through the 1920s and 30s you had science openly declare it's ambitions with eugenics and shaping the future of society, and the end of marriage, right, and even mandatory mating of the right genetic types, superior types in genes and so on, and Lords and nobility would impregnate lots of women, etc. to get the proper genes on. They talked about sterilizing the general population rather than just killing them off, that would give it a bad name. HG Wells talked about it's in A Modern Utopia, how he says, we used to think we would have to eliminate the lower types and feeble types and so on, and eliminate them in case they'd reproduce. But, he says, we decided just to sterilize them and let them die off naturally, that's more humane, you see. So think about it, sterilizing you, there's many ways to sterilize you. [Alan chuckles.] Chemically is the easiest way of all, you won't even know it's happening.

But anyway, they were open about it, about categorizing everybody into their value, how necessary you were to society. As I've mentioned so many times, you can actually hear clip by George Bernard Shaw from the same Fabian Society that Wells belonged to, talking about how you'd have to come to them to basically plead for your life by justifying why they should leave you alive and let you live. Because in their system you'd have to have a purpose. If they have no purpose for you or you weren't good at the purpose they needed people for, they eliminate you. You're talking about horror here. And of course, they quieted it down because of World War II and all that kind of thing. But it's still here, it's up and going. Stronger, actually, than ever. Much more humane terms of course. But it never stops. It never ever stops.

So, what do you do with the people as you're guarding the big herd through all of it? Well, you keep them happy. Back in the 30s, again, and when all of this was being discussed you had mass armies, you had dictatorships because everything else wasn't, democracy wasn't working, they said. You had the overthrow of Russia into the Soviet system, and other countries wanting to emulate it too. Scientists were for this, yeah, now we'd have panels of sciences/scientists running the world and running society, you see. Hasn't changed.

And how do you get the public to go along with it? Well, you can give them substitutes for everything. You can give them, again, eventually what they're into now, what they talked about it, like Brave New World idea, even in movies like Metropolis you had glimpses of that same kind of technique of erotic power arrived at by different means, even using robots, that kind of thing. And eventually later on they talked about if you had the same experience in your mind, as though it was a real experience, they're talking in a sense about what would eventually be called virtual reality, then that would be as good as the real thing. Because the whole thing was to stop the wrong folk from breeding. Which is the majority, you see. You become obsolete eventually. We're here. That's where they've decided.

It's like the Georgia Guidestones, still up there and looked after, and everyone's very quiet about it. No one's come to knock it down, apparently, it's quite legal to have it there. Talking about, they need to reduce most of you and get rid of you, off the face of the earth. M-hm. So we're going through a massive system of massive changes. Everything is so minutely controlled that nothing is missed. Nothing at all is missed today.

So Aldous Huxley, who was a very interesting guy. I mean, these guys are really interesting in that initially they're all for all the same agendas all the scientists are for. But he softens himself as life goes on and he comes out with some little warnings to the general population. You have to realize that the guy, he's not as ruthless as some people might think he is. Certainly not as his brother. His brother was a terrible ruthless character who was all for vast mandatory legislation to stop folk breeding, all the wrong folk breeding, you know. But that's what Aldous Huxley says…

"People will come to love their oppression, (Alan: You'd be oppressed, and you wouldn't even know it.) to adore the technologies that undo their capacities to think." - Aldous Huxley Okay???

"People will come to love their oppression, to adore the technologies that undo their capacities to think." - Aldous Huxley

Most folk don't do deep thinking today. Everything's laid on for you. When you think about it, the amount of TV you watch in your lifetime, you're watching the work of, I mean, this is the work of people who are paid to put that work out, to make it and put it out there. But would you pay a plumber to watch him do what he does? Hm? You see what I'm saying? When you stop and realize what you're watching... And another thing, it's called programming because it's full of programming and updates on how you should think about different things, in all the fiction that you’re soaking up. It's essential, again, just like the media is, for government or governance, to control everything and to update your views on things. Through fiction, the best idea of all is fiction, you're more apt to accept it than someone who just orders you to change your thinking about this or that, you see.

Bring in emotion, you can make them believe anything. And they'll adopt those opinions. Well understood. Children especially, that's why they hammer children so much, to make sure that they have the latest indoctrination, for things that haven't even happened yet in society, which will happen down the road, they're already programmed to accept it through their early indoctrination. It's a simple science. It's not difficult at all.

So there you go, you'll come to love your oppression. And you've got technologies that really stop you from thinking. It's all done for you by professionals. And you pay to have the professionals, like licensing in Britain, for instance, the BBC, pay to watch their propaganda and their indoctrination and they tell you what to think so you don't have to do it yourself. And they make it fun, you see.

Then another thing too, I think Huxley also said...

“There will be, in the next generation or so, a pharmacological method of making people love their servitude, and producing dictatorship without tears, so to speak, producing a kind of painless concentration camp for entire societies, so that people will in fact have their liberties taken away from them, but will rather enjoy it..." – Aldous Huxley

Does that ring a bell anywhere? You understand, there's nothing happening that wasn't understood too, to be in the planning to happen down the road. We're here, really. We truly are here. And one of his quotes too, on Aldous Huxley was, he had humor too. Which, there's always hope when a person has humor. He said...

"Medical science has made such tremendous progress that there is hardly a healthy human left." - Aldous Huxley

So you understand, we're pretty well there in a sense, aren't we, with so much of this. And the painless concentration camp idea because they can make it fun to be captive. It's easier when you're a bit worried about something to be completely diverted by engrossing yourself deep within some fictional movie of some kind. It's great, a great way to lose yourself or your worries for a little while. And it's well understood too, actually. You see, there's never been a time when there's so much free or cheap entertainment out there to completely engross you as we have today. Well understood. If you control the minds than those in charge of everything have very little problem at all. That's it.

So you'll come to love your oppression. And you'll adore technologies that undo your capacity to think. You can count anymore, you know, everything's been done for you with computers now and the calculator, etc. Their opinions are given to you by experts, you see. You thought you had the right answer for something, or good opinion, now you find out, no, my God, oh, simple you, I mean, here's a person who is an expert in that particular area of that particular opinion. And there you go, hm. You see? That's how it's done.

You also have the relentless war, and socialism as we know it was again, you can go into varying degrees of it and flavors of it, into communism, whatever you want to call it. They wanted to totally abolish religion. Which again, is an awful nuisance to having total government, because often people would stand up against what government planned because it was against religion. If government demanded you do something that God had said no in your holy book, regardless of your faith, whichever faith it was, then you wouldn't go along with government. It's always been a nuisance to government. So, you must undermine it, you see, if you want total power over the people. You take away their reasons, which aren't just excuses, they're reasons, you see, in not to comply. Take them away and then you can do what you want, and you can get all your various nefarious things through.

It's a sad thing too, again through the psychology and understanding of human nature, that the people need something to tell them it's wrong. Deep down you know what's right and wrong. I think everybody does. Except maybe the psychopath. Even the psychopath can understand that people outside of themselves won't like this, whatever they're doing. He doesn't feel the same way about it, maybe unless it was getting done, whatever it is that's getting down to him or her. Otherwise they're, you know, they won't feel the same way. But everybody else, the so-called average person out there, you know what's right and wrong, you know at the time what's right and wrong. And we decide, we choose, we do choose not to care about certain things. And some of these areas that you're not caring about are horror shows, really, literally, you know.

So anyway, as I say, once you get religion out of the way it's fine for those who control. They've been hammering, naturally, you've noticed, at the churches forever. Because that's a big part of it. And the Catholic Church, especially, because it ran so much of the world at one time with so many countries involved. But they went through the same problems, didn't they, from the Cultural Revolution. We had a revolution, remember. It's called the Cultural Revolution, just like all communist countries have a cultural revolution. And when you think you're not in a communist country, when the techniques of communism, which is totalitarianism of course everywhere you look, you'll find that, and the banks are thriving awfully well off of it, it's the same system, really, you know. Same system.

It's easier to control people in a more socialistic tyranny than it is under a so-called really free society where you really do stand up for rights. And that's why the US for a while did all right because people knew their rights and they knew they could stand up for the rights. And they did. But today they're getting flattened and flattened and flattened and folk comply with it, then they don't care so much as they use to, and then they're taken over the same way, aren't they? Under the guise of keeping them safe or whatever it happens to be.

You've got to understand there was a sexual revolution, that's part of the cultural Revolution. Part of it was to destroy our religion, of the cultural Revolution, and other parts to destroy the family unit, and the family unit was also to be destroyed through the sexual revolution. That's what they called it at the time, the sexual revolution of the 60s. Pope Benedict came out and talked about the decline of standards, moral standards within the Catholic Church as being due to the cultural decline of the, you know, the cultural wars and the sexual revolution of the 1960s, and how it set the rot into the church and it’s continued ever since. Acknowledgment of the awful problems the Catholic Church has had with sexual abuse, he's blaming it on the 1960s sexual revolution, and from there onwards the collapse in morality.

And I agree with him. Because the Catholic priests are pulled out of the same pool of the general population with the culture as everybody else of that era, sexual revolution. When they brought in the sexual revolution, they also brought in the whole concept of relativity, you know. They took the Einstein theory and they applied it to everything, until no opinion was supposedly absolute or correct, and no action was absolutely right or wrong, you see, that was part of what was relative... and your opinions is relative... and my opinion is relative...

So anyway, he spoke at about it in a 6000-word letter...

Former Pope Benedict blames Catholic Church sex abuse crisis on 1960s sexual revolution and 'collapse in morality'
dailymail.co.uk / 11 April 2019

•Benedict spoke out in a rare 6,000-word letter due to be published in Germany

•In it, he attributed the child abuse scandal to the sexual revolution of the 1960s

•He said a decline of absolute moral standards and a focus on 'relative moral judgement' meant that priests lost their sense of right and wrong

(A: Well, the whole society did, that was the point of the revolution. And he's...)

•Benedict, 91, called for a return to the Catholic Church's strict moral code

But he's quite right. Those who have lived through this era and maybe at the time, or afterwards, found out what so much of it was actually behind it, who studied it, you realize this is a complete war. And it's ongoing still, it hasn't finished. To get society into a state of flux where change is the norm, and rapid change. All planned change, though, it's not just happenstance, it's all planned change, and it's the norm and its rapid until you're just reeling from changes. That again is part of the Trotskyist and the Hegelian technique of constant perpetual warfare, you see, to supposedly achieve goals and to force society through cultural revolutions, and evolutions, and forced evolution of society.

Anyway, I'll put these articles up, including the Assange ones too. There's so much on Assange.

How Assange’s arrest and potential extradition might prove embarrassing for Trump - independent.co.uk / April 11, 2019

Assange inside his fetid lair - dailymail.co.uk / 12 April 2019

Just to show you the smear stuff goes on. And Pamela Anderson was close, closer than anything actually. She said that...

Pamela Anderson condemns Assange arrest and says Britain is 'America's bch'
(A: I don't know if you can say it anymore now because you get PC stuff coming in, big time, that you know... Anyway...) and 'needed a diversion from your idiotic Brexit (A: ...bovine fecal matter I guess she was trying to say there.) bullst' - dailymail.co.uk / 11 April 2019

So anyway, you've got a truth there. Plus, Ecuador got its $4.5 billion loan from the World Bank. And that was part of I think, you know, everybody's kind of chuckling at that too, how it all comes together in the right way, etc.

$4.2 Billion IMF Bailout for Ecuador Paved the Way for Assange’s Arrest - theantimedia.com / 11 April 2019

And you also now have even vegan warriors they're calling themselves.

Lock your gates, install CCTV and vet new staff carefully: The advice to farmers ahead of ‘major animal activist event’ by militant vegan groups - dailymail.co.uk / 4 April 2019

Everything's… Everybody's now a warrior, 'eh? I don't know if it's all this stuff they lap up with violence and violence and violence and see themselves as righteous warriors, but you've got them across Australia and different countries storming farms. And it won't end well, as I've mentioned before.

Also, again, I've mentioned Peter Hitchens before, people love or hate him. But the fact is he was born in the 50s. He was a complete Trotskyist after coming out of University in Oxford. He eventually lived in Moscow during the collapse as a correspondent for British newspapers. But he saw the collapse of Moscow and Russia, Soviet Russia. And he completely changed, he's completely different than his brother was. But I think he's more honest. He's definitely gone through big changes in his life. Even with what he believed even 10 years ago, about any hope for Britain. Now he's come out openly on an interview and said openly that there's no hope, there's literally no hope. It's… You're looking at the end, it's not just an empire but it's the end of the nation-state basically. Of, he's talking about the UK is one example.

But he said that it's lawless now in the country. They have so much crime and stabbings every day that they don't even get investigated because it's just too... the country's broke. And it's getting worse all the time. It's all borrowed money, whatever they do. This… It can't survive the way it is, put it that way. He's talked about all the stupid wars that they got involved in, tied with the US and other countries too across the Middle East, that they certainly didn't get anything out of. The big corporations did for the oil fields and so on, but the people just got the tabs, the bills to pay. That's standard.

Then mass migration from other countries that were getting leveled to the Stone Age all flooding into Europe, which is the natural thing to do. I think it was all planned that way because I wouldn't stay in those countries. Would you stay in a country where you are threatened, for years and years and years, to be obliterated by the most powerful nation on earth's military? Would you stay in those countries? What's the point? And it's part of the reason that they do it, they keep them sitting there and put sanctions on them, knowing they're going to get out of the country, and then they're no longer a threat when there's nobody in it, or nobody of any, what they call, import. Everything's planned that way and it's arranged that way, you see.

So anyway, Hitchens goes through it and he says that it's really the end. He used to believe that politics, if they could get the party system working the way it's supposed to do it. But again, that was dream land. I personally have never believed in it, I thought it was a racket from as long as I can remember. He said that the old idea of two opposing parties, because that's what democracy is based on remember, where you agree to oppose each other. But you don't come to blows. Well, it's getting to that stage now of pure hate and anger and... Like, all of society is getting the same way anyway. That it's no longer working. And it's no longer working when, say, the different parties don't represent what they claim they are anymore. Again, Quigley talked about the same thing. He said, the political parties are becoming, and that was back in the 60s, the same, that whatever they talk about at election time is the same things as the other party, Unemployment, jobs, education, healthcare, all the usual same old things.

But they don't stand, their values are... Well, come on. You're living in a corrupt system, very corrupt now, where you've got winners and losers and narcissists. And it's true, you do have narcissists that are generally politicians. That's what the real narcissists, and those who are living so high on the public trough, they have disdain for the general population. That's what it's about. When you see the salaries these folk get you... it just blows the mind, honestly it does, of these public, some of these public servants, it's just astonishing. What an age of greed we live in. How can you get fairness in society when they don't go in to serve a system or a country or nation that they love? They don't. It's a joke now. So, I'll put that one up too.

Peter Hitchens Interview - youtube.com / 10 April 2019

I'll put up also some other things I want to talk about too. Ha! This is quite a good one. NASA...

NASA says mysterious dancing blue lights spotted over the Arctic Circle were caused by vapor tests and NOT aliens, as some feared - dailymail.co.uk / 8 April 2019

(A: Right, they say it's vapor, right. Listen to this, as they try to calm it. They don't want to go into the chem spray or stratospheric injections and stuff like that, they don't want to mention stuff. It's vapor spray, right. Listen to the so-called vapor spray.)

. . . new NASA test showered the skies with brushstrokes of blue and orange-colored gases.

(A: Isn't that pretty. Nice pictures, mind you.)

The lights, which looked like an 'alien attack' attack...

(A: And the 'lights which look like an alien attack', so right away they get that brought into it so's... You see, the general public will say the alien attack thing. I hate to say this. So if you bring that up, oh yeah, you know, you probably think it's an alien attack, didn't you. So you get that ridiculous... Who, who thought it was an alien attack? Come on! Nobody did! Hm. That's how you defuse, with a ridiculous something.)

...to some, were actually a part of an ongoing NASA experiment dubbed The Auroral Zone Upwelling Rocket Experiment (AZURE).

As a part of the mission, NASA says it has launched the AZURE test rocket -- the first of eight such planed (A: ...I love how they can't spell anymore either, 'eh... planed...) launches -- that aim to study the patterns of solar winds.

The eye-catching lights were created by releasing two harmless gases into the atmosphere — (A: Listen to this...) trimethylaluminum as well as a mixture of barium(A: Remember the barium they've been spraying us with since the 90s actually, late 90s...)and strontium(A: Hm. You know what strontium is? It doesn't say strontium 90, at least. The 90 strontium is one of the most deadly carcinogenic radioactive substances we have. But anyway, a strontium group...)— so researchers can study the paths of particles in the Earth's ionosphere, NASA says.

(A: Like they've never done this before? Like they're just finding out now the patterns? Hm? So NASA says...)

According to scientists, the experiment will also help unlock the forces behind one of nature's most capturing phenomenon, the Aurora Borealis.

(A: Like they've never noticed it before, like they haven't experimented before to find out how the solar winds come in and all that, you know.)

So that's what it's about, you see, where these particular substances, they can track the patterns, supposedly. That means they've got sensors scattered across the planet to find out where they all end up. And they've commonly used this kind of radioactive substances before. They say, oh, it's mild, it's mild, don't worry about it. So there you go. So here's, they're actually doing something, they bring in the alien thing to ridicule their own article if anybody wants to mention it again. Isn't that something. There ya go. That's how it's done.

I've mentioned before, and it's up on the Internet all over the place, but the list of big nongovernmental organizations that are well-funded to push the horror of an oncoming apocalypse of global warming and stuff. And the leader's quotes, and from their own meetings, saying they always give the public scary and horrifying scenarios to get them to take notice of what they want them to believe. They always do this. Well, there's an article it says...

Netflix is accused of 'eco-tragedy porn' (A: Everything's... Are these new terms something? So now you've got porn, you know, eco-tragedy porn...) in new Attenborough documentary featuring walruses falling to their deaths 'because of climate change' (A: This is how they put it across.) after zoologist claims they were

(A: They were actually going over the cliff because they were...) being CHASED by polar bears dailymail.co.uk / 8 April 2019

(A: You see, again, how a picture is worth 1000 words? Especially when you can omit anything else that they don't want you to see. They can give you, they can shape your opinion by omission of the rest of it. So David Attenborough, who literally has made amazing statements about the people he wants to... would like to really... He doesn't have... Well, he's a eugenicists, really. Never mind the environmentalism, it's really eugenics again. So the clip showed...)

. . . clip showed hundreds of walruses fall 250ft in Ruissia

(A: It says, Ruissia. What's...? I thought they had all these programs to help with spelling.)

But zoologist claims the animals were being chased off the cliffs by polar bears

(A: And how they put it across, they said...)

Walruses were confused by shrinking ice and their poor eyesight, show claimed

(A: Yeah. So there ya go.)

[Alan chuckles.] It's quite something how the, you can fudge anything to suit your agenda. Just terrify people, say, oh, that's terrible, they've got to do something about it, that's awful. Well, tell the polar bears that because they always do that kind of stuff.

Also in France they've got the ongoing, it's amazing how they can be kept, how quiet from a lot of the papers, but this ongoing Yellow Vest violence it says...

Yellow Vest violence explodes in Toulouse as 2,000 protesters set cars ablaze and hurl missiles at riot police during 22nd weekend of anti-Macron rage - dailymail.co.uk / 13 April 2019

It's quite something, 'eh. It doesn't seem like it's going to go away soon. But again, it makes sense to me because I mean, France was another one that really was never big on exports and production. And they went into the European Union knowing that Germany was going to be the big financial engine for the whole of the union, which it still is. Meanwhile they're hitting the French with big big big tax increases, and they're flooded too with a lot of mass migration, they've got a pay for it all. The folk at the lower levels of society are left to carry this incredible burden, and they can't get work themselves. So you end up with... Again, the end of nations, 'eh. It's interesting. It really is. These are all signs of the fall of empires and nations and all the rest of it.

[Alan laughing.] Another thing too, I wanted to put up, I meant to do it last week, but it's to do with, well, artificial insemination. But they actually get sperm donors to go in and, it's quite amazing, there's a fella, supposedly who's been a doctor who's been happily, happy making sure that he actually used, sold the sperm to the people that he was going to use to fertilize eggs. It turned out that some people, their children all looked the same, the same exact features. They all got talking to find out they'd all use the same fertility clinic for insemination. And it turns out they all had the same markers in the DNA.

Same-sex couple warns of incest dangers after learning sperm donor fathered 48 children - dailymail.co.uk / 5 April 2019

So, it made me think right away with the new societies that we're in, once things change, you see, of the movie, it was called Code 46, in a system where the government really has come in with the heavy heavy hand to stop people mating who are really genetically related to such a degree because of the problems it causes in society. See if you can get a hold of the old movie Code 46 and how they could even wipe your memory if you fell for someone, because you had a lot in common with them, you really like a person that's got so much... You wouldn't know why you were attracted but it could be the same genes, you see. That was in the movie at least, the movie version. Then of course governments would have to stop it because then they end up with all the fallouts from it, etc. But yeah, that's where we are now. It's actually, that's what they're pushing for now is a demand for government intervention in these things. Interesting, really. [Alan chuckles.] They always give you it in the movies first, the Sci-Fi's and so on.

Then you have how the big nations are, well, big corporations again are just... You understand this is a substitute, too, for the big Cold War industry of weaponry and so on. It's now, save the world. And corporations live on huge, huge grants, handouts, free handouts to do the experimentation on saving the world and all that kind of stuff. Remember, the whole Cold War was pretty phony too. But it says...

Floating city dubbed Oceanix will save coastal cities from flooding caused by climate change, UN project claims - dailymail.co.uk / 4 April 2019

And it goes into the partnership, the public-private partnerships where the public without being asked have their tax money used to fund these big projects that are rather amusing but very lucrative for those who are involved at the top.

And another thing too of course with eugenics, which we are definitely into, and the classification of importance in society, and burdens on society...

Middle-aged treated like 'second class citizens'
telegraph.co.uk / 4 April 2019

...with 25% of over 50s poorly treated in shops and hospitals.

That's getting promoted, actually, more and more and more through the types of education. All you do is drum it into the up-and-coming students in universities and they will adopt those opinions, you know, very quickly. It's easy to create terms of repetitive fascist or communistic systems. It's all the same to me, it's the same system. It really is. And big business at the top, it's always big business at the top.

And then the recycling of articles from 20 or 30 years ago...

Painting roofs white can reflect the sun's heat and prevent thousands of deaths in cities during heatwaves - dailymail.co.uk / 5 April 2019

Then it goes into why the cities are hotter. Because the concrete literally reflects it back and forth and it bounces all around and round. They've always known this. And then don't even touch the fact that when they set up the old thermometer systems it was generally in fields and so on. Now it's all concrete. So naturally it seems warmer, 'eh. That was... it's well understood.

And...

Amazon Workers Are Listening to What You Tell Alexa - bloomberg.com / 10 April 2019

You can't help people, because they're being monitored. They don't care anymore, most of them really don't care, do they? And everything that happens in your home and everywhere else you go is going to be. Another one too is...

Your car is watching you. Who owns the data? - rollcall.com / 9 April 2019

All the... It's constantly analyzing where you go, where you stopped, how long you're there, you know, everything about you. It said they can send so many gigabytes per hour outside the car to all the different sources that's collecting it all. They should give you all the stuff for free, since they're using it all, you know. They give you nothing for it, you're buying it all.

Well, I've done it all, that's all I've got time for anyway. But the thing is, what I'm saying is, and for those who follow it for years, they understand the future is always planned, isn't it, by powerful forces, using your tax money. It's beautiful. And they find ways to influence us, to put it mildly, and to update our opinions and modify our behaviors all the time to suit those at the top.

We're in an age now where literally, as I say, the commentator, the writer in Britain has said, you can't even have normal politics anymore because people are too emotionally crazy. Logic is out the window when emotion kicks in with all the different special interest groups and anger and fury. And it does not look good. You're looking at the creation of very dangerous mobs that will never stop at just shouting at people. They're already showing signs of violence, and it will get worse. You have big troubles. And if it's being allowed, by the way, I really do believe that the big agencies that really run the governments will want it to happen, or they would nip it in the bud as soon as it starts. But they're not. So it will be used down the road for other purposes. Obviously.

And what I say is not pessimistic. Because it doesn't bother me. It doesn't bother me, I mean, I'm not responsible for it, I'm not causing it to happen. And I do enjoy being aware, at least, to why things are happening. And it stops you getting anxious about things when you understand that these things are planned and orchestrated. And even leaders of all these different groups are well educated in their roles for leading whatever mob they're going to lead. They're getting kind of well-funded, often from NGOs, from big think tanks, but also its charitable foundations, as they're called, you know. It's the usual ones that have been running it for over 100 years. But also, the big ones, like the Ford, Carnegie, etc, big big funding.

And there's no agency set up to nip that in the bud and to stop the funding and say, look, this is, these are, you're creating a form of terror here in society. Which means those who control society are the foundations, at least part of them are definitely the foundations' involvements, a big strong arm of things.

You're living through planned change. And it's the cultural revolution. Societal revolution. Its post-national revolution into global revolution. Just like when the ex-heads of European Union said a few years ago, and I read it at the time on the air from the European newspapers. He said, and this is the head of the European Union. He said, it's the end of the nation-state, they're obsolete. He says, they're gone, you know. Big plans. No one asked you for your opinion of it. Or asked you to vote on it. It's all done. And it's not to suit the general public. You have to do a bit of digging to find a who it really suits, who benefits, etc., but it's definitely there.

And if you understand what's happening at least you won't sit and fret about things in confusion. Because confusion itself can bring anger. And anger can be turned in and you'll destroy yourself. But if you understand, at least understand the basic things, why things happen, then the confusion is gone. You're not guessing at your surmisations, you're actually knowing the proof of it all from their own agendas which they publish. And big world meetings, like the World Economic Forum, and that's just the meetings that the WEF runs, their own big think tanks that educate and create systems within all countries to guide all the countries along certain paths. Well, you don't vote in the WEF. So, there you are.

As I've said before, I hope you're all surviving. Where I am now the snow is gradually melting but it's still got maybe 2 or 3 feet to go yet in the fields and at the sides of the roads until it's gone. But now it's into the ultra ultra damp stage, cold, overcast and damp. Very unhealthy when you have that. And you've got six months of snow sitting there that's collected, you know... Remember, it comes from the sky. You can smell the mold in the stuff now, when you break the snow you smell it. Even before it started any thaw at all, when it broke the fresh, or they call it, virgin snow, when you haven't walked in a certain part before, you could smell the mold just going whooooof. So it must be all coming from the skies, obviously, when the stuff is falling. Why is all that mold there now, hm? But then there's always reasons for things, 'eh.

For myself, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Apr. 21, 2019 (#1717)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on April 21, 2019. I wonder how many of you have realized that we're in a new chapter? That's how I see history, and the history of our lives in fact, as we go through them from an early age until the lifespan that you live. You'll see that there are chapters in even the histories of your own lifespan, as far as the realities of what's supposed to be happening and how they're given to the public, and to us as we live these lives. Because we'll see history change in fact even as we live through it, our own histories in our own lifetimes, things that happened in our own lifetimes getting changed into some carved-in-stone official version basically. And it's always really been like that.

However, you find too that there are chapters as I say. It's like the Cold War. The Cold War, lots of folk were born into it. The threat at that time of course was, we're all going to get nuked to death and we should all obey governments and live in austerity because all the money had to go to, from your taxes, into the war industry for weapons, which would never be used. It was incredibly profitable for the armaments industry naturally, or the military-industrial complex as it's often called. And all sides were in on it of course. It was Russia, you had China, Britain, the US. Canada was on the periphery of it too, supposedly didn't let missiles into its own territory. However, it did happen occasionally from the US side. But the fact is, that these are control mechanisms for ruling oligarchies within each system. China, of course, as I say, was in on it too.

Every country depends on the military-industrial complex. And you think they're all separates but they're not quite as separate as they'd like you to think. In fact, the World Bank lends to all countries. Isn't that interesting? And the World Bank lends to the old Soviet Union, to modern Russia. It lends to Pakistan and India; they both have nuclear weapons and are always threatening each other. And I guess, where's the World Bank based? Well, look into it and you find out very quickly.

So you'll find that there are connections always with an oligarchy basically that runs the planet. And it definitely exists. It's beyond just a deep state. A deep state really is more of the mechanism within the countries, like the US, of old families that feel entitled to go on the way they've always gone on pulling strings behind the scenes. But above them there's even another group as well.

So we're living in a system that has chapters and the Cold War was a chapter. And it supposedly just ended. That's how it was basically given to the West, it just, well, just gave up one day and they all went home, just like that. And people believed it. And you're into a new chapter. A new chapter of course, that was a bit different in that you had a sense of, well, what do we do now? You see.

Now, governments depend on wars and the threats of wars to tax and fleece the public, as I've mentioned many times before. It's absolutely necessary to have some kind of threat. If it's not within, it's without. It's much better to get in external threats because the public tend more to go along with it. If it's internal eventually you get fed up, and it might be a self-fulfilling prophecy where they'll actually create forces within their own country that will bring them down. Because people get fed up with it, with anti-terrorism and all the rest of it. So at the moment we've got a mixture of them both. They've revived the old bad beer of Russia of course, which is more mythical than anything.

And they've also claimed that China... Modern China, which was created, a lot of it was created by the West. Again, the funding of the money too, the funding all came from the West as well. And the technology. And all the industry that was given to them from the West. When they signed the GATT treaty everything was transferred basically from the 80s, definitely through the 90s in the big step forward, all the politicians in all the Western countries signed on to it. We paid to have factories uprooted and move over to China. So you can't think, don't think that China is some kind of separate nation that does everything by itself.

China was to be the model state for the world to follow, to copy, in its social policies, and its policing techniques, and its observation of its own citizenry, and everything else. It was hailed as the model state by the Western countries. And the top national television stations in those countries too have lots and lots of programs about it, how wonderful it was and one day we'd be as wonderful if we emulated it too.

You have chapters again, chapters, chapters, chapters. Well, once the Cold War was over, very quickly, the US and Britain, but mainly the US who pays for most of it and supplies most of the military power, was off to war across the Middle East of course, against Iraq especially. You always have possibilities and excuses, and sometimes there are none of course, and when that happens they give you complete distractions to take your mind off it. But with Iraq, they had Iraq invading Kuwait at the time. It was a big oil-based, well, nation, it wasn't a big nation, but it was definitely oil-based.

What they didn't tell you, of course, was that the Bush family, that was one of the first oilfields that the Bushes and enterprises they were involved with, were given to learn the ropes of running the oil industry, and that was Kuwait. They didn't tell you too, that even popular magazines in science and so on had drawings basically and diagrams of how the Kuwaitis were not just drilling down into the ground to get oil. They had a type of rig they created which could go down and then go at a right angle horizontally under the ground, and across borders, into Iraq, for instance, and was sucking the oil. Which is stealing of course. It was done with kind of tongue-in-cheek and all the rest of it. But that technology did exist. And does exist today.

And Hussein, apparently, supposedly, had approached the West, talked to some of the leaders of the West and their diplomatic envoys that were sent over to Iraq, and asked permission to go in there and put it straight. Because they wouldn't stop taking their oil. That was the reason at the time. Well, that was all forgotten immediately as soon as they went into Iraq and the full propaganda machine went into action with its nonsense about throwing babies from incubators in Kuwait out the window and what a monster he was.

So as I say, we were in a new chapter then. We're in this chapter of Middle East. Middle East, and I knew it from then on we'd have nothing but the Middle East, that's all we get told about. And sure enough, that's right to the present time. It's on the go. And we've had Syria. And we also still have the next move to go towards Iran, of course, which is a big target too. People are well aware there are other factors involved in all of this. And yes, it's definitely the oil. But it's more than just the oil. There's other factors. There's geopolitical reasons for all of this, of course, as we well know, and other political affiliations tied up with the nations of the West too, powerful organizations and so on. So we've been going through this lull for this last little while as it calmed down after Syria campaign, although it still getting bombed at the moment from outside. You're sitting waiting for something to happen, as I say. But it is happening.

You're in, as I say, a new chapter, a new chapter where there are far more stories to do, any stories you find at all in the news to do with authorized, obviously authorized mass demonstrations of an international kind and I'll touch on them tonight, some of them. Because you're in, the phase we're in now, we're into the new, the proper Soviet, the new Soviet system. And the Soviet system was to be rule by councils. Now they have NGOs substituting for those councils, you see. And we don't vote these NGOs in. They're well organized. They generally picked from students and trained from universities, with the public taxpayer paying for it all, of course. They also have foundation money backing it too, the private foundations that really have, they call themselves philanthropists but they're not just philanthropic, they actually train armies of what they call social warriors now. There's all kinds of names for them. They've got eco-warriors and social justice warriors and blah blah blah.

But the leaders of these groups are very well organized, and they're trained in the Marxist philosophies. The followers don't have to be. They're just young, they're angry and it's easy to get them wanting to belong to some group or another. And they all do. So you present the groups to them, you give them their T-shirts and with the love bombing in the same terminology, because you all have your own terminology in every group, then they'll give their allegiance to the leaders of the groups. And you don't need much, really, propaganda to sway them over. Because you keep it simple. Youngsters see everything in black and white as I've mentioned so many times before, it doesn't dawn on them they're getting used. Again, I'll touch on that tonight, how they're used.

And you can simply... We've all been there at one time, all young folk go through the same stages. And you definitely see what's unjust. But the clever people behind all of these things that hide behind the vast majority of the youth organizations, that appear to be youth organizations, it's very old people, I've mentioned this before, very old people at the top who manage it all behind the scenes. They know exactly what they're doing.

But the chapter now is obviously, if you look at Europe you have the Yellow Vests, of course. And France is in a mess because no one wants Macron in. And the people still don't believe he actually got voted in in the first place. He was so unpopular. And he's a front too of course. But then you have Britain, for instance, that's going through its incredible changes where some people say it's a complete breakdown in law and order. And even with the eco-, supposedly eco-warrior organizations that have been going on recently, this last week or so in England, you've even had police joining in with them. Which is interesting too. That's also a symptom when you see the breakdown of authority and order within a nation. The symptoms are all there. But also there's almost stand down authorization from the top, as they play with... They've got stabbings going on every day, shootings and stabbings and the police are just keeping back from it all basically in different parts of the country.

'Unacceptable behaviour' of officers caught RAVING and skateboarding with eco-warriors - dailymail.co.uk / 18 April 2019

But there they are joining in protests about save the environment, save this, save that and all the rest of it. Which of course is a big stick for bringing in the last phase of totally organized scientific socialistic control of the people. That's what it's for, that's what the eco-thing is all about. The ones at the bottom have genuine grievances I'm sure, but the ones who lead them all, as I say, they know what is to be brought in with it. They want to bring in compulsory sterilization for groups of people. They want to bring in permits for having children, to have the ability to be able to conceive children. They want to bring in the real totalitarian system.

To save the planet, you understand, you've got to have a reason to push it all. It's all your fault that the world's going to hell in a hand basket basically. It's your fault. You've caused it all. And the older folk should shut up basically too because older folk caused it all. That's what the youngsters are being taught. You've got mobs there that are being riled up, stirred up by very simple mob techniques, to be used down the road on people, and they'll become violent when it happens. They will. And they're being allowed to at the moment agitate and agitate and build themselves up to a frenzy. It's definitely coming.

And those that control them are well aware of it too. And they know how far to push it, and how fast to push it. Or even went to pull it back a little bit. Things don't happen by themselves on that level on that scale. It doesn't happen. And if authority doesn't want something to happen, believe you me, they nip it in the bud very quickly. Very very quickly. I'll be touching on some of these aspects tonight again.

It is interesting as I say, when you go back to the ideas of what folks think of as the Illuminati. But it's really the World Revolutionary Party behind so much of it. And they always focus in on Adam Weishaupt but the organization didn't start or stop with him. It was on the go long before him. The folk don't even know, in the US, some of the World Revolutionary Party came over from Germany to help Lincoln fight the south in the Civil War. There was quite a few of them that we know of. There's half a dozen of them that were made top officers and some of them were generals for the North. No conspiracy theory, it's a fact. Then after the Civil War they, quite a few of them went over, back over to Germany, some to France to help overthrow the French system as well.

A World Revolutionary party, that's what they were. It didn't start with the Bolsheviks. It was on the go long before that came along. Mind you, too, if you were alive in those days, you would find the same people who are drawn into crowds and protesting and so on, would join these parties back then. Because it was not a, it was never a peaceful, happy system or a utopia on the planet, believe you me. And there were plenty of things to be upset about with constant wars. There still are. It's quite easy to get people fed up with constant wars. You have to be crazy to want them. Unless you're at the top and use it for geopolitical control and the acquisition of wealth and resources naturally.

But there's no doubt about it, the ideas, and of course they give you all of this when you go in if you study philosophy, and you'll eventually go into Marxism as a form of philosophy, and political control as well. Then they go into how it all comes together with forms of revolution. You forget too that the aspects of the culture that come from religion is philosophy too. We forget that. So, the ideas of what's right and wrong come from philosophy. Anything that gives an idea of how to live or what you should strive for is philosophy basically.

But there are those who understand this very well. They understand how to work for centuries to achieve a goal. They know when to back off a little bit and work on some other nation somewhere, then come back to the primary nation and get on with the rest of the agenda. I've seen instances of this before and it hasn't stopped. Those who get on television or on YouTube even with their banners and their slogans, remember what Lenin said, we shall win by slogans. That's what they're given. They can't really say much beyond the slogans, too much, except, you're all bad, it's all your fault the planet's going to, as I say, helll in a handbasket, and you've all got to change your ways and go vegan and… all this kind of stuff, you see. Just like that.

Folk see them as separate organizations doing separate things. No, they're not. This is all to do with so-called climate change, which is the excuse, and global warming, the excuse that was dreamed up by the Club of Rome, the big think tank, to get a way to get the public to go along with their big agenda. Which has always been total control through scientific socialism of cultures, nations, all across the planet, international, for global system and how they could literally bring down the populations and breed what they would say would be, is the right number of people that were necessary to basically run the planet... or serve the elite is probably a more truthful way to say it.

But it's never stopped. And the last people to ever figure anything out, who are the ones who are involved in these separate protest movements... or demand, I call them, demanding movements. They always have demands, you see, and if you don't give into the demand they'll riot or bring the world to a standstill or whatever it happens to be. Or until they're stopped basically. Any excuse will do. And any excuse to give them to achieve this goal of scientific socialism and control over the people will be used, quite naturally, by those in control.

But that's what they ended up with, you've got to have an enemy to unite the planet. Aliens aren't coming in, so make man the enemy himself, and the enemy is against too many people, consumers who are consuming resources and destroying the planet in the process. That's what they said basically. And plague, famine, drought, etc. and, you know, that would fit the bill basically. That's what they said. And they haven't stopped.

And when they, when you get big world… Remember, every country signed on to these deals at the United Nations. Going way back even before Maurice Strong. Then with Maurice Strong you had the different agendas from the United Nations at that time too, the Biodiversity treaties, they signed more treaties in Rio. And we’re all supposed to be subject to the agreements in these treaties. Even though we've got nothing to do with it, we didn't get to vote on them, they didn't even bother telling the public what they're about most of the time. That's where your agenda for the 21st century came from, from these private organizations working, using the United Nations. And don't forget, the United Nations is there for a world government. Top members like not just Bertrand Russell talked about it. You have other ones like Arnold Toynbee who quite openly in all his talks talked about world government, and the United Nations was set up to be world government and develop into world government. His talks were open about this. And you have to see what all the organizations that particular guy belonged to. But they didn't hide it, especially right after World War II. But not just any old world government. You say, well, what's wrong with world government? Well, there would be nothing wrong with it if they had an honest decent system. But we've never had an honest decent system in politics. And you never will.

Even the Durant’s, you know, Will Durant and his wife Ariel. I mean, they worked their whole lives for big think tanks and big foundations. Again, to try and bring in the same global system. Will Durand himself said that, who really advocated anarchy and everything else initially. And then he studied, he'd followed all the anarchist talks and the communist talks and so on actually too, and revolutionary leaders. As he kept changing into, morphing into the next belief, the next belief, the next belief. And eventually he realized that behind it all, it all moved towards politics and power. It is power itself, power is behind all these things, the craving for power. So that you'll never have a just system. Never, ever. I don't care how nice it sounds. The Soviet system, the Soviet charter they had was wonderful to read but it just didn't exist in reality. It's always that way. It's always the same way.

I can remember too, looking into the communes, because I was wondering why the CIA, for instance, were so interested in studying communes. For those who don't know it, they helped fund a lot of them, help set them up in fact. They even brought in some of the top gurus from India and had youngsters throwing all their wealth at them, and pretty well starving, while they worshipped the gurus, and the guru is living in the lap of luxury. They did incredible surveys and studies about all this stuff. You find even with the Jim Jones group, the CIA were heavily involved in studying it all. Because they did all these studies on human behavior, what can be used to control people, and big crowds or mobs or whatever, and of course cults are a very effective method if you can keep them under control. So that's what I was really was interested in, was why this, why was the CIA so interested in all these things. Then you would look into the different, of course, the funding they had from the Rockefellers and the big foundations that all were working towards this, owning the planet basically. Then you start to see why, what was really going on.

Some of what the Durant's said of course, were definitely true. But don't forget, the initial purpose for writing even the books they churned out, these big massive volumes... And they couldn't do it themselves, obviously, there was an awful lot of help involved. It was to put a spin on history. Very... They weren't the first to do it. About the same time HG Wells tried it with his smaller versions of An Outline of History, his two-volume set initially. They were all spun to try to persuade readers that, look how bad the people are in the past and this is why we need a totalitarian form of controlling the public basically and the world. That's what they're trying to tell you.

They're trying to tell you that spontaneously tyrants just arose and wanting to dominate the planet all by themselves, you see. And nothing is further from the truth. There are tremendous forces behind the rise of tyrants, even in the 20th century, tremendous forces. And powers behind them that study them too to see if it will work. And they'll even, even after they did it, they'll defeat them, the same powers that helped set them up will use some of their techniques, or sometimes many of their techniques that actually worked for the next chapter of running the planet basically.

So the chapter we're in now is really, it's post consumerist almost. It will be shortly, once we can't afford to buy things. Into austerity. And that's planned as well, going into the whole environmental thing with, now it's carbon taxes, which will increase like you wouldn't believe. Like I said a few years back, they'll keep increasing them until you're into austerity and most of your income will go to pay all these things... and for bare essentials, that's where your money's to go… as you get moved off the land gradually and into these compact, so-called compact cities, meaning overcrowded cities, that's where you're supposed to live.

So as I say, we're living through a plan. And the plan has chapters. It's no different then reading a play and you've got your different scenes, scene one and so on, and it's chapters involved, and then scene two has chapters and so on. That's what we're living through. It is literally planned like that. The chaos it's caused in between from even protests that are managed too and set up to be managed, and anything goes wrong... Because you'll always have violence happening with protests and so on and some of them getting more exuberant than others. And anybody who's killed or damaged in the process, it's just tough luck basically. Again, Rockefeller said that. Rockefeller says, you can't make and omelet without breaking eggs. There's all the egg shells. So there's always fallout to achieve their desired goals.

Just like the EU told the farmers who signed on, being told that they would get better sales if they join the EU, and take loans out and improve, organize the techniques and so on for farming. Well, they took out the loans and then they were all written off. They couldn't even sell their produce because bureaucrats decided who could sell what to where, etc... and how much was to get dumped in the ocean, like butter mountains, and milk seas basically, dumped in the sea to keep prices up, and to allow only certain other farmers from certain countries to sell. And everybody else at home couldn't even get their stuff sold at all. A lot of suicides.

Because bureaucrats under a scientific socialism ran and still run the EU today. So much so that even some of the top dissidents that were against the Soviet Union came out and said that this EU is actually more, going to be more socialistic and more dominating and tyrannical than the Soviet Union ever was. They saw it right away with the laws getting pass by the EU. The EU was never meant to be Democratic, for those who haven't caught on to it. Some of the leaders have said that, again, it's scientific socialism. People love it for a while as they just throw money out, but eventually you're going to pay for it all, big time. That's how they really do things. Old techniques. And bread and circuses.

Folk can't even, they don't even figure out where their money's all coming from. As they spend, spend, spend at the moment having great fun. Because they're not producing much, are they? When the piper calls the tune you all have to pay up, that's how it works. I could give you a little example of how well-known people, and they're put in front of the rest of us to set the pace basically for cultural changes. They know exactly what they're doing and how they present whatever it is to you, that's been authorized obviously in the first place by those who rule. And they know that they're deceiving you at the same time as they get you to believe in it.

Because it's… There's no doubt about it, so when you read, for instance, the writings of Bertrand Russell, young people, especially, you'll believe and accept so much of what he's saying is actually true. Without realizing there's a spin on it too to go in a different direction, not just to help you. It's easy to point out the failings of society, very easy. They never ever give you the fix for it, really. It might give you a type of a fix, but is not that at all. They want power over the public to bring in the scientifically controlled system. Rather than, free will is an enemy, an absolute enemy to those who rule and who are bringing in the system.

But, here's an example of how it can be done, to show you how it's understood by those in-the-know. Will Durant said the following, but before that, I'll just mention that he, like many before him, including Oswald Spangler...

Will Durant
wikipedia.org

Much like Oswald Spengler, he saw the decline of a civilization as a culmination of strife between religion and secular intellectualism, (Alan: He's really talking about science taking over, and fighting with religion, which topples what he calls…) thus toppling the precarious institutions of convention and morality:

(A: That’s how it’s worded here. But this is what Durant actually said in his own book…)

Hence a certain tension between religion and society marks the higher stages of every civilization. Religion begins by offering magical aid to harassed and bewildered men; (A: Now that's, I'll interject again, that's what Wells also said in his version of history and so on. They all came out with the same spiels basically at the same time. And it goes on to say…) it culminates by giving to a people that unity of morals and belief which seems so favorable to statesmanship and art; it ends by fighting suicidally in the lost cause of the past. For as knowledge grows or alters continually, it clashes with mythology and theology, which change with geological leisureliness. Priestly control of arts and letters is then felt as a galling shackle or hateful barrier, and intellectual history takes on the character of a "conflict between science and religion." Institutions which were at first in the hands of the clergy, like law and punishment, education and morals, marriage and divorce, tend to escape from ecclesiastical control, and become secular, perhaps profane. The intellectual classes abandon the ancient theology and—after some hesitation—the moral code allied with it; literature and philosophy become anticlerical. The movement of liberation rises to an exuberant worship of reason, (A: …in the age of reason, right…) and falls to a paralyzing disillusionment with every dogma and every idea. Conduct, deprived of its religious supports, deteriorates into epicurean chaos; and life itself, shorn of consoling faith, becomes a burden alike to conscious poverty and to weary wealth. In the end a society and its religion tend to fall together, like body and soul, in a harmonious death. Meanwhile among the oppressed another myth arises, gives new form to human hope, new courage to human effort, and after centuries of chaos builds another civilization.
– The Story of Civilization, Vol. 1, p. 71.

Now, that's the standard technique that all of these particular chosen, very carefully chosen and elevated historians that were all for the new secular society, this is the sort of thing that they gave you to convince you that everything was quite natural, as they destroyed every vestige of any old system in order to bring in the scientific management of society. Because that's what it's really all about, you see.

But it doesn't happen just by itself. If you understand the actual international revolutionary orders, which existed all right, even going back into the 1600s onwards, that was always their goal. How they present it to the public is to get the public to accept it as being reasonable and go along with it. That's how it's always done. He also says...

A great civilization is not conquered from without until it has destroyed itself within"

But of course, many other people have said that before him too. But that part is true, it's well understood that when you, when societies or civilizations and even empires fall apart, it's already been destroyed within before it let that happen. But the whole idea of giving you histories like this is to make you go along with it. It seems reasonable, it seems that probably is how it happens. But in fact, they don't tell you about the massive management using incredible wealth at the top to bring in the next part of the system, but appearing as though it all comes from the ground up basically by itself. If you understand what he's saying here, he's actually showing you the stages of destruction of a nation. Now, you know how it's happened in the past, and this is taught, remember, as a science even in Marxism and in Trotskyism, especially, then they're giving you the formula of what you must do to destroy a culture and a system. You understand that? [Alan chuckles.] This is how deceptive writers can be. They knew, you know, they actually knew exactly what they were doing, and Durant was well well versed in the philosophies of revolutionaries, etc. and the revolutionary movement.

So you can read it on two levels. For the average person who has no idea of what's behind it all it will sound very plausible and okay, it's just showing you how it's happened before. Without realizing, no, he's trying to tell you how it will happen, it's happening now. And don't forget that Trotskyism was truer supposedly to Marxist ideas and revolutionary ideas. Because it was perpetual revolution. The idea is that if this happened by nature it might take centuries more to happen. Then you can speed it all up by understanding formula and simply making it happen. Does it start to make sense, 'eh?

So folk have no idea they're living through a revolution. They really don't know. And it's not spontaneous. It's incredibly well organized. And financed. With leaders, thousands and thousands of leaders across the planet all trained perfectly well to take the leadership roles, and also training many thousands of other younger students to take part in all the different kind of protests they've had planned in the past and they've fulfilled up until the present time.

Have you ever wondered why, and I think a lot of folk may have wondered this if they've lived long enough, why the big massive protest movements, against the bomb for instance, the atom bomb, just disappeared? They just disappeared. Massive movements that were quite a few per year across the world, and families, whole families would join in these things, they just disappeared. And even when the first Gulf War happened, again, there was the sort of incredible absence of protests. Every movement out there is literally, takes its orders from the top. Everything is organized. So you always have leaders at the top, and when the leaders are told to stand down they do stand down, and the followers do the same thing obviously.

We've lived through war, since Gulf War One to the present time, in Afghanistan, Iraq, across to Libya, Syria. And they've got Iran lined up and a few other ones too of course. And where are the big movements? The movements are against us ALL, because there's too many of us, they say, we’re destroying the planet. We are the enemy now, not the bomb. Not massive warfare. WE are the problem because we exist. And we consume. If you exist you'll actually need X amount of food in your lifetime, so much clothing in your lifetime, even the basic stuff in your lifetime, and they don't want to give you that. Because they say there's only so much resources to go around. Scientific socialism.

You understand, it's all the same movement, from the wars and revolutions in the 1800s, and the 1700s even, to the present day. It's ongoing. It's well organized. It's very secretive. It has its own groups, brotherhoods, sisterhood, you name it. And you have different levels, just like an army of generals, all the way down to junior officers and NCO types, down to the bottom level. And the vast bulk of them don't really know they're being used. It's really good that way, isn't it?

So again, if you know the formula for taking down society and destroying its culture... You just go back and even in the early 20th century, when the art came out and they said all art, all beauty must be destroyed. So art would have characters with their eyeballs down to the chins and stuff like that. And the beauty of landscape was gone, that was, oh no, we can't have that, it's just, you know... And then music started to go atonal and awful. And it didn't work as they brought in the beatniks for the culture industry. And they came out with, they tried cannabis back then, if fact, they had cocaine too though, mind you. And as far back as 1920s.

But when the hippies came out their jazz just didn't take in the West so much. It took in some countries in Europe but in the West not so much, in Britain, not so much either. So they revived and came back with the, initially, pop music, which rapidly went into this thing of rock music. Well, eventually you know where it's all going to slide, all downhill right to the last 15 years, definitely maybe 20 years, until you don't even find a song now with the tune to it, a melody to even whistle to or remember or anything. That's all intentional. All the beauty had to be destroyed. And the beauty of even relationships between men and women and so on had to be destroyed as well. That was all part of it too. Because there was many goals to achieve before you finished. Perpetual revolution.

So again, Durant went through it. And you would've read it at the time, and agreed with him, oh yeah, I suppose that's true and so on, and they've got to stop wars. They don't tell you that the big powers that run them are the guys behind the wars, make it all happen, and then they manage, they manage your opposition to wars and then they use the opposition for their own ends. Again, you know, to change society and guide it. That's how it's done.

They've already told you how eventually the culture is destroyed, as you become

. . . paralyzing disillusionment, (A: ...it says...), with every dogma and every idea. (A: And...)
Conduct, deprived of its religious supports, deteriorates into epicurean chaos . . .

Well, that's what you do, folks, because they know how to do it. And the way that they wrote the supposedly writings on history was to give you a lot of good stuff and true stuff, but they slant everything to guide your thoughts to their conclusions, you see, where you must go with it all. That's how it's done.

And then you go into the, I mentioned the Huxley's so many times, that you have no idea how important it is to understand these players, who helped set up UNESCO like Julian Huxley who said openly that they had to dethrone basically humans from their, this big pedestal that they're on and bring them down. Because only then would you allow the horrific things they have planned for you to happen, when you've been dehumanized. D'you understand? D'you understand? That's what I'm telling you, first we brought in abortion. They even made it sound, well, my God, you know, there's just so many folk having unwanted pregnancies now. And it's true because they gave you the swinging 60s and sex, sex, sex, right. That's what was promoted from the top. Not from the bottom. The top down.

And look what happened. Oh, look at the chaos and look at all these unwanted... Well, we've got to have abortion. Hm? And then we wring our hands and say, but that's killing us. Oh, no, not really, you know. Then they take away from what it is and try to dehumanize even a baby in the womb, you know. But they didn't end there because that was never, always the intention. Now you end up going for, oh let's start euthanizing people. Or even aborting children if there's a possibility, possibility that they'll have down syndrome, for instance. And then you'll expand it into any possible genetic problems down the road. If you've got X amount of problems in your family line, even allergies, they might just start aborting you, you see. And there's been a lot of awfully good documentaries put out by those within that industry to do with how many children they found on occasion aborted that didn't have the problems that they said that they had. They actually aborted them. But then you've got the other end of this scale, and everybody, we all knew this years ago, then they'll go for the elderly. Well, you know, what's the point in keeping them alive if they've got certain senility setting in? And a lot of folk could agree with it, you say, well, my, that's true, you know.

But the thing is, when you're giving authority to the state for these things, you're dealing... you're walking a tight rope. Because it's inevitably going to be used against the public for other reasons. And then of course you bring in euthanasia for folk who really are in terminal distress, at the end of it all, and it’s too easy to go and… It's just too easy, isn't it. But once again, the state gets into it and then they start dishing it out for folk with depression. Well, yeah, you've had depression, okay, take that pill. Because you see, life is cheap. Because we're knocked off that pedestal that Julian Huxley wanted us off of. It's there, it's gone.

And now it's time for the next step. Well, the next step will be as I've said already, let's go into, and I'll touch on it in a minute in fact, let's start deciding who can have children and who will not have children. This was always the agenda, going way back, way back into the 1800s, at least you can find records of them talking about the exact same thing as I am, and no doubt before that too. But definitely proof is in the 1800s.

But then you have, yep, an eco-friendly deathstyle. I've mentioned this one before and now it's back again. It says...

An eco-friendly deathstyle? Washington poised to legalize HUMAN composting rt.com / 20 April 2019

(A: How is that, 'eh? Remember, before, I said, you could probably liquefy your granny and pour her into the garden to help the plants grow. Well, it's all here, folks. [Alan chuckles.] Yeah. So it says...)

Governor Jay Inslee, a Democrat, is expected to sign a bill within the week to legalize "organic reduction"

(A: ...it's called. [Alan chuckles.] I love how they come up with a nice, kind of vague sounding name., oh it's only "organic reduction"...)

and "liquid cremation" (a dissolving process technically called alkaline hydrolysis) as alternatives to run-of-the-mill burial and cremation. Inslee is campaigning for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination on an environmentalist platform . . .

(A: There ya go. It's environmental to liquefy your relatives, and you know, just poor her in the garden as a fertilizer. You see, we are the business as I've said before. We ARE the business. Right down to wanting your organs, and if you don't sign initially something, NOW in fact, it's taken for granted that they can just take your organs. They actually have that passed in some countries. Because we ARE the business. We make money for people, you see. We make money. I guarantee you once this is really on the go they'll start selling this stuff as fertilizer. I guarantee you. Soylent Green is here, they'll end up making food out of you. I'm not kidding you. It says...)

"Liquid cremation" is legal in eight other states, though it has met with some religious opposition from Catholic clergy, who believe it doesn't show proper respect for the dead . . . (A: What an old-fashioned idea that is, 'eh?)

Getting back to Durant's talks, and many others because he was only one of, one of the front groups or spokespeople to push all the same stuff. But there you go. So I've got a couple of articles on that.

Washington may become first state to legalize human composting - seattletimes.com / 19 April 2019

And another one is...

The biodegradable burial pod that turns your body into a tree
cnn.com / 11 Jan 2018

(A: ...a tree... Isn't that...Oh that's nice, that's very green, isn't it, 'eh? Hm?)

Capsula Mundi is an egg-shaped pod through which a buried corpse or ashes can provide nutrients to a tree planted above it.

(A: So you find out your real purpose in life is to supply nutrients to a tree. Isn't that wonderful, 'eh? M-hm. There ya go.)

They're all in on the act of it, pushing it. Of course, they all get paid for this. If you don't realize, all these newspapers and magazines get paid to put this stuff in too. Everything is business, you know. We are the business. And...

A Green Alternative to Cremation: Dissolving Your Corpse in Water and Lye - motherjones.com / 17 June 2018

This is the stuff they use to use in movies for getting rid of bodies, for, ooo, it was horrible and all that, in the bathtub. And well, here you are. But you give it a fancy name and say it's done in a kind of clinical atmosphere, now it sounds a lot better, doesn't it? And there you go. And another one too…

A Burial Machine That Will Freeze Your Corpse,

This will all get, they all get start up money from your tax money, I guarantee you, for sustainability, right. I guarantee you, folks. All big businesses today have all their startup money from the taxpayer, in grants, not loans, but grants, okay. So…

A Burial Machine That Will Freeze Your Corpse, Vibrate It to Dust, and Turn It Into Soil - atlasobscura.com / 25 Feb 2016

Isn't that wonderful? M-hm. Also, the organs, right. Again, take them off your pedestal, down you go. And there's no end to where you're going to fall, naturally.

'Scotland's new organ donation plans will help me find a heart'
scotsman.com / 26 Feb 2019

A man who experienced the "terror" of waiting for a new heart has backed a leading charity's call for a change in organ donation law ahead of a crucial vote at Holyrood today.

(A: This is in Scotland, of course. Scotland's very far ahead actually in socialism. But it says the 25-year-old and so on, it gives you his life and so on. And you feel sorry for the guy. Absolutely, you know. But you see, it says here that...)

He is supporting the British Heart Foundation (BHF) Scotland, who are calling on Members of Scotish Parliament to back the Human Tissue (Authorisation) (Scotland) Bill which proposes changing the law in Scotland to introduce an opt-out system.

(A: You see, before you had to opt in, you see. Now they just take it that you're all opted in, even if you signed another, it doesn't matter if you signed anything or not. So now you have to sign an opt OUT system. You see how everything's reversed? Starting with, they always give you one thing, then they'll change it when you're kind of used to the idea.)

This would mean everyone would be automatically considered to be an organ donor unless they opt-out.

Most folk don't know. You see? But anyway, they always give you true stories, heart-wrenching stories, absolutely. But what's behind it all? And then Britain, for the whole of Britain…

Britain plans for opt-out organ donation scheme to save lives - businessinsider.com / 5 Aug 2018

...to save lives. It's the same thing as, you've all got to go into austerity to save the planet. You see, they've always got this plausible, slight plausibility somewhere, you know what I'm saying? Hm? Now, when you find out what they're up to too, with, and it's a lot of horror stories to do with what they do, with even the bodies once you die. It really is, you know… If you think it's all, it's done with respect, forget it, folks. Forget it! N-n. That went out a long time ago. That went down the tubes, down the drain with your culture and the body parts.

Pig brains kept alive outside body for hours after death nature.com / 17 April 2019

(A: But here they give you an example of pigs, right. Pigs, they've taken their brains out, and then they put a fluid through them to try and revive their brain. Do you think they want to just, are just fascinated with making, you know, pigs intelligent or something? This is all to do with what they're going to be doing with humans. And this is an old idea. The Soviets had stuff out in the 1920s and 30s, where they had documentaries out there which they sent over to Britain and elsewhere, with dogs heads doing the same thing, full of tubes and the whole bit. It's just... beyond Frankenstein. M-hm.)

(A: But anyway, it's all to do with whether you're going to take with you. And then they'll say, oh, they'll take ethical questions here, because they have to into doing it with humans, blah blah blah. That's how they introduce everything, folks. Really. M-hm. Yep. It even goes into what they're doing. It says...)

That could have practical and ethical consequences for organ donation.

(A: They don't care about the folk, when they’re just cannibalizing your body parts. But it's all, you know, consequences, like, legal.)

In some European countries, emergency responders who cannot resuscitate a person after a heart attack will sometimes use a system that preserves organs for transplantation by pumping oxygenated blood through the body — but not the brain.

You see that? Just keep the organs that they want live, hey? But if they use the one for the brain as well, well, how many deaths are you going to get as they keep resuscitating you, you know, keeping your brain separate. Because you'll remember it, you would think, wouldn't you?

Again, it's... You're into horror and sci-fi, you know. But it's here, folks. And when science is in control, when you have tossed out all the things that gave you any respect for humanity at all, like the sacredness of being human and having life, when you've tossed it out the window and put science in charge of it there's no end to the horror, folks. There really isn't.

And you know, it's not my decision. A lot of folk will go along with all of this stuff... Oh well, you know. But I'm just pointing out consequences of things. You've got to have a few folk here and there down through history to tell you the consequences. Really.

This big push now, oh, if we don't save the planet nowwe're all going to die in so many days and so on.

'We are running out of time to save the planet' - dailymail.co.uk / 18 April 2019

Remember Prince Charles tried that some years ago? And that went down the tubes and we all forgot about that. And we didn't die, and the planet is still here. But they always revive these scary terrifying stories, you see. And we’re all going to die in so many hundreds of days if we don't sign all this stuff now and sign all our lives over to the scientist to run our lives and blah blah blah, to save the planet, yada, yada ya. So the organization, one organization with their little logo, they all have their little symbols, everybody, it's interesting to look at their symbols. In Britain, it says...

Protesters target Jeremy Corbyn on day three of Extinction Rebellion - theguardian.com / 17 April 2019

Extinction Rebellion it's called. I keep telling folks, you know, you had the sexu... These are revolutions, and will use the same terminology. And they're authorized obviously, just like the sexual revolution was authorized. And it was, it was a cultural revolution. Again, it's Marxist, cultural revolution, you see, destroy the culture, the whole bit, and let folks think it's happening by itself, and then you end up with chaos, then you bring in a new system. Anyway, they're talking about the climate protests. They brought London to a standstill. And some of them went around smashing the windows of different corporations, etc. And they're being allowed to do so. Massively organized, though.

Then they have the radical, you know, social warriors for veganism they call it too, they're in part of it. Because that's all part of the UN agenda, isn't it? Oh, they create methane, so become vegan, and these terrible meat consumers are causing the problem too. You see, they've got an Army. They've covered every base here, from the United Nations and the foundations that fund these armies. And they are armies of NGOs. Every aspect of it. And shortly they'll be going into the countryside and attacking folk that live in the countryside. They're already doing it with farmers. It doesn't happen by itself. It's not separate groups doing their own thing here. They're all organized, from those at the top.

So they're talking about...

Protesters target Jeremy Corbyn on day three of Extinction Rebellion theguardian.com / 17 April 2019

The first estimate of the financial impact of the so-called climate rebellion came as activists targeted London's rail network.

They actually wanted to go into their airport too but the cops had to stop them there. Apparently millions of pounds were lost in currency in business because of these massive, massive organized, funded, massive NGO armies, the social warriors for veganism and for this, that and the other, Extinction Rebellion. They want more carbon taxes. They want NO cars at all for thepublic. That was all part of Agenda 21, folks. All part of it, no meat, blah blah blah. Right.

Then you have David Attenborough again, who already did the latest thing. I read it last week I think, with supposedly the seals getting driven over Arctic ice, etc. because they didn't know where they were going, blah blah blah, and stuff's melting. NO, it wasn't melting. It's because the polar bears, according to other people there, were chasing, this is what they do, they go after these things and drive them over the edge, then they go down below and eat them. He's been caught before doing this, though, David Attenborough. So here he is, we're running out of time to save the planet, he says. This is the big scare tactic, you see.

'We are running out of time to save the planet': David Attenborough warns humanity faces its 'greatest threat in 1,000 years' and calls for 'urgent action' to tackle global warming - dailymail.co.uk / 18 April 2019

I've had the longest winter I've ever seen here. The snow is still outside. It's melting but the snow is still out there, hm, like from September until now. It's getting to be more and more of the year... more and more of the year. As they spray the sky and talk about geo-engineering quite openly now. So he's getting them all worked up, blah blah blah. Now, let's go into the other part of David Attenborough, right. Remember this article I read not so long ago, 2013 it was?

David Attenborough - Humans are plague on Earth telegraph.co.uk / 22 Jan 2013

(A: Hm, does that sound familiar to other great heroes they give you in that movement? So he says...)

Humans are a plague on the Earth that need to be controlled by limiting population growth, according to Sir David Attenborough.

Hm, and he belongs to Optimum Population, the group too with Porritt, the other guy Porritt. Remember? I think they call him Lord Porritt or something they call him. But he's a patron of the Population Matters, it says.

Population Matters – en.wikipedia.org
Population Matters, formerly known as the Optimum Population Trust

So yeah, he says they want the right to decide who's going to have children and who will not have children, hey. There you go. That same old agenda, that's so old, goes way back to even the founders of the Fabian Society, hm. Yep, it's all here, folks. Another one too was that...

Sir David Attenborough: we must act on population - populationmatters.org / 5 Oct 2018

We must act on population, he says, again. He's in with Paul Ehrlich and all these same characters that were going to give you the coming Ice Age. And then they changed it to global warming. Now it's changed to climate change. M-hm. Same group. Limit population. Remember The Population Bomb? Boom, boom, boom. Yep. There ya go. So he's going on.

Mind you, I mean, then the United Nations too, I've got some articles from them...

Eco-Green Clubs in Schools - UN sustainabledevelopment.un.org

Eco clubs in schools will empower students to participate and take up meaningful environmental activities and projects.

You see, it's all parts of the indoctrination of the children so they become eco-warriors and vegan warriors and eco-green club warriors and all the rest of it.

International Vegan Rights Alliance - theivra.com

And don't forget what the Green Party is all about and what it used to be called, 'eh. For those who don't remember, hm, don't they remember what it meant, 'eh? It was called the Ecology Party initially when they first came out with it. Then they changed it into green politics because that would be the new party for the planet, for scientific socialism, folks, and to manage us all. There ya go.

Ecology Party (Now Green Party) - en.wikipedia.org

Anyway...

Extinction Rebellion: Shell HQ windows smashed as climate protest blocks London roads - telegraph.co.uk / 16 April 2019

Extinction Rebellion group, smash the Shell Oil company, the HQ Corporation, smashed the windows and the doors and all the rest of it as they go through London there. That's your peaceable, you know, managed, well-funded, well-trained groups. And other places got the same kind of treatment as well, as they brought London to a standstill. If they bring London to a standstill, it's all authorized. Because the folk who own Britain, and they own Britain as they own every other country, are training us all into the new system, the new chapter as I mentioned it. And...

The Extinction Rebellion leaders: Jet-setter Robin Boardman a Buddhist teacher and a yoga instructor
telegraph.co.uk / 18 April 2019

(A: ...who's awfully wealthy and I think he flies all over the planet, it says)

A leading Extinction Rebellion activist who said that “air travel should only be used in emergencies” (A: That's for all of you.) lives a jet-set lifestyle, taking skiing holidays, visiting global landmarks and enjoying walks along palm-tree lined paths.

(A: Isn't that wonderful, hm?)

Robin Boardman-Pattinson walked out of a television interview after being branded “incompetent, middle-class and self indulgent” by Sky’s Adam Boulton, (A: And he fights for other things as well...) but The Telegraph can reveal that climate change is not the only cause which he fights for.

The 21-year-old is a serial protestor, who has railed against Dominos Pizza, Bristol Magistrates court, Toby Young and Bromley Council.

He’s also campaigned against the expansion of Heathrow airport, supported Muslim women wearing Hijabs and Niqabs and asked for retail space in Bristol turned into a slave trade museum.

[Alan laughing.] He probably makes his money off all the different groups that donate to him, and the foundations, 'eh. I tell you. Well, I guess it's a make-work project for some of these guys. And then you've got an article here too. It says…

Green giants - the eco power list
theguardian.com / 15 Jan 2011

From David Attenborough to Rob Hopkins, founder of the Transition Town movement, (A: That's another part too, Transition Town movement.) the Observer Ethical Awards has honoured many movers and shakers in ecological and social justice.

(A: I guess that's… So what IS social justice? Think about it, folks, who decides what that means?)

So it seems fitting to launch our sixth awards by profiling the 20 global figures who'll exert influence in 2011.

(A: This is back in 2011.)

For those on our list, the coming year might best be described as "take your partners" time, as activists and corporates scramble for power – and we're predicting some unlikely marriages ahead.

(A: It's true, it shows you who teams up with whom and what corporations team up with some of these eco-warriors for you, 'eh. You can get awfully wealthy if you get in with the right ones.)

I'll put up a list of...

List of accredited organizations - UN Environment - unenvironment.org

…the accredited organizations to the United Nations. Because they have inner groups and outer groups, just like the Royal Institute of International Affairs/ CFR. And you can get on their observer status group list or you can just be an ordinary NGO, etc. and get... Again, the leaders get awfully well-funded. But they've got them in every country, well organized across the planet. And if you look into the foundation money they all get it's just incredible. Tax-free foundations. Getting back to Weishaupt and he said, that they could actually create philanthropist that would then guide and help rule the world. Well, here we are, folks. M-hm. The big foundations, tax-free, charitable foundations, owned by the richest corporations on the planet, are corporate owners.

Jonathon Porritt – en.wikipedia.org

And also, yeah, Jonathan Porritt, he’s a guy who's in with the Optimum Population Trust, etc. It says here, Sir Jonathan Espie Porritt. It gives you his early life and career, etc., it gives you his life, etc. But he's really, he's into the Ecology Party, which is…

. . . Ecology Party (now the Green Party of England and Wales).

Yeah, he's all for reducing the population, etc., and really running the world with an iron fist. He's in with David Attenborough and other ones too. And again, with Paul Ehrlich and the rest of them. And by the way, Paul Ehrlich’s wife is on the board of the Club of Rome that came up with the idea of what to use, which was the climate against the people to save us all. I'll put all these ones up for anyone who's interested. Most folk don't care. But you never know.

This article too, is about what happens at the end of the protest, you see, for the environment and veganism and all that. So, they go to another protest which is the cannabis one, have it annually apparently, in nearby Hyde Park. They have a big, big pro-cannabis party, so all the ones who don't want to eat meat and so on are all about destroying businesses and corporations, all moved up to the pro-cannabis party and join them. [Alan laughing.] There ya go, folks, hm. There ya go.

Environ-Vegans and the High Life
WEED best get going! Protesters FINALLY move from Oxford Circus to walk to nearby Hyde Park for pro-cannabis party after police fail to shift them for five days - dailymail.co.uk / 20 April 2019

So I'll put other articles up for those who want to have a look at it. It says here how...

The Cotswold Conspirators: How four key players in the Extinction Rebellion eco-mob plotted chaos in London from vegetarian café in leafy market town - dailymail.co.uk / 18 April 2019

They're pretty well heeled, believe you me, folks. But they are just the fronts too because above them you've got people in business suits at the very top. The top backers remember are big corporations, including the energy industry. Because they get so much funding to go green, 'eh? Isn't that awfully lucrative for them. [Alan chuckles.]

Then of course, I mentioned last week too that…

Zuckerberg Calls for Global Internet Regulations - bloomberg.com / 30 March 2019

New chapter again, folks, as they take basically all your freedoms of speech away from you. The whole thing with Assange is a warning to everybody now, because you know, the glove's off, the velvet glove's off and you see the iron fist. That's a warning to everybody that they're not going to, that now it's time to reel in any rights that you thought that you had. You're getting taught that you don't at all. Fear is an awfully good educator for most people. And when it gets really bad in totalitarian systems, you get terror that's used on the public, as some of the totalitarian systems in the recent past should have taught us in fact. It doesn't change, does it?

Interesting with Notre Dame Cathedral because... Fantastic photographs just before the fire started, by folk who are even getting married in it. Incredible history there.

Notre Dame cathedral photos captured by Australian honeymooner hours before fire - abc.net.au / 15 April 2019

What's amazing to musicians and so on is the acoustics in the place, and how they understood acoustics. Where even the big pillars had sub pillars around them, these [?] pillars, and they actually cutliterally a form, it's like woodworkers, cutting against the grain of the stone to get a certain pitch, tone of it. Then they had smaller or these thinner pillars around the main pillars going up, and these literally helped the whole church vibrates when the organ played into different notes. It's just astonishing, really. Well understood such a long time ago when it was built, you know. M-hm.

Orson Welles - Tribute to Builders of Chartres Cathedral (could say the same for Notre Dame) - youtube.com / 14 Nov 2006

Another one too to do with geo-engineering, I mean, how can you even keep blaming the public for the weather when they're causing it to change? Hm? Remember the article, it said a few years back from geo-engineering groups and universities, if they were ever, ever, ha, if they were ever to geo-engineer it could cause chaos, especially when they're going into it. Nevermind the human fallout health wise, but also, and again, even with aluminum and so on, and how it would affect the plants, maybe us too, our health. But they said that going into it, to get loading doses enough into the stratosphere could take years, and you would get chaos, it would upset weather patterns and the jet streams and so on, patterns, until it stabilizes. And then you couldn't stop it. Because once, if you try to stop spraying it, once you've done that, it would go through the same chaos as it tried to revert back again, it could last for years. Hm, does that kind of ring a bell, going through bit of chaos right now? …as we go into it all? Anyway, it says…

Longshot presidential candidate Andrew Yang thinks rogue geoengineering could cause a war. He wants the US to take the lead before it happens. - thisisinsider.com / 13 April 2019

So, here is a call for more geo-engineering, just in case the Chinese do it first, hey. [Alan laughing.] So this is an article, it's quite interesting for me to read this one. I'll put this one up for you too. For anybody who cares. Life isn't all doom and gloom. You get a good laugh at the cons that go on as you're all getting brainwashed basically. It's quite interesting to see. And...

The Energy 202: Study renews debate about a radical climate solution – geoengineering - washingtonpost.com / 13 March 2019

It's by a reporter Chris Mooney covering climate change and so on, energy, the environment. I'll put this one up too. It's quite something.

It's just quite something as I've mentioned before how we're in a new chapter, and power is reasserting itself, now. They had to give you 20 years of the Internet to get you hooked on it, to make sure you stay on it as they take all your rights away. Most folk now are quite content with really good nudging, where they don't even know they're getting nudged all the time, in real time, to think the right things, look at what the right things, meaning what they want you to look at, and to avoid the things they don't want you to look at, and to train you to be good, to be good, you see. And that means just obeying your bosses, and they'll leave you alone. That's the standard thing all down through history, isn't it?

But that's about all the time I've got for tonight unfortunately. It's kind of flown in again. It always flies in, doesn't it? And yet, yeah, there's nothing much I can do about that. It's just the way it is. I hope you're all doing okay and surviving. So many folk are dropping off, [Alan chuckles.] as you get older naturally that happens.

But I was thinking too about all the good music we had years ago and how step-by-step they destroyed it until, just like the art, all the beauty had to be taken out of life... as they deculturalize you, cause upheaval in society and marriage and relationships... and everything else had to be destroyed. And here we are. You don't even have the decent good humane music, the music that was meant, real communication about thoughts and emotions from people to people, how it's all disappeared and all you're left with was anger for a while... and then they give you just meaningless wailing basically. Yeah. As we go through this period that Mr. Durant said you would do once they destroyed the culture. Here we are, folks. Quite amazing, isn't it.

As I say, the only reason I come out with it is to help those who want to know. Most folk are quite content to go along with everything as long as they're happy at the time and they've got enough money to spend and have pleasure and happiness. Quite understandable. But it won't last forever. It's not meant to.

But for those who have always understood something was very wrong, and got clues about it, my job is basically to come out and hopefully help those, to give them the reasons why things are the way they are, why they're going the way they are and how you got to where you are now. Without killing yourself because a lot of people have been self-destructive. The people who had insights into this kind of thing and had inquiring minds could be awfully self destructive to quieten your mind when you know so many things are just plain wrong, with the versions you're getting told... and the culture that isn't your culture anymore. In fact, you've got very little to actually believe in much anymore, except authority, the authorities that are over you.

So hopefully that helps people. And I know from all the years I've had so many folk, who've even grown up with me, and listen to my stuff, and it helps them out. And that's the reward in itself. Because no one should deprive you, anybody shouldn't deprive anybody of the right to know truth. And you can play with it all you want with, oh what is truth, blah blah blah. Well, the real facts, real facts, facts, all of the facts, on everything, instead of just giving you selective facts that you'll spin it off in one direction to be used by someone else's agenda. All the facts, you see. That's how it should be.

And news isn't even news now, as you know. It's basically opinions. You have what I think even Aldous Huxley called in Brave New World, a kind of infotainment, I think it was called, like information/entertainment combined. That's what you have today. It's all about who's in Hollywood, who's on the latest show on television. That's not news, folks. No. Nope. Not at all.

So anyway, I'm glad you're, most folk are hanging in there and getting something still out of it. As I say, there's no downer in understanding at all. There certainly isn't. For those who are the eternal optimist who've been trained to look at the positive and never look at the negative, they are the people who put on earmuffs as they walk away, they're walking along the train track but they don't look backwards, it's just too unpleasant. Well, that's their decision, you see. And you've got to accept other folks' decisions. We're in a stage with the new chapter, we're living in an intolerant system where people won't even accept other opinions about anything. They're showing their teeth now.

Anyway, that's it for today. Stick in there. Things are changing, obviously, and you feel the forces gathering that are rather nasty. I do. And it's not pleasant at all.

So for myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on April 28, 2019. I woke yesterday morning to snow, another dump of snow. Not much, mind you. But it's quite interesting to watch the cooling of the planet, as far as I can see it, from my point of view in northern Ontario. And it's been one heck of a winter as I've said before. And everyone is certainly suffering through their wallet, nevermind anything else. Because the wallet itself has got to pay for your fuel and so on. So, there you go, that's our... And of course, they're going to tell us again that we've had the warmest winter, probably, since the last 150, maybe 2000 years, who knows, hey. They got a habit of just putting their finger in the wind and coming up with these incredible statements. That they're scary statements, you see, because you got to be terrified and hand all authority over to the specialists, you see, you've got to hand it all over to them so they can save you.

I just noticed the other day too, I'm paying taxes with the carbon taxes already in it. And it's a fancy name to it, of course. They don't call it just carbon tax, nice fancy name to it. And it sounds all user-friendly and population friendly, etc. etc. And yet the whole agenda, as you know, for the promotion of the big fear mongering to get the world united under a common enemy, which is ourselves apparently, is to terrify us so we do give our rights up, so that the specialists can basically convince us, it doesn't take much, you know, to convince people, to do what they want you to do if it's done in the proper way. It's quite easy actually. It's quite easy.

I'll put up a link to a so-called mentalist or hypnotist, Derren Brown from Britain, who does some really good shows apparently. He does the mass hypnosis, etc., by using techniques which neuroscientists are well aware of and the behaviorists are well aware of too, and of course all intelligence agencies are incredibly well aware of. Because they are taught how to influence human behavior very quickly, techniques to make it happen very quickly. And when you have people coming in to, say, motivational courses for salesmanship or whatever it happens to be called, they're already giving up their will to an extent, a great extent, for most of them anyway, to whoever's going to be the person that flaps their arms around in front of them and convinces them that they know what they should be doing, etc. You're already giving your will over to, basically, a hypnotist.

It's sad too, to realize that it is rather easy to encourage people to do what you want them to do. Everybody wants to be part, you see, once you get a crowd together pretty well everyone wants to be part of that crowd. In fact, the Delphi techniques, users, the ones who use it and push it and promote it, they are taught, the leaders are taught how to get all the group on board with whoever the government wants... even local governments even higher them in fact. They come in and they've got a little ad in your paper, the meeting's to be held in a local hall, blah blah blah. And they go in there and the person, they're trained to be pleasant, you see, like a good psychopath would be. And some of them are actually psychopaths. Because their job is to lie to you and get you to agree to something that perhaps you shouldn't agree to, but they'll make it sound all wonderful.

And they have plants in the audience already set up there so if someone starts asking the awkward questions for them like, well, are you sure this program is going to benefit us? it's maybe going to benefit some corporation instead or something like that? Immediately these plants will stand up, oh, shhh, shhh, and boo, and make you out to be a troublemaker. These are simple techniques that are awfully effective to sway the rest of the crowd. And before you know it the crowd will say, yeah, yeah, sit down, you know, don't harass this nice man or this nice woman who's telling us what we should be knowing, you see. Very easy to do.

Derren Brown - The Heist, Pt. 1 - youtube.com

Then you had, in this Brown particular one that I'll put up, the link anyway, he actually had supposedly hypnotized a few of the people in the room who attended this conference or this lecture, on how to basically become robbers, to rob a kind of security van with money in it with a fake gun. And they followed right through. They picked I think three at the end and they followed through with it too. But you'll see the techniques in a very simplistic form of course of how they go through with it.

There's a certain element of course questionable in all of this because in hypnosis generally, in hypnosis those who become hypnotized in a sense want to be to an extent. There are techniques to prompt you in, to motivate you, like I said, the Delphi technique, by using basic human instincts and behavior, where you all want to conform and be part of a happy little group, you see. And you will call down someone who asks the proper, the proper questions that are going to upset the person who's trying to push change.

But if it's so simple to create a group like this particular Derren Brown's show did, then you understand that this can be used on a much larger scale. And it IS used on a much larger scale through media and through inserts of the same repetition, repetitive little one-liners basically, generally one-liners, to save the economy, to save the world, to save ecology, to save, to save, to save, you see, until you just, you'll parrot it in your sleep. And before you know it, you're being conditioned quite easily. Until eventually it's almost like heresy to go against it. Literally, that's how it's being formed. Well, I don't believe that at all, I don't see that happening. Well, that's heretical. And you're attacked as an heretic, by the authorities too which will back up this because there's a big, big world agenda riding on this whole future, this planned future.

But again, even in the Derren Brown one, this particular show, he shows you a little sequence where they actually send some of the ones that are selected for hypnosis and going through with this fake robbery, where they use the Milgram Experiment where the people will think they're actually shocking a person in a different room who get the answers wrong, and they up the voltage every time there's a wrong answer. And the person who's doing it gives authority to the person in the white coat that tells them, oh go ahead and flip that switch and up the voltage. And the person will say, but they're getting hurt by this. But as long as someone else in a position of authority takes the responsibility you go through with it, most folk will go through with it and flip the switch. Even though it goes up to what would really be a deadly voltage, some of them actually go through with this.

Just to prove the people will follow orders, because it's a human nature with most people to follow orders from a person in authority, who technically will take responsibility, you see. That's why you find horrific things happening the world by people who will torture and so on and do all the nasty stuff for governments, of all countries, as long as someone else is taking responsibility for it. Mind you, there are psychopaths who like it anyway. And they are also recruited, by the way, government has a way of sussing out who the psychopaths are. They have tests for it. And some very accurate tests. Not just the ones they use in prison for prisoners, but they have ones for the military.

I remember years ago there was a good documentary put out on the submarine bases in Britain, and Scotland actually, I think, where they had a journey around some of these submarines. They actually asked the commander, how do they select the ones, the two guys who have the keys, who insert the keys simultaneously. One has a key each and they are the guys who set an arm the missiles, submarine, for use for actual firing. Because you can imagine a lot of folk would crack up with it. They would. At the last minute you'd crack, I'd think, my God, you know, I'm gonna kill maybe thousands, maybe millions of people by firing these particular atomic weapons. So they have ones picked. And they say they're very accurate at how they pick them. They pick psychopaths. For those who don't know that,hmph, they actually pick psychopaths.

And psychopaths, there's different categories of them too. There's lazy psychopaths. There are ambitious psychopaths. There's all kinds of them. So they get the ones who are quite content going along with extra privileges and so on, bigger money than the average able-bodied seamen would get. And they have more authority than some of the rest of them too. They're quite content. They'll also give their allegiance to someone who pays them awfully well, much bigger, much better pay rates than seamen. They're quite content with it, they'll do it, they'll follow right through to the end, they'll actually fire the real thing if need be. So, they're psychopaths.

Most folk live in Disneyland, don't they? We are trained to live in Disneyland where everything's wonderful and serene at the top where our masters just weave in and out of this strange complex system of ruling over us, really, and managing us at the same time. And we are being ruled, that's the difference between so-called democratic governments and the dictatorial government. We're being ruled regardless because when you have big agendas that work, using techniques, including from school-age, getting a type of brainwashing in certain must-be programs, then sure you're being ruled. Now, that's not Democratic involvement, that's rulership. Rulership is very different from democracy. And people forget that too. But we are trained to just, just, you know, close our eyes and sit back and all these better people who come out of better wombs, special wombs, can govern you all and manage you all and rule you and take care of all the big problems. And that's how it's done, isn't it.

And the real world, it's vastly different from how we are trained. The ones above you, when you meet some of them actually, they're very straightforward within their own groups of what they're going to say. They're not so guarded as everyone, you'd think they are, amongst themselves. But if they think you're one of them too, it can happen as well. But they can be very, very open about the system. And they laugh, they would laugh at you if you came out with the Disney statements. They literally have no illusions about the world or their positions in the world that they have themselves and how they help to govern and rule everything, unseen by the public in fact, and even unknown by the public that they even exist. But they certainly are there.

Of course, Carroll Quigley talked about them, they call them the oligarchy. You find long before that too Aldous Huxley called them the same kind of thing, the ruling oligarchy, a dominant minority at the top. A scientific elite ruling on behalf of the dominant minority, and on the way down a whole different, category after category, very much like Plato's Republic to an extent and how they'd have literally selective breeding programs for different ruling classes, including military classes as well. But that exists, it does exist at a high level. It's been there your whole life. It's been there long before your grandparents were born.

We're living through an agenda, as I say. Now, there is some variables in the agenda, like, should we go to war with this group physically, should we go to war with this group economically, or blah blah blah? There's different ways you can achieve your objective and sometimes they'll choose one over the other. But the goal is always the same. Always the same. I look, for instance, at, there's an article on Syria and I'll put the links up, of course. But the article on Syria was about how it's really in an economic shambles and it would take about $240 billion literally to try and get it back on any sustainable footing again after all these wars that the West has been heavily supporting along with other countries too. But yeah, it's economically, and don't forget, economic warfare is one of the biggest forms of warfare there is. That's why you put sanctions on people. And warfare itself, real warfare, physical warfare also demands reconstruction and fixing of infrastructure, etc. So sustained warfare brings it right down. So there are many ways to achieve your objective.

Waiting 19 Hours for Gas in a Lifeless City (Syria) - bloomberg.com / 25 April 2019

And Syria was on the list, of course, put out back in the 90s by the PNAC group. General Wesley Clark said there was a whole bunch of countries on that list, in fact, quite a few of them. I gave talks on them years ago.

But anyway, you're living through incredible, incredible agendas. And many of them you will never understand anyway. It's not meant that you understand them. And of course, you suffer from the consequences of them too. But you've got to understand who does benefit, always look who benefits from it all. And what's the long-term strategy of it all too.

When you go back even to the earlier times as I've mentioned before of those who openly talked about world government, in the 19th century, and even before but the 19th century far more open about it with the revolutionary movements. Of course, all the people who backed and helped promote the League of Nations at the end of World War I, to get that up and running as an embryo of world government, a kind of parliamentary system. Very much like you had with Locksley Hall, the poem on Locksley Hall to do with the parliament of the world. That was the idea, the hope of many of the intergenerational revolutionaries. We truly are living in quite a system, in fact, when you watch it all materializing through covert actions. But they always achieve their goal eventually, don't they?

Today it's, you'll find like Jacques Attali, for instance, a big player. Not Jacques Ellul but Jacques Attali. Jacques Attali, he probably is more up there amongst the oligarchic helpers at the very top, at the very least. He was called a Sherpa by Mitterrand, behind Mitterrand in France. In fact, he literally was the boss, it's said by many of the folk in France, of about three different presidents. Including the present ones, for those who don't know it too. Attali boasts about helping to get Macron in, and Hollande before him.

Attali is way up at the United Nations too. And he's got big, intensive, massive input with big investments across the world for investment companies economically. So he's a big player in all of this. He was in an article a few years ago for other, ha, nefarious things from France, a few folk were charged for something. But anyway, I don't know what happened with that thing, he probably got off with that. I bet you. Because he's got so much clout. But you should look into him and his writings because he's really quite open about world government. Winners and Losers in the Coming New World Order, you know, that was one of the subtitles of one of his books, Millennium. And the follow up to it too, another book after it too.

But he's rather open about the big agenda and how massive corporations, that are all running the world now, but about 2000, 2006 I think, he said that these massive corporations are a form of world government, they could force governments to go along with them. They can, they've got so much clout these big corporations, they can blackmail, his words were actually, blackmail governments of countries, and newspapers, to go along with what they want them to promote economically, and have positive reviews on things they want to have positively reviewed. He also talked about that technology would help bring in world government as we become interfaced across the whole planet, connected together in a sense through technology. And that we'll be self surveyed with surveillance, and we'd be surveilled as well, we'd be surveilled by our own governments and eventually a world government as well as more and more power is put into central massive computers for the planet basically. And it's really all here, isn't it?

He talked about the fact that the economic powers of very very rich institutions in the hands of the oligarchs could rule the planet in a more efficient way than ever before. You'll find, and he's quite right, which I've noticed for years and I've talked about for years, that governments, when you see governments across the world doing the same things at the same time, passing the same laws at the same time, and even shedding governmental departments to privatize at the same time, then you realize you're already in a form of world government. Of course you are. Of course you are.   He said the same thing in his books, and in his statements he's put out, in all the writings and so on. He's been quite open about the fact that these companies will basically be given, they are a different form of government already, what they want is total surveillance of the society of every single individual from birth to death, and the rights to basically alter all their lives by having you move wherever they need you to work, etc. etc. I mean, it's a very cold mechanistic system. We’re all numbers now. We’re not people anymore. And if you are people at all you're into somebody's and nobody's. He calls them winners and losers, but you’re somebody's or nobody's. That simply is how it is. It's a truly... it's a true financial capitalist class system, with no apologies. That's what it is. And really, it's all here, isn't it? It's all here.

When you look at all the things that went on before through your entire life in fact, and before you're born, of the massive think tanks with their, with what they've published themselves, and people who participated in these different think tanks who published articles and books over many many years, and you see it all happening maybe 20 years from the time you read the thing, or 30 years sometimes, and you're living through it all and you realize, what does this mean about democracy? when any force at all, even the passive forces simply, you know, want a vote on something, is denied that vote to get anything done, then you realize your democracy is a big, big joke. Of course, it is.

I mentioned it before how when you're given a vote for something, and it doesn't go along with the big agenda, they simply then ignore it. Like the folk who didn't want super cities, where they amalgamate all the different little cities around a bigger one, like Toronto. The folk were given the vote by whatever counsel it was, or Queen... maybe for the government of Ontario... But anyway, I don't know which one gave them the vote, but they did vote for it. And the people didn't want it. And they voted against it by quite a good margin. But the ones who managed it all and the authorities said, well we didn't have to give you the vote any way so we're just going to ignore it. That literally was in the newspapers at the time.

Then you get the Brexit thing from Britain, it's the same thing too. So you don't have really democracy at all. You have lots of agendas that have still, are underway and have to be fulfilled some of them, more to come after that as well. And you have your big promotion groups that promote everything. But you don't have a real say in the important things that matter to you. In fact, you're distracted by lots of deliberately put out topics and things to distract you forever. Where it's meaningless data, meaningless data, that's all it is. As I say, with the photographs and the ooo's and aaa's and oh, did you know, look at that, ooo, aaa, ooo. It's all managed that way for you to distract you. Quite something, hey.

So we're living through it, and I'll just touch on some the things that Brzezinski has said. He was a good promoter of it all because he, again, was way up there at the CFR and Trilateral commission too. And helped plan the future among, for the big think tanks, for all nations and so called Allied, [Alan chuckles.] if we call them Allied anymore, or western side of the world. But he talked about The Technocratic Era in his book, Between Two Ages. Awfully good book if you want to get into it. It was written in the 1970s and in it, in the book he talked about how the system was and where it was going to be taken, and the technocratic era of where you would have a controlled society through technology. He says,

“The technotronic era involves the gradual appearance of a more controlled society. Such a society would be dominated by an elite, (Alan: You know, an elite... is again, it's on behalf of the dominant minority.) unrestrained by traditional values. (A: Traditional values, you see. In other words, whatever you think is right and wrong and moral or anything, oh no, they've got their own, own version of what's moral for themselves.) Soon it will be possible to assert almost continuous surveillance over every citizen and maintain up-to-date complete files containing even the most personal information about the citizen. (A: Remember, this is 1970s, when you thought it was all about the Cold War.) These files will be subject to instantaneous retrieval by the authorities. ”

(A: ...THE authorities. There you go. Didn't say from government or anything, THE authorities, you see. Here's another paragraph that Brzezinski put out on his vision of the future basically.)

“Another threat, less overt but no less basic, confronts liberal democracy. More directly linked to the impact of technology, it involves the gradual appearance of a more controlled and directed society. (A: That's what we're in right now, is the big chapter of that, it's kicked in big time.) Such a society would be dominated by an elite whose claim to political power would rest on allegedly superior scientific knowhow. (A: Well, what are we getting bombarded with for giving all our rights up right now, hm?) Unhindered by the restraints of traditional liberal values, this elite would not hesitate to achieve its political ends by using the latest modern techniques for influencing public behavior and keeping society under close surveillance and control. Under such circumstances, the scientific and technological momentum of the country would not be reversed but would actually feed on the situation it exploits.”

? Zbigniew Brzezinski, Between Two Ages: America's Role in the Technetronic Era

M-hm. Well, you tie that in with again Jacques Attali who talked about this elite and he seemed to be, as far as I can tell, for it. Cass Sunstein put out his book called Nudge, because he's really into influencing the public by all the psychological techniques possible, by using Internet on the public, in real time as you're watching it. I've done the talks on it recently, not so long ago, at least, with the Behavioral InsightsTteams that all your governments are now using to change your, have you changed your opinions on things, and to direct you on what you should be looking at on the Internet and so on. You're being nudged all the time.

Big money to these, and their neuroscientists and psychologists and behaviorists have their full-time employment, hundreds of them, in every country, and they literally decide, and they work with the big big tech companies to nudge you into looking up what they want you to look at when you punch up certain topics. They want to direct you away from what you maybe heard about, or maybe you wanted to look at, into something else, to change your opinion. Well, Jacques Attali is all for that kind of thing. Which is really here in full force today.

For instance, I don't have anything set on my computer where they can actually tell me what to go and look at. What they'll say, well, for instance, on your browsers, people who looked at this also looked at that. I don't go for that at all. I know what I'm going to look for in the first place and nothing is going to sway me for it. That's how you've got to do it. Because you will, you'll be diverted so easily. They know your psychology. You've all got your personality profiles down, they've got you down pat, instant retrieval for these Behavioral Insights Teams. Instant retrieval. They know that they can put something in there as you're looking for something, of, say, a hobby you're into. If you're a musician and you're into music they'll immediately grab you and off you go, and about two hours later you'll wonder where you went and why you went there. It's quite easy to do it.

And just like I said, the Delphi technique of persuasion and getting, the government send out these people, and so do big businesses, where they want to come into your little township and say, you know, if we build this here we could actually improve your economy, we could help you here and help you there and blah blah blah, if you'll only give up a bit of your land and a bit of this and a bit of… That's how it's done. You see? …a bit of your rights, put it that way too.

And as I say, they are experts in actually diverting any criticism that anybody comes up with, who knows their facts. They've got plants in the audiences too, the Delphi technique, and knowing that the ones in the front row will like this person that's presenting, it's like a teacher thing, the apple for the teacher types... Oh, shut up and let the man speak, you know, let this presenter speak, he's nice, I like the man. And that's it. They'll criticize you if you stand up with the real facts and say, wait a minute here, here's all the other facts they're not talking about here. They use the audience against someone who's got some facts. That's the Delphi technique. Very persuasive. Very well done and very professional. By using basic human nature and behaviorism.

So, this is the same kind of thing here, it's all through society today. You've been subject to it your whole life long if you watch television. You're constantly having your opinions made for you. And it's through emotions. If you get emotionally involved in a topic you've lost the game. Sorry. That's one of the first lessons they teach the people at the top. Getting emotionally involved, once you're emotionally involved in something you've lost. When reason is out the window someone's using you. Quite easy to do.

Brzezinski let a lot of cats out of the bag. We're still, you know, analyzing it today of course. He's one player in it, of course; there's many, many more. He also said...

Persisting social crisis, the emergence of a charismatic personality,

(A: ...which they're giving you all the time, all these super philanthropist type characters, or the Bill Gates characters, you see. You're given… They are created for you. This is a new form of government, if you understand, or governance as they like to call it. By using these characters. What are they? They're businessman. Heavily funded by us, our tax money, the public/private ventures. But they give you… They write up these great, they make stars out of them, you understand. There's a star making machine and they make stars out of these. They first came out with John Brockman, when he did for scientists, they make them so you'd follow scientists and start thinking they were some sort of geniuses, so you should follow them and take their opinions, on everything. And it works awfully well. So, a charismatic personality…)

and the exploitation of mass media to obtain public confidence would be the steppingstones in the piecemeal transformation of the United States into a highly controlled society.

Now, years ago I put out links and did some talks on the Reese Commission, the U.S. Congress's Reese Commission authorized to send Norman Dodd and some other commissioners or congressmen to investigate the tax-free foundations, the big… like the Carnegie, Ford Institutes and so on, and Rockefeller ones. They fund thousands of NGOs across the world and influence all countries in their politics and direct the world agenda, the world agenda, the planetary world agenda. Of course, it is.

It was to find out why these rich billionaires, really, that ran things, who set up these foundations, who owned the industry of the US pretty well and a good part of the world, seemed to be promoting what seemed to be communism. So, they did their inquiries into it and Dodd talks about it. He said, and I actually put the links up where he has an audio from, going back on it, reflecting, what he was told by the head of the Ford Foundation at the time, that I think was taken over by the maybe the Rockefeller, one of the other ones eventually at that time. Anyway, the Ford foundation, the philanthropic foundation, supposedly, the CEO, or the head of it had, he said, our job is to literally merge the two systems together, that of communism, the Soviet system, through schooling and so on, and politics, with the West, the two systems would combine. And he was told that quite blatantly and quietly, so much so that it kind of shocked him to realize that this is what they admitted they were working towards, bringing the two systems together.

Awfully important because if you understand that Tony Blair with the international socialism… And don't forget when Lenin said, I think it was Lenin said that communism is only socialism in a hurry. You see? The goal is eventually the same. But when you look at the systems that they were pushing, for merging the two together, that's pretty well what Carol Quigley talked about too. He said the organization that he was in was pushing the same kind of thing, world governmental systems were being pushed and eventually combine with each other and that was the goal. Today we call it globalism. It's all the same thing really.

Of course, the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Council on Foreign Relations was a big part of that going all the way back to Lord Alfred Milner when it was simply known as the Milner group, or even Kindergarten where the students were trained to run the British Empire, the US took it over and promoted it through the League of Nations and the United Nations. They set up the World Bank, the IMF, the Bank for International Settlements. They're all powerful institutions that help run the world. In fact, they promote a lot of what's happening in the world, and pay for it too, as we pay for it all through your tax money. But very powerful institutions. They set up the United Nations as well.

Quigley said that we, meaning the Council on Foreign Relations /Royal Institute of International Affairs, he says, we're often mistaken for communism. That's why this inquiry was initiated in the first place. And he says, we're often mistaken for communism because our goals are very much the same. And that's what it is, that's what we're really in. It's positive freedom and negative freedom. Tony Blair went to one of his mentors, his main mentor who is Isaiah Berlin and he asked him, he says, is it possible to combine, like the percentagewise, how much positive freedom and negative freedom? And that's what they're talking about, the system we're in today, if you notice, your rights have been stripped away. You're all under something that revolutions would've been fought over, and not so long ago, and that's the elimination of all privacy. That's such a personal important right is to have personal privacy, folks. And under the guise, as always, a necessity for terrorism, you see. Necessity, they can take everything away from you. And this happened again. And that is the agenda. Because you're now in a system where they'll still tell you you're free, and a lot of folk will still believe in it, you know, because they can go out shopping, that's what they say freedom is. But in reality, you've lost so many rights, soo many rights, and you're losing them all the time. And you've been trained to accept it's all quite normal. Look at people, look at people around you, how they just dish out their names and addresses and all the rest of it, to any cashier that asks them to get some points on a card or something, or a slight discount on a product or whatever in stores. They think nothing of it. Well, that's the end of it. When folk don't value their privacy, it's finished, folks. Really finished.

They're making it impossible to even survive in the system now and have any privacy at all as they go completely electronic with everything. A lot of companies won't even accept checks anymore. Or they're trying to dissuade you from having checks. You used to get bills at one time, they send you the bill and an envelope to send it back with. That was all part of it, that was part of their little cost, not much at all, because all business is supposed to have operating costs. They don't want that anymore. They want pure profit. They want you to do all the work. You go into the grocery store, you fill up the baskets yourself, you get the things, you take them to the checkout counter, you do the packing at the checkout counter. You're doing it all yourself. You're doing all the work. And then you've got to buy plastic bags if you use plastic bags. So, what's the cost of operating anymore? You to save them stacks and stacks and stacks of money to get even more and more profit. There's no such thing now as a decent profits, it's just the sky's the limit. Pure greed. And it's going to get a lot worse.

But right now, as I say, Jacques Attali especially was all for this system, thought it was wonderful. I'm sure he's got lots of investments in it too. But you're looking at a system of total management. That those who are winners, as Attali calls them, and those who are losers, that's all the rest of you, the bulk of you. That's what he means by this. When you really read his writings, that's what he's telling you. It isn't just to do with high-speed Internet. No, it's much, much more than that.

As I say, Brzezinski is quite well aware of it too. Getting back to this merging of the Soviet system and the West, you see, this is what Brzezinski said about it.

The regionalization

(A: They call it regionalization, right... We'll regionalize different places, like the European Union. Then NAFTA was to unite the whole of the Americas by the way. I gave the talks on that years ago. It wasn't just the free-trade thing, again, anymore than the European Union was just about free trade. It's total amalgamation. And they wanted to even set up a parliament in 2005, that came out on the news in Canada by participants in this get together for the three amigos for NAFTA. They said that they even thought about, even discussed casually, possibly set up a parliament in Montréal for the whole of the Americas. But they had a bit of a backlash from the US, so they went back to pretending they're asleep a bit. They don't sleep, folks. It's always been the agenda. A very old agenda. Some of this, some of that, some of the Americas, etc. etc. Anyway, very old agenda. All the way back again to, as I say, Alfred Milner, and probably before him too.)

(A: But, regionalization, right. Here's Brzezinski it says...)

This regionalization is in keeping with the trilateral plan (A: Right, that's what he also was a member of.) which calls for a gradual convergence of the East and West (A: You see, East and West, getting back to Norman Dodd, the Reese Commission, East and West, right.) ultimately leading towards the goal of one world government.

This is not conspiracy, like... I tell you, I mean, look up just World Government on Wikipedia, on this thing called Wikipedia, right. [Alan chuckles.] Because for years everybody would laugh at you for just mentioning any of this stuff. Because if their mainstream media and the big talking faces that are paid big money to stay on, even when they're dying on that chair, to tell you the truth, the most trusted whatever country you're in, that's there to present your news, it's because it's, again, getting back to the Milgram thing, people in positions of authority, when they say something you'll listen. You trained that way from school onwards. And they'd laugh at you, oh, ha ha, world government, oh how crazy, conspiracy nuts. And again, that's put out by the authorities, and that your governments are involved in [Alan chuckles.] creating world government, to ridicule you. That's standard stuff. Standard stuff. Yep. M-hm.

World government - en.wikipedia.org

Now, even in Wikipedia, that does a big share of scoffing, they've got a bit of the history in it now. It's amazing. You see, that's how folk that laughed at you suddenly accept it all. They talk about it quite casually, as though they'd always believed it, always known it, when it's actually getting spoken about by people in authority. But until is done that way, by a person in authority, they'll laugh at you. Oh, ha-ha, you're a nut case, you know. Yep, there you go.

Anyway…

"This regionalization is in keeping with the Tri-Lateral Plan which calls for a gradual convergence of East and West, ultimately leading toward the goal of one world government. National sovereignty is no longer a viable concept."

? Zbigniew Brzezinski

By Zbigniew Brzezinski, hm, NSA, and the whole bit. And he's way up there with all the different military organizations for the US. M-hm. He wasn't just some casual person who liked to dream a lot and parrot what he dreamt. No, this guy was a planner and a mover and shaker.

“To resolve conflicts, excessive ambitions and one's own fears and aspirationis must be sacrificed.”
? Zbigniew Brzezinski

No kidding, hey. M-hm. I tell ya. And getting back to Brzezinski again, he was way up there as I say. I think he was one of the many characters who didn't take that role of national security advisor and so on. But he said…

"Technology will make available, to the leaders of major nations, techniques for conducting secret warfare, of which only a bare minimum of the security forces need be appraised. . . . Techniques of weather modification could be employed to produce prolonged periods of drought or storm."

--Zbigniew Brzezinski, Between Two Ages

That was in the 1970s, they already had the technology then.

The whole thing is, never forget that what you're living through right now, it's like waves coming in and hitting you from, that were set long ago. And as they're coming in to hit you, those who make the waves happen are already way ahead with not just the planning but the setting of dates and so on for the waves of the future to come in with certain things to be done, the same way. That's how it really, really works. And when you're alive you're trained not to see, to look ahead to the future waves that are already getting, as I say, managed and getting ready to go down the road. You're meant to think that we're just stumbling along down through time and things just happen by themselves. Nothing is further from the truth. Nothing at all.

One thing Karl Marx said that was really, really true, he said, all money and profit really comes from labor, all wealth comes from labor. And we are the masses. You understand, we are the business. And the ones who live off of us [Alan chuckles.] live better than us ourselves, you see. Those who manage us and do all the, we used to call it, the sums about finances and so on, from the money that we're making, they live better than we'll ever live. We are the business. And when you can make it mandatory that everyone must pay this and must pay that, etc., that's an incredible power, to make sure that you're going to be awfully stinking rich for you and your own down the road, for those at the top, isn't it?

And also too, don't forget the other statement he made too, which is very true. You think of biowarfare, you think of all the other techniques they can use today, and even silent weapons they can use, like Silent Weapons For Quiet Wars and things like that. You see, in the early times it was easier to control a million people than to kill a million. Today it's infinitely easier to kill a million people than to control a million. But even at that, though, I think it's, I think the techniques are so fantastic today of controlling us all they don't even have to think about just killing us. They can sterilize us quietly, while most folk don't complain about it, still think it's just… It's odd that, how they just accept things, like autism suddenly, just all of a sudden it's a normal thing, right? [Alan chuckles.] And cancers of all kinds are suddenly normal. Because you're told by, again, experts what they think is important. If they don't mention this is important then neither will you. In fact, you deny what you see yourself because they haven't made a big deal of it on the television on the news. M-hm.

Now, think about too, you've got the warfare going on, right. The war on terror, that's to be here forever now, you see. I read the articles at the time when the ones who came out with that said that,it will be, get use to it, it's going to be here forever. His what Brezinski said…

… Persisting social crisis, (A: Well, it's the environment, oh, it's the weather, oh, it's this, it's that, oh, it's, you know. And he says…) the emergence of a charismatic personality, (A: Hm...? You are always given the ones that are charismatic today, that are trained, just like you train actors or stars, you see.) and the exploitation of mass media to obtain public confidence would be the steppingstones in the piecemeal transformation of the United States into a highly controlled society.”
? Zbigniew Brzezinski

Well, you're here, folks. You're here. They give you the people to follow. M-hm. They do. And with politicians, politicians have no... Simple slogans, right, that's what they give you. The marketers give you a character. They give you a fake personality, they’ll say, oh, this is his past and the whole bit. They give a fake personality to make you think you know them. Just like a popstar, you know. And then they give them slogans to spout, the speeches are written for them, and that's how simple it is, tell them what they want to hear, that's it.

But getting back to this controlled technotronic system, hey. There's not a week goes by that you don't have all the articles on it.

Human rights group alleges Google may be helping the U.S. government conduct warrantless searches in 'massive file scanning program'
dailymail.co.uk / 26 April 2019

The Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC), based in Washington, D.C., filed an amicus brief that makes those allegations in United States v. Wilson, a federal appellate case.

. . . a case concerning Google's scanning of billions of personal files for suspected unlawful content, at the behest of the federal government,' EPIC said in a statement late last month.

The U.S. government has increasingly utilized private entities, such as Google, Facebook and Apple, to seize user data from cellphones and computers without the need for a warrant.

Because these entities don't have to abide by the Fourth Amendment, agencies like the FBI can simply subpoena them for records like email messages en masse.

Now, there's nothing new in this article here. I can remember reading the articles years ago on the same thing. Because of course, that's what it's going to be used for. And often they didn't even have to subpoena them, they could just ask them. I can remember there was somebody way up at Google years ago on television, many years ago saying that, oh yeah, it's routine just to hand them over if they want this and want that, you know. So I'll put this up with that too because it ties in with the Technotronic era, right. And…

Amazon’s Alexa reviewers reportedly have access to customer home addresses digitaltrends.com / 25 April 2019

Earlier this year, it was reported that Amazon has thousands of employees listening to conversations that users have with the company’s voice assistant Alexa. As it turns out, some of those employees may have access to more than just audio recordings. Some members of Amazon’s Alexa auditing team have access to location data, including the latitude and longitude of users, according to a report from Bloomberg.

Of course, they do. You're under a continuance surveillance system. That's the Technotronic era. You are here. You're here, yeah. And then, there's cameras that are going to be put out now that…

Coming to store shelves: cameras that guess your age and sex - apnews.com / 23 April 2019

…and a lot more to it as well. I'll put that up as well. We really, we buy our spies, don't we? They should give it to us all for free. But if they gave it to us for free it would be like the Soviets used to be, very suspicious, you wouldn't trust them. But they make you buy them, and you say, well, I chose to buy this, it's my personal this, it's my personal that. You know, personal computer, remember that one? [Alan chuckles.] Personal computer. [Alan chuckles.]   The whole plan is looking at whatever, everything you're doing. It's your personal computer, 'eh? Good marketing, though. M-hm.

And then also, how they're pushing drones, these small drones with cameras, that are across the country now. And they always put out these little PR pieces, how, oh, they can, they've helped catch so many criminals by using these tools and so on, and all that nonsense.

Chula Vista Police Drones Help in Close to 60 Arrests in First 5 Months - nbcsandiego.com / 25 April 2019

It was like the cameras in Britain, there's more stabbings and slaughtering's every day there and robberies. And they can't help, they can't even go after the people who, they can't even find the people who are doing it, with all these cameras, hey. It's not there for what they tell you it's there for.

Also, sound cannons to disperse crowds…

What is it like when the police use an LRAD ‘sound cannon’ to disperse a crowd?
azmirror.com / 26 Nov 2018

“It felt like my head was going to pop,” Neef recalled.

(A: ... This is what they say when you get these sound cannons aimed at you. They give you an example of LRAD, to try and disperse the crowd, in Phoenix of course it was apparently.)

The Phoenix Police department recently won approval to purchase two of the same type of LRAD used in Pittsburgh.

Anyway, I'll put these articles up. Another one too…

Electric vehicles emit more CO2 than diesel ones, German study shows brusselstimes.com / 17 April 2019

When CO2 emissions linked to the production of batteries and the German energy mix - in which coal still plays an important role - are taken into consideration, electric vehicles emit 11% to 28% more than their diesel counterparts, (A: That's quite a jump, 11% to 28%.) according to the study, presented on Wednesday at the Ifo Institute in Munich.

(A: So they talk about how much stuff is released in the making of even just the batteries alone.)

Another thing too is Julian Assange. Of course, as you all know, you're hit with these spells, big spells. I mean, 9/11 was a big spell, everybody looked at the towers and the spell was cast over the world. As it was intended to do, you know. They used all the shock and awe that they used on the Middle East as well. Very important. You can actually take it further with the shock and awe. But they actually used weaponry, some of the advanced weaponry on the soldiers in Iraq, for instance. It was admitted in the newspapers at the time, where they had used ELF weapons and they were all stunned, all these troops. Just walking towards, giving themselves up, they were in utter shock, really, very stunned and confused. It was in the papers in Britain at the time. As you live through this big big agenda.

But the whole thing with Julian Assange was a shock to the world, to make sure that you all get the message that the old, the old idea of having an Internet where you could say what you wanted, it's over. It's really over. Especially if you're going to dig into anything that's going to upset or annoy the policymakers. And the mind managers, I call them. Because these Behavioral Insights Teams, there's many different levels of them. They give you what you're supposed to think about and topics you're supposed to think about. They'll even give the media topics of trivia to dish out there too.

You don't understand how your thoughts are totally controlled and given to you and managed. Jacques Ellul, the other Jacques, was more explicit in how it's done and how your always given your opinions by expert techniques. And they guide you. You just follow them as they talk. Just like Derren Brown, you're guided to the conclusions they want you to have. It's very simple. Very simple and very effective techniques. It doesn't dawn on you that you’re getting lied to and coerced and manipulated, does it? It doesn't really. And people will actually fight you if you show them how their lead to their conclusions. They'll get angry, furious. They think they're in charge of themselves. It's very disturbing to have it pointed out and proven to you that you're not.

So I'll put up an article on Assange as they... It's really for the public, to scare the public even more saying, oh, you'd better shut up and behave yourselves, and bu-bu-bu-bu-bu. You know, that’s how it's done. [Alan chuckles.] And all media too, all the media's compliant with all of this. Because they all know, all the journalists know what to say, what not to say and that, and they don't want to lose their jobs. They can give you opinions and stuff... You don't get news anymore, you get opinion pieces, which are generally pretty safe, you know, on different things.

You see, the age of being told things that should concern us, because they would at least have a pretense of democracy, and to complain, are gone. You won't be told about anything until it's actually happened, and laws have been passed, and new subsections of subsection so-and-so has all been added to it, they don't even bother telling you now. N-n. That is the new governments, you see, that's what they mean by it. So I'll put up…

Another one too is to do with, this is an interesting one…

Home Office investigated over student visa cheat claims bbc.com / 27 April 2019

(A: This is in Britain. Quite interesting actually. But there's nothing new in it. I've seen it in different countries myself. It says...)

The government is being investigated over its decision to cancel 36,000 student visas due to accusations of cheating on English language tests.

The Home Office has also deported more than 1,000 people after its own probe into exam fraud began in 2014.

(A: Australia’ got the same problem.)

Spending watchdog the National Audit Office (NAO) said the Home Office's response would be reviewed after its decisions came under "public scrutiny".

The Home Office revoked student visas where there was evidence of cheating, but its decisions have come under renewed public and parliamentary scrutiny in the wake of the Windrush scandal.

The cheating scandal came to light in an undercover BBC Panorama investigation into fraud at two centres administering the mandatory language tests. (A: …for the students, you see.)

The then government-approved Test of English for International Communication (TOEIC) involves a written and oral section and a separate multiple-choice question paper.

Following the report, Theresa May, then home secretary, said the evidence was "very shocking".

As a result, the Home Office ordered the US firm providing the exams, Educational Testing Service (ETS), to check more than 58,000 tests taken between 2011 and 2014.

It said voice-recognition software suggested that proxy test-takers were used in more than 30,000 cases.

(A: This is a COMMON thing. There's people from the Far East for instance, who get licenses and so on in Canada that haven't even arrived here yet, for driving, for instance. [Alan laughing.] So the proxy folk take their tests for them and so on. That was even, years ago that was happening here. But now you've got students doing it. I'm sure the students have been doing this for a long, long time, and other ones stand in and do their tests for them. And the voice recognition software is picking it up that it's not the people who are taking the tests that are actually, have actually taken the test, it's other people standing in for them.)

The technology extracts biometric features from an individual's speech to create a voice print, the vocal equivalent of a fingerprint.

It's all been done on all of us too, each time you phone someone. They're all kept and analyzed, and they've got your voice prints. So any where across the world that you go to phone, and you can use any phone, it doesn't matter, they can pretty well instantly can tell who it is and where you're calling from, definitely where you are. And then you have…

Microsoft employees question if diversity is important and slam the tech giant's 'discriminatory hiring' against Asian and white men on an internal online messaging board meant for communicating with CEO Satya Nadella
dailymail.co.uk / 26 April 2019

(A: So folk who work at Microsoft are questioning this policy. And some of the things put up on the board, the employees' board, were by women who worked there, talking about it's mainly Asian and white men who are being discriminated against. And the women who complained and put the complainant in have been hammered too buy other ones. Because it is the agenda to hammer men in the first place, I suppose. You understand, things are allowed, they're not just allowed, they're being promoted to discriminate, you know. That is the agenda of course.)

(A: You can’t have selective discrimination. It's no different than saying that certain folk are allowed to hate others, but not the rest of them. You see? It's the same thing. You've got to have... Equality means equality, folks. It really does. You can't have this sort of thing going on. Of course, you can't.)

•Some Microsoft employees have been debating the company's pro-diversity push on an internal message board

•Two posts that have been heavily debated were written by a female Microsoft program manager

•One post questioned Microsoft's push to hire more women and minorities, arguing that it discriminates against white and Asian men

There's backlash against this person that complained. It's just astonishing. Everybody's in their camp now. They've all been trained through university and college into a camp. And they don't even know that themselves how they're getting used.

Also, this article ties in with something I’ve been thinking about for a while actually. It says…

National Health Service doctor (A: In Britain.) and UK pharmacist who became Nazi-style torturers for ISIS: Team of vile medics took organs from prisoners and gave them to wounded terrorists
dailymail.co.uk / 26 April 2019

(A: So they went over to work with ISIS, from Britain. I guess they were educated in Britain too.)

IssamAbuanza, 40, a former NHS doctor who left behind his wife and two children in Sheffield when he travelled to Syria in 2014, was appointed the terror group’s ‘health minister’, the British Government believes.

(A: The other one is still hiding out…)

Abuanza, now thought to be hiding in caves near the village of Baghouz.

But anyway, they both worked together and took organs outs. And sold other organs too, naturally. There's... there's... there’s something for you, it tells you a lot. [Alan laughing.] You don't know how great it is in a country that has some civilization and rights for people, and we’re losing it all, but, rights for people, where you'd never think of doing that in your own countries where you've got law and order. As the universities are turning out, as I say, massive armies to destroy your system, [Alan chuckles.], where d’ya want to go to? Hm?

Because when you look at what you have, and peace to an extent, although some countries are going down the tubes fast, like Britain with stabbings every day… and incredible organized crime too in Britain now. But then when you go into the countries where folk are literally selling organs, killing folk and selling organs… And then using other organs they would take out of prisoners and put them in other prisoner's cells just to terrorize them, just the organs, you put the organs in, like a heart in the cell or whatever… And they ran a 10 men medical team. I tell ya. And they also did chemical tests on prisoners with poisons and stuff. There ya go. There ya go. M-hm.

When life become so cheap, folks, you know, you're as well as going off, if you can be a hermit somewhere go and do it when life becomes that cheap. Because living amongst people won't even be tolerable. It might be very short too. M-hm.

Facebook is in hot water again after Canadian watchdog finds last year's Cambridge Analytica data-harvesting scandal broke privacy laws - dailymail.co.uk / 25 April 2019

So they're going after it again from the Canada side. Again, this is all part of the new system of hyper surveillance as Jacques Attali called it. And you're all being trained it's quite normal, a lot of youngsters are getting so trained in it from school and from growing up in it they do think it's normal. M-hm.

Another thing too to do with the super cities that they talked about with the, you'll literally have the elimination of nation-states, Attali talked about that too, quite openly, when he said they were obsolete actually. But yeah, and then you'd have these super cities, like the defense think tanks for Britain have, I've put them up before when they published them to the public. You can get a hold of those things. Interesting to see what they see for the future from the military think tank point of view. And they do publish it, at least they have a public version. I'm sure there's a private version too.

But…

Silicon Valley could be the second richest country in the world - mercurynews.com / 26 April 2019

Which would mean it would have to be a massive city-state, you know. It tells you how wealthy that whole area is basically and how it's just behind oil-producing Qatar, etc… and they could call it the Republic of Silicon Valley. Interesting, hey?

Another one, too, again, I'll put up the article to do Syria and how they've destroyed the economy and everything through massive war. Which is… It gets it's job done, 'eh? They can use economics too along with forcing them to fight and forcing them to defend themselves and forcing, forcing, etc., until they are destitute. Which of course is what Brzezinski and Kissinger said they'd love it to be eventually, is just the Stone Age. Just like Iraq and all the rest of these liberated countries, 'eh? M-hm.

Ex-Google manager Tristan Harris says tech giants are 'downgrading humanity' businesstelegraph.co.uk / 25 April 2019

Mr Harris established the Center for Humane Technology after leaving Google, set up to push his 'time well spent' mantra.

(A: He says basically that...)

'This is really serious. We are not fooling around,' . . .

(A: …and that…)

. . . raised a generation of people with shortened attention spans, outrage-fuelled dialogue, smartphone addiction and vanity.

(A: Well that's the narcissistic system they said they'd bring in actually, long ago, long before you were given the computer. They had the computer but you weren't, and they said they'd bring in a narcissistic society as part of the phase. And here we are. And he says...)

‘This is overwhelming who we are and our identities,’ (A: That's what it's doing, it's overwhelming us.) Mr Harris said. ‘While we have been upgrading machines, we have been downgrading our humanity.’   (A: No kidding. M-hm.)

But again, that was what was to be done, Julian Huxley mentioned that, they have to knock man off his pedestal. And of course, that's when they brought in the horrible art. Anything with beauty had to be destroyed in your culture. And even music was downgraded into basically…. a slide until you’re at the bottom. And here we are. There ya go. It all happens because it's planned that way. [Alan chuckles.] That's the reason why it happens.

And...

Technology campaigners offer plan to fight 'human downgrading' - itnews.com.au / 24 April 2019

It'd be interesting to see where that goes. Because I can't see it. Is it a big agenda? And they'd never give up power over the people now, you know. We are, as I say, we are... We are just like TheMatrix said, we're energy units. Just compare that with Marx again, right, back to Marx, all wealth comes from labor. The people. We are, we are the business, the people are the business. Hm? Same thing. It doesn't happen by itself. Planned long ago.

And just to get back to how they've destroyed nation after nation by... war had many side effects, and all planned in advance of course. But, it's interesting to see. I mean, Britain now had an article in the paper [Alan chuckles.] where a gang, organized crime, with those terrible mopeds. They're not mopeds, these are not mopeds. A moped has petals as well as the motor. Little 350cc or 500cc machines, they're not mopeds. And these are the ones where the guys steal the cell phones from passerby's and so on. But anyway, they actually got a van as well, a big truck, and probably stole that too. Smashed it into a jewelry store in England and left it in there so they could get, pass the truck into the store, you see, it smashed right through it. The guys with their bikes, the motorbikes basically, they’re really scooters we used to call them, made off with, phew, over, it was over a million, a million a half pounds or something worth of stuff. All well organized. And they haven't caught any yet. Probably won't, actually.

That's Britain. But that's lawless. It's just a mess now. And folk are terrified in the big cities because of all the stabbings, machetes and stuff. Anyway, they've also got…

UK is the EU’s gonorrhoea hotspot: Britain is to blame for 55% of cases with 49,000 Britons diagnosed with the STI (A: It's got STI, sexually transmitted infections, they used to call it diseases but it sounded more ominous, but it's now sexually transmitted infection.) in 2017 as experts warn dating apps are behind a spike across the continent dailymail.co.uk / 26 April 2019

(A: Dating apps. No kidding you. Humph. Wow. Hm.)

There are now 22.2 cases of gonorrhoea per 100,000 people in the EU, the worst rate for at least four years.

And it's a bigger story of course. But mind you, a lot of it's not reported too. You get nonspecific urethritis, and not everybody will report it. In fact, a lot of different doctors now for different groups will keep it all quiet. M-hm. For different groups. And to be very careful about it too. So yeah, Britain's definitely up there with a lot of this. That's just the one thing, they have all kinds of diseases too, to do with sex of course. But it just shows you that Britain truly is the F word, 'eh, finished, that's what I was going to say.   And that's how it goes. That's how it goes. M-hm.

Anyway, I've prattled on too long tonight, as always. And it's been a bit around the pond you might say, and not just straight from here to there. It's just that the major thing is, I've always stressed that whatever happens today was planned long ago, on any big scale. Number two, there's lots of agencies running your lives to make you, what you think is you. And you truly are a product to an extent, a great extent, with far less control over what comes into your mind and becomes an opinion. You have far less control than you think about it. It's consistent every day. And on the Internet now, which is a massive tool, massive tool, with again Behavioral Insights Teams, and oh, thousands of behaviorists and neuroscientists working with all the agencies that work on you to make you into what they want you to be. It's just astonishing how it's all done so perfectly.

But again, I'll put up that little link to Derren Brown's show on how to create basically a gang or hit squad or whatever it happens to be, or a robber squad of criminals, quite easily, in no time at all. It's a microcosm of how, really, what's happening on a massive, much larger scale on a daily basis, by techniques that you don't even, even, you're not even aware are getting used on you.

Derren Brown - The Heist, Pt. 1 - youtube.com

It's very sad. You know, even in a con, in a con when you've been conned by a confidence trickster, you have to participate in your own delusion of what you're going to get out of it. Or if you put money in that, my God, you're going to win $1 million. Really? Yes, you are. Etc., you know, or something like that. You have to participate. But the techniques are used on us all to con us all, we’re generally unaware they’re even happening to us at the time.

When you see how many folk now automatically fill every survey out that's given to them, even through the Internet, just automatically, without a thought, just pppf, pppf, pppf. Their likes and dislikes, that's how they've already admitted that they can tell so much about you. And then if you didn't like something, and X amount of people did, what will it show them about you?... and how can they work on you to modify you into the behavior that they want you to have? You see, they actually take note of all these things. It's all automatic. There's not a person just sitting watching you. This is done automatically by massive computer systems. On all of us. All the time. This is the Technotronic society. We're in it.

And as I say, like Bertrand Russell said a long time ago, you'll keep saying that you're free because your government will tell you you are, you're the best in the world. AS you have institutions all set up using massive NGO armies, making them radicals, to destroy the safeties that you have in your own country, like I mentioned earlier. You'd better start thinking about this and deciding what is valuable in your own society. And try to reclaim what you've lost. Because if you don't reclaim it, you won't have anything left to hold onto, shortly. And that's true.

Because big big agendas are set a forth for all of us. Across the whole planet. And again, getting back to Jacque Attali who was really in there with the big banking boys, he knew them all. He even wrote a book on the Warburg’s and praised them for creating modern finance to an extent and advancing in banking. He said that the future would be run by massive international bankers, economics would rule us all.

Anyway, for myself, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, where I don't think winter's finished yet [Alan chuckles.] because of global warming, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

May 5, 2019 (#1719)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on May 5, 2019. I hope everyone's getting into the optimism that we have, occasional optimism anyway, it depends where you are, isn't it, of a coming summer. Hopefully here it won't be as... fiery, you might say, as it was last year. Perhaps, we'll see. Last Wednesday I had snow here again in the morning. And it's been pretty cool at night indeed. But that's the way it goes in this, this little planet that we live on.

It's true, we're born onto this little planet, aren't we, and we've got a short lifespan. Very short. I always stress this because it's so true. The longer you live in fact, and the more people you'll see, even from school, early school, I can remember a girl at school when I was about seven or eight years old who sat opposite me, or across from me and who just disappeared one day. It turned out that she died of I think it was leukemia. And that brings it home to you at an early age that things can be very, very temporary. And more so as you get older and you understand death much more easily, I think.

Everyone tries to deny it to an extent, because otherwise we'd all cave-in and be running for Prozac before we knew it. Because it's not a natural thing to dwell on death, naturally, all the time. And they have terms for it in psychiatry and psychology and so on to do with that very very topic. Because we are definitely… definitely influenced by the system in which we’re born, naturally. We are in a very materialistic system today, in the phase, it's hard to… I wouldn't say it was a post, totally post-religious phase, or post-Christian phase for sure. Because Christianity changed long, long before, centuries before too. Because money has always been part of the system. And you need money to survive in the system.

And we really don't know how we'd survive at all, in the past that is, how could we have survived, unless you lived in a communal type collectivist type society. Perhaps a long long time ago we certainly did. We know that even from the different societies they're always digging up across Europe that the people were, the different groups and ethnic groups were very, very old indeed, and had lived after ice ages and came back into the same countries between thaws, then back out again, and back in again. That's what happened. They know this too. But again, they were more a collectivist societies, or tribal societies. They call them hunter/gatherers, but I think they were agricultural too. And they had to have some kind of order within society for it to function at all. And that's the same anywhere across the planet.

But once you came into this odd thing called money, and it is odd, isn't it, really? It's a substitute for wealth. Real wealth. And real wealth initially was what you needed. Hmph. It was basics and necessities. Eventually you'll find that the richer families had simply killed those around them, stolen their properties. And that technically was wealth. Then once you could transmute that into coinage, for instance, about 800, it was 800 BCE or so that they actually came out with actual coins they claim. Before that they used strips of gold which they would cut off, they'd wind it around their arms, even thousands of years ago. And before that too they used silver, silver was more common than gold. But this odd metal became a substitute as I say, for wealth, real wealth.

As I say, real wealth at one time was basically your necessities, what you had to live on, land, it could grow food, or you could hunt and things like that. These were basic necessities. But now wealth has become, really, divorced from necessities. And those who know how to accumulate wealth down through the ages, I mean, become awfully, awfully, awfully powerful people, or powerful families for that matter. Today you'll find the most, very very wealthy people have been given positions to control us and to have control over us, supposedly philanthropists and inventors or whatever they also want to call them, although really, they're just big businessmen in an age of public-private partnerships.

I did the talks years and years ago on the public-private partnerships that came out of the Trilateral Commission's findings of how they wanted to change or run the world then. And the CFR branch of it too said that it was time for these philanthropists, these suddenly, people you never heard of before who suddenly became famous using the fame machine, the same machine that creates stars in music or movies, started to create them as though they were some kind of genius, you see, and they should participate in running the world and governing the world.

But they never ever mention the fact, well, how can you have a democracy when you have people now being basically self-appointing, or groups like the private organization CFR, private group telling them to just take their positions of power over us. That's not democracy. It's not even governance in the term that you know of it. Perhaps a new term that you don't know about of course, because is always two ways to look at everything, especially in today's very deceptive system. But the system they are bringing us into is supposed to be post-Democratic. And during this period of time of post-Democratic governance you are definitely being ruled by organizations and foundations with front groups that are appointed, or self-appointed to govern us basically, either under the guise of environmentalism...

Well, do you… is there some kind of special party that calls itself, you know, so that they can vote for? Or are they simply there because they appointed themselves to be there? Who appointed them to attach themselves to local councils? Or city councils? Or state councils or provincial councils and federal councils for that matter? Did anyone get a vote on that? No, it didn't happen.

What I'm just simply saying here is, we don't really participate much at all in the way we're ruled. Because we are ruled. And that's the difference between democracy and rulership. In rulership you're simply ruled like monarchy would rule you. But it's been done so slickly that people have kind of accepted it. Because no one pointed out to them, wait a minute here, this isn't democracy. You know?

The Club of Rome of course, a big big think tank for this organization, who hit upon the idea a long time ago it was part of their job to find a way to unite the planet. Remember, it's a global system here, for global governance. They said that they had to find a common enemy to unite the whole world. But like, to save the world, you see. So, they came up with the idea that global warming and famine and so on, and the like would fit the bill. And that's where the climate change and all that came out of too. That's also where Agenda 21 came out of. Agenda 21 for the 21st century, with all of its subsections to be signed and signed and signed throughout this whole century. Carbon taxes, all that, it's all out of the same agenda, you see.

Well, we didn't get to vote on it. You're not going to get to vote on it. And you simply have to believe it. Well, it's quite amazing to watch religions being destroyed by the same organizations [Alan chuckles.] that are running us now, as they give you a new belief system. And it really is based on belief, isn't it, what you believe. And they're not going to give you a vote because then a lot of folk won't believe what they're being told. So therefore, you're not going to get to vote. But don't forget, the Trilateral Commission was designed to get the big agenda done without people voting on it. They'd work behind the scenes. They'd appoint leaders to governments across the world. And they've been awfully successful.

They came out with that I think during the Carter administration, was the first administration to suddenly announce this whole Trilateral organization to the world. Zbigniew Brzezinski too was a member who helped set it up so they could get things done behind the scenes without the public even knowing about it. That's what we're living in today.

So they're bringing in a controlled society. A scientifically controlled society they claim. But even their sciences and their claims of things need an awful lot of faith to believe in obviously. So, it's a religion of course to an extent, for those who follow it. For those who manage it, they don't believe in it themselves. They know it's an excuse to bring in a long-awaited scientific humanistic kind of society where HG Wells mentioned it in Things To Come, where literally the scientific elite would rule the world on behalf of those who own it basically. It hasn't changed, the agenda, you see.

And that's just a brief recap because I don't want to go into it all again. But getting back to money and so on, money has always been a big, big part of it. And in money, there's nothing you can't do if you control billions of dollars, for instance, like the think tanks, there's nothing you cannot do. They don't get taxed, the foundations. They can invest as well and with the investments and massive returns they can, then they have of course created massive armies of demonstrators, of all kinds, who are all on board with the exact same agenda, climate change, save the planet, environmentalism, etc., it's all the same agenda, depopulate, bring down the human species, etc.

And by eliminating industry in, and definitely across Europe and the Americas, they boasted about it. I think Maurice Strong even boasted about it's too, that they'd have to, the worst thing that the West had was massive industry, they'd have to eliminate it. And reduce everyone to a state of poverty, obviously, eventually that will happen. Because we're still, we haven't adjusted our system to manage us all in a postindustrial society. We're still getting taxed. We still have masses of payments for countries debts to the World Bank, etc. So we've got nothing to make up the difference, really. You can't all work in computers. We can't all compete with the whole world working with computers. It's not meant to last forever. It's a partial-way measure to something else in the future of course.

I was looking at the, again, I've always kept an eye on the population figures put out for every country. And for, oh, so many years now they've been on and on about overpopulation. But the countries in the West are declining. And they're only kept up by a large immigration. And it's going to continue of course. And again, lots of migrants come in from large family nations, and with the taste of more and more wealth they no doubt at all will eventually go the same way of having fewer members of the family and they'd prefer to have that extra money, etc. Just like everybody before them has done in the West. And the population will decline again and again and again.

Japan, there's an article out too, how their population has really hit an all-time low for births today. They're going to have to accept more and more migrants to keep their own population up. Mind you, Japan has a lot of real heavy industry still on the go. Otherwise, they'll go the same way as everybody else.

Japan's child population declines - independent.ie / 4 May 2019

So what we're looking at too is a controlled system of gradual reduction of population. Actually, it's speeding up quite a bit now. As the people go the same way of preferring the luxuries of life, and more holidays abroad or whatever it happens to be that they are into, and not having families which cost a lot of money. So you're back to money again. Money is a tremendous control factor. Where people, many people, even before and after Charles Galton Darwin's book The Next Million Years, money has always been used as a weapon. There are many ways to try and coerce people not to have children and the lack of money is an awfully good way to do it. Because children will cost money.

And again, in a system where everyone now must work, including men and women, you don't get so many families today except very wealthy families that can have a person at home to look after the children, or afford a nanny or something like that, then it's even harder for people to have children as you go down the class system. And yes, the class system is alive and well. Let's not kid ourselves. It's definitely still here. [Alan chuckles.] Alive and well. They don't talk about it much, but it's there all right. And in the class system of this modern class system, it's, you can have a bureaucratic class, and a very large bureaucratic class now. When you look at how many people today work for governments, directly, and all the agencies that are indirectly involved and getting paid by government, which is all taxpayer-funded in other words, it's staggering today. It really is staggering.

So the taxpayer has to fund it all. And obviously, if money is real at all and the way it's supposedly managed and handled, in a state where we're supposedly all bankrupt, personally and nationally we're bankrupt, and then [Alan chuckles.] internationally everybody's bankrupt supposedly to the World Bank, how can they keep just creating money out of nothing? Which is what it is, isn't it? You can't do it yourself because you'd get a bill or a final demand, or you're going to the bankruptcy court if you can't pay your debts. But nations, strangely enough, with the best, supposedly, brains in the business working as economists for countries and nations and businesses and so on at the top, supposedly we can just continue like this forever? Well, we can't obviously.

If it's real, eventually the piper must be paid. The only way you can go on like this is if none of it's real at all. Alan Greenspan said about America, the US, he said they could never go bankrupt now because they simply print money. To print money today, it's still used, the term, even though most of it's electronic, so you don't even need that at all, it's just, it's just punched into computers and that's it.

So, if there's no real accounting of money, how can they constantly have people [Alan laughing.] who are managing it all for us and deciding to make it more expensive for us to live, buying basics... Because that is the agenda now, to go into austerity by upping the prices of food, etc. It's been going on steadily since the last crash. And it was authorized to do so by all the governments involved, to start jacking up basic energy costs. Because that's a big part of it. Anything that's beneficial to personal and national and collective survival, like health, for instance, and food, [Alan laughing.] is going to get more and more restrictive and more costly. And again, as they cut back too on all of the alternatives, that are not even going to be used as a supplement, really, to produce energy in emergencies like coal, etc., they're all getting closed down and dismantled. When the time comes, we're going to be in an awful state.

But we're all supposed to suffer for the good of the planet, we're told. But it's really, it's the old eugenics system and scientific management of the true, the true socialist ideal. As opposed to the one that the people at the bottom think it's all about, [Alan laughing.], us all being nice to each other. No, no. True socialism at the top was a scientifically managed society, that's what it was supposed to end up being. All the top capitalists were on board with that way of managing the system. It's easier to control and manage the public that way as far as they're concerned.

So, we're supposed to go into austerity and at the same time pay more and more and more for the same vital necessities. That's what's... The agenda is happening this way because it's planned that way. And don't think for a second that nations that can get on board with world wars and so on, very quickly, and gear up towards it very quickly, and be very efficient at it very quickly, couldn't possibly manage a system and keep you all living in a good standard of living, and a good protein intake, etc., at the same time, they couldn't do it? Of course they could do it. Of course they can do it.

The cutbacks are planned that way because you're suppose to have a big, big population drop by about 2050. According to the big think tanks that work with the military, the futurist societies that work for the military and the think tanks, in 2050. They don't say why it's suddenly going to drop, but they say it's going to suddenly going to drop. So, I guess that'll be when the price of butter goes up to about $50 a pound or something, as it doubled just recently here pretty well in Canada, to about six bucks I think it is, or just over six dollars.

So that's what you're living in, folks. We're living in a planned system, a planned takedown of all the things that were beneficial to a healthy society. Which also obviously leads towards population growth. If people get married and have children for instance. Or even if they don't get married and women decide to have children. And they're able to afford it. Then you know, that's detrimental to their agenda for depopulation, step-by-step. So you simply make energy, which is awfully vital for a healthy society, make it hard, and more expensive, so folk can't heat themselves properly. When you can't do that houses get moldy and very unhealthy live in, you get pneumonia and people die. Especially the young and the old to start with. You add malnutrition along the way and it will happen all the faster.

And when you look at all the supposedly well-funded greeny organizations out there that are all part of this make-believe system of experts going to help save the planet, because that's what it is, it's a make-believe system here. Because you have to really want to believe in it to believe they could do that at all. They're all well-funded, well organized, etc. And how dare anybody train youngsters to be revolutionaries to bring down the population of the planet! Do you get a vote on that in this supposed democratic system? Well, you don't, do you.

We live in a world that's hostile. The elements are hostile too, nature. The first thing we do in any civilization is try and get a shelter to stay in. And if you can at least keep the rain off you long enough you might live longer. If you can't keep it off, you aren't going to live terribly long. You need to heat yourself in cold climates. You need a lot of good fuel to make this happen. And it's got to be cheap enough to make, so you can afford it. If you're going to keep money on the go that is.

Don't forget, you have societies where you wouldn't really need money, you could issue credits by the state, like Bertrand Russell said they would eventually, electronic ones and they could withhold them if you're bad, or they could simply cut off your payments and so on. Some of us are already going through that kind of problem right now. You're not living in a democracy. You're not living in a system of even moderate free speech. It's not moderate anymore. If you say anything at all that can explain what's happening to the people, they will be attacked. And you don't have to have any hate involved in it. You simply have to state the facts and you will be attacked. That's just... accept, that's how it is.

We're in a new chapter as I've said before of the control system. And it won't be pleasant down the road as it becomes more and more oppressive, more dictatorial... And as they force more and more people to buckle under. Or, you're going to starve to death. You are. They will use all these techniques. Don't think you're in some kind of advanced civilized system here. All the signs around you are of just the opposite. All these techniques have been used before in the worst tyrannical systems that we've ever seen on the planet. And that's just a fact.

But again, it was planned long ago. And Bertrand Russell said that, that the state would issue credits eventually. Now, you don't have to get it right from the government, they can use private organizations to do it, right? And they'll be accessing your bank accounts and everything else, and then you'll, eventually, won't be able to save them up, you've got to use them up every month, that's what Russell said. So you'd all, at the bottom you'd all be equal, at the bottom level, you know. Your elite couldn't be as equal as you, naturally. As Orwell said, some are more equal than others in such utopias. Yeah, they can freeze you out altogether if you haven't, if you've been socially undesirable in your comments or your behavior or anything like that. Used as a form of punishment. Well, you're seeing that happening in the world today. It's going to get worse.

So, I think it's time, I really do think it's time that we should just toss this idea of democracy out the window. Because we're not in one. We're not in a democracy. And governments are not listening to the general public at all on anything. Because the governments are on board with big international corporations, as Carol Quigley said they would be. Because the CEOs of the corporations are a part of the new governing system. They have been for a long time. Carol Quigley said, he says, the new CEOs of this new feudal system are the CEOs of international corporations. That's who governments listen to. That's what politicians listen to. Because who gives them money to run for their elections? And believe you me, when corporations give you money, it's not because they like your haircut or something. It's because they expect, they expect little favors to be, that they'll ask down the road, to be complied with and reciprocated, right, further donations. That's how it works. That's how it works.

Now, this week I was going to talk about a whole bunch of things, kind of tentatively, because there really is not much news at all. In fact, if you look at the news today it's like Groundhog Day again, from 20, 30 years ago, it's just the same news of the same wars, you know, same topics. And anything that really matters, what really is missing is what you used to get when you had at least some kind of show of democracy, where governments would have to insert in the newspapers, and the newspapers would have to comply, and show the public at least what the governments were working on, different bills and so on. That way the public could get involved and have their say before anything was passed or done. And they might even just reject the bill eventually. Well, you don't get that now, if you've noticed. You don't get told about bills until they are passed, you didn't even know that they were getting passed [Alan chuckles.] or who drafted them up or anything. And sometimes it's not even your own countries that draft them up. So, you're in the oddball system here, and they'll still go through the same motions of vote for this person or that person, who says the expected slogans, and repeats them, of whatever party they happen to belong to. It's that obvious today, isn't it?

But in reality, we're being managed with, in a system where they're not happy policing simply speech. Now, I understand too that all this would come down, I knew it 20 odd, 30 years ago. [Alan chuckles.] Because I can remember 30 years ago when they said, before you were given the Internet to the public, that the system would be given eventually, a system would be given to the public where mass communication across the planet would be very easy. And they'd have to gear up for information warfare because there'd be so many different countries all vying for power over other countries by using this particular new system. But they also mentioned about it might be hard to keep control over the public with this ability to communicate their ideas, information to each other. That was a scary thing to those in power. Naturally, it always has been. That's why they generally give you the topics to parrot on about. Even if they're not true, or even if they're just trivia, it doesn't matter, as long as they've got you parroting about some other distraction.

But you've got to admit today too, you have a society and you can't tell who is who on the Internet with all their different chat rooms. I did talks, again, years ago about this, from their own, again, from published documentation on the studies. They found that you had all these different, called, sock puppet bots and so on, all chatting, literally computers pretending they're people chatting to you, all set up by intelligence agencies, to have you all fighting with each other. And then you've got thousands and thousands of people paid to do the same thing online live, just to disrupt everything and to get everybody going at it.

A tremendous power when you think about it, when you can get everybody talking about the same things, or giving them the right things to argue about, all at the same time, across the world. And what you're doing, you're not creating a logical system, a system based on logic, or logical argument. You're giving them nothing but emotive content. And immediately if you get emotive content you get them arguing. And when they get arguing, and people today aren't polite about it. They do it so often, and it's almost like a dreamlike state they're in, and I really think they are in a dreamlike state to be honest with you, stuck in their little rooms or whatever they're stuck in, yelling at each other and texting each other. And it's all abuse, abuse, abuse. And the main topics are topics they've been given to argue about. Isn't that amazing, to watch it happening. It really is amazing.

A few years ago I put up an article, it was from MIT and it was a professor there who was, who literally stated that they were going to put out false histories. Then they would have the students work on these, disseminating these false histories in a test. And obviously they've got real time tap in to all the chatter on the Internet by, by whatever government agencies to get the permission to access it all. But then they could actually see how great, how quickly this chatter was picked up and repeated by everybody else. The way they could devise a false history, they could get everybody fighting everybody else.

Do you realize we're living in one of the biggest laboratories that's ever been created? And most folk don't even know it! Because we just adapt into it so easily. Especially when they're younger, it's always been there for them and to them it's all quite natural. It's only natural system they know. And it's not natural at all. You see what I'm saying? And you find older folk too going right into it thinking, oh, until they forget what the past was like. And they forget what's caution is like. And they forget how nasty, really nasty childhood behavior can really be, as they start to all repeat childhood behavior by abusing each other like crazy. Isn't it amazing? Now, all this is well known by those who are studying us all the time. But as I say, there's lots of agencies out there, deliberately pursuing this very path of causing the problems.

Years ago I said, I didn't trust politics. I naturally had come to the conclusion, long before I'd read anything about other people who had come to the same conclusions. Like I mentioned before, the Durant's for instance, Will Durant, he eventually came to the conclusion after following communism and all the rest of it, he said that people who go into politics want power, and people who want power can never be trusted, and so you could never have peace. So he gave up pretty well towards the end of his life.

But he wasn't the only one who had done that. You find that George Orwell gave you the same ideas in Animal Farm. But he also gave you in 1984 the system of total control were even your hopes of a helping hand were fake, to get you out of a hell-y system of oppression, because 1984 had lots of elements of the Soviet system at that time with its mock trials, etc. where everyone would confess about everything you were told to confess about, you do it. And if you're tortured enough you will, just to get to the end of the torture of course you will. But he also showed you they'd give you fake systems of, here's the truth, here's the truth, come here and get the truth. And Winston, the character in 1984 really thinks that he's being brought into an inner, and inner revolutionary group who are going to overthrow big brother in this totalitarian tyrannical system. And he was being set up by the very system that already ruled.

I gave talks on that too, how you can't trust anything out there. Because there's nothing new under the sun and organizations have always put out fronts to draw people out, to use them often, and at the very least, just to point them out, see, we told you, we told you these crazies are out there. That's always happened. That will always happen. Because 1984 is, was a textbook on how it's done in a sense. And 1984 was about a system where all hope is pretty well gone, and here's a glimmer of light and you think, wow, I'll grab a hold of that. And so you do. And again, sure enough, it was false, you're being led into a trap… to suck you out, you see.

Whenever you get emotional about something, or angry, you'd better stop and ask, who's caused you to be emotionally angry about something? And why? Because if you’re point of even existing in, say, a political type system is to run things logically and practically, then you can't allow emotion to come in. When emotion starts to reign supreme you have civil wars. And someone's playing you all. Then you have the revolutions, that have been hell in the past for most people.

And they're never being honest either, you know. When any materialistic atheistic type system comes in, or even humanistic, which is a religion in itself actually, system that comes in, they are always ruthless. They're practical in their way, they won't sit and listen to you plead for your life. And they won't listen to you plead to have better care or whatever it is in the dungeon you're thrown into. And they'll think nothing of torture either. Because torture for sadists is even more addictive as they go on through it, you see. And people who crave power are often very... very often sadistic as well. They're sadists.

What I'm getting at is, you'd better all be awfully careful, very careful of what's presented to you as facts. When you look at the writings that are put out by communists, for instance, the early communists, when they created the Young Communist leagues across the old Soviet Union, they had textbooks for those who manage them all. On using the youth to demand the very things that the leaders of the parties wanted them to demand. It's easy to get children, youngsters to demand things by showing them a partial story. A partial story. Because you see, when you're young you see things in black and white. You don't see the gray areas and it's in the gray areas you have all the big deceptions on the go. So it's easy to get them into an emotional aggressive fury against the older folk, or something, or whatever it happens to be, whatever target they are given to target. On behalf of those at the top that want to use them all for those purposes.

When you're being used like that… I would never join, I said that, I would never join anything. Because I'm telling you, the amount of manipulation over groups of people... Bernays talked about it, right. Edward Bernays, he said in his manual, really, for marketing and using groups and so on... Don't forget, he literally was an advisor and a manipulator that worked on behalf of about four or five different presidents. Even how to get a country into a war, World War I. He and a few other ones were given the task, how to persuade American public to be all for the war, to get them on board before they get in. And they hired the biggest marketing company that existed at the time in New York City and they came out with it and persuaded America to go into the war in 1917. And afterwards they were so bold and brazen about it, he wrote a book about how they'd managed it. [Alan laughing.] It's quite fascinating.

But he said too in his book about Propaganda and so on, he said that for marketers, don't create a group, unless you really have to, if it doesn't exist. He says, you go into different cities and look at all, get a phone book, at that time it was all phone books. He said, look up organizations. Right, you got your church organizations, you could have education organizers and teachers' associations. And you go to the head of each one, and religious and so on, and go to heads of them and get them on board with you. Meaning, you'll come to natural agreements, and it could be financial, you see. [Alan chuckles.]

Because they have their flocks and their followers, and if they can get them all to follow, you see, then you've saved all that money and persuasive footwear and all the rest of it going padding around house to house. Use existing organizations no matter what it's there for. You'll go to and get the religious organizations behind you, even though what you want them to do is not religious in nature. You see, they're organizations, they have many members, and if they can persuade them to follow along, this is a good thing for them, well, he says, you've done it, you see. Quite easy, isn't it?

Well, education is, you know is a great tool for those who already rule the world. Because there's more propaganda and indoctrination going on there to create the future revolutionaries, and those who will demand this and demand that, on behalf of the very very old and wealthy folk who really are the bosses, which they don't even know [Alan chuckles.] exist! [Alan laughing.] But that's a lot of power, and they shouldn't be in schools as far as I'm concerned. I don't know about you, it's just my opinion. Everybody's allowed their opinion, and you've got to allow that too. Because if you're being intolerant to all opinions, then eventually someone will be intolerant towards you. Obviously.

So anyway, we live in a completely different system, as I say, than the one you're brainwashed into believing exists. But if you can really try and keep apart from the stories you're reading or whatever it happens to be, and always ask who benefits from this? who's behind it? Do a little bit of digging, you'll be surprised how quickly you can come up with the funders of organizations. You can even look at some of the top speakers who might, if you really are, you know, if you've got a good mind that won't get board that easily, you can actually find out who's giving talks to different organizations, that you'd never even imagine they'd be involved in. It gives you an idea of what, who runs the agenda. It's the same global agenda, it generally is actually, and you find out who benefits, etc. etc. But if you follow careers of the leaders of NGO groups, you'll see they're life long, they've got pension plans and retirement plans and the whole bit. They're awfully well-managed, well-trained, well-paid.

So I've been prattling on here and I didn't even mean to go into this tonight. As I say, the news, there's a dearth of news out there. There really is. As we go into this new chapter you're not supposed to be told what really is happening to you. And you get lots of little nicey-nicey stories that you never remember the next day because they're irrelevant to the world, lots of nice photographs of pets and things and rescued animals and stuff like that. But again, it won't make any difference to the world. This is a substitute for what used to be news.

But what you are hearing occasionally, from some media and newspapers across the planet, what you will hear, you'll even get the full speeches of the radical, the newly, the long trained from youth, picked from youth, the trained future leaders of the world, giving their far far, I would call them, tyrannical speeches on the world they want to bring in. And it's exactly from the same agenda from 1950s, 1960s, 1970s to the present time, it hasn't veered off it at all. The world will be brought down into austerity. I gave the talks on it years ago. And believe you me, they're going to do it. They never ever change their agenda. Never ever do. And they needed an enemy to unite the planet, well, man's the enemy of the planet, therefore, you're united against yourselves, [Alan laughing.] and you're going to pay for it dearly, you see. Quite something.

A lot of prattling I'm doing here but I say, there's no news at all, really, out there to give the people. You will see too the massive changes as I say, not just in family units, we've seen it over for a long, long period of time. Even when I was small too, I think the family was becoming more and more dysfunctional. It had done it long before I was born, even after World War I they said it was going down hill. And then World War II came along and with, again with this strangest bizarreness, very schizophrenic reality for people of military fighting age at that time, World War II. Because they had all the movies getting turned out, like a machine churning them out, propaganda machines aimed at them about the happy dancing things they could do, they're all in uniform in all these war movies, propaganda movies.

And all from America, shown across especially Britain. And that literally, I think that changed the minds of everybody who saw them. Especially the young girls because they thought that they deserved what they saw in the American movies, you know, money, good money. Complete fiction and fantasy, they thought every American lived in a big mansion. They really thought that, most of them, from the movies that were getting churned out. And everybody had a car. Everybody had a phone. Which is true, they had phones.

Most folk in Britain even much, much later than that, that I knew of when I was growing up, didn't have phones either, it was too expensive. Most folk that I knew didn't have cars either. So, you can see how attractive it was to see these movies with this display of wealth. Of course they didn't know the reality of it. They didn't know too a lot of the working people across America were living in much the same conditions as they were, you know. The only differences they might technically own their house, but about the same size houses too than the Council houses they were renting in Britain, you know. So really, there wasn't much difference that way.

So what I'm saying is, we get our thoughts given to us mainly through fiction. For those who have never figured that out. Even though I say it so many times, people keep forgetting. Why do you think, just do a survey on the old movies from, say, well, right up and through, 1930s right through to the 1970s, say. The time when the stars were getting incredible amounts of money thrown at them. And look at the stars, the scripts they churned out. They even made movies like John Wayne admitted to, some of the movies, many of the movies he was in took three days to shoot. They sort of made them up as you went along basically. And John Wayne was literally the same character in every movie, he was the same personality in every movie. And lots of folk were like that, you see. It didn't matter.

But they were given so much money because fiction is a great tool to use for the public to be on your side when there's wars coming up, things like that. You see? Or it's distractions too away from the reality or the misery that perhaps you're really living in. So fiction will always be used as a great pacifier, a great manager you might say, of our free time for sure. And to give us the thoughts they say that we should be thinking about. Or giving you lots of thoughts that don't matter, to power, because it just distracts you from doing anything constructive perhaps that power wouldn't like. A tremendous tool. Tremendous tool. But most of your ideas you get from fiction, as I say.

But you've seen the family unit being destroyed. You seen different kinds of families being created. But even with all of this with today's society, all groups and all types of people are having awful problems with relationships. It doesn't matter what they are basically, or how they're constructed, it doesn't matter. Because today's life is so artificial, isn't it? From what went before in the past, it's really so artificial. And what would you even do for a living is often so artificial as well. And you can imagine too when you go into the futurist societies, and I've done talks for years too, many years, on projections of how it's going to be in the future, right down to it's not just trans-humanism, it was right down to creating specific types of humans for specific jobs.

They have literally official scientific books out there from big science foundations where scientists discussed genetic manipulation, beyond Brave New World and simply getting created basically artificially and so on, way beyond that, into a world where if you need so many people to go under the sea to do undersea welding on oil sea rigs and things like that, then we can create these people to withstand incredible pressures, and even have gills if necessary. This is what they say they think they could do. You understand, with unlimited financing there's really hardly anything you can't do. Really. And that's what research and development is all about, that's where most of the money for war goes to is research and development. So you've always got to have perpetual states of war.

The Cold War was the greatest, greatest boon that they'd ever had for R&D research, research and development for missiles and things they'd never use. Because most of the money was going into the satellites that they'd eventually use for surveilling everybody, that was the real purpose of it and they knew that at the beginning [Alan chuckles.] that's where it was all going to go eventually, the totally controlled, monitored society.

And so you get it through, again, fiction and so on. By the way, not only John Wayne, as a person I'm sure he was a nice nice guy. But what I'm saying is, look at all these famous actors or actresses. Many of them as I say, were the same characters every movie they were in. Because they were not character actors. They could adapt to different roles. Most of them, that is.

Now, I'll just give you a few articles here to look up too if you want to, that kind of gives you a little bit of food for thought. As I say, this week it's not in depth or new in any way, it's just stating the obvious. There's just nothing to really prattle on about this week, as far as news goes. I can certainly give lots of talks on a lecture kind of form on different things, but I've been awfully busy this week myself doing things that are awfully, awfully important. Because I myself am getting problems from different sources today. As a say, we're in a very intolerant system. And unfortunately, it's going to be much more intolerant as time goes on. And they only want certain of their own people, I'd say, giving you any information whatsoever from authorized, the authorized sources, from themselves. Which means 99% of the real information is going to, you'll never hear it in the first place, it's never going to happen. That is the new system we're in now. Under the guise it's all for peace. From the very sources of those who create no peace. [Alan chuckles.] It's quite something.

But I'll put up an article too about...

Ireland Big Tech and Privacy
politico.eu / 24 April 2019

(Alan: It says...) . . . carry the hopes of hundreds of millions of people around the world — including in the United States — to rein in abuses by big tech companies.

(A: Well, that's a joke because that's never going to happen. The big tech companies are part of the big oligarchical system that rule us basically, and they're completely interlaced with all the top spy agencies, as we know. And spy agencies have lots of legitimate big corporations out there, they always have had, that make real things that you'll buy. Because it's all to do with control, isn't it? Anyway, it says…)

Almost a year later, it's apparent that the new rules have a significant loophole: The designated lead regulator — the tiny nation of Ireland — has yet to bring an enforcement action against a big tech firm.

That's not entirely surprising. Despite its vows to beef up its threadbare regulatory apparatus, Ireland has a long history of catering to the very companies it is supposed to oversee, having wooed top Silicon Valley firms to the Emerald Isle with promises of low taxes, open access to top officials, and help securing funds to build glittering new headquarters.

Now, data privacy experts and regulators in other countries are questioning Ireland's commitment to policing imminent privacy concerns like Facebook's reintroduction of facial recognition software and data-sharing with its recently purchased subsidiary WhatsApp, and Google's sharing of information across its burgeoning number of platforms.

This is from Politico, this article here. I'll put this article up for you to read in its entirety. It's interesting, don't think it's just Ireland. Ireland was encouraged by the EU central bank to borrow, borrow, borrow and do well, etc., and to bring in these big companies that would pay off the debts. Well, they're bankrupt now in Ireland. Because [Alan chuckles.]   Again, you can look up, it might be on my site too, but you can look up the talks that they had with the central bank head, the central bank of the European Union, that is, they have a big central bank for that who dictates to them because they are in so much debt now. M-hm.

Kkhhhhhk. Money is the biggest power out there. Really. It really is. As I say, they can force you to not have children. They can force the negative population reduction techniques to be forced upon people, or women who can't afford children. And having children at school is phenomenally expensive now. It isn't just little notepads you're buying them nowadays, is it? They want the electronic ones and they want the latest. And the school's constantly telling them they'll need more and more, the better ones, the better ones, or they'll be left behind. M-hm.

Anyway, as I say, Ireland definitely is being hammered, and the money will keep them under the boot, the jackboot you might say, for a long time. Maybe forever.

Japan's child population declines for 38th year in a row - now at a record low - independent.ie / 4 May 2019

I'll put that one up, I mentioned it earlier. And also, I'll put up…   Britain… Again, Britain, there's nothing happening in Britain that wasn't foreseen by those who manage Britain. They've got the mass knifings going on all over the place. They have a lawless system of gangs on motorbikes going around, literally, they call them scooters or mopeds, robbing. And they have been for years. Now the schools are putting in knife arches…

Schools forced to install knife arches at the gates as stabbing epidemic grips Wild West Britain - thesun.co.uk / 29 April 2019

...that's the title of the article. An outsider looking into the country will, you know, I'm sure it's the same everywhere, you could give the same story about any country... and you'd terrify the folk to go there. But the fact is, Britain does have traveler warning guides out there for travelers that want to come in for holidays into London and different cities because it's so bad now.

I mean, it's a lawless system. Believe you me, it could have been prevented altogether. It could be dealt with much more severely, if it's even attempted, but it hasn't happened. So there's other purposes happening behind it for, to make this all happen. Something else will come out of all of this. Nevermind just the restrictions on everybody, obviously, like stopping you with searches in the streets and so on in Britain.

But yeah, there's big big arches they have to walk through to try and detect any. Which, it's the same things that they've had in the schools in the States for many years in fact. But Britain used to pride itself that it didn't have all these problems. Well, Britain…. Hhhhhhhh. I don't see Britain as what most folk think it is. I don't see any country with, in the image that it's presented to the people. Because what you're presented with is just to keep you rather naïve. [Alan chuckles.] And it's often a very different system at work altogether.

It's no different than looking at intelligence services and what they work on. You'll never get to the bottom of it. You'll never figure it out. You might think you've reasoned why they did this to that, to this to that, to this to that, but you'll never figure it out. I'm not kidding you. It's meant to be almost schizophrenic the way that they design their big escapades and their schemes and their wargames and so on. You'll never really figure it out. Anymore than you'll really figure out why those who really, really do rule Britain allowed it to get to this stage. There'll be some other, there's always always other things behind it and things that you get out of it, that you'd never... All you'll see is, that's terrible, and you get emotional about it. But again, you're back into emotion, and you've lost the game as soon as you get emotionally involved. That's how it is.

And also…

How to spy on Google and Facebook's spying: Free online tool lets you check how tech firms track users' battery levels, WiFi strength and location - dailymail.co.uk / 29 April 2019

That was in the Daily Mail Online of how it happens and so on. One other article too, and it's from a listener and it was from 2012. It says...

How Target Figured Out A Teen Girl Was Pregnant Before Her Father Did forbes.com / 16 Feb 2012

Every time you go shopping, you share intimate details about your consumption patterns with retailers. And many of those retailers are studying those details to figure out what you like, what you need, and which coupons are most likely to make you happy.

(A: You have no idea how completely you're understood, if you go cashless altogether and use their cards for everything.)

Target, for example, has figured out how to data-mine its way into your womb, to figure out whether you have a baby on the way long before you need to start buying diapers.

(A: It gives you an example…)

Charles Duhigg outlines in the New York Times how Target tries to hook parents-to-be at that crucial moment before they turn into rampant -- and loyal -- buyers of all things pastel, plastic, and miniature. He talked to Target statistician Andrew Pole -- before Target freaked out and cut off all communications -- about the clues to a customer's impending bundle of joy. Target assigns every customer a Guest ID number, tied to their credit card, name, or email address that becomes a bucket that stores a history of everything they've bought and any demographic information Target has collected from them or bought from other sources. Using that, Pole looked at historical buying data for all the ladies who had signed up for Target baby registries in the past. From the NYT:

(A: And they give you what happened, about buying lotion and so on.)

"[Pole] ran test after test, analyzing the data, and before long some useful patterns emerged. Lotions, for example. Lots of people buy lotion, but one of Pole's colleagues noticed that women on the baby registry were buying larger quantities of unscented lotion around the beginning of their second trimester.

(A: ...all this stuff about you, you see. Then you start buying things like...)

Another analyst noted that sometime in the first 20 weeks, pregnant women loaded up on supplements like calcium, magnesium and zinc."

(A: ...etc, etc.)

"As Pole's computers crawled through the data, he was able to identify about 25 products that, when analyzed together, allowed him to assign each shopper a "pregnancy prediction" score. More important, he could also estimate her due date to within a small window, so Target could send coupons timed to very specific stages of her pregnancy.

One Target employee I spoke to provided a hypothetical example. Take a fictional Target shopper named Jenny Ward, who is 23, lives in Atlanta and in March bought cocoa-butter lotion, a purse large enough to double as a diaper bag, zinc and magnesium supplements and a bright blue rug. There's, say, an 87 percent chance that she's pregnant and that her delivery date is sometime in late August."

(A: M-hm. Now, they also have some real articles too, complaints that Target had sent coupons out and so on to these people, right, that it thinks is maybe getting pregnant, or are pregnant. But one was from a father and it says…)

"My daughter got this in the mail!" he said. "She's still in high school, and you're sending her coupons for baby clothes and cribs? Are you trying to encourage her to get pregnant?"

The manager didn't have any idea what the man was talking about. He looked at the mailer. Sure enough, it was addressed to the man's daughter and contained advertisements for maternity clothing, nursery furniture and pictures of smiling infants. The manager apologized and then called a few days later to apologize again.

"On the phone, though, the father was somewhat abashed. "I had a talk with my daughter," he said. "It turns out there's been some activities in my house I haven't been completely aware of. She's due in August. I owe you an apology."

So you understand, you're in a system where you've fallen into all the, they call them, mousetraps, by, here's coupons that are free, here's this blah blah blah, here's that. You take this customer card for all different stores and they know all your data and so on, this preference, and you get little discounts. Little mousetraps they call them, as I say, from the banking industry. And you've given up all your freedoms to privacy and they know everything about you. Pretty well everything.

And not only that, there's article's out, stacks of articles about now insurance companies have access to all this data, what you eat, if you love candies and chocolates, etc., if you're getting a bit obese, blah blah blah blah blah. Because the system we're living in today is, first they were going to come down on smokers by the way and cut back on treatments for any problems that smoking, they say, it's caused. Then they want to follow it with obese people. You starting to get the picture about everything, folks?

You're being trained like a herd by the big farmers who now claim that they own you. They certainly own all your data. And you give it all up willingly. Aldous Huxley said it in his talks at Berkeley and other places too and his books and his interviews on television. He said, the people really will come to love their servitude. It's kind of like the Bible where Judah says, my yoke is light. Well, you don't see it as being a heavy burden, giving all this data away. You won't see it right away. You won't see it right away. But you're dealing with a system where you technically are owned [Alan chuckles.] when you give all your data and your freedoms away. Hm? Perhaps legally too. So, think about it.

Then there's DARPA, the big organization that defense uses. DARPA, Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. They're always putting out little articles about how this little chip helped a quadriplegic and so on, it might help. Because they're really in the business of helping quadriplegics, that's what they're there for, right? Yeah? Right? There's your big Defense Advanced Research Projects for the military-industrial complex, hm, the guys who gave you under ARPA, before they added the D to it, they were the ones who ran the computer systems and developed them all for the Cold War, hm, before they give it to you, to monitor you. Anyway, this says…

This DARPA-Developed Brain Implant Can Help Recover Your Memories
popularmechanics.com / 7 April 2018

Can a neural implant help you recover your memory?

(A: Oh, hmph, I've always knew they were the most altruistic system/service out there really, aren't they?)

In a small trial on 15 patients at Wake Forest Baptist Medical Center, "prosthetic memory" implant helped patients improve short-term memory by an average of 35 percent . . .

So there's your PR article. That's the toughest that they put out, right. But then you go into this one here...

DARPA Wants Brain Implants That Record From 1 Million Neurons - spectrum.ieee.org / 10 July 2017

They want to...

DARPA Wants to Jolt the Nervous System with Electricity, Lasers, Sound Waves, and Magnets - spectrum.ieee.org / 6 Oct 2015

Hm. And the big big headline at the top of the page is actually...

DARPA Wants Brain Interfaces for Able-Bodied Warfighters spectrum.ieee.org / 10 Sept 2018

(A: [Alan laughing.] So, there's the real purpose of it, nevermind... [Alan laughing.] And yes, they'll experiment with anybody else they can get for free. But it's for able-bodied war fighters.)

The N3 program will create no-surgery-required neurotech that the general public may also find useful

(A: Isn't that interesting, YOU might find it useful. It says...)

Until now, the neuroscience programs at DARPA, the mad-science wing of the Department of Defense, have focused on technologies for warfighters who have returned home with disabilities of the body or brain. For example, programs have funded research on prosthetic limbs that are wired into the nervous system and brain implants that could treat post-traumatic stress disorder.

But the way the military fights wars is changing, and so must DARPA's priorities. At a conference last week to celebrate DARPA's 60th anniversary, officials described the next frontier of neuroscience research: technologies for able-bodied soldiers that give them super abilities.

"Warfighters need new ways to interface and interoperate with machines," says Al Emondi, manager of DARPA's newest neurotech program. "But most of the technologies developed up to this point require surgery. What got us here won't take us there."

(A: So they've got a new system where they won't need surgery. They've got...)

The Next-Generation Nonsurgical Neurotechnology (N3) program will fund research on tech that can transmit high-fidelity signals between the brain and some external machine without requiring that the user be cut open for rewiring or implantation. The program was announced in March (A: ...odd name. Come on, it must be a made-up name, surely. Emondi. E, it's like for the electronic world, E-mondi. But anyway, if there isn't, who cares?) and Emondi is currently picking researchers who will be funded under the program. He tells IEEE Spectrum to expect an announcement in early 2019.

(A: So it's, should be any time now.)

They've had helmets before and things like that. But of course, they have ways now to even go much, much further away from the people or the object of the target, to basically interfere with your brain. [Alan laughing.]

And getting back to how cruel the world really is... And it is cruel. It's a cruel world. And we've got to remember that. We live in, to an extent, a naïve reality we've been indoctrinated with by those who control us all. And hhhh, it's sad because if you understood the real world you would be far more perhaps suspicious, definitely more watchful, of the powers that are around you and over you. And you'd have more say, perhaps, or you'd make time to say more about things that are happening, if you really...

You understand, this is like Christianity. Christianity was attacked a long time ago. It's still being attacked, naturally. Even the United Nations admits it. Which is rather, you know, again [Alan chuckles.] it's rather strange that they even bother to admit it. But Christianity was different before. Of course it was different. And forget all these movies, you see. There are no movies of Christians 200 or 300 years ago, we don't have movies about them, at the time, for instance, that they were made. But the fact is, even before then, Christianity had a recognition that the world was a pretty evil place. They called it 'the fall'...because of, it doesn't matter what the fall was, the fall was the fall nature of humans, the nature that causes, or allows the powerful hungry evil people of the planet to cause wars and slaughtering and starvation's and things like that. And you forget that it happens over and over again.

Well, you're being taught now to be naïve. And Christianity today is for children. Even the songs they put out for Christians today are literally the kind of songs that they'd sing at one time in Sunday school for children. Because adults were taught the harsh realities of history and the world that we live in. And they were taught the nasty realities of the humans who want power over people. That was essential. And it made you aware of the other side that rules everything and causes the misery both in a personal situation or a collective situation.

In other words, a more mature people that weren't shocked by it. They would act on it or they'd try to head it off at the pass before it happened, that type of thing. But they definitely lived a different type of Christian life, for those who don't really realize that. I'm not talking about big landowners that made everybody miserable and live like peasants. That did happen in some countries, but not in all the countries. Most of the folk were rather poor themselves and they didn't want, they also had an idea of what money was and what power was from money. So, they did try to have just enough to get by. But they even taught their children not to love money, and not to use it to exploit other people. That was all washed away by steady, steady erosion by the humanists and the atheists and so on. Until you end up today where you're worshiping people that are billionaires. So much so you allow them to rule over you without being elected, in different parts of the system, and the world. So you should always think about it and try to remember how it all happens around you...

...and how the nasty things happen to your supposedly almost sterile world, sterile existence... At one time we all looked after family members who died in our homes. And you'd take care of them, through all the terrible things that happen to the body before they die. And children would grow up knowing. And so they had, they realized how valuable human life was, how each other, how we are to each other and what is really valuable. That was un.... That's all gone today. Hospitals deal with all these things. Then undertakers deal with the rest of it. And the last you'll see of any member is perhaps at a funeral service and that's it. It's all rather unreal to children growing up. Which before they were present in the homes where it was happening.

That was an essential part, dying is an essential part of understanding what life is, and living, living the life. But it certainly made people more compassionate. And more forgiving towards other people for things. Do you understand how easy it is to strip you of your defenses for survival? Or even if it's a decent society? It's all one in the same thing.

I could go on to, [Alan chuckles.] just to finish off, if I can even squeeze them in, to do with again, your own nations. One article I'll just touch on it...

Nearly 50,000 animals have been killed in seven years (A: ...in seven years, 50,000...) at Ministry of Defence's top secret Porton Down research base by being shot, blown up, gassed or poisoned - dailymail.co.uk / 28 April 2019

They say its research is used to protect Armed Forces personnel overseas. I know they use it for special forces, at least they used to. You'd go in and they'd shoot at sheep for instance to wound them or to kill them and then they'd have to go in and patch them up, things like that. That's the way it is, folks. But Porton Down is a, it's a, well, they've got biowarfare facilities there and everything too.

You've got to think of these things. Don't turn your mind away from it because it's unpleasant. If you don't understand the horrific things that run the world or are in the world, and it isn't just one nation that's got them, they've all got them, these facilities, then you couldn't make the world a better place if you decided to be ignorant of it all. It's not going to happen. Forget all this, don't look at the negative. That's not negative. It's horrible. It's a horror thing. And you must look at it. It's the only way change can ever happen. Another article too...

The past Porton Down can't hide - theguardian.com / 6 May 2004

They talk about nerve gas tests, etc. How they use them on young airmen, volunteers, etc. But every country did that. Canada did the same thing too. They had articles back in the 80s about Canadians, the last of them, who were sprayed overhead by aerial spraying on battlefields, like the practice battlefields inside Canada and they were told it was just to test different chemicals that wouldn't do them any harm. And they've all died pretty well of cancers and things. And you find it in every country if you go digging for the old news articles, when news would tell you a lot more than they do now. And then you have another one, too...

Operation LAC
en.wikipedia.org

(A: That's... it was in Canada.)

Operation LAC (Large Area Coverage) was a U.S. Army Chemical Corps operation which dispersed microscopic zinc cadmium sulfide (ZnCdS) particles over much of the United States and Canada (A: I know they did it over Winnipeg.) in order to test dispersal patterns and the geographic range of chemical or biological weapons.

(A: These are carcinogenic.)

They used them in Britain too off the coast of Norfolk by using ships and letting it float into the mainland and testing it too. We're all used like this, folks, in this great civilized system we live in, where we're taught not to look at the negative, hm.

I'll put some of these articles up anyway, just because I've got them up anyway right now.

U.S. secretly tested carcinogen in Western Canada during the Cold War, researcher finds - nationalpost.com / 6 Pct 2017

British M.O.D. Subjected Citizens to Bio and Chemical Experiments during Cold War - independent.co.uk / 9 July 2015

Millions were in germ war tests - theguardian.com / 21 April 2002

But you gotta stop being so naïve. And hopefully there's enough people can handle this rather depressing stuff. It can be depressing, sure it is. But if you can handle it at least you become a stronger person. And perhaps down the road you or your children or somebody will speak out too about these things.

Because you've got to understand, you got the same characters that do all of this, for instance, these warfare buy-off things, the same characters, and the big chemical companies involved, and for very fast bucks and all the rest of it, and growing food and all the rest of it, that you're eating, you know. You'd better think of these things.

We are technically like Charles Forte said, [Alan chuckles.] he said, we're farmed. Which means, you must have farmers, hey? And that's the only way you can get really positive change. Not the elite creating NGO massive armies to protest the very things that they want done, you know, strip me of your food supply, strip me of your protein supply, strip me of a heat supply, down the road. You'd better think about it. It's a very, very deceptive world indeed. As I say, at least as the older Christians knew at one time. And they were aware because of its history, that they were living through at the time. They were very, very well aware of it with all of the incredible wars throughout Europe and elsewhere. Some of them lasted a hundred years or more. Yeah. Some of them never stopped, I think.

We live in such a happy happy television created fictional reality now, don't we?

Well, that's it for today. I'd better get on with processing this and getting up, and maybe I'll try and get into more of a teaching thing next week, hopefully, depending on different circumstances and what's happening around me at the moment too.

For myself, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on May 12, 2019. I suppose everyone's settling back into the... the new system, the new chapter as I call it, of the same system really but it's a new chapter for sure, with an upgrading of it's agenda, techniques, etc., for this new era we're in. Because the whole century is divided up into chapters. The same with Agenda 21, for the 21st century. It's all in chapters, 2015, 2030, etc., and that's how it's done. That's how it is all done of course. Just like the UN had 100-year plans and 50-year plans and 40-year plans. We've got all these different chapters, or plans, for the whole of the century. And they've been quite blatant about them, there's no secrecy really involved about where you have to be taken, and lead, in this whole century and the changes that have to be made. And you're going to accept it, whether you like it or not. It's rather blatant about that too.

Because the whole world is to change. The whole world, remember, is to change, not just your nation, into a global system run with the same agendas basically. Slight variations according to time for different countries because of their economics and because of their climate and all the rest of it. But it's the same agenda for the whole century. And they must get this accomplished.

Of course, as I've mentioned many times before that everything that's happening now is a crisis, you see. And under the guise of crisis, whether it's terrorism or climate change or global warming or whatever they want to call it, it's all your fault. And you have to go along with it because crisis gives them necessity. And necessity is the excuse they use to take your rights away from you and force you along in this system.

This system eventually will be cashless, completely. It must be, you see, to control everybody. Because money is a control mechanism. If you can't get it you're going to starve to death. And if it's all electronic you won't be able to even use cash, you won't get cash, it won't be accepted. And if you're being punished in some way, and this is the whole system now, is punishing you for any wrongdoing or not going along with the agenda, then they'll withhold your funds until you knuckle under and accept whatever it is that you've railed against. Quite easy to get you in line. If you can't feed yourself or if you can’t get accommodation to live under and keep you warm and out of the elements, then you'll suffer obviously. Many ways to get you, in fact. And that is the way of the future. It's already here actually. But you'll see it increasing very quickly as time goes on.

Because as you've noticed across the world everyone's becoming aware, with trepidation, of the system changing. It's not pally anymore, you might say. And you're being warned and cautioned, etc., as a prelude to what's to come. Because speech now is apparently dangerous. It depends what you're using it for and what you trying to express.

You'll always find there's a deep state, they call it the deep state today. But the deep state has always been here. Politics to a very true extent, and good extent, politics is a front. I've said it before, it's for throwing rotten tomatoes at it in a sense, and calling names at someone, and you vote them out to get the next ones in who have promised you something better, you see. And that's all they ever do is promise you. Because they know what the public are talking about, complaining about, and they come out and promise you whatever you want. They offer you utopia. And you go along with it. It never happens of course and so you always try the next bunch. Back and forth, back and forth like a ping-pong game basically. That's what we're living in today.

But behind it all there's only one agenda and you see it regardless of who appears to be in power. Look at all the different parties in the US and Canada as an example. Nevermind the European Union and Britain. Canada and the States and Mexico and some other countries by the way, and Latin America too, starting with the free trade deal negotiations they called it, it took a long time to get that all signed and so on. Then they went on to NAFTA and worked at that for years. Presidents and prime ministers all got together every year, still do, and they sign deeper integration. Because the whole point is integration. Without any public input into it.

Because it's the same agenda, exact, identical to the European Union. How it's going to benefit us all, bring jobs, jobs, jobs. But they didn't tell you, it was jobs across the world. And of course too, it would be, everyone would benefit, etc. This is a very old agenda. I won't go into it again and reiterated again. It's very old. It's well documented. Karl Marx talked about it. The ones who ran the British Empire, all the top capitalists ranted on about it, how wonderful it would be. And the CFR draft it up here for the Americas and boasted about it. And their counterparts, or their affiliation in Britain, their parent company, you might say, the private Royal Institute of International Affairs drafted up for the European Union. So you have private organizations running the world. And you don't have a say in it.

I won't go into it again and again and again but if you ever forget that, if you ever forget that regardless of who's in power, or appears to be in power, why is it that the same agendas get further signed in, further signed in, deeper and deeper and deeper, for maybe 40 years sometimes? Like the European Union. Actually, 60 years for the European Union. The public didn't even know it was even going on at the end of World War II. They were not to be told until it was completed. And when they were to be told anything it was, oh, it's just a bit of free trade deal where we can negotiate things. That's what they were told. They weren't told it was going to be integrated parliaments into one system. But that's what it is. And the same for the Pacific Rim as well, that was to be another grouping as well. So we're well on our way. And it tells you, as I say, it’s not one single party, left-wing, right-wing or middle or whatever they want to call themselves, have come out and told you this, then they're all in it together. Obviously. Obviously.

But certainly, our public servants, but they're not serving the public. They're serving somebody, and they already know it, that there's a deep state, there's always been a deep state. In Britain, even the writers, those who document the histories of Britain, including the organization that ran the Empire and still does, they've still got a sort of an empire there though it's fixed itself in with the US taking it over, it's all one system. It runs the economical system of the world, and also gives too many of its top members the mineral rights, oil rights and everything else to its top members across the planet as well. Because they don't do it for… Believe you me, and there's no such thing as altruism amongst them. They always put themselves across as being altruistic, as though they’re born, really, they're sent by God to help poor mankind, you know, that's how they put themselves across. They're all incredibly rich at the top. Incredibly. Many of them have titles, most of them do at the top, and awards from all other countries for participating in the same global agenda. It's a completely different world for them once they get into it. They even have their own videos out for their own potential members, how to come into their organization and how they'll benefit as the doors are opened for them. It's astonishing.

Meanwhile at the bottom level we're given nothing but fake history and who won this battle or that battle. In more recent times we're told why we've gone into countries, to help them or democratize them and all that nonsense, you know. And they call them peacekeepers as they go in looking just like soldiers always looked. And how we're run by jingoism and slogans all dreamed up by big marketing companies. And we are run that way. Massively so. The newspapers use the massive marketing companies as well to try and get readership back in them in an electronic age. They've been backed, again, by, they've been kept afloat, lots of them, the top ones, with our tax money. Because those who are authorized traditionally to tell the public what they're supposed to be told – I won't say what they're supposed to really believe or know, what we're supposed to be told – they're licensed and they already have the set up, this discipline set up of management at the top going all the way down the tier groups until... So it's more disciplined than just some general thing that starts up, a wildcat company, you might say. So it's important to have these organizations, these institutions as they call themselves, still running the show and telling us what more to know.

But they're using big marketing companies to try and get readership in an electronic age. You'll find that they've got psychologists, again, and neuroscientists and behaviorists working with them all the time, who come in and tell you how to hook the people into their sites. You'll notice some of the newspapers, actually lots of them have stacks of photographs and they advertise, the money for any photographs of anything happening across the world if you send them into them right away. Because most of the things that happen in the world, to individual people, like ourselves, really have very little effect on the rest of the world's direction. And so, to an extent it's trivia but they've got fantastic photographs to divert you off into this, that or whatever. And always emotive topics with them. They're called grabbers. And often very different from the actual article if you go into read them. But they use these techniques to get you in and to get you to read. If you read that one, the next, there'll be something at the end of it, another photograph or another big caption that grabs your attention to get you into it. Until they want you to spend as much time as possible on their particular site. Because they get lots of money from advertisers.

You've got to participate in your own deception. I've said this many times before. The same with voting. You know this person is not it's going to bring in heaven and utopia for you. I mean, surely you know that, right? So, you participate. The younger folk are trained to be radical armies, almost in the Bolshevik fashion. [Alan laughing.] And they are today. In might touch on that later, I don't know. It's all organized that way from the top.

But the rest of the public, they know. They know that you're not going to get a... You know the real cost of living is going up and up and up, and the value of your currency is dropping and dropping and dropping. Because it's designed that way. You're living on debt. The country lives on debt. Every note brought into existence, whether it's digital or paper or plastic is still, it's still borrowed. It's borrowed from some group or another, or private or whatever. But the fact is, it's debt money with built-in inflation in it, you see. So you know whoever you vote in is not going to make things better for you. You know the agenda is to get you off of eating meat, for instance. Because it's part of…

That's what I'm saying, the whole agenda is one agenda. And all the things they are telling you that you must do to save the world and the planet, are part of the eugenics agenda as early as the 1920s. Even before that, in fact. How to get the public to voluntarily reduce themselves. Well, you tell them, it's because you're going to save them. You see? Isn't that beautiful? Isn't that fantastic? To save you all we've got to make you do the very things that you wouldn't do voluntarily when we just wanted to bring down the population, of all of you.

Isn't it beautiful, 'eh, how they always use the same techniques? Because they work. And during a wartime scenario, for instance, we don't mind as much... Oh, they're saving us from those nasty people over yonder, you see. And therefore, you go on starvation diet if need be for food. And you won't have the money to purchase much at all so you can't buy all the little goodies, or even if you could possibly even get them. And you put up with hardship. You put up with everybody you know dying off, maybe even yourself. Under the war situation. You get nothing out of it at the end of it of course accept the debt. You're handed the bill. Because we still borrow money to pay for all the armaments and things. But we put up with incredible hardship... to be saved.

So use that scenario and bring it back under, we're saving you all from destroying the planet. You are the enemy, but we're saving you, the enemy, because you're destroying the planet. So you've got to stop, cut back your numbers. Then you won't be able to, you know... And they'll cut back your income. Cut back your meat intake. Because protein's awfully good for, that's why folk are living so long, so many people actually. And they know this. And then cut back energy, so you won't have all the piping and water and so on. The stuff that helps to eliminate diseases and so on was running water and good sewage systems, etc. That's all to be cut back and priced out of existence. In comes the diseases, in comes of the problems and you start dying off.

But it's necessary to do that to save the planet, you see. A war scenario. And folk will never figure it out [Alan chuckles.] that it's the same folk behind it. And using all of our tax money. It's fantastic what you can convince the public to go along with when one system owns the entire system. One system owns all your… can actually… they own your government, they are your government, your government works for them, and they simply tax it all from you to pay for it all. Isn't it beautiful? Pretty good system, 'eh? You've got to admit it, it's a pretty good system, for those that are in charge of it.

But the public are not to be told any truths because it might spoil it. It's a great deception. But the world's pretty well always been run by great deceptions. As I've said before, we even vote because we like to be deceived. We participate in deception, our own deception. Of course we do. Most folk go along with deception because they're afraid not to. That's part of it too. They're afraid, most folk are afraid, and they take the easiest route in any decision like that. And the easiest route is pointed out to them, take this route here, and they go along with it.

I remember reading from, I think it was one of Solzhenitsyn's books, and also Gouzenko, Fall of a Titan, excellent book to read actually, very important one. I think it was Gouzenko maybe who talked about in the Soviet, early... He was a young child in the Soviet Union, and they were in a country area, and they looked over a hill, and they used to watch the prisoners being marched back to the prison camp after a day’s labor in the Soviet Union. They said that what struck them was that there was only two guards, one in the front and one in the rear, with the prisoners, maybe 20 prisoners or more, maybe even 40 sometimes. And they'd be in their drudgery, dredging along, miserable as could be, half starved, cold and very weak, and occasionally getting a kick for being slow or whatever, you know. And these two children used to watch them every other day when they were up playing around on the hill. One day they saw when they were dredging back, and a couple of people in the group had decided to try and take these guards out. So they knocked them down, disarmed them, and told to the rest of the prisoners, run, run, follow us and run. And none of them moved. None of them moved. So the two guys eventually ran off in a certain direction they had planned. They watched the rest of these guys look stunned and look towards each other, and gradually some of them started to walk back towards the camp, and the rest of them just followed suit.

That, you see, is human nature of the majority of the public. They will not take the chance. Even if they're walking into certain destruction, and they’d get punished anyway for two of them escaping, no doubt. Or punished for letting it happen… because they didn't stop them. [Alan chuckles.]   In other words, you can't win, you see. But fear in itself overcame their survival instincts. Fear. Fear of being caught and punished or tortured. It's a good disincentive from trying to break out, isn't it?

Now, there's many techniques of punishment. And all law works by the initial coercion, you're threatened, it can be very subtle initially. And most folk comply. Fill this in, you fill it in and away you go. But if you don't comply then you'll get the next letter, which is more nasty. And you might get a knock on the door in fact. So remember, that law runs on something called force. And police are a force as well, don't forget it. They used to call them police services. But now they're called police forces. And it's being drummed into us through all the movies you've watched and all the television shows you've watched too. They even dress in black, which is the executioners' uniform.

In Canada they used to wear the blue shirts, light blue shirts. Nice and tidy. A lighter blue uniform, not quite navy blue but a bit lighter. But a light-colored shirt. And a different cap. And they didn't have their pants tucked in to combat boots. There's a reason all this happens, and it happened in the 90s, the 1990s, getting ready for what was to come. I did a show back then too because I noticed the sudden transformation of it. They tried with a few articles in the Toronto papers, for an example, of showing you public relations photographs of the new police dressed in, but they had army fatigues on at the time. And supposedly called out to deal with possible shots in Toronto, someone heard shots or whatever. It looked to me at the time to be more of publicity stunts to get you acclimatized to seeing them dressed in army uniforms, helmets and all, and the same green combat gear.

But they decided it wasn't going down to well, this association with military wasn't going down to well. They still wanted the military association, but they changed it into literally the black outfits, that were more a kin to the old German special forces uniforms. And that's what they are. They've got the cap and the black tunic, and the pants in the combat boots, etc. and that.   Everything is black. Which is an ominous, ominous shade, it's not a color technically. But it's a very ominous shade, you know. It's a neutral, they call it. That's the symbology of death and the executioner. And that's why it came out then. This other town that I was living in at the time, after the first escapades that they had with the military gear, they came out with this black outfit. They would have three or four of them walking side-by-side chatting and joking along the streets. And I noticed, I says, now how come no one's looking at this. I'm staring at it and saying, what on earth is this? It was so different! And then I saw in the papers, it says, residents might've noticed police walking down wearing blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. They were getting the public acclimatized to the nice new smart uniforms.

This is all before the terrorism thing happened and 9/11 happened, not long before, but it happened before. It was all getting you ready for it. And ready for the big transformation in society where they'd maybe even expect some kind of problems amongst the population in society. Everything is worked out in advance. It didn't happen by chance. It didn't happen by itself. It didn't happen because they were just bored of seeing light blue uniforms. It was designed that way to be the same as the US, because they were going the same way.

This idea of special forces inside society, and that's how you're trained, most folk go along with that without even giving it much thought at all. They accept anything in their surroundings quite easily. And they do accept, like many I've noticed in the past or stated in the past, that most folk literally will not even use their own minds to think about anything. They do wait until their favorites authorized newscaster comes on to tell them about it and what to think about it. And if you get an ominous feeling when you see something like that and your newscaster says nothing about it, you'll dismiss it from your mind as unimportant. If it was important the newscasters and authorities would tell you, you see. That's how they, that's how simple it is for most people to be conditioned into anything.

That was the same time of course that Allan Rock, who went off to work from the federal government into the United Nations right afterwards, he, I think it was up at the Attorney General level he put through, supposedly single-handedly according to the newspapers at the time, an omnibus bill. It was called an Omnibus crime bill. Nothing was happening, remember, in the 90s, especially in Canada. They said that, the reporters, what is this, this is about indefinite detention without charge and blah blah blah. They said, this is an anti-terror bill or, you know, a wartime bill. That's exactly what it was. But the public were never given a reason for it. About three years later of course 9/11 happens and there you go.

What happens too, for the public's information is always way behind what's planned to happen, you see. [Alan chuckles.]   We are living through agendas, there's no doubt about it. None at all. And Maurice Strong's agenda, he's only one part of it working with the Rockefeller Brothers for years, and he brings through the whole idea of Biodiversity Treaty at the Rio Conferences. None of the public are involved in this. It's all to do with the top honchos that are in with the United Nations, the world government and so on. And Maurice Strong also when he came over to Canada, they brought him back from Canada briefly when Bob Rae was in Ontario, the premier of Ontario, and he was put in charge of Ontario Hydro Electric Power for the whole of Ontario. Ontario is a very big place remember. At the same time he was drawing a salary from the United Nations. Caused a wee bit of a conflict, not much mind you, because he could to do [Alan chuckles.] lots of things and no one's going to say boo to him.

Because there's such a thing as, almost a special kind of select royalty amongst them. And you can see that if you have eyes to see. But he closed down one of the power plants and said he wasn't going to reopen it. This is way back then. All to do with what we're seeing now... We've got to start getting the public to use less energy, less energy. This also includes water. Electricity, it includes water if you need electricity to pump it or to supply it to your homes. So, it was all planned a long time ago and the people just adapt and adapt and adapt. Just like the ones getting led back from the dreary, dreary occupation you might say, on that road back to the Gulag. And that's what the public did, they simply adapt and adapt. It must be okay because after all, they mean well, you know, our managers mean well, they're there to serve us. Where do you see any instance, for example, of them being there to serve you? I mean, if that's the case I want to be one of them, to get the servants paycheck. Because I really need it badly. In other words, everything is deception, including the terminology, isn't it? It really is. But that's what you must do.

Today I looked across some of the old books I've got here because certain things just stick in your mind, sometimes whole chapters do. But I was thinking of Charles Galton Darwin and his book The Next Million Years. Remember, Charles Galton Darwin, a descendent of Charles Darwin, he was also a top physicist. He worked on the atomic energy program to create the atom bomb. And the Manhattan project, he was part of the team for the Manhattan Project. He coordinated; it wasn't just done all by those in the US. It was done with scientists from Australia, Canada, Britain and so on. But he helped to actually work to design the bomb. After that he dedicated himself to working on eugenics, the program of eugenics, which his whole family going way back to Charles Darwin were completely involved in along with the Huxley's. Thomas Huxley, remember, was a great pal of Darwin and he became "Darwin's bulldog" and took over the agenda for Darwinism and eugenics when Darwin died.

Charles Galton Darwin - en.wikipedia.org

I've mentioned in so many talks before that there's no doubt about it, from the speeches that, say, the brother Julian Huxley gave, the brother of Aldous Huxley, when he was put in as head of UNESCO. He talked about the different categories of helpers that manage the lives of us mere mortals down below. He mentioned the financial class way up there and those who manage the system of economics. Below that they had the scientific class, including the mind people, the people who manage your minds, the behaviorists and psychologists and all that. Very important. They manage the culture and keep you, you know, down there somewhere in Lala land and happy. He talked about all different kinds that's necessary, and that existed then, to manage us all. Including the media and what the media's job was back then. It was rather blatant, people use to understand what I'm talking about now.   And here I am going off prattling on about, I didn't even intend to go this way.

But the fact is, when I was growing up the older people all distrusted the media. They knew who owned the newspapers. And the magnets. And hhh, they knew who they were, and they knew the organizations they belonged to. This was before computers, folks. People, they were not stupid. They knew what their leanings were, with so-called left, right or whatever it happened to be. They were much more educated in it all back then than they are today. And they didn't trust them because they knew what power was all about. They knew what governance was all about, how they were governed by all of these special institutions, that Darwin and the Huxley's and all the rest of them were talking about and were part of in fact.

You see, the deep state is a modern term for what existed back then. It's always been here. And the first thing you'll find in the writings of The Next Million Years, you'll find, you'll go into… Again, they always touch on histories, as though it was all a known fact and all the rest of it. But it's to convince you that what he's going to eventually hit you with, is quiet, you know, reasonable. So how to get people to be reasonable about getting sterilized... and, you know, giving up good food and stuff and getting sick again and dying? I mean, how do you get...

It's almost like salesman. Salesman try to get you to say yes. It's a nice day, isn't it? Yeah, yeah. Beautiful sun. Yeah. Look at the, there are the lovely flowers, aren't they? Yeah. Nice garden, oh. And away they go. And the more times they can get you to say yes, eventually when it comes to the sales pitch for the items they're going to sell, or insurance, you don't want to say no to this nice person that you said yes to all along. It's simple stuff. But it works. It really works. We're very predictable. Well studied. We are well studied, like you wouldn't believe.

But you'll find as I say, let me, let's just take something to do with Charles Galton Darwin's book. And again, you'll agree with most of the stuff because all of the stuff he's talking about is obvious solutions, you see, he wants your permission to go along with. But you'll find that he says, he talks about creeds. Now, a creed, he talks about all, many, how society is structured, etc., very simple, not in any great depth. But he talks about creeds and things that have had a long-term effect on cultures. If you got a long time of peace because it's a religious culture, but what they call a creed, you see, which gives your morals and a just society, well, just to an extent, you all know the rules, there's less crime and so on. And you can work together or even help each other, or even feed each other, hopefully, as nature should really... That's what being human is about is helping each other. That's how we survived even thousands of years ago, before commerce came along the way it is today. But they talked about creeds being awfully successful at that.

And before he goes on to creeds in his book The Next Million Years, he does touch on the different problems in society. How do you get the public.. how do you get the public to just give everything up and be bossed around by their betters, the scientific class, you see? Then he said…

The Next Million Years, Charles Galton Darwin

Thus a creed may have the rudiment of the quality, possessed by the genes of mankind,

(Alan: ...the creed, he's talking about religion, you see.)

of being able to produce a permanent effect on humanity.

If the history of the future is not regarded as the automatic unfolding of a sequence of uncontrollable events - and few, of us would accept this inevitability - then anyone who has decided what measures are desirable for the permanent betterment of his fellows will naturally have to consider what is the best method of carrying his policy through.

(A: So he's talking about ways of getting you to depopulate yourselves. Even sterilization of the unfit, etc. That's what he calls it, the unfit, and even feeble. All the stuff the Nazis were blamed for. And this is after Nazi Germany by the way. Because they brought eugenics back and one of the biggest pushers of that of course was cleverly put through at UNESCO by Julian Huxley. M-hm. They made it part of the progressive movement, they call it the progressive movement. So progressive eugenics, you see, by genetic, regressive genetic alteration. It sounds better than just eugenics that got a bad name, you see. But anyway, getting back to Darwin here and Darwin says...)

...desirable for the permanent betterment of his fellows will naturally have to consider what is the best method of carrying his policy through.

There are three levels at which he might work. The first and weakest is by direct conscious political action;

(A: ...trying to get politics to push it through, you see. But don't throw that one out the window, right, he calls it the weakest. Then he says...)

his policy is likely to die with him and so to be ineffective.

The second is by the creation of a creed, (A: ...it's a religion, right.) since this has the prospect of lasting for quite a number of generations, so that there is some prospect of really changing the world a little with it.

(A: Don't forget what he said there, he's giving you a lot of stuff in a little paragraph here. So...)

The second is by the creation of a creed, since this has the prospect of lasting for quite a number of generations, so that there is some prospect of really changing the world a little with it.

The third would be by directly changing man's nature, working through the laws of biological heredity, and if this could be done for long enough it would be really effective. But even if we knew all about man's genes, which we certainly do not, a policy of this kind would be almost impossible to enforce even for a short time, and, since it would take many generations to carry it through, it would almost certainly be dropped long before any perceptive effects were achieved. That is why creeds(A: ...religions...) are so tremendously important for the future;

(A: You see, that's what your sustainability and greening and vegan and all that, that's all part of the new creed that they've created. [Alan chuckles.] If you've not figured that out all ready.)

...a creed gives the best practical hope that a policy will endure well beyond the life of its author, and so it gives the best practical hope that man can have for really controlling his future fate.

So he's tells you, this is in the 1950s the book came out, 1952 I think it was, what his, this was in all his own stuff he was talking about. He was in think tanks galore, his own level, to do with this, what they called the problem of humanity. That it existed before the war and during the war, and here they are after the war. They didn't, it never died off. The eugenic society is alive and well. And you know, it's actually been awfully successful, isn't it?

Because they've convinced the West, nevermind the fact that they're going sterile anyway, hm. Just like you'll find from the writings of their other compatriots of these characters like the Darwin's, like the Russell's, that all knew each other and worked together in the same think tanks, etc., of how you sterilize the public, etc.? Hm? And then how to make it desirable to be single. Give them lots of sex, take care of any problems... By the state, which you use tax money to deal with problems. It would be awfully easy actually. How do you do it? You create promiscuity, hypersexualize them through their culture industry, etc. It was all designed.

People think things happen by themselves. The deep state is real. If the state wanted you all to live in an Edwardian or even Victorian fashion, you'd go right back to it very quickly. And they could do it too. There's nothing they can’t do with you or convince you of. Because they have their psychology and their understanding of human nature, and the techniques used to change your behavior, they could do it very quickly. That's what I'm trying to say to you.

But most folk will never be convinced anyway. Or don't care. Remember, again, most folk don't care, who belong to the same group, being that of the bulk of the populace who take the easiest path out of a problem. And the path is always directed for them, you get a signpost for it, this is the easy path. They take it. Most people use this path, they take it. [Alan laughing.] It's like [Alan chuckles.] when you go searching for anything on the Internet, most people who look for this also saw, you know… Forget that! I don't even follow that, I just… All this stuff is turned off on my computers. Forget it. I know what I'm looking for. You know, whether I find it, it will be a battle. But I have more of a chance doing that way, without being distracted into, by the nudge units as they call themselves, you know, Behavioral Insights Teams.

So really, we truly are, we truly are living, it's not even an experiment. It's way beyond all of that. It's so... It's everything. Everywhere you look. Everything you listen to. It's all through your entertainment industry. All your updates, what you're supposed to think, believe, be angry about, be loving about, whatever it is they tell you what is good behavior. And they keep changing you all the time. And folk go along with it all.

That's what Winston was talking about, the Winston character in 1984. At the end Winston literally comes to love big brother. He comes to love big brother, so much so he would have tears, genuine tears in his eyes. And when O'Brien told him, and would shock him with torture, how many fingers have I got up, he'd say. If O'Brien held up four or whatever, or five, O'Brien would say, he would shock him and say, I've got three up, even if he's holding 5 up, right. O'Brien said, with all the shocking, as he’s screwing with your mind until you’re so, your mind is frazzled, and they'd rebuild your mind, until towards the end Winston said, I'm trying to see five, you know. And O'Brien says, that's not good enough, you must really believe it. And if I say I can fly Winston, you'll believe I can fly. It wasn't good enough to say what they wanted you to say, you had to believe it. Understand? That's where folk are today with it all. There's many ways of torturing you. You don't have to get physical torture.

Now, let's just touch on this here. But yeah, The Next Million Years, again, I've done talks before on some of these books and you should go through them in my website in the archive section. You'll start to learn something, for those who haven't done it. You'll find that there's nothing new under the sun, especially with all the agendas that are right in front of your face today, and being disclosed as though they're just instituting them today. They're old agendas and they were planned long before you were born. A lot of them were planned in the last century, and even before that one. [Alan chuckles.] There you go, hey.

So anyway, I'll put up a link to the postwar era with Huxley of course. You have to go through it and read about the Huxley's. Very important family of course. You'll find…

‘Julian Huxley and the Continuity of Eugenics in Twentieth-century Britain’
ncbi.nlm.nih.gov

by Professor Paul Weindling

(A: So, it's not conspiracy theory at all. He talks about...)

The life and ideas of Julian Sorrell Huxley (1887-1975) represent not only considerable contributions to evolutionary theory but also to eugenic thought and social planning.

(A: So, it’s not conspiracy.)

Huxley’s career history was complex and disjointed making him an international and very much a public figure.

(A: It goes into how, really, the Huxley's were awfully important, and how they were descended from Thomas Huxley, Darwin's bulldog. You'll find too they're all intermarried; all these families are intermarried. Getting back again, before I go any further actually, it says here…)

...providing an influential analysis of human evolution and a set of persuasively appealing concepts for both the wider public and scientific elite.

(A: They want you to go along with it, you see. And appealing concept... Well, it's not that bad, is it, you see. Getting back to Winston, you know, I really want to see it, you know, what you're telling me, how many fingers are up there. And they really want to see it, you see. And so, you must be broken, and come with perfect servitude, as Aldous Huxley mentioned, how the public will go along into this new agenda, which they're floating right through right now, with perfect, into perfect servitude, they'll come to love their servitude. It's all the same agenda. It's almost like coding of the language, just slightly different here and there, the insiders all know what it means, they know who's talking and using the same language. You see? But anyway...)

A full-scale critical biography of Huxley has eluded historians, because of the sheer complexity of his activities. Historians of the life sciences have recognised the theoretical originality of his scientific contributions, and his role in developing what he called in 1942 “the evolutionary synthesis”. His popularising of natural history and ornithology in a new guise of ethology showed his visionary ability to define a field of research. His central commitment to “reform eugenics” linked to social planning has been elucidated for the pre-Second World War period. While Huxley’s role in co-authoring the anti-Nazi We Europeans (A: Because he was an author in this one.) has been duly recognised, Huxley’s overlooked support for refugee scientists from National Socialism, not least at London Zoo from 1935-42 can be linked to his evolutionary agendas. A number of historical initiatives open the way for reconsidering Huxley: these include interest in the early years of Unesco and the Unesco declaration on race, elucidation of how Cold War Culture was shaped by intelligence agencies, and historical reconstruction of the place of eugenics in international population policies and practices.

This is not a conspiracy theory. And it goes on and on and on. But that's only one of many actually. And most folk don't care. As I say, most folk are still in that workers group going back to the camp and there's no guards left. They’re under invisible guards, like we have today, they’re invisible and you get a little email, you know, or something like that, or a knock on the door. You see what I'm saying? It's all here, folks.

I also want to put this one up too.

Why the 'post-natural' age could be strange and beautiful
bbc.com / 3 May 2019

(A: Hm? Isn't that wonderful? Post natural age, as you get conditioned, hey. It says...)

At 4913 Penn Ave, Pittsburgh, there is an unusual institution. The Center for PostNatural History is a small museum with an eclectic and bizarre mix of specimens: you will find a rib-less mouse embryo, sterile male screwworm, a sample of E. coli x1776 (a specimen designed to be harmless and unable to survive outside the laboratory), and a stuffed transgenic BioSteel goat named Freckles, genetically modified to produce spider silk proteins in her milk.

These are some of the things on show there. But it's getting you used to post-natural this and post-natural that, post-natural humans, you see. And that's what you're going through today with the big changes. You see, they all work together, though, they all work together. Hopefully you won't breed at all and then your population will really plummet very quickly. That's what they also want. But not too fast, at once, you see, not too fast. They actually have ideal rates of it, of the decline.

But they also go through different little documentaries that are out there, you'll probably see them in this museum. Where they show you, we may even become... Don't forget that Julian Huxley coined the term trans-human, right, he called himself the trans-humanist all that time ago in the 1920s and 30s and 40s and 50s. This article here goes into again, the trans-human thing where you may even get animal genes put into you down the road, too. For animals going extinct and you who carry their genes down through generations, maybe bring them back in the future, from your own... This is how they're getting you used to this complete change. Change is the key, the word change. Planned change, hm. And allowing yourself to be changed, hm. For the good of all, you see. It's a crisis don't you know.

So, I'll put this article up too and then again, what was the agenda before World War I and before World War II? Depopulate, too many of the wrong people, too many of the wrong people. Well, now we've got crisis and climate change, and, oh there's just not enough energy to… blah blah blah blah blah. So you know, same agenda. But now it's under necessity, to save us all, they must bring down the population to save us all. An oxymoron right off the bat, but that won't compute with most folk.

Plant-based meat startup Beyond Meat prices at $25 a share ahead of IPO
foxbusiness.com / 2 May 2019

The Bill Gates-backed plant-based meat startup Beyond Meat priced at the top end of its IPO range at $25 a share ahead of its debut on the Nasdaq on Thursday, lifting the California based company's potential market value to almost $1.5 billion.

So the same monopolists that run, you know, information and computers and so on, right, are into all other things too. Now they're going for your food supply. And you already had it where the big big companies own seeds, you can't even save seeds now, they put the killer gene in them, the Terminator gene so you have to go back every year and buy seed from them if you want to grow stuff as a farmer. Are you beginning to get it, what monopoly is all about, folks? Power and control. So, I'll put this one up. Then here's another one…

Lab-Grown Meat Coming to Supermarket Shelves Soon?
foxbusiness.com / 1 May 2019

(A: Our governments are funding these, and they're paying, in losses that they say they've got at the big big supermarkets, hey, they're paying them to grow it.)

This startup makes lab-grown meat from animal cells.

A Silicon-Valley startup, Memphis Meats says they have successfully made the world's first lab-grown chicken strips as well as duck and beef using animal cells.

So, this is a different one. Again, they've actually done artificial stuff that they tried creating in laboratories, I think it was in Holland initially. I think there's quite a few countries involved in making this particular artificial meat. Quite a few countries involved. Holland is one. The US is one. Israel is another one. I don't know if Britain is doing it yet. But so many countries will be involved in all of this stuff.   But they want us all to eat, especially substitutes, meat substitutes. But now they've got artificial meat as well because they don't want you having beef around, you know, people are living too long, they claim. M-hm. Here's one here too…

No more bacon sarnies? Ed Miliband...

(A: ...of Britain, right, Ed Miliband, a politician actually who comes from the family of some say communists, but definitely socialists. His brother who was another politician went off from Britain and he's now the, or he was put in charge at the time, he's still with them, a big, big charity for the philanthropic salary of half a million a year I think it was. They're awfully well-paid, these particular socialists. But it says…)

No more bacon sarnies? Ed Miliband says we will have to 'eat less meat' (A: …This is the one who's still in Britain…) and backs more taxes (A: …naturally…) on holiday flights to tackle climate change in a fiery BBC interview with John Humphrys - dailymail.co.uk / 30 Apr 2019

(A: There you go. So, I'm sure he will do without, right? Hm? M-hm.)

So, it says he's a former Energy and Climate Change Minister. What a title to have, energy and climate change minister. He's in charge of the climate, 'eh, or he was. They used to have these titles for the gods of Egypt, they had gods for all things, including the climate, you know, the sun, and air.   And, yeah, rain too.

We just elect them. Or you think you do. So, there you go. And it all comes out of our taxes too, which also impoverish you, until, you know, they're getting the message, less energy, less energy, less energy. Technically money is a form of energy. There was an organization out in the 30s came out with that, and they actually planned it that way, energy units. And some of the top bankers today still talk about it.

White Castle - plant-based sliders
foxbusiness.com / 11 Apr 2018

It looks like meat and even tastes like it, but it's not made from cows.

(A: Isn't that statement right out of Orwell's 1984 when they're in the canteen and Orwell's neighbor who works there too at the same place says, to this kind of white mush that they're eating, he says, isn't it amazing, he says, looks like meat, tastes like meat, but there's no meat in it at all. And here you're reading it from articles they're putting out, looks like meat, it says, and even tastes like it, but it's not made from cows.)

Impossible Foods CEO Patrick Brown explains the process behind creating the company's plant-based protein, and how hamburger restaurants around the country are taking bite out of it.

So there you go. It's like the old soya stuff from the 60s and 70s, that quivering jelly stuff you used to see. I've got a few articles and I'll put all these links up anyway for you, for people who are interested in catching up on it.

Maggot sausage and a scoop of insect ice-cream: Scientists claim alternative protein made from BUGS 'needs to be incorporated' to meals - dailymail.co.uk / 1 May 2019

But anyway, as I say, they want to bring down, you know, the population, to eat less meat, to tackle climate change, remember, the big crisis. You see, it's a wartime crisis, you're the enemy to the planet as mankind, you see, so they got to deal with that problem. And you must go along with it, but they want your consent to go along with it. And at the same time all this is happening, right, you've got euthanasia, big time euthanasia. I can remember, I think it was the night of 2001 when I was on a show, of the 11th of course, 9/11 2001, saying, the hardest thing… Because I knew the whole agenda would be unleashed with this whole thing. Because two Bushes by that time had given us the big talks on a new world order, and if you're in-the-know and you'd studied enough from the same sources at the top, you know what they were talking about, the unleashing of a whole new agenda, to the public anyway but an old agenda to them, for this order of living, depopulation, a world system all run by the same group at the top.

Again, you've got the whole Agenda 21 to work through for the 21st century where all of this must be accomplished step by step by step. Out of the cars, a temporary solution given you, so you won't complain too much, which won't be around for too long. Getting you off of meat. Getting you used to the fact that you can't afford the energy anymore, especially electricity and so on. Things that have made it more comfortable and more sanitary and keeping disease down and all the rest of it, all the things you need are gradually being taken down, for most of the public. Easy to do when you mandate it this way. And then you tax penalties, so only those at the very top and wealthy people can afford to live like they had lived before. Quite simple, isn't it.

But you also get the next part of it too, that even Obama prattled on about, more openly about, his grandmother being sick, etc. And why openly talk about that in a public speech? Well, he's talking about euthanasia. Because the old agenda, which again, goes way back, waay back, and again came out in the 1930s with Brave New World, where you'd live a healthy life until a certain age and then you'd get sick and then you die. And they would teach the children to celebrate death. And the bodies would go back into the earth. Like they're doing now, again, like the articles last week with the green goo, they turn you into green goo and they can poor you into the roots of a tree, you know. Starting to get it, are you?

It's a very old agenda. But you see, you must get the public to go along with that. And as Aldous Huxley said, you know, they'll come to love their servitude. He was warning you too. He says, perhaps they could make the public with techniques, he's talking about psychology and behaviorism and all these techniques of manipulating your minds and your beliefs or whatever. He said, perhaps they can convince the public to accept things that the public possibly they should not accept for their own good. That was on the television show with Mike Wallace when he said that. He gave you little warnings.

Unlike his brother who just dictated to you. His brother, by the way, Julian Huxley, had to go and get electroshock therapy and various other things. He was manic. And he'd go into depressive phases too. They call it bipolar today. It ran in their family, through certain inbreeding too, tendencies, depression, and going way back actually. It runs in their family. And don't forget these families are all intermarried, the Darwin's, the Huxley's. The Darwin's were interbred with the Wedgwood family for generations, the two families interbred completely. So, they're already into the specialized breeding programs for those who haven't figured anything out yet. [Alan chuckles.],

And I'm not, this is no conspiracy, this is his historical fact. So, let's go into the next part too and it talks about...

More than a quarter of the deaths in Holland are "induced," report finds aleteia.org / 22 Jan 2019

(A: Meaning, euthanasia, a quarter of them now. I followed that and gave talks over many years on Holland. Because Holland, by its own admission, and its own studies of the population, are the most passive compliant population in Europe. They're the least ones, the least people in Europe to demand anything from their government or go against the government policies. They're very compliant. That's why they picked Holland to start it with years ago. So more than a quarter of the deaths in Holland are induced, right.)

Euthanasia in the Netherlands is on the rise.

Fifteen years after the Netherlands decriminalized euthanasia and physician-assisted suicide, more than 25 percent of all deaths in the nation are induced, rather than by illness or other natural causes.

(A: You understand that?!)

...rather than by...

(A: They're dying...)

...rather...

...more than 25 percent of all deaths in the nation are induced, rather than by illness or other natural causes.

That figure is based on statistics from 2017 and includes almost 6,600 cases of euthanasia; 1,900 suicides and some 32,000 people killed through a practice called palliative sedation, according to an article in the Guardian, https://www.theguardian.com/news/2019/jan/18/death-on-demand-has-euthanasia-gone-too-far-netherlands-assisted-dying

(A: It's got the link on that article too. I'll put these links up tonight for those who want.)

In the article, journalist Christopher de Bellaigue traces the history of euthanasia in the Netherlands from when it was introduced for extreme cases (A: They always start off with extreme cases...) ("unbearable suffering with no prospect of improvement") to the point where some are advocating for a legal pill that practically anyone can take in case they are tired of living.

They're already giving it to ones who are just depressed, you see. So, they want to get rid of the gene pools of those who have any of these problems happening to them. Now, how many youngsters go through depression bouts? I mean, everybody does at some point or another, I think, as you're finding out who you are, what life's about, and you're not even sure yet. [Alan chuckles.] And a lot of folks when they're adults don't know what life's all about yet, because it's so deceptive.

But that's Holland. Now, Canada, again, and many other countries have followed suit with this. Here's an article here to do with that too. It's quite amazing, really. This is from Life Site News.

Euthanasia doctor hired for prime role at Ottawa Catholic palliative care hospital lifesitenews.com / 1 May 2019

(A: So, the Catholic palliative care hospital hired a euthanasia doctor...)

A doctor who performs "assisted deaths" (A: ...they like to call it...) and lobbied for legal euthanasia in Canada now has a pivotal role at a Catholic hospital in Ottawa renowned for its palliative care.

Dr. James Downar was hired in October as head of palliative care at the University of Ottawa, a tripartite position in which he splits his clinical time between the intensive care unit at Ottawa General Hospital and the palliative care ward at the Catholic Elisabeth Bruyère Hospital.

Downar is also a researcher with the Bruyère Research Institute.

Dr. Jose Pereira, a staunch opponent of euthanasia, formerly held the position.

News of Downar's appointment comes as LifeSiteNews learned that Canada's Catholic health sponsors approved secret national guidelines in consultation with the bishops to allow third-party euthanasia assessments for medically frail patients onsite at Catholic health care facilities — including Bruyère.

Catholic moral theologian Dr. E. Christian Brugger says allowing such assessments at Catholic institutions is "morally wrong cooperation" because it is "scandalous and a gross failure to bear witness to the Gospel."

(A: Well, they better make their minds up what they're serving, hey. They've already had complaints from social media about it and people who are really ticked off at it. But it says...)

Downar's euthanasia advocacy is a matter of public record.

As the former chair and member of the Physician Advisory Committee for Dying with Dignity Canada, he lobbied for the legalization of euthanasia in Canada.

He performs assisted deaths, supports the harvesting of organs of euthanized individuals, (A: Interesting too, he's in the organizations to harvest organs, 'eh.) was a paid consultant on the Canadian Medical Association course (A: They call it MAID...) on "Medical Aid in Dying," (A: They call it MAID of course, because it's your maid, you'll be calling for a maid when you need help, right, so MAID is just to kill you. Pleasant in a way, isn't it?) and advocates that euthanasia be part of palliative care.

(A: Eventually, you see, palliative care will simply BE euthanasia. You see? Instead of taking care as best as you can until a person dies naturally, they're going to simply bump you off quickly. They want palliative care to become medical assisted death, you see. They already offer you a quick exit in the Canadian hospitals. I've already done stories on that where they offer to young people who are not dying, ha, ha. But they're actually offering it to some people.)

(A: And it's a downhill thing from here because believe you me, these characters are out in society. They're not giving this because they believe it's helping society. You've got to understand the types of characters who run in positions and who are appointed to positions of authority over the general population. You've got to see... there are plenty of psychopaths all through society. Plenty of them. All through society. You find them in surgery at times, with surgeons and things like that. If you were to hear what they talk about it might shock you. But your government's promoting this, remember. So, this one goes on and on and on. It says...)

Ottawa's Archbishop Terrence Prendergast told the Catholic Register he believes that Downar's appointment will not threaten Bruyère's Catholic character.

(A: ...the hospital's Catholic character. Oh, I think it would, wouldn't you? Anyway he...)

... was a paid consultant on the Canadian Medical Association course on “Medical Aid in Dying”...

(A: That's the dying course, remember, and...)

As the former chair and member of the Physician Advisory Committee for Dying with Dignity Canada,

(A: And also big Pharma... Boehringer Ingelheim, Canada, Medtronics,and Novartis. So, big Pharma. So that's what this guy is a member of, and probably other organizations no doubt too. It's the way these guys are.)

So, there you go, it's on your face, really. There's nothing to guess at. Plus, he promotes harvesting organs. M-hm. I keep telling folk, we are the business. We are good business, aren't we? And most folk don't even know they're a business, until even when they’re dead they don't know they're a business.

We are THE business on the planet. We provide the tax money for everything, don't we. We provide the kind of money that gives a lot of characters big massive salaries. And we pay for, and we create organizations that allow, sometimes, these characters to rule over us and do what they want to do. And bring in the big agenda, m-hm. I'll put this one up for anybody who cares about it. It even has lists of hospitals in the US and Canada that, the US for sure that tell you where you can go and get this done. [Alan laughing.]   Yep.

Death by organ donation: Euthanizing patients for their organs gains frightening traction - usatoday.com / 2 May 2019

So, it's quite something we live in. And again, eugenics, getting back to it, don't forget what I started the talk with. It's quite important, is meant to realize what you're living through. Yep. And we are. We're living through it. It's all the same agenda, euthanasia, isn't it, hm. Linked in completely, absolutely linked in is euthanasia with population control, eugenics, economic system. Because you see, we've not to be a burden on society. If we're paying money into the system, according to the United Nations a good global citizen is a good producer and consumer. That's how they define it from their own writings and charters. So obviously if you're not producing anymore, you're consuming, then you're just a burden on society. Well, here's a pill, it's only 25 cents for goodness’ sake, and that will save the system a lot of the money that you've paid into it that we can use for other things. And they can maybe harvest your organs in the process and make up a little bit of money on the side. We're awfully good, aren't we? We really are good, you know.

I wonder if they'll give us little incentives down the road, with the article last week where they're going to turn us into green goo, rather than cremate us, and pour us into mother Earth here to grow plants and stuff. Will we get some money before we are dead maybe? We could put our names forward and then they can say okay, if you turn me into green goo to feed the trees and the plants and that, can I get some cash before I die, hm? Hey? Or are they really going to push this for the good will of us, to give it all for nothing? Because we give everything else for nothing, don't we, hm? It's strange what all the folk can make money off, that you leave behind, like organs and stuff like that. It's just astonishing that they live an awfully good lifestyle, hm, out of all these nothings, that just happened to be you. Ha! [Alan chuckles.]

And now our overseers too, as was predesigned of course, Macron and Zuckerberg meet in France... talking about Facebook, meaning the other ones too. And the whole system is meant to tackle hate speech, meaning anything that's politically incorrect is going to be called hate, naturally.

Zuckerberg meets President Macron as France demands Facebook does more to tackle hate speech - days after co-founder says the social media giant should be broken up (A: You see.) - dailymail.co.uk / 10 May 2019

And again, all these big institutions that you think, oh, all just suddenly appeared out of nothing by just geniuses that hatched out. Well, good luck in understanding anything at all if you believe that. It's all part of the system. And then another article too...

How the trade war with China could hit you - usatoday.com / 10 May 2019

... because I think it's going to cost you up to 25% taxes on things coming in from China. It's great now that you can't make anything here, 'eh? But they're giving a list of things that are going to be taxed, to start with, right. And of course, all the ones, the wholesalers have already said they'll pass the taxes on to the consumer. That's all of you. You paid for all your factories and that, and all these companies that actually made real tangible goods, you paid for it all to go to China through deals made by your politicians, that you're not invited in on, except to pay for it all. And now you've got to pay taxes on all the imports from China. Because they're pretending they've got a tiff going with China.

A quick guide to the US-China trade war - bbc.com / 10 May 2019

And once taxes are in of course they always last, 'eh. Because they always use, like your ‘temporary war tax’ is now your ‘income tax’, isn't it. Temporary war tax, victory tax and all that.

Again, with Brave New World you had Soma, and I mentioned about the legalization of different drugs, 'eh. And you've got legalization now of even, in some of the states in the US, you've got... I think it's Denver actually...

Denver becomes first US city to decriminalize 'magic mushrooms' - theguardian.com / 8 May 2019

So, magic mushrooms are going to be okay. And when they say it's going to be okay… Folk always harvested their own. Now of course you have professional corporations that will be in charge of growing it all and making money off it. Because it's always big corporations take everything over, if not even start it and launch it in the first place. And it's only the start because they'll go on and on with other drugs too. That's what some of the top honchos have said.

Because it's now Soma time, now that much of your meaning of life seems crazy... the pace of life is getting crazy… the reasons for being around seem crazy, hence euthanasia, etc. No kidding you, this is all tied in, it's all worked out this way. So I'll put these articles up anyway on the drugs and how they're pushing, how they're pushing through, again, the so-called, the top media – you're not allowed to say certain words now – with the top media, authorized, are pushing it all, because their job is to push a lot of things, that confuse you. But you've got…

Is microdosing LSD a solution to the 'crisis of meaning' in modern life?
montrealgazette.com / 24 Apr 2019

(A: It's... oh, there ya go. See. So, let's bring LSD in micro-doses, 'eh.)

No visions, no wavering lights, no breathing wood. It’s less about being at one with all forms of life (A: ...making you one with them…) and more about just getting through the day.

(A: So, it's good for you. It’s therapeutic now, right. Rather than just jump out the window and things like that, I knew folk who did that, it's going to help you, you see. You understand how they can make you believe anything? 'Eh?!)

It was one of the largest formal studies of its kind. The participants — 909 of them, recruited online from 29 countries — included teachers and people who worked in advertising, and ranged in age from their late teens to their late 70s. By gathering responses to an online questionnaire and challenging them to a task to measure their creativity, two University of Toronto PhD students completed one of the first psychological profiles of the growing microdosing community.

“Microdosing” is the regular consumption of small, non-trippy amounts of psychedelic substances such as LSD and “magic mushrooms.”

(A: Isn't that amazing, you got all these articles all flooding in at the same time from different, what seems to be different sources, hm.)

The study found the microdosers scored lower overall on neuroticism and “dysfunctional” attitudes,

(A: Meaning, you're very... you're not going to be... you're going to be more pleasant. You know, can we tax you more? Oh, no problem, sure, okay, go ahead, yep. So, you'll be more pleasant and stuff and less neurotic. You won't say, well you can’t tax me anymore, I'm starving as it is, for God’s sake, you know. Nope, you can't say that. They just want you to take a little trip of LSD, you'll say, oh, sure, man, you know, cool man, yeah yeah, good cause, yeah sure. And...)

and higher on a brief “wisdom” scale

(A: You'll be more wise. You see how they push that rubbish forever? You ever seen the rubbish that folk write after they've been tripping out? or even smoking dope 'eh? At the time they've got great philosophy and great poetry. Then they realize, what the heck…??? And of course they, you know, they try to burn them before anybody sees them, you know, these are rubbish, hm. But here they are telling the same old con game here, higher on a brief wisdom scale...)

that measures beliefs like, “I am in touch with my feelings,” or, “I have a good sense of humour about myself.” They seemed more open-minded, more curious and more creative, coming up with more unique and unusual uses for a brick, and a knife. (A: Huh?) In other words, their mental health seemed to be flourishing.

(A: I guess that's well-being, 'eh, I guess. Hm. Isn't that wonderful. In other words, the system, the big system will like you more when you're just, way out man, sure. You know, laid-back. It says…)

. . . compared microdosers (current and former) against controls (no microdosing experience whatsoever), their study lacked a placebo arm, making it hard to prove cause and effect.

“This isn’t the 'tune in, drop out' counterculture of the '60s

(A: No, no, no, it's to be pleasant. You see, you'll be awfully pleasant to everything that you're told. Can we take your shoes, we need them? Oh no problem man, you know, sure, yeah, yeah.)

. . . University of Toronto Centre for Psychedelic Studies — (A: Like they haven’t done enough of them, ‘eh? And no doubt will be getting little grants for this too.) are preparing what could be the first Canadian study of its kind, a new randomized trial that will compare placebos to measured doses of psilocybin (A: …that’s the mushroom.), the principal psychoactive compound found in certain types of fresh and dried mushrooms. (A: Can you believe we're wasting our money like this?)

But again, this agenda, you gotta get drugged, folks. Because society is getting so crazy. And you know what it is? As they take all your beliefs from you… when you see things that just don't make sense, you actually physicallysee things, and you’re told to believe other things... And then you can't... Well, you've got to get drugs, you'll start to see lots of weird things. I'm telling you, like the jolly green giant. There was a guy who did that, hey. He was tripping out on a hillside and he literally claimed there was a guy hundreds of feet tall, completely green, went hopping along over the hills and over him. Yep. No kidding you. Yeah. So, you're going to feel laid-back for goodness’ sake. And yeah, it will also do away, with some of these drugs, some of these drugs do away with appetite. Whereas dope of course tends to make folk eat more. M-hm.

Another one, even the Guardian is in on the act. I mean, these papers, it ain’t coincidence.

'It makes me enjoy playing with the kids': is microdosing mushrooms going mainstream?
theguardian.com / 3 May 2019

...increasing numbers are taking tiny doses of psychedelic drugs in the UK. Why?

(A: Suddenly, a sudden phenomenon, 'eh, all over the place at the same time. Well, isn't that amazing, folks, 'eh.)

Inside is a grey powder; her finely ground homegrown magic mushrooms.

(A: There you go.)

“I’ll take a very small dose, every three or four days,” she says...

Understand what's going on, folks?   You know, hm? Do you? The things you've already been taught to accept are getting more bizarre. The things that they want you to accept, and have you comply with things as you go into poverty, fuel poverty, energy poverty and all the rest of it, are going to get more bizarre. But it's much easier when you're pleasant and compliant, isn't it? Yeah, man, no problem.   You know, peace. Yep. And...

'I felt alive': University lecturer, 40, who 'micro-dosed' tiny amounts of psychedelic mushrooms says drugs encouraged her to split with husband
dailymail.co.uk / 4 May 2019

(A: Well, I wonder if she's on Oprah yet, you know.)

Lindsay Jordan, 40, university lecturer from east London, says it 'freed' her

Yeah, drugs can free you. Yep. Certainly can. Wow. Wow, I'm telling you.

And then you go into of course the other side of things, like Shanghai where they're actually, the addiction to things are so bad now with drugs they're doing brain surgery on people now and even putting electrodes in, the old Tavistock idea of electrodes right into the skull, and you can actually work them with your computer or tablet, probably with your cell phone too.
